All prior conversations or writings with respect to contents of a written agreement are deemed to be merged in such writing, and no evidence of prior conversations or memoranda is admissible except to prove a mistake in the writing or its invalidity. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 178; West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 1856.

12. Evidence ⇨443(3)

Where prenuptial agreement itself showed that promise of marriage was the consideration for the agreement, trial court properly excluded proof by parol of another consideration, consisting of prior, oral promise allegedly inducing prenuptial agreement, to provide for husband by will. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 178; West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 1856.

13. Evidence ⇨419(11)Husband and Wife ⇨29(4)

Mutual promises to marry constitute contractual consideration for prenuptial agreement, and cannot be varied by parol. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 178; West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 1856.

14. Evidence ⇨443(2)

In proceeding by surviving husband for letters of administration of wife's estate, where husband had executed prenuptial agreement waiving all claims and interest in wife's estate, offer of proof that as inducement to agreement decedent had orally promised to make will in husband's favor in return for husband's selling out his interest in other state, adopting wife's religion, and coming to state, was properly rejected, as varying terms of written agreement. West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 178, 1624, subd. 6; West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1856, 1880, subd. 3, 1973, subd. 6.

15. Contracts ⇨152

Where language of contract is intelligible and explicit, and does not involve an absurdity, the language itself must govern its own interpretation.

Paul T. Erskine, Jack R. Tyrell, Alhambra, for appellant.

Proctor K. Perkins, T. G. Dalton, Los Angeles, for respondent.

MOORE, Presiding Justice.

Two questions for decision are (1) whether a surviving husband who by an intelligible, prenuptial agreement covenanted not to lay claim to any portion of his wife's estate after her decease may now recover same and (2) whether he may obtain letters of administration of her estate, despite (a) his failure to claim such right after due notice of another's application, and (b) his having no legacy or share in the estate.

On August 8, 1952, exactly one month prior to his marriage to decedent, appellant, with complete understanding of its contents, executed an ante-nuptial agreement with decedent. It provided that decedent should retain ownership of all her property with the "exclusive right to dispose of any and all property" she "now owns" or "may hereafter acquire or receive, as her own absolute and separate property without interference or claim" by Mr. Wamack, "and in like manner as if said marriage had not taken place."*

Mrs. Wamack deceased on July 30, 1954. On August 17, her nephew, Joseph Chesnutt, filed his petition for letters of administration and caused notice of the hearing thereon to be served upon appellant. But the latter did not appear at the hearing on September 7, 1954, when letters of administration were issued to Mr. Chesnutt. On the following October 4th, appellant filed his petitions for letters of administration and for revocation of letters already issued to Chesnutt and for a family allowance of $400 per month. Such petitions having been put at issue by the administrator, the court made findings of fact against appellant, to wit, that he had agreed not to claim any portion of decedent's estate, had relinquished all interest in and to her property and the right to succeed thereto, concluded accordingly and denied his petition for letters of administration. From the ensuing judgment comes this appeal.

[1-4] Appellant did not duly assert his right to be administrator. The court may, in its discretion, refuse to grant letters to any person who had actual notice of the first application and had an opportunity to contest the same. (Probate Code, § 453.) Having had due notice of the hearing on Chesnutt's petition and having failed to appear, appellant thereby abandoned such priority to letters as he might have asserted as surviving husband. No serious attempt was made to prove an abuse of discretion in the court's denial of appellant's petition. The burden was on him to establish such abuse and in the absence of a clear showing thereof the reviewing court will not disturb the judgment. Silver v. Shemanski, 89 Cal.App.2d 520, 529, 201 P.2d 418. That the court's discretion was wisely exercised will appear as the story is unfolded.

[5] Appellant had no contractual basis for claiming to be administrator. The antenuptial agreement divested him of all interest in decedent's property. He was to make no claim of "any nature whatsoever" to the estate of the lady he was about to wed. That agreement was a serious arrangement and appellant must observe its terms. He alleges neither fraud, undue influence nor any other vice that invalidates an agreement and which attended its execution. Now, if it is to be binding, according to its terms, appellant is not entitled to administer decedent's estate. Relatives of decedent are entitled to administer his estate when they have a clear right to succeed to some share of his personal estate (Probate Code, § 422) and where they have no such right they may not administer the decedent's estate. In re Estate of Cover, 188 Cal. 133, 138, 204 P. 583; In re Estate of Walker, 169 Cal. 400, 403, 146 P. 868; In re Davis' Estate, 106 Cal. 453, 455, 39 P. 756.

* "Now, therefore, it is mutually agreed as follows:

1. That the Second Party shall keep and retain the sole ownership, control and enjoyment of, and, during her life, or by her Last Will and Testament, or by other testamentary disposition, shall have the exclusive right to dispose of any and all property, real, personal or mixed, which she now owns and all income and profits therefrom which she may hereafter acquire or receive, as her own absolute and separate property, without interference or claim thereon by the First Party, and in like manner as if said marriage had not taken place.

2. And First Party agrees that if he shall survive Second Party he will not make, nor will his heirs, executors, administrators or assigns make any claim to any distributive share or to any interest of any nature whatsoever in or to any part of said estate of Second Party of any kind or character to which he, as Second Party's surviving husband, might be or become entitled but for the execution of this agreement, so that all of the property of the Second Party not effectually disposed of by her during her life, or by testamentary disposition, shall devolve in the same manner as if First Party had predeceased her."

[6,7] Appellant contends that the agreement of August 1952 is not binding for the reason that it lacks consideration. The court found, in effect, that there was a consideration for the agreement and that it has not failed; that the consideration for the writing was decedent's promise to marry appellant, and that they were married. That a promise of marriage subsequently performed is a sufficient consideration for a prenuptial contract cannot be questioned. La Liberty v. La Liberty, 127 Cal.App. 669, 674, 16 P.2d 681. It follows that his written contract waiving all claims to decedent's property not only defeats his claim to letters of administration but deprives him of inheriting from decedent.

[8] Neither is appellant entitled to a family allowance. Such income is specifically mentioned in the agreement, and is clearly comprehended among the benefits to be anticipated by a prospective husband. By reserving the "exclusive right" to dispose of all her property and income, decedent could have meant nothing other than that she was keeping all she had for herself and would bequeath it to anyone she might choose. Having by contract renounced all interest in and right to decedent's property, appellant has no basis for demanding a family allowance. In re Estate of Yoell, 164 Cal. 540, 550, 129 P. 999. In In re Estate of Schwartz, 79 Cal. App.2d 308, 179 P.2d 868, where each contracting party had waived all claims to inherit, it was held that the right to a family allowance had been waived.

[9] If appellant had been deceived by decedent's alleged oral promise of an inheritance, it was incumbent upon him to allege the promises constituting such deceit. Such allegations absent, the prenuptial agreement stands for all its language denotes. In re Estate of Yoell, supra, 164 Cal. 546, 129 P. 999. Its terms are simple and if any other provision had been lacking, appellant should have caused it to be inserted previous to its execution.

[10] Appellant offered to prove that (1) as an inducement for appellant to sign the agreement, decedent promised that she would by her will adequately take care of him for his natural life and there is no such will; (2) subsequent to marriage, he and decedent on several occasions discussed her will and at each time she stated that she was going to take care of him because he had signed the antenuptial agreement.

[11-13] The court's exclusion of such testimony was correct. All prior conversations or writings with respect to contents of a written agreement are deemed to be merged in such writing and no evidence of such prior conversations or memoranda is admissible except to prove a mistake in the writing or its invalidity. (Code Civ.Proc. § 1856.) No pleading alleged or evidence introduced suggested either mistake or fraud in the execution of the agreement. The only basis indicated as a ground for the invalidity of the agreement is that it does not declare a consideration for appellant's promise to waive inheritance from his intended spouse. In the light of the fact that the agreement itself shows that the promise of marriage was the consideration for the prenuptial agreement, the claim of error in excluding his proof of another consideration is without merit. The mutual promises to marry constituted a contractual consideration and cannot be varied by parol. Harding v. Robinson, 175 Cal. 534, 542, 166 P. 808. Proof of a marriage settlement otherwise than in writing is expressly forbidden. (Civ.Code, § 178.)

[14,15] Moreover, appellant's offer to prove that decedent orally promised to make a will in his favor in return for his selling out his interests in Arkansas, adopting her religion and coming to California was properly rejected. (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1880, subd. 3; 1856; 1973, subd. 6; Civ.Code, § 1624, subd. 6.) Where the language of a contract is intelligible and explicit and does not involve an absurdity, it must govern its own interpretation. No question has been raised as to the quality or propriety of the phraseology or diction of the antenuptial agreement.

Judgment affirmed.

FOX, J., and ASHBURN, J. pro tem., concur.

137 Cal.App.2d 181

Michael BOGNER, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Isaac Gordon EUBANKS and C. W. Driver, Inc., a corporation, Defendants and Appellants.

Civ. 21183.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 2, California.

Nov. 21, 1955.

Action for injuries to a pedestrian struck by defendants' truck at a street intersection. From a judgment of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Henry M. Willis, J., on a jury's verdict for plaintiff, defendants appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Ashburn, J. pro tem., held that trial court's giving of plaintiff's requested instruction to jury that pedestrian crossing street in marked crosswalk has right to assume that operators of motor vehicles entering intersection will exercise proper degree of care was not prejudicial error because of failure to incorporate condition that plaintiff must have exercised ordinary care in relying on presumption that defendant truck driver would exercise reasonable care to yield right of way to plaintiff, where instructions in aggregate left to jury fact question whether plaintiff was negligent in such reliance.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Automobiles ⇨206

The nature and extent of necessary reliance by traveler, whether motorist or pedestrian, on care of others, is one of elements entering into question whether traveler exercised ordinary care.

2. Negligence ⇨136(14)

Whether a person exercised degree of care required of him is ordinarily question for jury.

3. Negligence ⇨68

A person has right to presume that every other person will perform his duty and obey law and is not negligent in assuming that he is not exposed to danger arising only from another person's violation of law or duty, in absence of reasonable ground to think otherwise, but must himself use reasonable care to observe other person's conduct so far as it may affect his own safety.

4. Negligence ⇨136(26)

Whether a person used reasonable care under circumstances in relying on presumption that another person would perform his duty and obey law is question for jury.

5. Appeal and Error ⇨1064(1) Trial ⇨228(1)

Generally, failure to include all elements of given doctrine in single instruction to jury is not prejudicial or erroneous.

6. Appeal and Error ⇨1064(1)

Whether giving of instruction to jury that pedestrian crossing street in marked crosswalk has right to assume that operators of motor vehicles entering intersection will exercise proper degree of care constitutes reversible error depends on whether it has effect of leading jury to ignore issue of pedestrian's contributory negligence.

7. Trial ⇨252(2)

A requested instruction to jury as to effect of depositions was properly refused as inappropriate, where no depositions were used or offered.

3. Trial ⇨260(8)

In action for injuries to pedestrian struck by defendants' truck at street intersection, refusal of defendants' requested instruction setting forth part of Vehicle Code section concerning compliance with automatic traffic signals, but omitting subsection thereof concerning obedience to red or stop signal, was not error, in view of plaintiff's given instruction incorporating pertinent portion of such subsection. Vehicle Code, § 476(c).

9. Trial ☞295(7)

In action for injuries to pedestrian struck by defendants' truck at street intersection, giving of plaintiff's requested instruction to jury that a pedestrian crossing street in marked crosswalk has right to assume that operators of motor vehicles entering intersection will exercise proper degree of care was not prejudicial error, though it failed to incorporate condition that plaintiff must have exercised ordinary care in relying on presumption that defendant truck driver would obey law and exercise reasonable care to yield right of way to plaintiff, where instructions in aggregate left to jury fact question whether plaintiff was negligent in such reliance.

Veatch & Thomas and Henry F. Walker, Los Angeles, for appellants.

Vaughan & Brandlin and Thomas G. Baggot, Los Angeles, for respondent.

ASHBURN, Justice pro tem.

Defendants appeal from a judgment entered upon a jury's verdict in favor of plaintiff in a personal injury action. They do not question the sufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict, nor do they claim excessive damages. But one point is made, error in giving an instruction concerning plaintiff's right to rely upon the exercise of care by another.

The accident occurred at the intersection of Broadway and Slauson in the city of Los Angeles on a sunny afternoon of August 10, 1953. Broadway runs north and south, and Slauson east and west. Slauson had three lanes for traffic in each direction, with the customary double line in the center. Plaintiff alighted from a southbound street car on Broadway and went to the northwest corner of the intersection. There were four tri-light signals at that place, one on each corner, and they displayed green, amber and red lights, in the sequence just stated, indicating respectively "Go," "Caution" and "Stop." There was a marked crosswalk, 17 feet wide, on the west side of the intersection running across Slauson. Plaintiff went to the curb on the northwest corner, and according to his testimony started across the street when the signal turned green or "go" for southbound traffic. He said that he was within the crosswalk and that as he stepped from the curb, or just before leaving it, he looked to the east and saw no automobiles at all; that when he got some 5 steps or 12 feet into the intersection, still being within the crosswalk, and about the center of same, defendants' westbound truck collided with him. He never saw the truck and did not look again to the east after leaving the curb, confining his attention to the green light and three lines of eastbound cars on the south half of Slauson which had stopped for the red light. He has no recollection of the impact and, as stated, does not recall having seen the truck. It does not appear whether there was any other westbound traffic in the vicinity; there may have been one westbound car in the curb lane and near the truck. There were no pedestrians beside plaintiff or in front of him; there were some behind him. In the main, the foregoing constitutes plaintiff's version of the accident.

Defendant Eubanks testified that he was driving a truck with a five-ton load of sand and cement, going west on Slauson in the center of the middle lane at a speed of about 25 miles per hour; that the signal for traffic on Slauson was green until he got up to the one on the northeast corner; that it turned to amber just as he passed it; that he continued on across the intersection, saw plaintiff as he stepped from the curb, and that the truck was then crossing the west crosswalk; that plaintiff was west of that crosswalk, some 25 to 30 feet west of it; that plaintiff was in an awful hurry and jumped or lunged from the curb into the right front fender of the truck; that he, the driver, had no chance to put on his brakes; that he stopped the truck in 30 feet and at the curb and then went back to plaintiff who was lying on the street outside the crosswalk.

Mario Prado testified that he saw the accident; that plaintiff was in the crosswalk and some five to six feet south of the curb at the time of the impact; that plaintiff had the "Go" signal and the light was red for Slauson traffic; that he, the witness, saw the truck but did not notice plaintiff until he hit the right side of the truck, the fender or bumper; that at the time of the impact, plaintiff was in the crosswalk but landed some 25 to 30 feet west of it.

Defense witness, Eleanor C. Peoples, said she was driving a southbound automobile on Broadway and had stopped for a red light; that she saw the amber signal displayed for east and west traffic, started slowly forward, ready to turn, and before she got the "Go" signal saw plaintiff falling; that he was about five feet from the curb and she was not sure whether he was in the crosswalk; that she saw him falling during the interval between the display of the amber and green lights; that she paid no attention to the truck and was not aware of it.

There were no other eye witnesses. It is apparent that the evidence was in substantial conflict, especially upon the question of whether plaintiff was contributorily negligent.

[1] Defendants complain of the giving of this instruction at plaintiff's request: "A pedestrian crossing a street in a marked crosswalk has a right to assume that operators of motor vehicles entering the intersection will exercise a proper degree of care." The instruction is correct as far as it goes. Every traveler, motorist or pedestrian, must rely somewhat upon the care of others and must do so innumerable times a day. Without such reliance travel would slow down almost to a standstill. The nature and extent of such reliance is one of the elements entering into the question of whether a given traveler has in fact exercised ordinary care.

[2-4] Mr. Justice Vallée puts the matter clearly in Shivers v. Van Loben Sels, 109 Cal.App.2d 286, 289, 240 P.2d 635, 637:

"White was driving his equipment at a lawful rate of speed. The brakes on his equipment were in good condition. He knew he was traveling on a through highway protected by stop signs. Under these circumstances, he had a right to assume that a driver on a street intersecting the through highway would obey the stop signs and yield the right of way. In making such assumption, White was acting wholly within his rights, and he cannot be charged with negligence in acting thereon. He can only be charged with negligence under such circumstances from the time he had knowledge, or in the exercise of ordinary care should have known, that the Pontiac was going to disregard the stop sign and enter the highway. After such knowledge, he was bound to use the care of an ordinary prudent person. [Citing cases.] Whether a person exercises the required degree of care is ordinarily one for the jury." The matter is stated thus in Harris v. Johnson, 174 Cal. 55, 58, 161 P. 1155, 1156, L.R.A. 1917C, 477; "The general rule is that every person has a right to presume that every other person will perform his duty and obey the law, and in the absence of reasonable ground to think otherwise it is not negligence to assume that he is not exposed to danger which comes to him only from violation of law or duty by such other person." 29 Cyc. 516; Medlin v. Spazier, 23 Cal.App. 242, 137 P. 1078. Such person must, of course, himself use reasonable care to observe the conduct of the other person so far as such conduct may affect his own safety at the time. The plaintiff had the right to assume that the defendant's automobile, or any other vehicle coming westerly on Seventh street, would confine its travel to the right-hand side of the street as provided in the ordinance aforesaid, unless and until, in the reasonably careful use of her faculties, she had reasonable cause to believe otherwise." The first sentence of the language just quoted is repeated in Leo v. Dunham, 41 Cal.2d 712, 715, 264 P.2d 1. Hendricks v. Pappas, 82 Cal.App.2d 774, 778, 187 P.2d 436, 438, points out that: "Whether or not reasonable care is used under the circumstances, in relying upon this presumption, is a question for the jury.”

Notwithstanding the principle enunciated in the cases just cited, instructions such as the one now under consideration have been repeatedly condemned because of failure to incorporate therein the condition that the plaintiff (or defendant, as the case may be) himself must be in the exercise of ordinary care when relying upon such presumption. The cases are quite numerous and are exemplified by Gilbert v. Pessin Grocery Co., 132 Cal.App.2d 212, 224, 282 P.2d 148; Carlson v. Shewalter, 110 Cal.App.2d 655, 658, 243 P.2d 549; White v. Davis, 103 Cal. App. 531, 545, 284 P. 1086; Angier v. Bruck, 56 Cal.App.2d 55, 58, 131 P.2d 876, and Angel v. Los Angeles Gas & Elec. Corp., 5 Cal.App.2d 270, 271, 42 P.2d 690.

[5, 6] These cases must be considered in connection with the settled general rule that failure to include all elements of a given doctrine in a single instruction is not ordinarily prejudicial or erroneous. Dennis v. Gonzales, 91 Cal.App.2d 203, 210, 205 P. 2d 55; Perbost v. San Marino Hall-School, 88 Cal.App.2d 796, 801, 199 P.2d 701; Larson v. Holland, 118 Cal.App.2d 520, 524, 257 P.2d 1014; Hoy v. Tornich, 199 Cal. 545, 552, 250 P. 565; Yack v. Tiffin, 69 Cal. App.2d 226, 230, 158 P.2d 620. In Forrest v. Pickwick Stages System, 101 Cal.App. 426, 434, 281 P. 723, 726, it is said, with respect to an instruction such as the one under consideration: “Whether the giving of the instruction constitutes reversible error depends upon whether it has the effect of leading the jury to ignore the issue of contributory negligence.” And in Angel v. Los Angeles Gas & Elec. Corp., supra, 5 Cal.App.2d 270, 271, 42 P.2d 690, 691: “It will be seen that the instruction given omits all reference to the question of contributory negligence and is in itself an incomplete and inadequate statement of the law. Other instructions to which we shall later refer were given at the request of defendant, which stated the law sufficiently to inform the jury as to the defense of contributory negligence. If we can say with assurance that the jurors must have understood that such other instructions qualified the specific instruction and that the instructions as a whole were understood by the jurors with the same effect as if the specific instruction had been complete in itself, then the error must be held to have resulted in no prejudice to the defendant. If, on the other hand, we are unable to say that the instructions as a whole were clear and not subject to misconstruction by an untrained and inexperienced mind, then the error was prejudicial to the defendant and the judgment should be reversed.”

In the instant case plaintiff's requested instructions were served in advance, as required by statute, defendants had ample opportunity to propose amendments, did in fact request instructions upon the subject of the challenged instruction, and their proposals were adopted by the court. BAJI¹ 138 was requested by both sides and given as follows: “A person who, himself, is exercising ordinary care has a right to assume that others, too, will perform their duty under the law, and he has a further right to rely and act on that assumption. Thus it is not negligence for such a person to fail to anticipate injury which can come to him only from a violation of law or duty by another. However, an exception should be noted: The rights just defined do not exist when it is reasonably apparent to one, or in the exercise of ordinary care would be apparent to him, that another is not going to perform his duty. One is not justified in ignoring obvious danger although it is created by another's misconduct, nor is he ever excused from exercising ordinary care.” It does not conflict with the one now under attack, but merely supplements it. Counsel do not claim that it omits any element of the applicable rule, or that it falls within the rationale of the Gilbert v. Pessin Grocery Co. case, supra, 132 Cal. App.2d 212, 282 P.2d 148, and like cases above cited.

The trial judge, at plaintiff's request, also instructed concerning contributory negligence and the right of way of a pedestrian who crosses a roadway within a marked crosswalk. At defendants' instance the court gave the additional instructions which are set forth in the margin.² The jurors were also advised that the instructions should be considered as a whole and each regarded in the light of all the others. Also, that the order in which the instructions are given has no significance as to their relative importance.

1. Book of Approved Jury Instructions, Los Angeles Superior Court.

[7, 8] The court refused only two of defendants' requests. One related to the effect of depositions. It was inappropriate because there were no depositions used or offered. The request was BAJI 31 and it was probably requested inadvertently when 31a was desired. The other rejected instruction of defendants set forth a part of the text of Vehicle Code sec. 476 concerning the matter of compliance with automatic traffic signals, but it omitted subsection (c) concerning obedience to a red or "stop" signal. The subject is covered by an instruction proposed by plaintiff and given, which does incorporate the pertinent portion of subsection (c)

2. "It is the duty of every person using a public highway, whether a pedestrian or the driver or operator of any kind of vehicle, to exercise ordinary care at all times to avoid placing himself or others in danger and to exercise ordinary care at all times to avoid a collision.

"The law imposes upon the operator of any vehicle using a public highway, and upon a pedestrian, the same duty, each to exercise ordinary care to avoid causing an accident from which injury might result. This duty continues even when one has the right of way over the other.

"Neither does the fact of having the right of way, if such be the fact, excuse one from the exercise of ordinary care to avoid causing an accident.

"The fact that one has the right of way, if such be the fact, does not excuse him from the exercise of ordinary care to avoid causing an accident.

[9] The instructions in the aggregate left to the jury the question of fact whether plaintiff was negligent in such reliance, if any, as he may have placed upon the presumption that the defendant Eubanks would obey the law and exercise reasonable care to yield the right of way to him. Read in conjunction with the other quoted instructions we can say, with respect to the one which appellants challenge, and "with assurance that the jurors must have understood that such other instructions qualified the specific instruction and that the instructions as a whole were understood by the jurors with the same effect as if the specific instruction had been complete in itself", Angel v. Los Angeles Gas & Elec. Corp., supra, 5 Cal.App.2d 270, 271, 42 P.2d 690, 691; that the giving of the instruction in question resulted in no prejudicial error. In effect, the trial judge so ruled in denying defendants' motion for a new trial.

The judgment is affirmed.

McCOMB, Acting P. J., and FOX, J., concur.

"Before attempting to cross a street that is being used for the traffic of motor vehicles, it is a pedestrian's duty to make reasonable observations to learn the traffic conditions confronting him; to look to that vicinity from which, were a vehicle approaching, it would immediately endanger his passage; and to try to make a sensible decision whether it is reasonably safe to attempt the crossing. What observations he should make, and what he should do for his own safety, while crossing the street are matters which the law does not attempt to regulate in detail and for all occasions, except in this respect: it does place upon him the continuing duty to exercise ordinary care to avoid an accident.

"The Court instructs you that it is a pedestrian's duty, in the exercise of reasonable care, to look in the direction of anticipated danger."

137 Cal.App.2d 138

The PEOPLE of the State of California,
Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Ellen BROWN, Defendant and Appellant.
Cr. 5383.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 2, California.

Nov. 18, 1955.

Prosecution for forgery of indorsement of checks by servant of payee whose name was allegedly forged. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Thomas L. Ambrose, J., entered judgment of conviction and the defendant appealed therefrom and from order denying motion for new trial. The District Court of Appeal, Moore, P. J., held that evidence was sufficient to support the implied finding of lack of authority in defendant to sign the name of payee and also was sufficient to show that defendant had intention to defraud payee.

Judgment and order affirmed.

1. Criminal Law ⚭1159(2)

Where trial court has found defendant guilty and finding is supported by substantial evidence, the reviewing court is powerless to reverse the judgment by reason of sworn denials of accused and will not reweigh the evidence.

2. Forgery ⚭44

In prosecution for forgery of indorsement of checks by servant of payee, payee's testimony that payee did not authorize servant to endorse payee's name on checks was substantial evidence and was sufficient to support implied finding of lack of authority in servant to sign payee's name to checks. Pen.Code, § 470.

3. Forgery ⚭35

In prosecution for forgery of indorsement of checks by servant of payee, an intention to defraud was implied from endorsement of checks without authority. Pen.Code, § 470.

4. Forgery ⚭34(1)

Intent to defraud, if an essential element of crime of forgery, must be proved affirmatively, but such proof may consist of reasonable inferences drawn from affirmatively established facts. Pen.Code, § 470.

5. Witnesses ⚭269(2)

In prosecution for forgery of payee's indorsement of checks, objections to payee's cross-examination, which was designed and directed to establishment of defense that defendant assisted payee in signing latter's name on checks, were properly sustained, where direct examination of payee had single purpose of proving that payee had never authorized defendant to sign payee's name to any document. Pen.Code, § 470.

6. Witnesses ⚭269(15)

A party who has not yet offered evidence for his own cause may not, under guise of cross-examination, inquire of the witness as to matters not relevant to the subject of the direct examination.

7. Forgery ⚭37

In prosecution on six counts of forgery of indorsement of payee's name on checks, permitting payee to testify that she never gave defendant authority to sign any document instead of requiring payee to answer as to each count was proper, and if defendant was displeased with general denial it was incumbent on defendant to cross-examine payee as to each count. Pen.Code, § 470.

8. Forgery ⚭44

In prosecution for forgery of indorsement of checks, wherein it was shown defendant had no authority to sign the checks in question, and that defendant possessed intent to defraud at time she forged signatures, all elements of corpus delicti had been proven. Pen.Code, § 470.

9. Criminal Law ⚭938(1)

Alleged newly discovered evidence that guardian had been appointed for payee whose indorsement had allegedly been forged on checks by defendant accused of forgery, was insufficient to warrant granting new trial, where appointment was a matter of public record and therefore known to defendant, and payee testified, thereby enabling court to determine payee's capacity. Pen.Code, § 470; Probate Code, § 1460.

10. Witnesses $\S$ 41

Even an insane person may be a witness where he has sufficient understanding of the obligation of an oath.

11. Witnesses $\S$ 41, 327

Whether a witness was insane at time of the occurrence referred to in his testimony goes to his credibility, not his competence.

Henry Grivi, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., James C. Maupin, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

MOORE, Presiding Justice.

Appellant was convicted of six counts of forgery of endorsement of checks. Penal Code, sec. 470. She demands a reversal of the judgment on the grounds of (1) insufficiency of evidence to the effect that she had no authority to endorse the payee's name; (2) insufficiency of proof of intent to defraud; (3) prejudicial error in sustaining "objections by People to questions on cross-examination of Mary Hile," the payee of the checks. She also appeals from the order denying motion for new trial. The judgment ordered appellant to be imprisoned in the county jail, the sentences to run concurrently for one year.

Ellen Brown, a widow, was employed by Mary Hile and her husband Harvey in 1951 for compensation on a daily basis. Soon thereafter, the Hiles employed her to reside in their home and take care of them for the rest of their lives in return for a remainderman's interest in their home. They delivered her an agreement on the bases proposed and Harvey executed a will bequeathing a life estate to his wife, and at her death his share to go to appellant. To that plan Mary agreed. The accused performed her promises through the last illness of the husband prior to October 2, 1951, and continued to serve the widow. In December 1952, Mary deeded the home to appellant, reserving a life estate. In April 1954, Mrs. Hile visited a friend at Lake Elsinore. Thence, she was taken by her grand niece, Hazel Hahn, to visit the latter's mother at San Bernardino.

In July 1954, a complaint was filed by the district attorney accusing appellant with three forgeries and a grand theft involving some of the checks in evidence in the instant action, and the deed of Mrs. Hile to appellant in December 1952. At the hearing of the matter, the municipal court dismissed the complaint for the reason that Mrs. Hile could not deny that the endorsements on the checks were her own, but "it looks like my writing." On September 7, 1954, the indictment of appellant on seven counts of forgery was filed in the superior court.

1.

[1,2] Mrs. Hile as a witness before the grand jury testified in September that she never, at any time, authorized anyone to sign her name on the backs of the checks involved in this action. At the trial of the cause in the superior court, Mrs. Hile testified that she never gave appellant permission or authority to sign any documents of any nature whatsoever. Notwithstanding such testimony, appellant regales us with the extended cross-examination of Mrs. Hile whereby it is shown that she had a very poor memory of events of the preceding two years; could not recall the case against Ellen Brown in the municipal court, or that Mrs. Brown had been charged with theft of the witness' home, or that she had been in court in July 1954; that she had no recollection of having appeared before the Los Angeles County Grand Jury. In respect to numerous other matters, Mrs. Hile had no memory, and by reason thereof, appellant would have this court weigh Mrs. Hile's testimony and determine that because she was 83 years of age and had a poor memory concerning recent events, the finding of appellant's guilt should be set aside.

Such contention is without legal support. Mrs. Hile was clearly emphatic that she did not endorse her name on the several checks involved; did not authorize appellant to endorse "Mrs. Hile" or "Mary Hile" on any check. The evidence shows that the $25 check (count I) payable to Mrs. Hile was paid to appellant through the teller, Mrs. Hudson, at the Bank of America, September 4, 1953; that the $25 check (count II) was paid to appellant by a teller of the Bank of America; that the check for $4.80 dated January 25, 1954, (count IV), payable to Harvey Hile was endorsed "Harvey Hile," "Mary Hile," "Mrs. Ellen Brown," and stamped "J. T. O'Neill." Don Mire, the expert on questioned documents, testified that both "Harvey Hile" and "Mary Hile" had been written by appellant as determined from comparison with a specimen of her penmanship; that the check for $1.50 by the American Trust Company (count V) payable to Mrs. Mary Hile bore the endorsement of that lady in the handwriting of appellant; that the check for $50 (count VI) in favor of Mrs. Mary Hile drawn on American Trust Company by Associated Cooperatives, was cashed at the Citizens National Bank March 5, 1954, that the endorsement of "Mrs. Mary Hile" was made by appellant; that the check drawn by Associated Cooperatives, Inc. on American Trust Company for $160 (count VII) in favor of Mrs. Mary Hile bears the endorsement of the payee in the handwriting of appellant. Appellant denied having signed Mrs. Hile's name on any check; insisted that while Mary asked her several times to do so, but "as far as I know I never signed a check. * * * I tried to make her reliant on herself. Mrs. Hile never did one thing for herself. * * * She said, 'Ellen, Harvey wanted you to have the checks and you have to help me sign them,' which I did."

Appellant's rehearsal of her own testimony in detail can serve no useful purpose here. It was weighed by the trial court along with the evidence on behalf of the prosecution and the ultimate fact of her guilt was determined by that tribunal. That appellant had no authority to endorse Mrs. Hile's name on the checks was proved by the emphatic testimony of Mrs. Hile. That the forged endorsements are in the handwriting of appellant was established by the positive testimony of an expert on questioned documents. That each of the checks was of the value evidenced by its face is not disputed. When a trial court has found the defendant guilty and the finding is supported by substantial evidence, the reviewing court is powerless to reverse the judgment by reason of the sworn denials of the accused. We cannot reweigh the evidence. People v. Newland, 15 Cal.2d 678, 681, 104 P.2d 778. Mrs. Hile's testimony that she did not authorize appellant to endorse her name on the checks is substantial evidence and is sufficient to support the implied finding of lack of authority in appellant. People v. Kabakoff, 45 Cal.App.2d 170, 173, 113 P.2d 760; People v. Braun, 14 Cal.2d 1, 5, 92 P.2d 402.

Appellant's authorities with respect to lack of authority, People v. Maioli, 135 Cal.App. 205, 26 P.2d 871; People v. Cullen, 99 Cal.App.2d 468, 221 P.2d 1016; Kickhoefer v. United States National Bank, 2 Cal. 2d 98, 39 P.2d 807, 96 A.L.R. 1244; Sutherland v. State, 136 Neb. 809, 287 N.W. 614, are not persuasive. The Maioli decision holds that to prove lack of authority to sign a check, the testimony of him whose name was forged is necessary. The Kickhoefer case is clearly distinguishable. The party accused of grand theft by forging the checks involved had a general power of attorney to act for the alleged victim. In Sutherland v. State, the uncle whose name was allegedly forged had authorized the boy to sign the check.

2.

[3] Appellant contends that there was no proof of a fraudulent intent in her endorsing Mrs. Hile's name on the checks. But there was evidence of her intention to defraud her benefactress. She endorsed the checks without authority and that implied an intention to defraud. People v. Platt, 124 Cal.App.2d 123, 134, 268 P.2d 529. She used the proceeds for herself; she neither made an accounting to Mrs. Hile nor spent the moneys for the lady's benefit. She positively denied to the investigator for the district attorney that she had signed Mrs. Hile's name on any check. The handwriting expert testified that the endorsements would not have been produced by appellant's holding the arm of Mrs. Hile. Also, appellant's guilty purpose in endorsing Mrs. Hile's name was indicated by her failure to endorse any government check payable to Mrs. Hile. Her explanations were: (1) She would avoid trouble with the government and (2) she wished to make Mrs. Hile self-reliant. She testified that she borrowed some of the money that came from the checks from Mrs. Hile. Furthermore, the greed of appellant and her zeal to impose upon Mrs. Hile was evidence of her fraudulent purpose in taking the money. While there to take care of the aged couple for which they were to give her a remainderman's interest in their home, she began to operate there a home for elderly women. She had four boarders at one time paying from $65 to $100 monthly, besides her own two sons, and kept all the income for herself. If intent to defraud is an essential element of the crime of forgery, People v. Platt, supra, 124 Cal.App.2d at page 134, 268 P.2d at page 536; People v. Horowitz, 70 Cal.App.2d 675, 687, 161 P.2d 833, the guilt of appellant is augmented by the evidence of her zeal to deprive her friend of property rights which neither Mrs. Hile nor her aged spouse ever intended to grant to her. People v. Crowder, 126 Cal.App.2d 578, 272 P.2d 775, is not support for appellant's thesis. When Mr. Crowder drew a check on Mrs. Crowder's account, the couple were living together. He had no intention of cheating her but used her small sums of money for family expenses. Finally, although at all times prior to the trial appellant constantly denied having written Mrs. Hile's name on any check, yet in giving her testimony in court she confessed that she had held Mrs. Hile's arm as the lady was endorsing the checks described in the indictment.

[4] Appellant contends that intent to defraud must be proved affirmatively, citing People v. Russell, 90 Cal.App. 266, 265 P. 826. No court would hold otherwise. But such proof may consist of reasonable inferences drawn from affirmatively established facts.

3.

[5,6] Appellant claims to have been prejudiced by the court's rulings in sustaining objections to the cross-examination of Mrs. Hile. Such rulings were not erroneous. Her direct examination was for the single purpose of proving that the witness had never authorized appellant to sign Mrs. Hile's name to any document. The cross-interrogatories were designed for, and directed to, the establishment of the defense by showing that appellant assisted the witness in signing the latter's name on the checks. Such procedure is violative of the rule that a party who has not yet offered evidence for his own cause may not, under the guise of cross-examination, inquire of the witness as to matters not relevant to the subject of the direct examination. People v. Donnelly, 143 Cal. 394, 399, 77 P. 177; People v. Dole, 122 Cal. 486, 55 P. 581; 27 Cal.Jur., sec. 77, page 101.

4.

[7] Appellant claims that she was prejudiced by the court's allowing Mrs. Hile to testify that she never gave appellant authority to sign any document for her instead of requiring the witness to answer as to each count. On the contrary, the method pursued was correct. If appellant was displeased with a general denial that the witness had ever given appellant such authority it was incumbent upon appellant to cross examine as to each count.

[8] The court denied appellant's motion for a dismissal of the action at the conclusion of the People's case on the ground that not all the elements of the corpus delicti had been proved. Such ruling was correct. The recitals above dispose of such contention.

[9-11] Finally, appellant advances the claim that error was committed by the court's denial of her motion for a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence. The new evidence referred to was that a guardian had been appointed for Mrs. Hile September 14, 1954. In the first place, such fact was a public record and therefore known to appellant. Secondly, guardians are appointed for persons of advanced years, or for those likely to be deceived by designing persons. Probate Code, sec. 1460. Hence, such fact of the guardianship did not of itself, establish Mrs. Hile's incompetency. At any rate, she was before the court to give her testimony and her powers of memory, recall, accuracy of perception and reasoning were exposed to the trial court. The court was enabled to determine the capacity of the witness and there is no showing of abuse of its discretion. Even an insane person may be a witness where he has sufficient understanding of the obligation of an oath. People v. Tyree, 21 Cal.App. 701, 706, 132 P. 784. Whether a witness was insane at the time of the occurrence referred to in his testimony goes to his credibility, not to his competency.

Judgment and order denying motion for new trial affirmed.

McCOMB and FOX, JJ., concur.

137 Cal.App.2d 175

Gustave J. ERDE, Plaintiff and Appellant,
v.

The CITY OF LOS ANGELES, a Municipal Corporation; The Department of Water and Power of the City of Los Angeles; James Black and David White, individually and as co-partners doing business under the name and style of Black & White Company, a co-partnership; First Corporation, a corporation; First Doe, Second Doe, Third Doe and Fourth Doe, Defendants,

The City of Los Angeles, a Municipal Corporation, and The Department of Water and Power of the City of Los Angeles, Respondents.

Civ. 20943.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California.

Nov. 21, 1955.

Rehearing Denied Dec. 12, 1955.

Hearing Denied Jan. 18, 1956.

Claimant's action against city for injuries received when he was struck by glass fixture maintained by city. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, J. T. B. Warne, J., granted city's motion for nonsuit and claimant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Nourse, J. pro tem., held that fact that city clerk instructed claimant to fill out triplicate claim form and claimant failed to insert date of accident on city's copies and clerk told claimant that there was nothing more to do, city was not estopped from asserting that action could not be maintained since proper statutory claim had not been first filed, as the date of accident was not inserted in city's copies of claim form.

Affirmed.

See also 116 Cal.App.2d 565, 254 P.2d 110.

1. Estoppel ⇐56, 58

In order for there to be an estoppel en pais, party claiming estoppel must show that in reliance on the act or representations of the other party, he acted or failed to act to his detriment.

2. Estoppel ⇐62(5)

Where city clerk instructed injured claimant to fill out triplicate claim form and claimant failed to insert date of accident on city's copies of claim, and clerk told claimant that there was nothing more for him to do, city was not estopped from asserting that claimant's action could not be maintained, since proper statutory claim had not been first filed with city as no date of accident appeared on city's copies of claim. West's Ann.Gov.Code, §§ 53051, 53053.

3. Municipal Corporations ⇐741(2)

Claim against city for personal injuries which failed to state the date of the accident did not comply with provisions of statute, and could not constitute a proper basis for action against city. West's Ann.Gov.Code, § 53053.

4. Records ⇐7

An instrument is only filed in contemplation of law when it is deposited with proper officer in the proper place with the purpose that it be retained by that officer and deposited with the papers in his office.

5. Records ⇐7

Where injured claimant filled out triplicate claim form and the triplicate form contained an essential statement lacking in the original and duplicate, and triplicate was marked as the claimant's copy, depositing of all three forms with city officer could not be considered as a deposit of triplicate with the intent that it become a part of the officer's record. West's Ann.Gov.Code, § 53053.

Arthur Garrett, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Roger Arnebergh, City Atty., Gilmore Tillman, Chief Asst. City Atty. for Department of Water and Power, Wallace J. Manley, Desmond J. Bourke, Deputy City Attys., Los Angeles, for respondents.

NOURSE, Justice pro tem.

By his complaint in this action plaintiff sought to recover judgment for personal injuries which he alleged he sustained when struck by a glass light fixture which fell from an ornamental light standard maintained by defendant City.

The trial court granted defendants' motion for a judgment of non-suit and from its order granting the motion plaintiff appeals.

The motion was granted upon the grounds that the plaintiff had failed to comply with provisions of Section 53053 of the Government Code, in that the verified claim filed by him with the City Clerk failed to state the date of the accident. While appellant, by his opening brief, poses four questions, the tenor of his argument is that the trial court erred in refusing plaintiff the right to amend his complaint so as to plead certain facts which he maintains show that the defendants are estopped to assert the invalidity of the claim for damages filed by the plaintiff, and erred in rejecting the plaintiff's offer to prove the facts alleged in the proffered amendment, and that the facts alleged and which he offered to prove would estop the defendants from asserting the validity of said claim.

The facts which are the basis of appellant's claims of error are:

On September 9, 1949, plaintiff while working on a building project, was struck and injured by glass that fell from a light standard maintained by defendant City. Thereafter, appellant obtained from the City Clerk forms printed by the City for the filing of claims against it. These forms were in triplicate; the first is on yellow paper and is entitled,

"Claim for Damages

Original for File";

the second copy is on orange paper and entitled,

"Claim for Damages

Duplicate for City Attorney"; the third copy is on white paper and entitled,

"Claim for Damages

Triplicate for Claimant".

Each copy contains the following question and directions:

"When did damage or injury occur? Give full particulars, date, time of day: _____." Plaintiff, with the aid of some third person, filled in the forms with the exception of the answer to the question quoted above. On November 10, 1949, he took them to the office of the City Clerk and signed and verified the original and duplicate and left them with the Clerk. The Clerk placed his filing stamp on the original and triplicate copies and stamped the duplicate "Received" with the date of receipt. The appellant took the triplicate, which was neither signed nor verified, with him.

On September 8, 1950, he filed his complaint in this action. In paragraph VI of the complaint he alleges that on November 10, 1949, he "served" a "claim for damages" on the City Clerk in duplicate and that a true copy of the claim was attached to the complaint as Exhibit A. He attached as Exhibit A a copy of the unsigned, unverified triplicate copy which he had retained. The copy so attached to the complaint contained the following answer to the quoted question: "Sept 9th 9:45 A M."

Respondents, by their answer, admitted that an instrument, of which Exhibit A attached to the complaint was a true copy, was filed with the City Clerk, but denied the remaining allegations of the paragraph. Early in the trial it was discovered that Exhibit A attached to the complaint was not a true copy of the original and duplicate filed by the plaintiff with the City Clerk, and the defendants were permitted to amend their answer so as to enter a general and special denial of all allegations in paragraph VI of the complaint.

Plaintiff offered in evidence the unsigned and unverified triplicate copy of the form of claim which he had retained. The trial court sustained the defendants' objection that the copy was not the best evidence. The defendants offered in evidence the original and duplicate of the claim for the limited purpose of showing what instruments were in fact filed by the plaintiff, and they were admitted over plaintiff's objection.

Appellant then asked leave to amend the complaint so as to allege certain facts which he asserts estopped the defendants from asserting the invalidity of the claim. The court refused to permit the amendment to be filed. The facts alleged in the proffered amendment are in substance:—

That on November 10, 1949, at the time that the plaintiff filed his claim with the Clerk, the Clerk advised plaintiff to fill in the date of the accident in longhand; that the plaintiff did this, and that the Clerk then advised plaintiff that said claim was properly and completely filled out and that there was nothing further for plaintiff to do with respect to the claim or to complete the filing thereof; that the Clerk then swore the plaintiff to the truthfulness of the claim and filled out the jurat on the verification and placed the stamp and seal of the Clerk upon the claim; that said statements and acts were intentionally and deliberately done by the defendant (City) for the purpose of leading plaintiff to believe his claim was completely and properly filled out and that the plaintiff relied thereon. The plaintiff then offered to prove by his own testimony the facts alleged in the proffered amendment. Defendants' objections to the offer of proof were sustained.

Appellant contends that the provisions of section 53053 of the Government Code are procedural in character and that therefore the defendants may be estopped through the acts of their agents and officers from asserting the failure of claimant to substantially comply with them. The respondents contend that these provisions are not procedural, but are conditions placed by the Legislature upon the liability created by Section 53051, Government Code, and that the defendant City cannot waive substantial compliance nor can it be estopped.

While there seems to be substantial merit to appellant's claim that the provisions of Section 53053 of the Government Code are procedural in character, and therefore subject to waiver or estoppel, it is unnecessary to decide that question here. We are satisfied that the facts alleged in the proffered amendment, and which the plaintiff offered to prove, were insufficient to constitute an estoppel en pais. That they were insufficient appears from the very statement of them. In substance these facts amount to nothing more than that the City Clerk told plaintiff that he must state in his claim the date of the accident; that plaintiff did so (apparently on the copy retained by him only), and that the Clerk then took plaintiff's oath to the verification and told him he had nothing more to do.

[1,2] There is nothing in these facts that show that plaintiff was, by any act or statement of the Clerk, caused to do or omit to do anything to his detriment. What the Clerk told him was true and if plaintiff had done as he alleges he was directed to do, the original claim and the duplicate filed with the Clerk would have been sufficient in form. It was not the duty of the Clerk to fill out the form or to advise the appellant or to see to it that the appellant followed the advice given him. In order for there to be an estoppel en pais, the party claiming the estoppel must show that in reliance on the acts or representations of the other party, he acted or failed to act to his detriment. In re Estate of Jackson, 112 Cal. App.2d 16, 18, 245 P.2d 684; Safway Steel Products, Inc., v. Lefever, 117 Cal.App.2d 489, 491, 256 P.2d 32. There is no allegation nor offer to prove that the Clerk did anything to cause the plaintiff to leave the date of the accident out of the original and duplicate or to cause plaintiff not to sign and verify the triplicate copy. The most that can be said of the allegations is that they show that the plaintiff negligently failed to follow the truthful advice given to him by the Clerk.

[3] The original and duplicate claims having failed to state the date of the accident, did not comply with the provisions of the statute, and therefore did not constitute a proper basis for plaintiff's action. Hall v. City of Los Angeles, 19 Cal.2d 198, 202, 120 P.2d 13; Spencer v. City of Calipatria, 9 Cal.App.2d 267, 268-269, 49 P.2d 320; Douglass v. City of Los Angeles, 5 Cal.2d 123, 53 P.2d 353; Farrell v. County of Placer, 23 Cal.2d 624, 630, 145 P.2d 570, 153 A.L.R. 323.

[4, 5] In the oral argument before this court, appellant's counsel, for the first time, asserted that the evidence received and that contained in his offer of proof established that all three copies of the claim were filed with the Clerk; that, therefore, inasmuch as the original and duplicate copies were verified and the unsigned and unverified triplicate copy contained the date of the accident, that there was a substantial compliance with the statute. There is no merit in this contention. The forms themselves show that it was not the intent of the parties that the triplicate be retained by the Clerk, for that copy states, as we have heretofore shown, that it is to be retained by the claimant. There was no evidence received and none offered that the plaintiff ever delivered the triplicate to the Clerk with the intention that the Clerk should retain it. An instrument is only filed in contemplation of law, when it is deposited with the proper officer in the proper place with the purpose that it be retained by that officer and deposited with the papers in his office. In re Estate of Sankey, 199 Cal. 391, 396, 249 P. 517; Hoyt v. Stark, 134 Cal. 178, 180, 66 P. 223; Cox v. Tyrone Power Enterprises, 49 Cal.App.2d 383, 395, 121 P.2d 829; Harris v. Superior Court, 82 Cal.App. 88, 90, 255 P. 229; Tre-gambo v. Comanche Mill & Mining Co., 57

Cal. 501, 506. In the case at bar, the triplicate was not deposited with the Clerk nor left there with the intent that it become a part of his records.

The order is affirmed.

WHITE, P. J., concurs.

DORAN, J., dissents.

Hearing denied; CARTER, J., dissenting.

137 Cal.App.2d 153

Arthur B. THOMPSON and Marcella Thompson, Plaintiffs and Appellants,
v.

Ernest GOUBERT and Anna Goubert, Defendants and Respondents.

Civ. 5089.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District,
California.

Nov. 18, 1955.

Action by lessors against lessees for declaration of rights under lease and for damages. The Superior Court, Riverside County, John G. Gabbert, J., granted the lessees' motion to vacate default judgment, and lessors appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Barnard, J., held that the granting of the motion was a matter within discretion of trial court, and it did not clearly appear the trial court abused its discretion in granting motion.

Order affirmed.

1. Appeal and Error ☞957(1)

Legal controversies should be tried upon their merits, and unless it can be determined as a matter of law that a trial court has abused its discretion in setting aside the default of a party and permitting an answer to be filed, the court on appeal will not reverse such an order. West's Ann.Code Civ. Proc. § 473.

2. Appeal and Error ⇨948, 957(1)

There must be a clear showing of abuse of discretion before an order setting aside the default of a party and permitting an answer to be filed will be reversed, and the burden of showing such abuse of discretion is on the appellant. West's Ann.Code Civ. Proc. § 473.

3. Judgment ⇨163

Any doubt as to the propriety of setting aside a default should be resolved in favor of the application, to the end that a trial on the merits may be had. West's Ann. Code Civ.Proc. § 473.

4. Appeal and Error ⇨957(1)

Appellate Court listens more readily to an appeal from an order denying relief from default judgment than to one granting relief. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 473.

5. Judgment ⇨143(3)

The granting of a motion to vacate default judgment on ground of mistake and excusable neglect is matter within discretion of trial court. West's Ann.Code Civ. Proc. § 473.

6. Judgment ⇨143(16)

In action by lessors against lessees for declaration of rights under lease and for damages, where lessees, who had had no legal experience, had been told that they would be personally contacted with view of settlement when amount of damage claimed was ascertained, they asked process server what the paper meant and were informed that he did not know and they were told by others that they would receive notice of a date certain when they were expected to appear in court, and they acted immediately upon learning that a judgment had been entered, vacating the default judgment was not an abuse of discretion. West's Ann. Code Civ.Proc. § 473.

Harmon C. Brown, Riverside, for appellants.

Neblett, Walker & Sullivan, LeMoyne S. Badger, Riverside, for respondents.

BARNARD, Presiding Justice.

This is an appeal from an order vacating a judgment following a motion made under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

A complaint for declaratory relief and damages was filed on September 13, 1954, alleging that the plaintiffs had leased 85 acres to the defendants; that the defendants, in farming said premises during 1953, had done or failed to do certain things "against the wishes" of the plaintiffs; that on October 27, 1953, written notice was given the defendants telling them that damage was claimed, that the plaintiffs would later contact them in anticipation of a settlement, and that they would thereafter be expected to do three things which were not specifically named in the lease; that during 1954 the defendants failed to do one of these things; and that a controversy had arisen in that the defendants claimed a right to do certain things, while the plaintiffs asserted that said things were contrary to the terms of the lease. In a second cause of action it was alleged that the plaintiffs had been damaged in the sum of $7,800.

The default of the defendants was entered by the clerk on September 24, 1954, and on October 11, 1954, a judgment was entered decreeing that the plaintiffs are entitled to cancel the lease and awarding them a judgment for $7,800. An execution was issued on October 20, 1954, and levied on the defendants' bank account. The defendants first learned of the judgment and the levy on October 21, and on the same day consulted an attorney.

On October 22, 1954, the defendants filed a motion and notice of motion to set aside their default and to vacate the judgment on the ground of mistake or excusable neglect, and also filed a proposed answer setting forth facts which, if true, would be a complete defense to the action. In support of the motion they filed an affidavit stating that they are farmers and unfamiliar with legal proceedings; that they had never before sued or been sued; that they asked the process server who served them what the "papers" were for, and he replied "I don't know"; that the summons was attached to the rear of the complaint and was never read in full, and its import was not realized by them until they consulted counsel; that they were told by others that they had to be ordered to appear in court on a date certain before they had to do anything in regard to the law suit; that because of these things they failed to answer the complaint in the time required; that they first learned of the default taken against them on October 21, and immediately employed attorneys to take proceedings to have the default and judgment vacated; and that they had been advised by their counsel and believed that they had a valid defense to the action upon its merits. In a supplemental affidavit filed on October 27, the defendants alleged that they had spent their childhood in a home in which the English language was not spoken; that by reason thereof, and in spite of certain schooling they had had, their ability to read and understand the English language was limited; that their business experience had been limited to farming, and neither of them had ever consulted or used an attorney prior to their learning of the levy of this execution; that at the time summons was served they were engaged in the peak of the harvest season, when a delay would have caused them irreparable damage; and that by reason of their inexperience and ignorance neither of them knew or realized that a judgment could be thus obtained against them.

The plaintiffs filed affidavits in opposition to the motion alleging that the defendants had voted in San Bernardino County some six times; that the father of the defendant husband owned certain property in San Bernardino County; that the defendants had had considerable schooling; that when a dispute arose in 1953 the plaintiffs told the defendant husband to seek advice from his banker or his lawyer; and that after the close of the 1953 growing season the plaintiff, on numerous occasions, told the defendant husband that he was going to sue him for damages. In addition, the affidavit of an outside person was filed alleging that during September, 1954, the defendant husband told the affiant that he had been served with legal papers by the plaintiffs but that he wanted to save money by not hiring an attorney. At the hearing of the motion to set aside the default it was stipulated that the defendant husband, if sworn as a witness, would deny having made any such statement as the one just referred to, and that the court should consider this stipulation in reaching a decision on the motion.

After a hearing the court entered an order granting the motion to set aside the default and default judgment, recalling and quashing the levy of execution, and permitting the defendants to file their answer. This appeal followed.

[1-3] "It is the well-settled policy of the law to have legal controversies tried upon their merits, and unless it can be determined as a matter of law that a trial court has abused its discretion in setting aside the default of a party and permitting an answer to be filed, the court on appeal will not reverse such an order." Kalson v. Percival, 217 Cal. 568, 20 P.2d 330. There must be a clear showing of abuse of discretion before such an order will be reversed, and the burden of showing such abuse of discretion is on the appellant. Stub v. Harrison, 35 Cal. App.2d 685, 96 P.2d 979. Because of the purpose of the statute and the policy of applying it liberally in order to permit the presentation of a substantial defense, the appellate court listens more readily to an appeal from an order denying relief than to one granting relief. Brill v. Fox, 211 Cal. 739, 297 P. 25. Any doubt as to the propriety of setting aside a default should be resolved in favor of the application, to the end that a trial on the merits may be had. 14 Cal.Jur., p. 1076, and cases there cited.

The appellants do not question these rules but contend that an abuse of discretion here appears, because the excuses offered by the respondents were not sufficient to show any mistake or neglect which could be found to be excusable. They rely on Weinberger v. Manning, 50 Cal.App.2d 494, 123 P.2d 531; Fink & Schindler Co. v. Gavros, 72 Cal. App. 688, 237 P. 1083; Elms v. Elms, 72 Cal.App.2d 508, 164 P.2d 936; and Gilio v. Campbell, 114 Cal.App.2d Supp. 853, 250 P. 2d 373. In the Weinberger case [50 Cal.

App.2d 494, 123 P.2d 534], the defendant disregarded repeated warnings from attorneys, the clerk and a friend; took no action for 83 days after entry of the default; and displayed "an attitude of contemptuous disregard for legal process." In the Fink & Schindler case the defendant consulted an attorney before the time to answer, but relied on an unwarranted assumption that this attorney represented another party and would also protect his interest. In the Elms case, the defendant intentionally defaulted and then changed his mind, and, although he knew the date of the trial eight days ahead, declared that he did not intend to appear at the trial. In the Gilio case the defendant was warned by the constable who served the summons and by the attorney for the plaintiff, after judgment was entered, and still took no action until a month later.

[4-6] In the instant case, the respondents had had no legal experience; they had been told that they would be personally contacted with the view of a settlement when the amount of damage claimed for 1953 was ascertained; they asked the person who served the summons what the "papers" meant, and were told that he did not know; and they were told by others that they would receive notice of a date certain when they were expected to appear. It is not entirely unreasonable that people of such limited experience would not grasp the full and legal meaning of the summons at the back of the copy of the complaint, especially in view of the other circumstances which here appear. Aside from one matter of hearsay and one matter which was directly contradicted by other evidence, the affidavits filed by the appellants contain nothing material to the question before the court, and no showing was made that any prejudice would be suffered by the slight delay. The respondents acted immediately upon learning that a judgment had been entered, and the motion was heard by the same judge who entered the judgment. In view of the nature of the case, one for declaratory relief and for damages based on one party's interpretation of the lease, the ends of justice naturally called for a hearing on the merits. While some negligence on the part of the respondents may appear, it cannot be said as a matter of law that their neglect and mistake were inexcusable. The matter was one within the discretion of the trial court, and it does not clearly appear that such discretion was abused. Hambrick v. Hambrick, 77 Cal.App.2d 372, 175 P.2d 269.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

GRIFFIN and MUSSELL, JJ., concur.

137 Cal.App.2d 134

In the Matter of the ESTATE of Lee Roy RAYMOND, Deceased.

William L. RAYMOND, Loren E. Raymond, Executors, Contestants, Appellants,

v.

Soledad RAYMOND, Petitioner, Respondent.
Civ. 21229.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 2, California.

Nov. 18, 1955.

In the matter of a decedent's estate. From an order of the Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Clyde C. Triplett, J., setting apart a homestead for decedent's widow out of decedent's separate property, the executors of the estate appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Moore, P. J., held that the trial court exercised sound discretion in setting apart as such homestead a seven-room, two-story frame house, constituting separate property of husband, with whom wife lived therein during their seventeen and one-half years of married life, instead of three-room apartment in bungalow court owned by them as tenants in common.

Order affirmed.

I. Executors and Administrators §194(1, 7)

The probate court has wide discretion in selecting probate homestead, and its order will not be disturbed, in absence of abuse of such discretion. Probate Code, § 661.

2. Executors and Administrators ¶178

The probate court will give decedent's family a homestead of as great value as possible considering amount and condition of decedent's estate. Probate Code, § 661.

3. Executors and Administrators ¶181

In selecting probate homestead, probate court's duty is to provide place where decedent's family and its surviving members may reside and enjoy comforts of home free from anxiety that it may be taken from them against their will either because of their own necessity or improvidence or because of their creditors' importunity. Probate Code, § 661.

4. Executors and Administrators ¶194(1)

While probate court must be governed by sound discretion in selecting probate homestead, it must consider value thereof, financial status of decedent's estate, and rights of creditors. Probate Code, § 661.

5. Executors and Administrators ¶194(6)

A probate court order, selecting homestead for decedent's widow from decedent's separate property, must prescribe limited period for such homestead, not exceeding widow's lifetime. Probate Code, § 661.

6. Executors and Administrators ¶181

The Superior Court exercised sound discretion in setting apart as probate homestead for decedent's widow a seven-room two-story frame house, constituting separate property of husband, with whom wife resided therein for their 17½ years of married life, instead of three-room apartment in bungalow court owned by spouses as tenants in common. Probate Code, § 661.

Eugene Kelly, Los Angeles, for appellants.

Tobias G. Klinger and Paul Fitting, Los Angeles, for respondent.

MOORE, Presiding Justice.

The executors of the estate of Lee Roy Raymond appeal from an order setting apart a probate homestead for petitioner, Mrs. Soledad Raymond, widow of decedent, out of decedent's separate property. They contend that it was error to select such homestead when there was suitable, residential property owned by petitioner and decedent as tenants in common.

Decedent had been married to petitioner for seventeen years. He had had a former wife with whom he had reared his family in the home on El Molino Street in Alhambra. When he married petitioner, he took her to live in the same residence. Decedent left an estate appraised at $203,887.17. One asset of the estate is an undivided one-half interest in a court consisting of ten three-room apartments. The property consists of three buildings. Two of the buildings are one-story frame construction. They occupy the sides of the lot; each has four apartments. The third building is at the rear. It contains garages for all the apartments on the ground. Over them are two other apartments, each of which has a bedroom, bathroom, combination kitchen, dinette and living room. Petitioner was the cotenant with decedent in the ownership of such court. The El Molino property has a two-room apartment carved out of the home, but it is under the same roof.

[1-5] In selecting a probate homestead, the probate court has wide discretion and its order will not be disturbed unless there has been an abuse of such discretion. In re Walkerly, 81 Cal. 579, 583, 22 P. 838, 889. The court will give the family "a homestead of as great a value" as possible considering the amount and condition of the estate. Ibid. It is the court's duty to provide a place "for the family and its surviving members, where they may reside and enjoy the comforts of a home, freed from any anxiety that it may be taken from them against their will, either by reason of their own necessity or improvidence, or from the importunity of their creditors." In re Estate of Kachigian, 20 Cal.2d 787, 791, 128 P.2d 865, 867. There is no absolute rule to control the court in the selection of a homestead. But while it must be governed by a sound discretion, yet it must consider the value of the homestead, the estate's financial status and the rights of creditors. In re Estate of Claussenius, 96 Cal.App.2d 600, 611, 216 P.2d 485. The statute governing the selection of homesteads suggests no variation from the foregoing rule. It requires the probate court to designate and set apart a homestead for the use of the surviving spouse (1) out of the community property, (2) out of real property owned in common by decedent and his wife, or (3) if there be neither community property nor property so owned in common, then out of the separate property of decedent. If selected for the widow from the separate property of decedent, the order must prescribe a limited period for such homestead not to exceed the lifetime of the widow. Such provision is a part of the order herein.

[6] That the court acted with a sound discretion and within the purview of section 661, Probate Code, appears from a glimpse at the facts shown by the record. There was no community property appropriate for petitioner's homestead. Neither does the bungalow court owned by decedent and his wife as tenants in common fill the requirements for a woman who had been decedent's wife for seventeen and a half years and with him had during that period occupied the El Molino home. It is a seven-room, two-story frame house, worth only $11,000 including a three-room apartment which is a part of the building "constructed by blocking off a doorway to some existing room." If it was an appropriate residence for petitioner when she was, almost two decades previously, carried over its threshold to abide there with her husband, should she today be driven from it, now that he is gone and she is left with her memories? No good reason appears why she should be penalized by being forced from the shelter provided by her husband and driven to a humbler abode merely because she owns a half interest in the court. The fact that the El Molino home was occupied by decedent and petitioner in his lifetime and could have been declared a homestead by decedent is a fair test of the appropriateness of its selection for petitioner. In re Estate of Levy, 141 Cal. 646, 649, 75 P. 301. To compel her to go from her established seven-room residence and live in a three-room apartment would be to deprive her of an economic status established for her by her husband, reduce her enthusiasm and diminish her power for service to her community. Decedent never lived in the court although his half interest was worth $18,300.

Moreover, the estate does not need the El Molino property. Its assets exceed $185,000 besides the home and no indebtedness is suggested by the executors.

Whether petitioner should be awarded a court building instead of one of its apartments as a homestead is not germane. She was awarded the El Molino property and that shall be her home.

Order affirmed.

McCOMB and FOX, JJ., concur.

137 Cal.App.2d Supp. 854

The PEOPLE of the State of California,
Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Thelma GARRIGAN, Defendant and Appellant.

Cr. A. 28.

Appellate Department, Superior Court,
San Bernardino County,
California.

Nov. 8, 1955.

Defendant was convicted of selling intoxicating beverages to a minor. The Justice Court, Twentynine Palms Judicial District, San Bernardino County, John W. Allen, J., after trial without jury entered judgment against defendant and defendant appealed. The Appellate Department of the Superior Court, Hilliard, J., held that where defendant sold beer to a person who had allegedly produced evidence of his majority at previous sales but defendant required no evidence of majority at time of sale in question, defense of identification by documentary evidence of majority was not available to the defendant.

Affirmed.

1. Criminal Law ⇨1043(1)

In prosecution for selling intoxicating beverages to a minor, where the trial judge after trial, in response to request for finding, stated in effect, that in his opinion the defense of identification by documentary evidence of majority applied only to suspension and revocation of license and was not applicable in case at bar, the point of law as to whether such defense was available was properly before appellate court. West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, § 25660; Pen.Code, § 1469.

2. Intoxicating Liquors ⇨176

Statutory defense of identification by documentary evidence of majority is available to a defendant in prosecution for selling beverage to a minor. West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, §§ 25658(a), 25660.

3. Intoxicating Liquors ⇨176

Statute authorizing proof that defendant demanded and was shown, before furnishing any alcoholic beverage to a minor, documentary evidence of majority as defense to prosecution for selling intoxicating beverage to a minor applies to each individual sale and seller must demand showing of identification upon occasion of each sale, even though seller had previously examined documentary evidence of identity and age, and any seller acting in violation of such requirement does so at his own risk. West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, §§ 25658(a), 25660.

4. Intoxicating Liquors ⇨176

In prosecution for selling intoxicating beverage to a minor, defense of identification by documentary evidence of majority was not available to defendant who did not require evidence of majority from buyer on occasion of sale involved, notwithstanding defendant had at time of prior sale examined documentary evidence of identity and age of the buyer. West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, §§ 25658, 25660.

5. Criminal Law ⇨1165(1)

In prosecution for selling intoxicating beverage to a minor, trial judge's erroneous ruling that defense of identification by documentary evidence of majority was not available to defendant did not affect any substantial rights of the defendant who had made sale in question without demanding the showing of identification although defendant had at time of previous sales examined documentary evidence of identity and age of the buyer. West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, §§ 25658, 25660.

Cunningham, Parry & Holcomb and W. R. Holcomb, San Bernardino, for appellant.

Lowell E. Lathrop, Dist. Atty., San Bernardino, and Alfred A. Wells, Deputy Dist. Atty., San Clemente, for respondent.

HILLIARD, Judge.

This is an appeal from a judgment of conviction of violation of Business and Professions Code Section 25658(a) following trial by the court without a jury. There is no substantial conflict in the evidence concerning the transaction which was the basis of the prosecution. It was established that appellant sold 3 six-packs of beer to a minor, aged 17. In defense appellant testified that she had sold beer to the same minor upon four or five previous occasions; that, on each of these occasions the minor had presented a Marine Corps Identification Card with statistical information identical in comparison with his physical appearance, and indicating that he was 22 years of age. Appellant further testified that at the time of the sale in question she did not demand or see any evidence of the minor's identification or age, since she was satisfied of his majority by the previous transactions.

The minor denied ownership or possession of such identification card, or that he had ever displayed such document to appellant.

No objection was made at the trial to the introduction of testimony concerning these prior sales. At the conclusion of the evidence the trial judge stated that there was no dispute as to the sale upon which the prosecution was founded; that the minor had denied showing an identification card at any time; and that the defendant was guilty as charged.

Thereafter counsel for appellant requested the judge to make a specific finding that the defense of identification by documentary evidence of majority, as provided in Section 25660, Business and Professions Code, was not available to a defendant in a criminal prosecution. Counsel now justifies this rather unusual procedure by asserting that the trial judge had indicated during the trial that he believed such to be the law and had, therefore, disregarded evidence in support of such defense. Counsel further states that, since no objection was made to the introduction of evidence supporting this defense, and no jury instructions were required, such procedure was his only method of creating a record for review of this point upon appeal.

[1] In the post-trial colloquy between counsel and the Court, and following the request for such finding, the trial judge stated that, in his opinion, the defenses available under B. & P. Code Section 25660 applied only to suspension and revocation of license, and were not applicable in the case at bar.

Respondent contends that, with the question presented by the record in this condition, the point of law is not properly before this Court upon appeal, and the remarks of the trial judge are dicta. I find no merit in this contention. Penal Code Section 1469 provides that upon an appeal by a defendant, the court may review "any question of law involved in any ruling, order, instruction, or thing whatsoever said or done at the trial or prior to or after judgment, which thing was said or done after objection made in and considered by the trial court and which affected the substantial rights of the defendant." It was the obvious intent of counsel for appellant, and the trial court, that the request for special finding be considered as an objection, and we shall so treat it.

Originally enacted as Section 61.2(b) of Alcoholic Beverage Control Act, Section

25660 was modified and added to Business and Professions Code in 1953. Although this case is governed by provisions of the Section as it existed in 1953, it is significant to note the 1955 amendments which appear to represent an effort on the part of the legislature to clarify some portions attacked by respondent herein as being ambiguous. Section 61.2(b), Alcoholic Beverage Control Act, St. 1941, p. 1948, § 1, provided as follows:

"In any criminal prosecution, or any proceeding for the suspension or revocation of any license issued under this act and based upon violation of said Section 61, proof that the defendant licensee or his agent or employee demanded and was shown, before furnishing any alcoholic beverage to a minor, a motor vehicle operator's license or a registration certificate issued under the Federal Selective Service Act or other bona fide documentary evidence of majority and identity of such person, shall be a defense to such prosecution or proceeding for the suspension or revocation of any license."

In 1953 the legislature reenacted the Section, with some changes, and it was added to the Business and Professions Code in the following form:

"In any criminal prosecution or proceeding for the suspension or revocation of any license based upon violation of Section 25658, proof that the defendant licensee, or his agent or employee, demanded and was shown, before furnishing any alcoholic beverage to a minor, a motor vehicle operator's license or a registration certificate issued under the Federal Selective Service Act or other bona fide documentary evidence of majority and identity of the person, is a defense to the prosecution or proceeding for the suspension or revocation of any license."

[2] By this enactment the legislature changed some punctuation and language in the section. In particular, the comma following the word "prosecution" was omitted, and the word "any" preceding the phrase

"proceeding for the suspension" was deleted. The Section, as thus enacted, clearly referred to criminal prosecutions, or to proceedings for suspension or revocation of license resulting from the violation of Section 25658. It follows that the trial court was in error in its ruling that such section was not available as a defense by appellant, who was prosecuted for violation of the section to which express reference is made in Section 25660.

Further remarks of the trial judge before pronouncement of judgment indicate that he had considered the testimony of the minor to the effect that he had "never at any time shown any identification of any kind". Such statement, however, when considered with the remarks immediately preceding, leads us to the conclusion that the Court limited consideration of such evidence to its corroborative effect in support of the prosecution.

[3] Appellant also contends that Section 25660 does not impose a burden of demanding the showing of identification upon the occasion of each sale if the seller has previously examined documentary evidence of identity and age. If the section was susceptible of such construction, it has now been clarified by the amendments enacted in 1955. The section now specifically requires that the demand and showing of evidence of identity and majority shall be accomplished "immediately prior to furnishing any alcoholic beverage to a person under 21 years of age * * *". St.1955, c. 627. Although the section, as existing at the time of this prosecution, did not specifically require such demand and showing "immediately prior to" the sale, it did require such action "before" the sale. The section should be interpreted to apply to each individual sale, and any seller acting in violation of such requirement must have done so at his own risk.

[4, 5] Since it is conceded that appellant did not so comply with Section 25660 on the occasion of the sale upon which this prosecution was based, it is obvious that appellant could not derive any comfort or protection from the defense available under such section. The ruling of the trial court, although an erroneous statement of the law, did not affect any substantial rights of the appellant.

COUGHLIN, P. J., and MITCHELL, J., concurred.

137 Cal.App.2d Supp. 843

Marvine L. IRVINE, Jr., and Patricia M. Irvine, Plaintiffs,

v.

Georgla L. WILSON, Carl R. Wilson, Gertrude Pollard and Does 1 to 5, Inclusive, Defendants.

Marvine L. IRVINE, Jr., and Patricia M. Irvine, Plaintiffs, Appellants and Respondents,

v.

Carl R. WILSON, Georgla Wilson and Gertrude Pollard, Defendants, Appellant and Respondents.

C. A. 196356.

Appellate Department, Superior Court,
San Diego County,
California.

Oct. 31, 1955.

Action against legal owner of automobile and against automobile dealer to whom owner had delivered automobile for purposes of sale for damage arising out of accident which occurred while automobile was being driven by person who was owner's daughter and dealer's wife. The Municipal Court, San Diego Judicial District, Madge Bradley, J., rendered judgment in favor of owner but against dealer, and plaintiff and dealer appealed. The Superior Court, Burch, J., held that where automobile dealer, to whom owner delivered automobile for purposes of sale, took title in his own name and borrowed money on security of automobile, even though not authorized to do so by owner, and thus intentionally represented himself as registered owner, and expressly granted permission to his wife to operate the automobile, dealer was, under permissive use provision of statute relating to liability of private owner, liable for damage caused by wife in course of such operation.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Automobiles ⇨240(1)

In an action under the ownership and permissive use provisions of statute relating to liability of private owners of automobiles, whether an owner grants permission is a question of fact to be proved at trial. Vehicle Code, § 402(a).

2. Automobiles ⇨192(1)

An owner's permission to use is an essential element of proof to establish statutory liability for imputed negligence under permissive use provision of statute relating to liability of private owners of automobiles. Vehicle Code, § 402(a).

3. Automobiles ⇨242(1)

In an action under permissive use provisions of statute relating to liability of private owners of automobiles, burden is on plaintiffs to prove permission. Vehicle Code, § 402(a).

4. Automobiles ⇨192(1)

An owner's knowledge of another's use of automobile is not necessary to establish implied permission to use, for purpose of fixing liability under permissive use provision of statute relating to liability of private owner of an automobile. Vehicle Code, § 402(a).

5. Troyer and Conversion ⇨4

Automobile dealer who took owner's automobile for sale only but who took title in his own name, borrowed money on security of the automobile and loaned automobile to his wife for her personal use, all without authority of owner, was a converter.

6. Automobiles ⇨192(6)

Under permissive use provision of statute relating to liability of private owner of automobile, when a person to whom an automobile has been entrusted embezzles it, the owner should not be held to have fictionally consented to usage, but when usage which bailee makes of borrowed automobile does not amount to a conversion, his mere disobedience of admonitions as to his personal conduct in operation of automobile within scope of authorized use should not exculpate owner. Vehicle Code, § 402(a).

7. Automobiles ⇨244(22)

In action against legal owner of automobile for damage sustained in collision which involved her automobile, which was at time being driven by owner's daughter, who was wife of used-car dealer, to whom owner had delivered automobile for purpose of sale, evidence sustained finding that operation had not been with owner's implied permission. Vehicle Code, § 402(a).

8. Appeal and Error ⇨1010(1)

A judgment supported by evidence must be affirmed.

9. Automobiles ⇨192(1)

Permissive use provision of statute relating to liability of private owner of an automobile imputes liability to registered owner as against legal owner. Vehicle Code, § 402(a).

10. Automobiles ⇨20

Vehicle Code provisions for registration are not conclusive as to who may be an owner, nor do they control in controversies of adverse claimants of owners. Vehicle Code, §§ 56, 175 et seq.

11. Automobiles ⇨195(1)

Where automobile dealer, to whom owner delivered automobile for purposes of sale, took title in his own name and borrowed money on security of automobile, even though not authorized to do so by owner, and thus intentionally represented himself as registered owner, and expressly granted permission to his wife to operate the automobile, dealer was, under permissive use provision of statute relating to liability of private owner, liable for damage caused by wife in course of such operation. Vehicle Code, § 402(a).

Fitzgerald & Selleck, by Willard M. Sinclair, San Diego, for appellants and respondents Marvina L. Irvine, Jr. and Patricia M. Irvine.

Kaminar & Sorbo, by Myron P. Kaminar, San Diego, for appellant and respondent Carl R. Wilson.

Murphy & Albert, by Harry Albert, Long Beach, for respondent Georgia L. Wilson.

Gertrude Pollard in pro. per.

BURCH, Judge.

The appeals in this action involve the application of the ownership and permissive use provisions of Section 402(a) of the Vehicle Code.

Mrs. Pollard's 1949 Cadillac, while being operated by her daughter, Mrs. Wilson, collided with and damaged plaintiff's automobile. Mrs. Pollard had delivered the Cadillac, together with the registration certificates, duly indorsed, to Mr. Wilson, sales manager of a secondhand automobile sales lot, only for the purposes of sale. Mrs. Pollard gave no express permission to her daughter to operate the Cadillac on the day of the accident, but had, before delivering its possession to Mr. Wilson, authorized her on occasions to drive it only to the grocery store. Mrs. Wilson had express permission from Mr. Wilson to take the Cadillac from the sales lot on the day of the accident.

On this and evidence later stated herein, the trial court found that Mrs. Pollard, though an owner, had not given permission for Mrs. Wilson's use at the time of the accident. Plaintiffs have appealed from this part of the judgment.

Mr. Wilson received possession of the Cadillac and the indorsed certificates of registration and assigned insurance on September 13 or 14. The accident occurred on September 22, 1952. On September 19 he surrendered the certificate of ownership to his bank as security for a loan, after indorsing in the space provided his own name as the transferee and the new owner for the purposes of the registration provisions of the Vehicle Code. Vehicle Code, §§ 56 and 175 et seq.

He collected the insurance and paid for the repairs to the Cadillac after the accident. He expressly granted to his wife permission to take the Cadillac on the day of the accident.

Upon this evidence the court found he was an owner and granted permission for the use. From this portion of the judgment Mr. Wilson appeals.

There is no appeal by Mrs. Wilson from the judgment against her.

[1-4] Whether an owner grants permission is a question of fact to be proved at the trial. Scheff v. Roberts, 35 Cal.2d 10, 12, 13, 215 P.2d 925. It is an essential element of proof in order to establish the statutory liability for imputed negligence under Section 402(a) of the Vehicle Code. Scheff v. Roberts, supra; Casey v. Fortune, 78 Cal.App.2d 922, 923, 179 P.2d 99. The burden is on the plaintiff to prove the permission. Henrietta v. Evans, 10 Cal.2d 526, 75 P.2d 1051; Mucci v. Winter, 103 Cal. App.2d 627, 230 P.2d 22; Fountain v. Bank of America, 109 Cal.App.2d 90, 240 P.2d 414. Here there was no express permission by Mrs. Pollard, and while knowledge on her part is no longer considered necessary to establish implied permission, Burgess v. Cahill, 26 Cal.2d 320, 158 P.2d 393, 159 A.L.R. 1304; Scheff v. Roberts, supra, and the inference has been drawn from evidence of permission for general use and the surrender of possession to another, Souza v. Corti, 22 Cal.2d 454, 139 P.2d 645, 147 A.L.R. 861; Hobbs v. Transport Motor Co., 22 Cal.2d 773, 141 P.2d 738; Davidson v. Ealey, 69 Cal.App.2d 254, 158 P.2d 1000, or the driver's use of the vehicle on other occasions, Phillips v. Cuccio, 5 Cal.App.2d 520, 42 P.2d 1050, the circumstances here present do not demand the finding of implied permission as a matter of law. Henrietta v. Evans, supra; Engstrom v. Auburn Auto Sales Corp., 112 Cal.2d 64, 77 P.2d 1059; Rose v. Porter, 101 Cal.App.2d 333, 225 P.2d 245.

The authority of Mr. Wilson, so far as the record indicates, was limited to those uses which would promote the sale. Clearly, this did not include the accommodation of Mrs. Wilson's personal needs. Had Mr.

Wilson been present in the Cadillac or himself operating it at the time of the accident, Mrs. Pollard's liability for his negligence would be supported by the fact that she gave him full control of the vehicle, and the use would be that of her permittee. However, as her agent for the limited purposes of sale he acted beyond his bailment. To hold Mrs. Pollard liable would be to hold that a bailor is liable for acts of the bailee outside the contract of bailment. The court, perhaps, might have inferred that Mrs. Pollard would expect her son-in-law to accede to her daughter's demand, but the court did not so infer and was not obliged to do so. Mrs. Wilson, of course, knew the limitation of her husband's right, as did he, and in the circumstances the trial court could have concluded that the express permission sought and obtained implied a willful violation of Mrs. Pollard's accepted right to give or withhold permission.

The case here is not one where a borrower for general uses permits a third person to operate. Instead there is here a question of fact of the owner's permissive use. The principle is illustrated in Helmuth v. Frame, 46 Cal.App.2d 381, 115 P.2d 852, and Barcus v. Campbell, 90 Cal.App.2d 768, 204 P.2d 65, 68, wherein the Supreme Court denied a hearing. As said by Mr. Justice Griffin in the last cited case: "There is evidence that would justify the belief, by the trial judge, that plaintiff had not met the burden of proof in establishing permissive use of the Plymouth by Campbell at the time and place of the accident involved."

[5] The record indicates that Mr. Wilson had the car in his possession for sale and nothing else. When he took title in his own name, borrowed money on the security of the car, and loaned the car to his wife for her personal uses, all without authority of Mrs. Pollard, he became a converter. See George v. Bekins Van & Storage Co., 33 Cal.2d 834, 205 P.2d 1037.

[6] As Mr. Justice Schauer pointed out in the concurring opinion in Souza v. Corti, 22 Cal.2d 454, at page 462, 139 P.2d 645, at page 649: "When a person to whom an automobile has been entrusted embezzles it, and converts it to his own use in derogation of the title of the owner, I think the owner should not be held fictionally to have consented to usage which he did not in fact consent to, either expressly or impliedly." The Justice's next sentence points to the distinction between this case and the cases of permission for general use: "But when the usage which the bailee makes of a borrowed vehicle does not amount to a conversion of it, his mere disobedience of admonitions as to his personal conduct in the operation of the automobile within the scope of the authorized use [emphasis ours] should not exculpate the owner from the liability otherwise imposed by the statute."

The distinction is emphasized in the case of Herbert v. Cassinelli, 73 Cal.App.2d 277, 281, 166 P.2d 377, 379, wherein the court said: "It therefore appears that in this class of cases the significant factor is the fact that the owner has committed the general use of the car to the permittee, and this use is not converted into a special one because the permission may have been accompanied by an express admonition not to permit any one else to drive the car. Souza v. Corti, supra, 22 Cal.2d at page 460, 139 P.2d 645, 147 A.L.R. 861; Haggard v. Frick, 6 Cal.App.2d 392, 44 P.2d 447; Herbert v. Cassinelli, supra, 61 Cal. App.2d [661] at page 665, 143 P.2d 752. See, also, Burgess v. Cahill, 26 Cal.2d 320, 324, 158 P.2d 393, 159 A.L.R. 1304."

[7,8] We conclude on this phase of the case that there was substantial evidence that Mrs. Wilson's operation was not, as a matter of law, with Mrs. Pollard's implied permission. A judgment supported by the evidence must be affirmed on appeal. Pacific Finance Corp. v. Foust, 44 Cal.2d 853, 285 P.2d 632.

We are also of the opinion that the judgment against Mr. Wilson as an owner should be affirmed.

[9,10] Section 402(a) imputes the liability to the registered owner under the provisions of the act as against the legal owner. Piacun v. Hexem, 18 Cal.App.2d 145, 63 P.2d 315; Bunch v. Kin, 2 Cal.App. 2d 81, 85, 37 P.2d 744. The Vehicle Code provisions for registration are not conclusive as to who may be an owner under 402(a), Logan v. Serpa, 91 Cal.App.2d 818, 206 P.2d 70, nor do they control in controversies of adverse claimants of owners.

It has, however, been held that one in Mr. Wilson's position who had possession of the motor vehicle, and held the certificate of ownership as the transferee and who indorses his name thereon and forwards the certificate to the Department of Motor Vehicles, is an owner and subject as such to the statutory liability. Collard v. Love, 17 Cal.App.2d 72, 61 P.2d 458.

As the New York court said in the case of Shuba v. Greendonner, 271 N.Y. 189, 2 N.E.2d 536, 538. "Whether we call it an estoppel or whether we decide that the action of the Legislature in regulating the use of such vehicles in this state establishes our public policy makes no difference in the final result."

[11] From the record it is clear that Mr. Wilson intentionally represented himself as the registered owner and expressly granted permission to his wife to operate the Cadillac on the occasion of the accident. He is therefore liable as an owner within the contemplation of Section 402(a) of the Vehicle Code.

The judgment is affirmed.

TURRENTINE, P. J., and GLEN, J., concur.

CALIFORNIA REPORTER

290 PACIFIC REPORTER

SECOND SERIES

CALIFORNIA REPORTER

290 PACIFIC REPORTER

SECOND SERIES

45 Cal.2d 538

The PEOPLE of the State of California,
Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Ruben Corrales ACOSTA, Defendant
and Appellant.

Cr. 5742.

Supreme Court of California.
In Bank.

Nov. 22, 1955.

Rehearing Denied Dec. 21, 1955.

Defendant was convicted, inter alia, of violating section of the Vehicle Code dealing with unlawful driving or taking of a vehicle. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Joe Raycraft, J., entered judgment, and defendant appealed. The Supreme Court, Schauer, J., held that where defendant testified that when driver of taxicab in which defendant was riding, believing that defendant was going to rob him, left moving taxicab, defendant did not drive the taxicab but merely leaned over seat and attempted to steer taxicab, defendant was entitled to instruction as to accident or misfortune, and that refusal of defendant's requested instruction as to accident or misfortune was reversible error.

Judgment reversed.

Opinion, 283 P.2d 73, vacated.

Spence, Edmonds and Shenk, JJ., dissented.

1. Criminal Law Ⓒ741(1)

If there is prosecution evidence, which tends to disprove criminality, and other prosecution evidence, which tends to prove criminality, it is the function of the trier of fact to determine which version is to be believed.

2. Criminal Law Ⓒ556

Rule that prosecution is bound by defendant's extrajudicial statements, which are introduced by the prosecution, and which are irreconcilable with guilt, is applicable only where there is no other competent and substantial evidence which could establish guilt.

3. Automobiles Ⓒ356

Question whether defendant was guilty of violating section of the Vehicle Code dealing with the unlawful driving or taking of a motor vehicle was for jury. Vehicle Code, § 503.

4. Automobiles Ⓒ357

In prosecution for violation of section of Vehicle Code dealing with unlawful driving or taking of a vehicle, wherein defendant testified that when driver of taxicab, believing that defendant was going to rob him, left moving taxicab, defendant did not drive the taxicab but merely leaned over seat and attempted to steer taxicab, defendant was entitled to instruction as to misfortune and accident. Pen.Code, § 26; Vehicle Code, § 503.

5. Criminal Law Ⓒ1173(2)

In prosecution for violation of section of Vehicle Code dealing with unlawful driving or taking of a vehicle, wherein defendant testified that when driver of taxicab, believing that defendant was going to rob him, left moving taxicab, defendant did not drive the taxicab but merely leaned over seat and attempted to steer taxicab, refusal to give defendant's requested instruction on misfortune and accident was prejudicial error. Pen.Code, § 26; Vehicle Code, § 503.

Ellery E. Cuff, Public Defender, William H. Sanson and Noel B. Martin, Deputy Public Defenders, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., and Marvin Gross, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

SCHAUER, Justice.

Defendant was charged by information in count 1 with grand theft of an automobile (Pen.Code, § 487, subd. 3), in count 2 with violation of section 503 of the Vehicle Code,¹ and in counts 3 and 4 with manslaughter (Pen.Code, § 192).² A jury found defendant not guilty of count 1 and guilty of counts 2, 3, and 4. Defendant appeals from the judgment as to count 2.

Defendant contends: (1) the evidence of the prosecution establishes defendant's want of criminal intent; (2) refusal of defendant's requested instruction as to misfortune and accident was prejudicial error; (3) even if defendant had not requested such instruction, it was the trial court's duty of its own motion to instruct on the subject. We have concluded that contention (1) is without merit; that contention (2) requires reversal; and that contention (3) need not be discussed.

Evidence of Guilt.

The events which resulted in this prosecution occurred on April 3, 1954. Defendant, a Mexican agricultural worker legally in the United States, could not speak English. He had been in this country since March 19, 1954. On April 3 defendant went with fellow workers to a cafe in Torrance. Defendant drank five or six bottles of beer. He and an acquaintance then went to a cafe in Redondo Beach. There defendant drank no more. He began to dance by himself. The proprietor, who spoke Spanish, led him out of the cafe. Defendant left politely. However, he returned and again danced by himself. A waitress called the police and the proprietor called a cab for defendant. The proprietor interpreted for the police and defendant. When the cab arrived the police directed the driver to take defendant to the ranch where defendant was employed, and explained that defendant had no money but that the fare would be paid at the ranch or by the proprietor of the cafe.

After the cab driver had driven defendant for a few minutes, defendant spoke to him in Spanish, which the driver did not understand. About a year before a passenger had attempted to rob the driver and the driver had escaped by opening the door and rolling out of the cab; he recalled this incident and it influenced his conduct when defendant began to behave strangely as hereinafter described. Defendant denied any violent conduct and testified that his purposes were innocent; the following description of the events is taken from the testimony of prosecution witnesses.

When the driver did not comprehend defendant's Spanish, defendant reached into the front seat of the cab, seized the driver's clip board and struck the driver. The driver struck at defendant with his flashlight. Defendant pinned the driver's arm back and struck at his neck with defendant's hand. The driver avoided the blow, opened the cab door, and rolled out. He had slowed to 10 or 15 miles an hour and pulled to the left side of the road. He left the car in high gear and did not turn off the ignition switch.

1. Count 2 alleges that defendant "did willfully, unlawfully and feloniously drive and take a certain vehicle * * * without the consent of and with intent to deprive the * * * owner * * * of title to and possession of said vehicle."
2. Counts 3 and 4 allege that defendant "did willfully, unlawfully and feloniously and without malice, while engaged in the driving of a vehicle in the commission of an unlawful act not amounting to a felony, with gross negligence, and while in the commission of a lawful act which might produce death, in an unlawful manner, with gross negligence, kill" two named human beings.

Other persons on the highway observed that the cab slackened speed, the passenger stood over the driver striking him, the driver rolled out of the car, the passenger got from the back seat into the front seat behind the wheel, the cab accelerated to about 60 miles an hour, ran through a red light, and hit another car broadside.

According to defendant's testimony and extrajudicial statements, he did not hit the driver with the clip board and did not get into the front seat of the cab, but attempted to steer it by reaching over the back of the front seat to the wheel. However, a prosecution witness observed that when the cab came to rest defendant was in the front of the car, having been partially thrown to the floor, with his hips on the seat beneath the steering wheel and his head to the right.

Two passengers in the car which was struck by the cab were killed and the driver was seriously injured. Defendant was assisted from the cab. His right arm was injured. He got into another automobile, in which the driver had left the keys, and attempted unsuccessfully to start it. The police then removed defendant from the automobile.

Defendant concedes that if the People's case consisted solely of the testimony of the cab driver and other prosecution witnesses as summarized above, criminal intent could be inferred from defendant's conduct. But, says defendant, the People's case in chief included "primary and direct" proof of defendant's state of mind by a transcript of an extrajudicial statement of defendant to a police officer which assertedly "explicitly disproves criminality."

In the questioning of defendant as to his previous statements to another officer, the following was said: "Captain Ashton: You told Officer Gonzales that the taxi driver was going to rob you.

"The Defendant: I said that but I did not mean that at the time as there are lots of crimes happening in that manner and that as he was going in the wrong direction I thought something might happen to me."

This statement, defendant says, establishes that his intent and purpose during the events leading up to and immediately following the driver's abandonment of the cab were not to deprive the owner of the cab of possession thereof. Defendant relies upon what he considers to be an analogous situation in People v. Salaz (1924); 66 Cal.App. 173, 181, 225 P. 777. There defendant, charged with murder, admitted the killing but claimed that it was in necessary self-defense. A jury found him guilty of manslaughter and he appealed. The appellate court said (at page 181 of 66 Cal. App. at page 780 of 225 P.),

"The jury could not have found, from the evidence for the people, that the killing was done by appellant except upon the latter's admissions, which carried, in close and immediate connection with proof of the killing, circumstances of necessary self-defense. Since, therefore, the proof on the part of the prosecution tends to show that the act of appellant was justifiable, there was, at the close of the people's case, no presumption against the accused that he had committed an unlawful homicide. No presumption of guilt weighed against the presumption of innocence. 'Upon a trial for murder, the commission of the homicide by the defendant being proved, the burden of proving circumstances of mitigation, or that justify or excuse it, devolves upon him, unless the proof on the part of the prosecution tends to show that the crime committed only amounts to manslaughter, or that the defendant was justifiable or excusable.' (Pen.Code, sec. 1105.) [Italics of the District Court of Appeal.]

"But it does not necessarily follow that appellant's account of the killing, though uncontradicted by direct evidence, should control the jury. If there be any well-established circumstance in the case which may reasonably be regarded as incompatible with the theory of the defense that the killing was justifiable, then the jury, from a consideration of all the evidence, was warranted in finding that the act amounted to an unlawful homicide."

The court concluded (at page 183 of 66 Cal.App. at page 780 of 225 P.) that "if it cannot be said, as a matter of law, that the evidence in this case is insufficient to support the verdict, the question is a close one," and that certain error was prejudicial.

Cited by defendant to the same effect are People v. Toledo (1948), 85 Cal.App.2d 577, 580-581, 582, 193 P.2d 953 [where the appellate court concluded that "In the final analysis, defendant's conviction is not supported by the record," which according to the appellate court established justifiable homicide]; and People v. Estrada (1923), 60 Cal.App. 477, 482-483, 213 P. 67 [where "The proof on the part of the prosecution (referring now to the statement of the defendant) did * * * show a case of justification, and there is nothing in any of the other evidence presented which tends to contradict or dispute defendant's version of the affair"]. Defendant says, paraphrasing the second sentence quoted above from the Salaz case, that "since the proof on the part of the prosecution shows that the intent in the mind of appellant was non-criminal, there was at the close of the People's case no presumption that appellant had either attempted to rob the cab driver or wrongfully and without his consent taken possession of and operated the cab."

[1-3] The sentence in the Salaz case which, according to defendant, should be applied to the present case, does not stand for a rule of law that a defendant cannot be convicted if the prosecution introduces some evidence which tends to prove that defendant did not act in the manner or have the state of mind which is necessary to constitute a crime and there is other evidence sufficient to show guilt. As the Salaz case itself indicates, if there is prosecution evidence which tends to disprove criminality and other prosecution evidence which tends to prove criminality, it is the function of the trier of fact to determine which version is to be believed. (See People v. Freudenberg (1953), 121 Cal.App. 2d 564, 575-576, 263 P.2d 875; People v.

Rutland (1953), 120 Cal.App.2d 798, 800, 261 P.2d 735; cf. People v. Howard (1930), 211 Cal. 322, 329-330, 295 P. 333, 71 A.L.R. 1385; People v. Holt (1944), 25 Cal.2d 59, 90-93, 153 P.2d 21.) The courts may sometimes say that the prosecution is "bound by" extrajudicial statements of defendant which are introduced by the prosecution and which are irreconcilable with guilt, but this concept is applicable only where there is no other competent and substantial evidence which could establish guilt. (See People v. Jacobs (1952), 111 Cal.App.2d 281, 283, 244 P.2d 500; People v. Coppla (1950), 100 Cal.App.2d 766, 769, 224 P.2d 828.)

Failure to Instruct as to Misfortune and Accident.

Defendant relies upon the provision of section 26 of the Penal Code that "All persons are capable of committing crimes except those belonging to the following classes: * * * Six. Persons who committed the act or made the omission charged through misfortune or by accident, when it appears that there was no evil design, intention, or culpable negligence." He asserts that "Through the abandonment of the cab, something wholly unforeseen, appellant found himself, suddenly and with no criminal intent, the sole occupant of a vehicle in motion, in gear, with the motor running. All he did was the natural reaction of one unfamiliar with the operating technique of the vehicle." It is defendant's position that the refusal of the following instruction requested by him deprived him of the opportunity to have this important aspect of the evidence properly appraised by the jury: "When a person commits an act or makes an omission through misfortune or by accident under circumstances that show no evil design, intention or culpable negligence, he does not thereby commit a crime, although the same act or omission committed under different circumstances and coupled with criminal intent would constitute a crime." (California Jury Instructions—Criminal (1946), No. 71-E.)

[4] The People reply that the theory to which this instruction relates was unsupported by any substantial evidence and therefore that the refusal of the instruction was not error. The People refer to the testimony of prosecution witnesses that after the cab driver rolled out of the cab the vehicle accelerated while it was going up a slight grade and that the vehicle could not have done this had it been simply idling in high gear, as the cab driver left it; this testimony, the People say, refutes defendant's testimony that he did not "drive" the cab but merely leaned over the seat and attempted to steer it. Even if the jury disbelieved defendant's testimony that he did not get into the front seat, they still could have found that what appeared to others to be a "driving" of the car was not with intent to drive or take it but was the mere unintended, confused result of the peculiar situation in which defendant found himself. For example, the jury could have found that defendant tried to stop the car and through ignorance or mistake put his foot on the accelerator instead of the brake. In the state of the evidence defendant was entitled to his requested instruction as to accident or misfortune.

[5] The People urge that in any event the refusal of the instruction was not prejudicial because the jury were fully instructed as to the intent necessary to constitute a criminal taking of a car in violation of section 503 of the Vehicle Code and would not have convicted defendant had they not found that defendant had such intent. However, defendant was entitled to the instruction as to accident and misfortune in the terms or substance in which he requested it so that the jury's attention would be directed to the possible, reasonable view of the evidence urged by defendant. (See People v. Carmen (1951), 36 Cal.2d 768, 773, 228 P.2d 281.)

The foregoing discussion and our conclusion make it unnecessary to consider defendant's contention that the trial court of its own motion should have instructed as to accident and misfortune.

For the reasons above stated, the judgment appealed from is reversed.

GIBSON, C. J., and CARTER and TRAYNOR, JJ., concur.

SPENCE, Justice.

I dissent.

Defendant was convicted of two counts of manslaughter and of one count of violation of section 503 of the Vehicle Code. He appeals only from the judgment relating to the last-mentioned count. The majority opinion holds that the evidence was sufficient to support the judgment as to that count, but reverses solely because of alleged prejudicial error in the failure to give a requested instruction. After a review of the record, including the evidence, I am of the opinion that it cannot be said that the error, if any, in the failure to give the requested instruction "resulted in a miscarriage of justice." Const. art. VI, § 4½.

The information charged that defendant "did wilfully, unlawfully and feloniously drive and take a certain vehicle * * * without the consent of and with the intent to deprive the * * * owner * * * of title to and possession of said vehicle * * *." (Emphasis added.) The trial court instructed the jury that "Any person who drives or takes a vehicle not his own, without the consent of the owner thereof, and with intent to either permanently or temporarily deprive the owner thereof of his title to or possession of such vehicle, * * * is guilty of a felony". (Veh.Code, § 503; emphasis added.) The jury was further given the customary general instructions, including those on the presumption of innocence, reasonable doubt, and burden of proof. Upon the evidence and under these instructions, the jury found defendant "guilty of violation of section 503, Vehicle Code, a felony, as charged in count two of the information."

It is clear that the given instructions clearly informed the jury that defendant could not be found guilty unless the jury found from the evidence and beyond a reasonable doubt that defendant drove the automobile with the required criminal intent. Thus, in finding the defendant guilty, the jury necessarily found that defendant had the specific criminal intent mentioned in said section and alleged in the information; and the overwhelming evidence supports that finding.

It is true that defendant told an unusual story concerning the events immediately preceding the fatal accident, but his explanation cannot be reconciled with his great acceleration of the speed of the car and of his traveling at such speed for almost a mile before the accident occurred. Defendant's criminal intent was further indicated by his attempt unlawfully to take another automobile for the purpose of fleeing from the scene of the accident.

The refused instruction reads: "When a person commits an act or makes an omission through misfortune or by accident under circumstances that show no evil design, intention or culpable negligence, he does not thereby commit a crime, although the same act or omission committed under different circumstances and coupled with criminal intent would constitute a crime." (Emphasis added.)

A reading of the refused instruction shows that it constitutes, in effect, another way of stating the propositions of law relating to intent which were amply covered by the instructions given. By its terms, it could have no application unless it was found that defendant drove the car under circumstances showing no evil "intention" and in a manner not "coupled with criminal intent."

In light of the fact that the given instruction made it entirely clear that defendant could not be convicted unless the jury found beyond a reasonable doubt that he drove the car "with intent to either permanently or temporarily deprive the owner thereof of his title or to possession of such vehicle," I find no prejudicial error in the failure to give the requested instruction.

I would therefore follow the constitutional mandate, Const., art. VI, § 4½, and affirm the challenged judgment.

SHENK and EDMONDS, JJ., concur.

Rehearing denied; SHENK, EDMONDS and SPENCE, JJ., dissenting.

Otis D. BABCOCK, Plaintiff and Appellant,
v.

Joe KING and Lillian King, Defendants and Respondents.

District Court of Appeal, Third District,
California.

Nov. 30, 1955.

Lessee's action to rescind a lease. The Superior Court, Placer County, Lowell Sparks and Ralph McGee, JJ., on second trial of the action, rendered a judgment from which the lessee appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Peek, J., held that evidence sustained the trial court's finding of rental value, that the lessee was not entitled to credit for sums expended by him in leveling the land in the absence of an allegation that such expenditure enhanced the value of the property, and that interest on rental payments made prior to rescission did not commence to run until date of rescission.

Affirmed.

1. Landlord and Tenant ⇨34(5)

In action for rescission of lease wherein court found lessee was entitled to rescission on payment of sum representing rent and taxes to date of rescission, evidence that agreed rental was $4,000 per year was evidence which would sustain trial court's finding that rental value was $3,000 per year, as against lessee's attack upon such finding.

2. Landlord and Tenant ⇨34(5)

Where lessee did not allege, in his action to rescind lease, that his expenditure of money in leveling land enhanced value of the property, and court made no finding thereon, trial court did not err in not crediting lessee with such sum against reasonable rental value of premises.

3. Interest ⇨39(1)

Where restitution of lease is based upon rescission for mutual mistake, interest is allowed only from date of rescission, as distinguished from those situations which by statute operate to give a party right to interest prior to rescission. West's Ann. Civ. Code, § 3288.

4. Interest § 39(1)

Lessee who rescinded lease on ground of mutual mistake was not entitled to interest on rental payments made before rescission, except from date of rescission. West's Ann. Civ. Code, § 3288.

Thomas W. Olson, Jr., Sacramento, and K. D. Robinson, Auburn, for appellant.

John R. Couzens, Auburn, and Thomas E. Srednik, Roseville, for respondents.

PEEK, Justice.

Plaintiff-lessee sought to rescind a lease agreement whereby he had leased from defendants certain real property located at Lake Tahoe. At the conclusion of the first trial, the court found that through mistake the parties had regarded the property as one unit, while as a matter of fact, it was bisected by a public road which had been dedicated but had never been laid out. The court concluded that plaintiff was entitled to a judgment of rescission upon payment to defendants of a sum representing unpaid rent and taxes to the date of surrender of possession by plaintiff. Thereafter both parties moved for a new trial and the same was granted. By stipulation the matter was retried upon the record of the first trial. The court, in its memorandum of decision, noted an insufficiency in the record on the question of the reasonable rental value of the land and reopened the case for further testimony on that one issue. Again the court found that rescission should be granted to plaintiff and that he should pay to defendants a sum found to be the reasonable rental value of the land. Plaintiff now appeals from that judgment, contending that there is no evidence to support the finding of the court as to the reasonable rental value of the land; that the judgment fails to reflect the reasonable value of improvements he placed on the land; and, that it fails to credit him with interest on rental payments made prior to rescission.

[1] As regards the first contention, the record discloses testimony by defendants who placed the reasonable rental value of the property at $4,000 per year which was the agreed rental stated in the lease, and testimony by one expert called by defendants who testified concerning the factors he had considered, including the land value, and placed the rental value in the sum of $4,200 per year. Even assuming plaintiff's contention that the testimony of defendants' witness was speculative and conjectural, that is not to say that there was therefore no evidence. It is undisputed that the agreed rental was $4,000 per year which fact the court held, in Harris v. Bissell, 54 Cal.App. 307, 312, 202 P. 453, to be evidence of the rental value of the land, but when it is not based on contract it may be greater or less than as provided in the lease. Here the value placed on the property by the court was in the sum of $3,000, or $1,000 per year less than the agreed rent.

[2] Plaintiff's next contention, that he should have been credited with the sum of $600 expended by him in leveling the land, is likewise without merit. It is to be noted that plaintiff did not allege that such expenditure enhanced the value of the property and the court made no finding thereon. Under such circumstances it cannot be said that the court erred.

[3, 4] A like conclusion must prevail as regards plaintiff's final argument that the court erred in failing to allow him interest on the rent paid and on the sum representing the value of the improvements made during the period of his possession. Where as here restitution is based upon rescission for mutual mistake, interest is allowed only from the date of rescission, Taber v. Piedmont Heights Bldg. Co., 25 Cal.App. 222, 143 P. 319, as distinguished from those situations arising under section 3288 of the Civil Code which operate to give a party the right to interest prior to rescission. Hence, since no money was due plaintiff, interest did not commence to run until the date of rescission.

The judgment is affirmed.

VAN DYKE, P. J., and SCHOTTKY, J., concur.

137 Cal.App.2d 398

Ernestine SALAZAR, Plaintiff and Appellant,
v.

CHAPULTOPEC GROCERY, a corporation,
Curtiss Candy Company, a corporation,
Defendant,

Curtiss Candy Company, a corporation,
Respondent.
Civ. 21304.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 2, California.
Nov. 30, 1955.

Action against candy manufacturer and retailer for injuries resulting from eating candy bars. A non-suit was granted in favor of the retailer. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Allen W. Ashburn, J., after trial without jury, entered judgment in favor of the manufacturer, and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, McComb, J., held that where candy bars when manufactured were pure, wholesome, fit for human consumption and were of a merchantable quality without presence of any worms, and were in same condition when manufacturer parted with possession, control and right to control of candy bars, manufacturer was not liable to person becoming sick and nauseated after eating candy bars.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Appeal and Error ⇨854(2)

An erroneous conclusion of law is not ground for reversal if judgment is right.

2. Food ⇨25

Where candy bars when manufactured were pure, wholesome, fit for human consumption and were of a merchantable quality without presence of any worms, and were in same condition when manufacturer parted with possession, control and right to control of candy bars, manufacturer was not liable to person becoming sick and nauseated after eating candy.

3. Appeal and Error ⇨1071(2)

In action for injuries resulting from eating allegedly unwholesome candy bars, finding that candy bars were pure, wholesome and fit for human consumption when manufactured and at time manufacturer parted with its possession, control and right to control supported judgment for manufacturer and it was immaterial whether trial court's conclusion of law that there was no implied warranty on part of manufacturer that candy bars would continue to be reasonably fit for human consumption or of a merchantable quality after manufacturer parted with possession, control and right to control, was or was not erroneous.

Ernest A. Kessler, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Catlin & Catlin, Frank D. Catlin, Henry W. Catlin, George L. Catlin and William E. Catlin, Los Angeles, for respondent.

McCOMB, Justice.

From a judgment in favor of defendant after trial before the court without a jury in an action to recover damages for injuries resulting from eating candy bars manufactured by defendant Curtiss Candy Company, plaintiff appeals.

Facts: Defendant Curtiss Candy Company manufactured Baby Ruth candy bars. Defendant Chapultotec Grocery Corporation purchased some of these candy bars from the Fuji Company which had had them in its possession for about 6 weeks prior to the time plaintiff purchased two of the bars from said defendant. The evidence failed to disclose from whom the Fuji Company purchased them.

Plaintiff, after eating a portion of two of the candy bars, discovered that they had worms which caused her to become sick and nauseated. After receiving the evidence produced by the parties, the trial court made, among others, the following findings:

"That said Baby Ruth candy bars were manufactured with extraordinary care, skill and workmanship and when sold and delivered by said Curtiss Candy Company to independent jobbers and wholesalers, said candy bars were pure, wholesome and fit for human consumption and remained in a pure, wholesome condition as long as they were in the possession, control, and subject to the right of control of the Curtiss Candy Company.

"That any worms that were in said candy bars at the time plaintiff purchased and ate same were developed after the defendant Curtiss Candy Company parted with its possession, control and right to control said candy."

Thereafter the trial court drew this conclusion of law: "That there was no implied warranty on the part of the Curtiss Candy Company that said candy bars would continue to be reasonably fit for human consumption or of a merchantable quality after the manufacturer, the Curtiss Candy Company, parted with its possession, control, and the right to control the same."

A nonsuit was granted in favor of defendant Chapultopec Grocery. From this order there has been no appeal. The trial court gave judgment in favor of defendant Curtiss Candy Company.

Plaintiff urges that the above mentioned conclusion of law was prejudicially erroneous and requires a reversal of the judgment.

[1] This contention is devoid of merit for the reason that the law is established that an erroneous conclusion of law is not ground for reversal if the judgment is right. (Spencer v. Duncan, 107 Cal. 423, 426 et seq., 40 P. 549; McNutt v. City of Los Angeles, 187 Cal. 245, 259 [5], 201 P. 592.)

[2] In the instant case the trial court found, which finding is not questioned by plaintiff, that the candy bars when manufactured by defendant Curtiss Candy Company were pure, wholesome, fit for human consumption and were of a merchantable quality without the presence of any worms, and that at the time said defendant parted with its possession, control and the right to control said candy bars, they were in the same condition.

[3] In view of these unquestioned findings which support the judgment it is immaterial as to whether the conclusion of law in question was or was not erroneous. (Cf.

Mason v. Del Valle, 213 Cal. 30, 32 [2], 1 P.2d 419; Delmuto v. Superior Court, 119 Cal.App. 590, 594 [3], 6 P.2d 1007.)

In view of the trial court's findings the following cases, relied on by plaintiff, are not here applicable: Curtiss Candy Co. v. Johnson, 163 Miss. 426, 141 So. 762; Burr v. Sherwin Williams Co., 42 Cal.2d 682, 268 P.2d 1041; Klein v. Duchess Sandwich Co., 14 Cal.2d 272, 93 P.2d 799, and Vaccarezza v. Sanguinetti, 71 Cal.App.2d 687, 163 P.2d 470.

Affirmed.

MOORE, P. J., and FOX, J., concur.

137 Cal.App.2d 275

The PEOPLE of the State of California,
Plaintiff and Respondent,
v.

Homer CRISEL, Defendant and Appellant.
Cr. 3156.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 2, California.

Nov. 28, 1955.

Defendant was convicted of burglary in the second degree. The Superior Court, Monterey County, Stanley Lawson, J., rendered judgment, and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Dooling, J., held that since evidence of intent to commit theft was entirely circumstantial, instructing jury that such intent could be inferred from fact that defendant resorted to violence when discovered within house, without also instructing that to justify a conviction on circumstantial evidence, the facts and circumstances must be entirely consistent with guilt and inconsistent with any other rational conclusion, was error.

Judgment reversed.

1. Criminal Law §784(1)

Where evidence of intent to commit theft was entirely circumstantial in prosecution for burglary, instructing jury that such intent could be inferred from fact that defendant resorted to violence when discovered within house, without also instructing that to justify a conviction on circumstantial evidence, the facts and circumstances must be entirely consistent with guilt and inconsistent with any other rational conclusion, was error.

2. Criminal Law §824(9)

Where a specific intent is an element of crime charged and circumstantial evidence is relied on to prove such intent, instruction that to justify a conviction on circumstantial evidence, the facts and circumstances must be entirely consistent with guilt and inconsistent with any other rational conclusion must be given by trial court on its own motion.

Myron E. Etienne, Jr., Salinas, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Clarence A. Linn, Asst. Atty. Gen., Victor Griffith, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

DOOLING, Justice.

Appellant was convicted by a jury of burglary in the second degree. With a male companion appellant found himself in the country, in an automobile which was stalled because it had run out of gasoline. He had been drinking heavily. He walked to the nearest farm house to try to get some gasoline. It was broad daylight. When nobody answered his knock he violently kicked in the door and entered. The owner's brother-in-law followed him into the house and appellant, after violently attacking the brother-in-law, then fled. The crime charged was entry with intent to commit theft. The fact that the automobile was without gasoline and that appellant had gone to the house to get some if possible was testified to by appellant and his companion and appellant denied any intention to commit theft. That the car was stalled and out of gasoline is admitted.

The trial court instructed the jury: "Where it appears that the defendant resorts to violence when discovered within the house, the evidence is sufficient to sustain an implied finding that the defendant's entry into the house was made with intent to commit the crime charged." When this instruction was read to the jury a juror asked to have it reread which was done. After the jury had retired they returned to the courtroom and at their request this instruction was read a third time.

[1,2] The instruction may be technically correct, People v. Hawkins, 129 Cal. App. 720, 19 P.2d 249, but it clearly was error to give it without also giving an instruction that to justify a conviction on circumstantial evidence, the facts and circumstances must not only be entirely consistent with guilt but must be inconsistent with any other rational conclusion. Where a specific intent is an element of the crime and circumstantial evidence is relied on to prove the intent this instruction must be given by the court on its own motion. People v. Yrigoyen, 45 Cal.2d 46, 286 P.2d 1.

Here the evidence of an intent to commit theft was entirely circumstantial. The court instructed the jury that from the circumstance of appellant's attack on the owner's brother-in-law the intent to commit theft could be inferred. Appellant's conduct might well be found to be that of a person in a drunken frenzy rather than that of one intending to commit a theft. "Had the instruction in question been given, the jury might have concluded that the circumstantial evidence, while entirely consistent with defendant's guilt, was also consistent with a rational conclusion that he was innocent." People v. Yrigoyen, supra, Cal.2d 286 P.2d at page 3.

Judgment reversed.

KAUFMAN, J., concurs.

137 Cal.App.2d 331

The PEOPLE of the State of California,
Plaintiff & Respondent,
v.

Isaac LOGAN and Billy Eugene Wagner,
Defendants & Appellants.
Cr. 5390.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 3, California.
Nov. 29, 1955.

Defendants were convicted of narcotic violations. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Fred Miller, J., entered judgments and orders denying motions for new trial, and defendants appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Shinn, P. J., held that attempt by counsel for defendants to establish defense of entrapment and failure to call defendants to testify or offer any evidence in their behalf did not show inadequacy of representation by counsel as ground for new trial.

Judgments and orders affirmed.

1. Constitutional Law ☞268

Criminal Law ☞641(3), 1077

Appointment of counsel to represent indigent appellants in a criminal case is discretionary with court and not a matter of right as a part of due process of law, and request for appointment of counsel should be denied, if it clearly appears from the record that appeal or other matter before the court is devoid of merit.

2. Criminal Law ☞641(3)

Appointment of counsel to represent indigent appellants in a criminal case is not required by statute.

3. Criminal Law ☞920

Claim by defendant that his attorney exercised his own judgment and rejected suggestions of defendant during trial is not a ground for granting new trial.

4. Criminal Law ☞641(1), 920

Where it is claimed on motion for new trial or appeal in a criminal case that defendant was inadequately represented by counsel at trial, the question is whether defendant was substantially denied his constitutional right to be represented by counsel.

5. Criminal Law ☞641(1)

Constitutional right to be represented by counsel will be maintained by courts absolutely and to the full extent.

6. Criminal Law ☞641(1)

That defendant who was represented by counsel received poor advice, indicative of poor judgment of his attorney, and acted thereon to his detriment, does not amount to a denial of constitutional right to representation by counsel.

7. Criminal Law ☞920

Where state in prosecution for narcotic violations adduced direct and convincing evidence of acts of defendants constituting essential elements of offense charged and one defendant had previously been convicted of a similar offense, that counsel for defendants sought to establish defense of entrapment and did not call defendants to testify or offer any evidence in their behalf did not show inadequacy of representation by counsel as ground for new trial. West's Ann.Health & Safety Code, § 11714.

8. Conspiracy ☞47

Evidence of unlawful agreement to procure and sell a narcotic to a minor followed by commission of overt acts alleged, including sale of marijuana to a minor, was sufficient to establish unlawful conspiracy to furnish or sell a narcotic to a minor. Pen.Code, § 182; West's Ann.Health & Safety Code, § 11714.

Isaac Logan and Billy Eugene Wagner, in pro. per.

No appearance for respondent.

SHINN, Presiding Justice.

Upon request for appointment of counsel on the present appeal the court referred the matter to the Los Angeles Bar Association Committee on Criminal Appeals for a report to the court as to possible merit in the appeal. The matter was assigned to two members of the committee who have made written report to the court stating that the record had been examined and that in the opinion of the attorneys it disclosed no meritorious ground of appeal. Defendants were duly so advised and their time to file a brief was substantially extended. No brief has been filed. Such has been the practice of this court for several years. The services of the committee have been willingly rendered and have been of distinct value to the court.

[1,2] Appointment of counsel to represent indigent appellants is not a matter of right as a part of due process. It is discretionary with the court whether counsel should be appointed and a request for appointment should be denied if it clearly appears from the record that the appeal or other matter before the court is devoid of merit. State v. Sorrentino, 36 Wyo. 111, 253 P. 14; McCue v. Commonwealth, 103 Va. 870, 49 S.E. 623; Haywood v. United States, 7 Cir., 268 F. 795; Applebaum v. United States, 7 Cir., 274 F. 43; Reetz v. People of State of Michigan, 188 U.S. 505, 23 S.Ct. 390, 47 L.Ed. 563; Errington v. Hudspeth, 10 Cir., 110 F.2d 384, 127 A.L.R. 1467; Moore v. Aderhold, 10 Cir., 108 F.2d 729; De Maurez v. Swope, 9 Cir., 104 F.2d 758; Gargano v. United States, 9 Cir., 137 F.2d 944; Brown v. Johnston, 9 Cir., 126 F.2d 727; Lovvorn v. Johnston, 9 Cir., 118 F.2d 704, 707. There is no statutory enactment which requires that counsel be appointed. Whenever the record discloses a question of error in the trial or other proceeding which counsel could in good conscience urge in behalf of the client an appointment has been made. Where counsel have not been appointed the court has made an independent study of the record. We have done so in the present case.

The appellants, Isaac Logan and Billy Eugene Wagner, were convicted of two offenses, namely, conspiracy to violate section 11714 of the Health and Safety Code (furnishing or selling a narcotic to a minor), and in a second count a violation of the same section. It was alleged in the information that the defendants committed certain overt acts in furtherance of the conspiracy, and that they feloniously sold marijuana to Lloyd Arthur Epperly. Logan was accused of and admitted a prior felony conviction. This is an appeal from the judgments and from orders denying motions for a new trial.

Lloyd Epperly testified that he was 17 years old; he received marijuana from Wagner on September 20, 1954 in exchange for $15 previously paid and that at the time Wagner gave it to him, the defendant Logan was also present. According to the testimony of Epperly and one George Chosner, Epperly had approached defendants two days earlier, and had asked Wagner to obtain some marijuana for him, stating that a friend of his wanted it. Defendant Logan was present while Epperly talked with Wagner. Later that evening both defendants, together with Epperly and Chosner made an unsuccessful trip from Long Beach to Los Angeles where they endeavored to buy some marijuana. They freely discussed its purchase while on this trip. Before going to Los Angeles, the four had stopped at a place known as "The Hutch," where Chosner obtained $15 from one "Tiny" Atkins, for whom the narcotic was to be purchased. The next day Epperly and Chosner together with defendant Logan again drove around to make a purchase, making one or two stops where they made unsuccessful attempts to purchase. Finally they stopped at a grocery store, Logan took the $15 from Chosner and gave it to an unidentified person working in back of the store. Logan told Epperly to get the marijuana at Wagner's house the next evening. The next evening defendant Wagner delivered a brown paper bag containing marijuana to Epperly, who drove to a meeting place in an alley in Long Beach where he handed the bag to Chosner, who in turn gave it to "Tiny" Atkins. Detective Good testified that he had observed the transaction through a crack in a fence and seized the package from Atkins. He recognized Epperly, who was later apprehended. At the trial the contents of the bag were identified by an expert, as Indian Hemp, commonly referred to as marijuana. Defendants did not testify nor offer any evidence at the trial.

Defendants were represented by separate counsel at the trial and upon their motions for a new trial. Upon denial of their motions they requested an opportunity to obtain new counsel. Thereafter several continuances were granted pursuant to their request. Defendants obtained new counsel, who made motion for an order vacating the order denying the motions for a new trial. The motions were supported by affidavits of defendants and a brother of Logan. The grounds of the motion and the substance of the affidavits were that defendants had not been properly represented at the trial in that they were advised by their attorneys not to take the stand and that persons who could have given evidence in their behalf were not called as witnesses. It was asserted in the affidavits that the attorneys intended to urge as a defense that the defendants were entrapped by the police into committing the offenses and that the defendants themselves stated to their attorneys that they were opposed to relying upon that defense. The trial judge permitted extensive presentation of the motions and gave the same patient consideration. The motions were denied, probation was denied, and defendants were sentenced to state prison. No notice of an appeal from the order was given. Defendants' attorneys gave notice of appeal from the judgments and orders denying motions for a new trial. Thereafter defendants substituted themselves in the place and stead of the attorneys.

[3] It appears from the record that the court in granting the defendants an opportunity to procure new counsel and continuing the matter for that purpose intended that the continuance was of the hearing of the motions for a new trial and that notwithstanding the entry of an order denying the motions a ruling on the motions was held in abeyance. If so, the notice of appeal from the order denying the motions for a new trial was sufficient. But the motions presented no sufficient grounds for a new trial. The affidavits stated that defendants would have testified and would have called witnesses except for the advice of their attorneys but they did not state that defendants or their witnesses would have given testimony contradictory of that introduced by the People. And a claim by a defendant that his attorney exercised his own judgment and rejected the suggestions of the client during the trial is not a ground for granting a new trial.

[4-6] When it is claimed on motion for a new trial or appeal in a criminal case that the defendant was inadequately represented by counsel at the trial, the question is whether he was substantially denied his constitutional right to be represented by counsel. The right to representation is one which our courts will maintain "absolutely and to the full extent". People v. Avilez, 86 Cal.App.2d 289, 194 P.2d 829, 833; In re Major, 135 Cal.App.2d 405, 287 P.2d 359. But where an accused is represented by counsel and the basis of his claim is that he received poor advice, indicative of poor judgment on the part of his attorney, and acted thereon to his detriment, those facts, even if substantiated, do not amount to a denial of the right of representation. People v. Miller, 114 Cal. 10, 45 P. 986; People v. Lennox, 67 Cal. 113, 7 P. 260; People v. Kirk, 98 Cal.App.2d 687, 220 P.2d 976; People v. Gilbert, 25 Cal.2d 422, 154 P.2d 657; People v. Ynostroza, 105 Cal.App.2d 332, 232 P.2d 913; People v. Morton, 100 Cal.App.2d 269, 223 P.2d 259.

[7] The affidavits presented by the defendants show that the alleged ground of disagreement between defendants and their attorneys consisted of the expressed belief of the attorneys that the better defense was a claim of entrapment, whereas the defendants profess to have expressed a desire to testify in denial of the charges. The contention that defendants were entrapped was devoid of merit, but it may nevertheless have appeared to the attorneys as more likely to succeed than mere denials of the testimony of the witnesses for the state, which amounted to convincing evidence of defendants' guilt. Moreover, had Logan testified it would have been developed that he had suffered a prior conviction of the sale of narcotics, a circumstance which would have been disastrous if not fatal to the defense. In brief, the record is devoid of any showing that defendants were not well represented at the trial or that they could have presented a meritorious or even a plausible defense. The claims they made of inadequate represensation were groundless, People v. Zucaro, 47 Cal.App.2d 414, 118 P.2d 40; People v. Gourdin, 108 Cal.App. 333, 291 P. 701; People v. Summers, 107 Cal.App. 250, 290 P. 464; People v. Martin, 128 Cal. App.2d 361, 275 P.2d 635; People v. Ives, 17 Cal.2d 459, 110 P.2d 408.

[8] There was direct evidence of acts of the defendants constituting the essential elements of the offenses charged—namely an unlawful agreement to procure for and sell a narcotic to a minor followed by the commission of the overt acts alleged. This was an unlawful conspiracy. § 182, Penal Code; People v. Benenato, 77 Cal.App.2d 350, 175 P.2d 296. There was ample evidence of a sale to a minor.

The record is devoid of error; defendants were accorded a fair trial.

The judgments and orders are affirmed.

PARKER WOOD and VALLÉE, JJ.,
concur.

137 Cal.App.2d 33

Donald K. HUNTOON, Plaintiff and Respondent,
v.

Oscar HURLEY, Defendant and Appellant.
Civ. 21157.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 2, California.

Nov. 17, 1955.

Rehearing Denied Dec. 6, 1955.

Hearing Denied Jan. 5, 1956.

Employee brought consolidated actions against employer on a note and for an accounting to determine amount of salary due employee under agreement that employee was to receive salary equal to 50% of net profits resulting from operations of employer's appliance department. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Kurtz Kauffman, J., entered judgment for employee, and employer appealed. The District Court of Appeal, McComb, Acting P. J., held that where referee, after his appointment by court, held a hearing at which it was agreed by the parties that referee would go to employer's place of business and examine employer's books to start the accounting, and books examined by referee were employer's books, kept by employer's accountant, and were in the custody of employer, and were examined more than a year after they had been closed, employer could not thereafter claim that his own books did not accurately reflect the status of his business by hiring other accountants to examine the books.

Affirmed.

1. Trial ⇨398

Where court, in addition to general finding, makes specific finding as to particular fact, latter controls in case of inconsistency.

2. Account ⇨19

Where certain paragraph of complaint in accounting action alleged that defendant was obligated to pay plaintiff a sum in excess of $14,784.25, and general finding was that allegations contained in that paragraph were true, but specific finding was that defendant was indebted to plaintiff in sum of $8,965.96, the specific finding was controlling.

3. Appeal and Error ⇨1071(5)

Where alleged inconsistencies in trial court's findings on immaterial issues did not affect the judgment, they were required to be disregarded by District Court of Appeal on appeal.

4. Trial ⇨404(1)

Findings that none of the allegations contained in certain paragraphs was true, were not in the form of a "negative pregnant" but were specific findings of fact.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Negative Pregnant".

5. Trial ⇨404(1)

A "negative pregnant" in a trial court's finding of fact is such a form of negative expression as may imply or carry with it an affirmative.

6. Account ⌘22

Where judgment in accounting action, tried without a jury, referred to findings of fact and conclusions of law and "interlocutory judgment of accounting" and the "report of the referee in such accounting," it was evident that trial court predicated its judgment on findings of fact, conclusions of law, and referee's report, which was approved as modified, and judgment was not erroneous on ground that it referred only to findings of fact and conclusions of law.

7. Account ⌘20(2)

Where record in action for accounting disclosed that referee made an accounting pursuant to agreement of parties and in accordance with construction placed on agreement by parties themselves when they approved the accounting, the referee's report was prepared in accordance with law and reflected the facts and constituted an accounting.

8. Account ⌘2, 20(1)

In action for an accounting, it was proper for the parties to enter into an agreement for an accounting and to construe the agreement by approving accounting made by referee.

9. Account ⌘20(1)

Where referee was not appointed in action for an accounting to make accounting pursuant to previous stipulation of the parties, but reference was made by trial court pursuant to his general authority to refer accounting matters to a referee, the accounting was not subject to provisions and rules set forth in the Business and Professions Code. West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, § 1 et seq.

10. Account ⌘20(2)

Where referee, after his appointment by court in action for an accounting, held a hearing at which it was agreed by the parties that referee would go to defendant's place of business and examine defendant's books to start the accounting, and books examined by referee were defendant's books, kept by defendant's accountant and were in the custody of defendant, and were examined more than a year after they had been closed, defendant could not thereafter claim that his own books did not accurately reflect the status of his business by hiring other accountants to examine the books.

11. Appeal and Error ⌘181

Where defendant failed to make objections in trial court, he waived right to urge them on appeal.

12. Appeal and Error ⌘1011(1)

Trial court's finding on conflicting evidence in action for an accounting was binding on appeal.

13. Account ⌘20(1)

Where record in action for an accounting disclosed that parties had held an accounting for sums due plaintiff prior to December 31, 1951, and had mutually accepted such accounting, court properly ordered an accounting for period subsequent to December 31, 1951, only.

14. Master and Servant ⌘71

Generally, where part or all of compensation of employee was based on profits, employee is entitled to receive interest on profits belonging to him and remaining in hands of employer after payment is due.

15. Interest ⌘18(1)

In action by employee against employer for an accounting to determine salary due employee under agreement that employee was to receive salary equal to 50% of net profits, trial court did not err in awarding employee interest on amount found to be due him.

16. Damages ⌘67

Every judgment awarding damages certain or capable of being made certain by calculation on a particular day may include interest from that day.

17. Judgment ⌘202

Where first action on note and second action for accounting to determine amount of salary due were ordered consolidated for trial, and complaint in second action referred to execution of note, and first case referred to "all matters and things hereinabove set forth," judgment included all issues raised in the two complaints and was conclusive as to such issues, the first action was not undecided and left dangling.

18. Judgment ⇨202Trial ⇨393(1)

Where two or more suits are ordered consolidated for trial, there should be one set of findings, conclusions of law, and one judgment.

19. Costs ⇨191

Where court, in action on note and for accounting to determine amount of salary, determined that a reference was necessary, and matter of payment of referee's fees was discussed with counsel for both parties, and court expressly reserved right to determine how costs should be allocated, and defendant raised no objection, and reference was not made pursuant to previous stipulation of the parties, and plaintiff was successful in the action, trial court did not err in requiring defendant to pay referee's fees.

20. Appeal and Error ⇨687

Where there was no record before District Court of Appeal of proceedings before referee, District Court of Appeal would not review accounting made by referee to the trial court.

21. Appeal and Error ⇨907(2)

In absence of a record of what transpired before referee, it is conclusively presumed on appeal that evidence supported referee's findings.

Clifford W. Twombly, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Spray, Gould & Bowers, Los Angeles, for respondent.

McCOMB, Acting Presiding Justice.

From a judgment in favor of plaintiff after trial before the court without a jury in an action for an accounting to determine the amount of salary due plaintiff from defendant, defendant appeals.

Facts:¹ On September 19, 1951, plaintiff and defendant entered into a written agreement whereby defendant employed plaintiff as manager of his appliance department for a period of one year commencing on October 1, 1951. Under the terms of the agreement plaintiff was to receive "a salary equal to 50% of the net profits resulting from the operations of the aforementioned appliance department" and "that the net profits shall be determined by a firm of independent Certified Public Accountants, on the basis of generally accepted accounting principles and shall in part be made up of the following: Sales: All sales of appliances, frozen foods and freezer supplies, less any sales discounts and allowances including 'food bonds,' etc." The agreement was terminated on September 13, 1952, by defendant.

Prior to plaintiff's employment and during the period with which we are concerned the books of defendant were kept under the supervision of certified public accountants. The employment agreement was prepared by one of those accountants and contained a list of the accounts to be used in determining plaintiff's earnings. In January, 1952, an accounting for the last quarter of 1951 was made pursuant to the agreement and was discussed by both parties with defendant's accountant and was approved.

In April of 1952, an accounting for the first quarter of the year was made showing that plaintiff was entitled to $5,616.38, and in payment of this amount he received a check for $500 and a note for $5,000.

On August 1, 1952, plaintiff filed a complaint (No. 602376, in the Superior Court of Los Angeles County) against defendant for money due on the promissory note. During the course of the next 10 months plaintiff repeatedly demanded an accounting so that the amount of his wages could be determined, but none was forthcoming. July 14, 1953, he filed an action for accounting (Pasadena No. 4562, in the Superior Court of Los Angeles County). It was stipulated between the parties (a) that the action on the note and the action for accounting should be consolidated for trial, (b) that defendant's contention that the written agreement had been modified should

1. The evidence is viewed in the light most favorable to plaintiff (respondent) pursuant to the rules set forth in Re Estate of Isenberg, 63 Cal.App.2d 214, 216 [2], 146 P.2d 424.

first be determined by the trial court, and (c) that if it was deemed feasible or necessary, that the court might appoint an independent auditor, each side to pay an equal share of the costs.

The trial court determined on November 9, 1953, against defendant's contention that the written agreement had been modified and ordered a referee to take an accounting pursuant to the terms of the original agreement. Thereafter the referee held a hearing with the attorneys for the parties at which it was "decided upon between the parties that the referee would go to the place of business of Mr. Hurley (defendant) where the records were being kept and make an examination of the books to determine and start the accounting." After making his examination the referee held a further hearing with the parties and their respective attorneys. The items of the account were reviewed and various stipulations were made. There is no record of either hearing.

The referee filed his report and defendant filed objections to it. The objections were heard by the court, and after allowing some and denying others, the report of the referee was modified and a judgment entered in accordance with the findings of fact and conclusions of law, by which it was found that defendant was indebted to plaintiff in the sum of $8,965.96.

Questions: First: Were there substantial findings of fact of the trial court which sustained the judgment?

Yes. There were these issues before the court: (1) whether or not the written contract of the parties had been modified by an executed oral agreement; (2) whether or not an accounting was necessary, and (3) the amount, if any, owing plaintiff for his services predicated upon the accounting.

Defendant does not question the sufficiency of the findings upon the first two issues. However, he contends that the findings are inconsistent in that in paragraph XVI of plaintiff's complaint it is alleged that defendant is obligated to pay or deliver to him a sum in excess of $14,784.25, and that paragraph II of the findings of fact finds that the allegations contained in paragraph XVI are true. This is the fact. However, defendant fails to note that the court specifically finds that "Defendant is indebted to the Plaintiff in the sum of $8,965.96" from the 13th day of December, 1952.

[1,2] The rule is settled that where the court, in addition to a general finding such as the one first mentioned above, makes a specific finding as to a particular fact, as the latter finding, supra, the latter controls in the case of an inconsistency. (Howard v. Howard, 128 Cal.App.2d 180, 186 [9], 275 P.2d 88 (hearing denied by the Supreme Court).)

[3,4] Other objections of defendant to the findings are: (a) That there are inconsistent findings. An examination of the record discloses that the alleged inconsistencies are on immaterial issues and therefore must be disregarded by this court as they do not affect the judgment. (See cases cited in 7 West's Calif.Dig. (1951) Appeal and Error, § 1071(5)d, p. 578.) (b) That certain findings are in the form of negatives pregnant. The questioned findings read, "That none of the allegations contained in paragraphs I, II, III, IV, V, * * * is true." The finding was not in the form of a negative pregnant but was a specific finding of fact. The findings contained in Austin v. Harry E. Jones, Inc., 30 Cal.App.2d 362, 367, 86 P.2d 379, 382, read, "'That all the allegations * * * are not true'". Manifestly there is a vast difference between the two statements.

[5] A negative pregnant is such a form of negative expression as may imply or carry with it an affirmative. (Jordan v. Jordan, 58 Cal.App.2d 371, 374 [3], 135 P.2d 416.) The questioned findings in the present case do not fall within this rule.

Second: Was the judgment erroneous in that it referred only to the findings of fact and conclusions of law?

[6] No. The record discloses that the judgment explicitly refers to the findings of fact and conclusions of law and "interlocutory judgment of accounting" and "the report of the referee on such accounting." Hence it is evident that the trial court predicated its judgment on the findings of fact, conclusions of law and the report of the referee which was approved as modified.

Third: Was the report of the referee as modified prepared in accordance with law; does it reflect the facts and constitute an accounting?

[7] Yes. The record discloses that the referee made an accounting pursuant to the agreement of the parties dated September 19, 1951, and in accordance with the construction placed upon the agreement by the parties themselves when they approved the accounting rendered for the period ending December 1, 1951.

[8] Such procedure was proper. The rule is clearly stated in Sayre v. Western Bowl, 76 Cal.App.2d 793, 798 [2], 174 P.2d 466, 468 (hearing denied by the Supreme Court), where Justice Kincaid, speaking for the court, accurately states the rule thus:

"The trial judge, in construing the terms of the contract between the parties and in applying the evidence thereto, was justified in invoking the well-settled rule that 'a construction given the contract by the acts and conduct of the parties with knowledge of its terms, before any controversy has arisen as to its meaning, is entitled to great weight and will, when reasonable, be adopted and enforced by the court.' Woodbine v. Van Horn, 29 Cal.2d 95, 103, 173 P.2d 17, 22."

[9] The referee was not appointed to make an accounting pursuant to the previous stipulation of the parties, but the reference was made by the trial court pursuant to his general authority to refer accounting matters to a referee. Thus there is no merit in defendant's contention that the accounting is subject to the provisions and rules set forth in the Business and Professions Code. The record discloses that the referee, Mr. Saulque, after his appointment held a hearing at which it was agreed by the parties that he would go to defendant's place of business and examine defendant's books to "start the accounting;" and that he completed his examination by February 16, 1954; that the books examined by the referee were defendant's books, kept by defendant's accountant and were in the custody of defendant, and that the books were examined more than a year after they had been closed.

[10] Defendant may not now claim that his own books do not accurately reflect the status of his business by hiring, after the books have been examined by the referee, other accountants to examine the books. (Olmo v. Olmo, 56 Cal.App.2d 590, 595, 133 P.2d 866; Freeman v. Donohoe, 65 Cal.App. 65, 87 [5], 223 P. 431.) The agreement was prepared by defendant's accountant and specifically set forth the items to be considered in determining the "net profits" for the purpose of computing plaintiff's compensation, and the referee, as heretofore stated, computed such "net profits" upon the basis which the parties themselves had adopted in construing the meaning of the agreement.

[11] Likewise it is settled as to certain other objections which defendant now makes for the first time on appeal that since he failed to make any objection in the trial court thereto he has waived any right to urge error here. (Cf. Rodehaver v. Mankel, 16 Cal.App.2d 597, 605 [4], 61 P.2d 61.)

[12] Finally, the record discloses that the trial court, upon conflicting evidence, excepted the evidence of an impartial expert, the referee, in preference to the testimony of witnesses produced by defendant. This finding of the trial court, upon conflicting evidence, is, of course, binding upon appeal. The rule is succinctly stated by Mr. Presiding Justice Moore in Ideal Packing Co. v. Brice, 132 Cal.App.2d 582, 585, 282 P.2d 957, 960 (hearing denied by the Supreme Court), where in answering a similar contention, he says:

"That court having studied and appraised all evidence introduced, its findings are the ultimate of the truth of the issues investigated. Where a trial court accepts the proof adduced by one expert and rejects that presented by another with reference to the issues of the same controversy, its consideration of the contention involves an inquiry into the credibility of the witnesses and the weight to be accorded their testimony which no appellate court will indulge."

Fourth: Did the trial court err by improperly dividing the accounting period by holding that no accounting was necessary for the period prior to December 31, 1951, and confining the accounting period to the period subsequent thereto?

[13] No. The record discloses that the parties had held an accounting for the sums due plaintiff prior to December 31, 1951, and had mutually accepted such accounting. Therefore the court properly ordered an accounting for the period subsequent to December 31, 1951, only.

Fifth: Did the trial court err in awarding plaintiff interest on the amount found to be due him?

[14,15] No. The general rule is that where part or all of an employee's compensation is based on profits, the employee is entitled to receive interest on profits belonging to him and remaining in the hands of the employer after payment is due. (56 C.J.S. (1948) Master and Servant, § 112, p. 548; Kales v. Houghton, 190 Cal. 294, 308, 212 P. 21.)

The following cases, relied on by defendant, are not here applicable. California Lettuce Growers v. Union Sugar Co., Cal. App., 278 P.2d 106, is not applicable for the reason that a hearing has been granted by the Supreme Court. Cox v. McLaughlin, 76 Cal. 60, 18 P. 100, was a case where plaintiff's recovery was based on quantum meruit, and therefore the damages were unliquidated. Lineman v. Schmid, 32 Cal. 2d 204, 195 P.2d 408, was an action for breach of contract for the purchase of a commodity where damages were based on fluctuating market values and therefore the amount due was not readily or reasonably ascertainable.

[16] The correct rule is that every judgment awarding damages certain or capable of being made certain by calculation on a particular day may include interest from that day. (Canavan v. College of Osteopathic Physicians and Surgeons, 73 Cal.App.2d 511, 521 [14], 166 P.2d 878 (hearing denied by the Supreme Court).)

Sixth: Was the consolidated case No. 602376 undecided and "left dangling?"

[17,18] No. Where two or more suits, as in the instant case, are ordered consolidated for trial there should be one set of findings, conclusions of law and one judgment. (Wolfson v. Beatty, 118 Cal.App.2d 392, 398 [3], 257 P.2d 1017 (hearing denied by the Supreme Court).)

The complaint in case Pasadena No. C 4562, refers to the execution of the promissory note. Case No. 602376 refers to "all matters and things hereinabove set forth." The judgment included all of the issues raised in the two complaints and was conclusive as to such issues.

Seventh: Did the trial court err in requiring defendant to pay the referee's fees?

[19] No. When the court determined that a reference was necessary, the matter of payment of the referee's fees was discussed with counsel for both parties. The court expressly reserved the right to determine how the costs should be allocated, and defendant raised no objection. As previously stated the reference was not made pursuant to the previous stipulation of the parties that should it become necessary to appoint an "auditor" the costs should be divided between the parties. Such stipulation was in an effort to have the matter disposed of without the necessity of a trial and did not contemplate a reference.

Eighth: Should this court review the accounting made by the referee to the trial court?

[20,21] No. There is no record before us of the proceedings before the referee. Hence the rule is here applicable that in the absence of a record of what transpired before the referee it is conclusively presumed that the evidence supported the referee's findings. (Rosati v. Heimann, 126 Cal.App.2d 51, 54 [3], 271 P.2d 953; Brodie v. Barnes, 56 Cal.App.2d 315, 319 [1b], 132 P.2d 595.)

There is likewise no merit in defendant's contention that no evidence was taken on the question of interest income before the trial court for the reason that in the absence of a record of what occurred before the referee, it is conclusively presumed that the referee's finding on the subject was supported by the evidence. Therefore the finding of the referee that interest is a proper item of income in this case is supported by the evidence.

Affirmed.

FOX, J., ASHBURN, J. pro tem., concur.

Hearing denied; McCOMB, J., not participating.

137 Cal.App.2d 87

MARKET STREET RAILWAY COMPANY, a corporation, Plaintiff and Appellant,

v.

CALIFORNIA STATE BOARD OF EQUALIZATION, a state agency, Defendant and Respondent.

Civ. 16359.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 1, California.

Nov. 18, 1955.

Action by street railway company to recover sales tax, interest and penalties. The Superior Court, City & County of San Francisco, Edward Molkenbuhr, J., rendered judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Raymond E. Peters, P. J., held that where Board of Equalization, at time street railway company sold its operating properties to city, had in effect a ruling that such bulk sales were not subject to sales tax, company was deemed, as a matter of law, to have changed its position in reliance upon this ruling, and state was estopped from collecting penalty and interest on sales tax unpaid on this sale, although Board's ruling was changed immediately after sale.

Judgment reversed with directions.

1. Limitation of Actions ☞6(4)

Where sales tax assessment was made before effective date of nonretroactive amendment to statute limiting actions for sales taxes, assessment was not affected by the amendment. Revenue and Taxation Code, § 6487.

2. Licenses ☞34

In action by street railway company to recover sales tax paid on sales made in connection with transfer of operative property to city and other liquidating transaction, evidence supported finding that sale had been result of voluntary and willing negotiations between parties.

3. Statutes ☞245

All reasonable doubts in interpretation of tax statutes must be resolved in favor of taxpayer.

4. Licenses ☞15.1(5)

Transactions whereby street railway company sold scrap metal, made sales for accommodation of employees, and sold rock from quarry operated by company were "retail sales" within statute defining retail sales for sales and use tax purposes. Revenue and Taxation Code, § 6007.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Retail Sales".

5. Licenses ☞15.1(3)

Street railway company, in selling scrap material, in making sales for accommodation of employees, and in selling rock from quarry it operated was in "business" of making retail sales, within statute defining a "business" for sales and use tax purposes. Revenue and Taxation Code, § 6013.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Business".

6. Licenses ☞15.1(5)

To be subject to sales tax, it is not necessary that sales be made with intention of making a profit, so long as sales result in gain, benefit or advantage. Revenue and Taxation Code, § 6013.

7. Licenses ☞15.1(3)

To constitute a "business" within statute defining a "business" for sales and use tax purposes, seller must engage in more existing law. Revenue and Taxation Code, than one isolated sale. Revenue and Tax- § 6367.

ation Code, § 6013.

8. Licenses ⇨15.1(8)

"Retailer", within statute defining a retailer for sales and use tax purposes, includes a seller whose main occupation is not the making of retail sales, even if enterprise is not commercial, and test is whether there are sufficient sales of tangible personal property sold to a buyer not for resale in regular course of buyer's business. Revenue and Taxation Code, § 6015.

See publication Words and Phrases,
for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Retailer".

9. Licenses ⇨15.1(8)

Street railway company which sold, in 900 several transactions, scrap metal and rock from its quarry, and made accommodation sales for employees, was a "retailer" within sales and use tax provision defining a retailer. Revenue and Taxation Code, § 6015.

10. Licenses ⇨15.1(8)

Street railway company which made sales of tangible personal property at retail could be deemed a "retailer" for sales and use tax purposes, even though, in respect to its function as a service corporation, it was a "consumer". Revenue and Taxation Code, § 6015.

See publication Words and Phrases,
for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Consumer".

11. Taxation ⇨204(1)

Exemptions from taxation must be found in tax statute.

12. Licenses ⇨15.1(5)

Transaction whereby street railway company voluntarily sold its operating properties to city was subject to sales tax. Revenue and Taxation Code, §§ 6007, 6013,
6015, 6051, 6052, 6091 to 6094.

13. Licenses ⇨8(2)

1947 amendment to sales and use tax statute so as to exempt occasional sales of tangible personal property effected a change, and was not a mere codification of

14. Courts ⇨91(1)

District Court of Appeal was bound in interpreting a state statute to follow the rule laid down by state Supreme Court, rather than interpretation of federal courts.

15. Estoppel ⇨62(1)

Ordinarily, a governmental agency may not be estopped by conduct of its officers and employees, but in a proper case equitable estoppel will run against government where justice and right require.

16. Estoppel ⇨62(1)

As a general proposition, estoppel based on reliance upon an erroneous construction of statute by an administrative ruling will not lie against government, particularly in tax matters.

17. Licenses ⇨28

So far as the state is concerned, a buyer has no direct obligation for payment of sales tax.

18. Estoppel ⇨62(2)

Where taxpayer is a mere collecting agency, state may be estopped from imposing tax by act of its employees, but it may not so be estopped for taxes imposed on the complaining taxpayer, although there may be an estoppel as to penalty and interest.

19. Estoppel ⇨62(2)

Where street railway company made taxable sales of tangible personal property, and failed to report or pay tax thereon, that Board of Equalization, after company sold its business, changed a ruling so as to declare such liquidation sales taxable did not estop state from collecting tax on transactions taking place prior to liquidation sale.

20. Estoppel ⇨62(2)

Where Board of Equalization, at time street railway company sold its operating properties to city, had in effect a ruling that liquidation sales were not subject to sales tax, company was deemed, as a matter of law, to have changed its position in reliance upon this ruling, and state was estopped from collecting penalty and interest on tax due on this sale, although Board's ruling was changed immediately after sale.

21. Estoppel Ⓒ62(2)

Where Board of Equalization, during course of street railway company's liquidation proceeding, reversed its previous ruling that liquidation sales were not subject to sales tax, state, although estopped from collecting penalties and interest on sales tax due on transactions prior to date company was informed of the change, was not estopped from collecting such penalties and interest on transactions subsequent to company's acquisition of knowledge.

Keith, Creede & Sedgwick, Frank J. Creede, John S. Howell, San Francisco, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen. of the State of California, James E. Sabine, Asst. Atty. Gen., Ernest P. Goodman, Deputy Atty. Gen., Sho Sato, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

PETERS, Presiding Justice.

[1] Market Street Railway Company, hereafter referred to as Market, paid under protest, sales taxes, together with interest and penalty, assessed against it for the period August 1, 1933, to December 31, 1948, in the amount of $111,359.36, and then brought this action to recover this payment.¹ During the trial it was stipulated that the taxes in part had been erroneously assessed against the sale of real property, and that, in any event, Market should recover $21,325.39, with interest. Judgment in that sum was entered in favor of Market. From that judgment Market appeals, contending that no portion of the amount paid by it under protest should have been assessed.

1. No question of the statute of limitations is involved. Admittedly, Market failed to file a sales tax return between 1933 and 1948. Prior to 1951 it was the law that where the taxpayer failed to file a return the statute of limitations did not start to run until the assessment made by the tax authorities became final. People v. West Publishing Co., 35 Cal.2d 80, 86, 216 P.2d 441. In 1951 this rule was

The State Board of Equalization found that between 1933 and 1948 Market, in some 900 transactions, had sold tangible personal property subject to the tax valued at $2,987,434.38. Of this amount, $2,891,578.83 represented the value of tangible personal property transferred by Market to San Francisco on September 29, 1944, when it sold its operative properties to the City. This is the major item involved on this appeal.

The facts are as follows: Market is a California corporation first organized in 1893. From then, in various corporate forms, until 5 p. m. on September 29, 1944, it was a public service corporation operating in San Francisco and San Mateo counties.

As early as 1912 it was the expressed desire of San Francisco to own and operate all of the street railways in the city. The Charter of 1932, in § 119, expresses this purpose in the following language: "It is the declared purpose and intention of the people of the city and county, when public interest and necessity demand, that public utilities shall be gradually acquired and ultimately owned by the city and county."

The efforts of the City to acquire Market became very direct in 1940. For four years thereafter the City tried to negotiate the purchase. In November of 1942, and again in April of 1943, charter amendments authorizing the purchase for $7,950,000 were submitted to the voters and defeated. Finally on May 16, 1944, the voters approved the addition of Section 119.1 to the Charter providing for the purchase of Market's operative properties for $7,500,000. Market and the City, on September 14, 1944, entered into a contract, approved by the Railroad Commission, to convey these properties to the City, and a deed was executed making the transfer effective changed by an amendment to Section 6487 of the Revenue and Taxation Code. Stats.1951, p. 2638, Chapter 1007. Here the assessment was made in 1949 before the effective date of the non-retroactive amendment. Therefore, the assessment here involved is not affected by any statute of limitations, and Market does not contend to the contrary.

as of 5 p.m. September 29, 1944. At that moment Market ceased its operations and commenced winding up its affairs, liquidating the claims against it and disposing of its non-operative properties, both real and personal.

[2] The trial court found that the sale was "the result of voluntary and willing negotiations" between the parties. This finding is supported. Although the evidence shows that Market was apprehensive after 1932, when Section 119 of the Charter was enacted, about the possibility of eminent domain proceedings being instituted against it, and that such apprehension became more acute when Section 119.1 was enacted in 1944, the evidence also shows that beginning in 1942 the company was willing and desirous to negotiate a sale because of steadily declining revenues, increasing expenses, competition, poor financing and possible bankruptcy.

The trial court also found that for many years prior to October 1, 1944, there was in existence an interpretative ruling of the State Board of Equalization, number 63, which provided:

"The tax does not apply to any portion of the consideration paid in connection with the sale of an entire business; that is, equipment, fixtures, and so forth. * * *" But on October 1, 1944, two days after the effective date of the sale, the State Board revised Ruling 63 to read as follows: "The tax applies to that portion of the gross receipts from the sale of an entire business operated by a retailer that represents the fair retail value of the tangible personal property, such as show cases and office or delivery equipment, acquired for use rather than resale by the purchaser of the business. The tax does not apply, however, with respect to tangible personal property such as stock in trade, sold for the purpose of resale in the regular course of the purchaser's business."

The evidence shows that just prior to the sale the legal department of Market had made an analysis of the taxes involved in the transaction and had come to the conclusion that no sales tax was applicable. The trial court found that Market relied upon Ruling 63 as it read prior to October 1, 1944 "but said ruling did not cause plaintiff to change its position or course of conduct with regard to said sale," and further that "reliance by plaintiff on interpretative Ruling 63 * * * did not result in any prejudice to plaintiff."

On December 29, 1944, Market became aware for the first time of the amendment to Ruling 63, and the chief counsel and vice president of the company advised it that since the ruling did not become effective until October 1, 1944, it was not applicable to the sale.

In 1948, some four years after the sale to the City, the State Board, in auditing the books of another company, discovered sales to that company by Market of some of its non-operative property. An audit of Market's books was then made. This audit disclosed that Market had never paid any sales taxes nor had it ever filed a return, although between 1933 and December of 1948 it made about 900 sales of tangible personal property not for resale by the buyer, totalling, not including the sale to the City, about $100,000. Prior to the sale to the City these sales consisted mainly of sales of scrap material such as used or surplus ties and rails, sales made for the accommodation of employees, and several sales of rock from a rock quarry operated by Market. Prior to the sale to the City these sales amounted to 11/100 of 1% of the gross operating revenue of Market. After the sale of the operative properties to the City the sales were of nonoperative personalty. In the sale to the City the State Board determined that the tangible personal property involved was valued at $2,891,578.83. Market contested some of the items on the ground that some of the articles were fixtures, and during trial the parties stipulated that Market should recover $21,325.39 of the $111,359.36 tax assessed against and paid by it. This amount was computed as follows:

Tax	$ 75,065.54
Interest	28,787.27
Penalty	7,506.55
Total	$111,359.36

The trial court determined that Market was a retailer, that all of the sales of tangible personal property not for resale were taxable, and entered judgment for Market in the stipulated amount of the overcharge—$21,325.39. Market appeals.

The first basic question involved is whether the sale of all of the operating properties of Market, insofar as it involved a transfer of tangible personal property not for resale by the buyer, in September of 1944, was taxable under the Sales and Use Tax Law of this state. The parties discuss the problem from several standpoints, and quote from and rely upon authorities from many states, but the problem is basically one of interpreting the applicable California statutes.

The Sales and Use Tax Act is found in the Revenue and Taxation Code, §§ 6001 to 7176. As of September 29, 1944, the applicable sections read as follows:

Section 6051: "For the privilege of selling tangible personal property at retail a tax is hereby imposed upon all retailers at the rate of $2\frac{1}{2}$ percent of the gross receipts of any retailer from the sale of all tangible personal property sold at retail in this State * * *."

Section 6007: "A 'retail sale' or 'sale at retail' means a sale for any purpose other than resale in the regular course of business in the form of tangible personal property."

Section 6013: "'Business' includes any activity engaged in by any person or caused to be engaged in by him with the object of gain, benefit, or advantage, either direct or indirect."

Section 6015: "'Retailer' includes: (a) Every person engaged in the business of making sales at retail * * * of tangible personal property * * *."

Section 6052: "The tax hereby imposed shall be collected by the retailer from the consumer in so far as it can be done."

[3] In the interpretation of those tax statutes Market correctly points out that all reasonable doubts must be resolved in favor of the taxpayer. County of Los Angeles v. Jones, 13 Cal.2d 554, 90 P.2d 802; Barker Bros., Inc., v. City of Los Angeles, 10 Cal.

2d 603, 76 P.2d 97. But there is no real doubt as to what the quoted statutes provide. Even interpreted most strictly against the state, they clearly make the transactions here involved "retail sales," and make Market a "retailer." Section 6007 defines a sale at retail as a "sale for any purpose other than resale in the regular course of business". Clearly, Market engaged in sales at retail to a buyer who purchased not for resale in the regular course of his business. The only way an ambiguity can be created in the quoted phrase is by interpreting the phrase "in the regular course of business" as referring to "sale," i. e., the seller, and not to "resale," i. e., the buyer. But the section neither grammatically nor reasonably so provides. Obviously, the words "in the regular course of business" refer to and limit the word "resale" rather than the word "sale."

If any support were needed for such an obvious construction it is to be found in the fact that the phrase "in the regular course of business" was added to Section 6007 in 1941 at the same time that Sections 6091 to 6094 were amended to explain the meaning of the phrase. In these other sections the context, without possibility of a doubt, demonstrates that the phrase refers to the buyer and not to the seller.

As might be expected, all of the California cases involving the general question have held that the sale to be taxable does not have to occur in the regular course of business of the seller. In Bigsby v. Johnson, 18 Cal.2d 860, 118 P.2d 289, the taxpayer owned and operated a printing establishment. His regular course of business was the sale of printed matter. He sold some printing equipment that had become obsolete. The Board held the transaction taxable, and the Supreme Court affirmed, rejecting the taxpayer's contention that the sale was casual, incidental, not in the regular course of business, and therefore not taxable. At page 862 of 18 Cal.2d, at page 290 of 118 P.2d the court stated: "The tax is imposed upon retailers for the privilege of doing a retail sales business * * *, and the measure of the tax is the gross receipts of any such retailer from the sale of 'all tangible personal property sold at retail * * *. * * * He can claim no exemption merely by virtue of the fact that the sale of used printing equipment was not the kind of retail sale ordinarily made by him. * * * however forceful may be plaintiff's contention that this type of sale should be exempted from the operation of the statute, such arguments must be directed to the legislature rather than to the courts." (Italics added.)

Likewise, in Northwestern Pac. R. Co. v. State Board of Equalization, 21 Cal.2d 524, 133 P.2d 400, the Supreme Court, as one of the grounds of its opinion, held that casual sales of its rolling stock by the company were taxable.

[4] There can be no doubt, therefore, that the 900 separate transactions, including the sale to the City, were clearly "retail" sales.

Market next claims that it was not a "retailer" within the meaning of Section 6015 (a) which defines a "retailer" as "Every person engaged in the business of making sales at retail". In the preceding paragraphs it has been demonstrated that the sales here involved were at retail, so that the only question to be determined is whether Market was in the "business" of making such sales. Section 6013 defines "business" to include "any activity engaged in by any person or caused to be engaged in by him with the object of gain, benefit, or advantage, either direct or indirect."

[5] The courts in interpreting this section leave no doubt that Market was in the "business" of making sales at retail.

In Los Angeles City High School Dist. v. State Board of Equalization, 71 Cal.App.2d 486, 163 P.2d 45, it was held that a school board was engaged in "business" as a "retailer" because it made two or three sales of used equipment quarterly. The court held, 71 Cal.App.2d at page 488, 163 P.2d at page 46: "* * * the term 'business' is not used in the commercial sense attributed to it by appellants but must be interpreted in the light of the statutory definition set forth in the act." See also People v. County of Imperial, 76 Cal.App.2d 572, 173 P.2d 352; City of Los Angeles v. Lewis, 175 Cal. 777, 167 P. 390; Marin Municipal Water Dist. v. Chenu, 188 Cal. 734, 207 P. 251.

[6] It is not required that the sales be made with the intention of making a profit. Thus, in Union League Club v. Johnson, 13 Cal.2d 275, 115 P.2d 425, the sales from the operation of a dining room and bar were held taxable despite the fact that the vendor was a non-profit corporation and the activities were carried on at a loss. The criterion expressed in the statute is "gain, benefit, or advantage," not "profit."

[7] Undoubtedly the term "business" requires that the seller engage in more than one isolated sale. The number, scope, and character of the transfers must be considered. Northwestern Pac. R. Co. v. State Board of Equalization, 21 Cal.2d 524, 133 P.2d 400. In that case the Supreme Court held that the railroad was in "business" by virtue of one sale of 13 coaches in 1936, a single sale of 2 coaches and a baggage car in 1936, a sale of a truck and trailer, of 20 flat cars and a locomotive in 1937. The total sales approximated $100,000. In the Los Angeles City High School Dist. v. State Board of Equalization case, 71 Cal.App.2d 486, 163 P.2d 45, the district's transfers were held taxable although they amounted to but two or three quarterly.

[8, 9] Thus, the term "retailer" includes a seller whose main occupation is not the making of retail sales. The enterprise does not even have to be a commercial one. The test is whether there are sufficient sales of tangible personal property sold to a buyer not for resale in the regular course of the buyer's business. In the instant case, from 1933 to 1944 Market made 900 retail sales which, not including the sale to the City, amounted to about $100,000. Under the statute, as interpreted by the cases, this demonstrates the correctness of the finding that Market is a "retailer" within the meaning of the act.²

2. This construction of "doing business" is consistent with the interpretation of that phrase as it is used in other California tax statutes. See Hise v. McColgan, 24 Cal.2d 147, particularly at page 150, 148 P.2d 616.

[10] Market contends that it, as a matter of law, could not be a retailer, because, as a service corporation, it was a "consumer" and not a "retailer." It is true that Ruling 1901 provides that persons "engaged in business of 'rendering service' are consumers not retailers of personal property which they use in rendering service. Hence they must pay tax on the property sold to them." But that ruling only applies to operations in connection with the company's service to the public. Obviously, a person or company can be either a consumer or a retailer, or can be both. As to tangible personal property that it sells, it is a retailer. This was what was necessarily held in Northwestern Pac. R. Co. v. State Board of Equalization, 21 Cal.2d 524, 133 P.2d 400. The rule of that case is here applicable.

Market next argues that regardless of the taxability of the transfers made before the sale to the City of the operating properties of the company, that sale was not taxable under the statute. This problem does not seem to have been passed on directly by the California courts.

The main thesis of Market is that liquidation sales were never intended to be within the scope of the act—that the sales tax is imposed on the privilege of engaging in business, not on the privilege of going out of business.

[11] The answer to this problem must be sought in the terms of the statute. Exemptions from taxation must be found in the statute. It is not for the courts to say that, although the statute applies to all sales of tangible personal property by a retailer, not sold for resale by the buyer, the statute does not apply to this sale by a retailer because of some undisclosed general "intent."

[12] In the instant case, the statute, as it read in 1944, clearly applied to the sale to the City of that portion of the operating assets consisting of tangible personal property. As already pointed out, Section 6051 then provided: "For the privilege of selling tangible personal property at retail a tax is hereby imposed upon all retailers at the rate of 2½ percent of the gross receipts of any retailer from the sale of all tangible personal property sold at retail in this State." (Italics added.) We have already demonstrated that Market was a "retailer" within the meaning of the act, and that the sale here involved was a "retail sale." This being so, it follows that almost syllogistic infallibility that this sale was taxable.

As already mentioned, Market urges that, although a liquidation sale is not expressly exempted in the statute, it simply is not such a sale as was contemplated by the Legislature when it passed the statute, because, so it is claimed, the statute is aimed at taxing the privilege of operating, conducting and maintaining a retail business, and not on the "privilege" of going out of business. To sustain this view Market refers to several cases where the point was not involved and the courts used general language to the effect that the sales tax was imposed on the privilege of "operating," "maintaining," "engaging in an occupation or business," etc. See Roth Drug, Inc., v. Johnson, 13 Cal.App.2d 720, 57 P.2d 1022; Western Lithograph Co. v. State Board of Equalization, 11 Cal.2d 156, 78 P.2d 731, 117 A.L.R. 838; National Ice & Cold Storage Co. of California v. Pacific Fruit Express Co., 11 Cal.2d 283, 79 P.2d 380. These cases did not consider the point here involved. Of course a holding that the tax is imposed on the "privilege" of "operating" a business is not a holding that a sale of an entire business is exempted from the act or, in fact, is not a holding that selling out a business is not "operating" a business during that transaction. That point was neither considered nor passed on by the cited cases. They are of no help in passing on the point here involved.

Market also refers to two Georgia cases where it was held that the Georgia sales tax statute did not apply to the sale of an entire business. Novak v. Redwine, 89 Ga. App. 755, 81 S.E.2d 222; State v. Dyson, 89 Ga.App. 791, 81 S.E.2d 217. The Novak case is the key case. Under a statute substantially similar to ours, that case undoubtedly held that a sale by a retail baker of his bakery business and store fixtures was not taxable, the court reasoning that the baker was not "engaged in the business" of selling the bakery and the fixtures. [89 Ga.App. 755, 81 S.E.2d 225.] The rationale of the Georgia cases is that the Georgia statute was not intended to apply to casual and isolated sales by retailers, but only applied to sales made in the regular course of business. In other words, the Georgia court interpreted the term "business" in its common and accepted meaning. Novak v. Redwine, 81 S.E.2d 222, 223, 225. But this interpretation is directly contrary to that made by the Supreme Court in Bigsby v. Johnson, 18 Cal.2d 860, 863, 118 P.2d 289, and by the Appellate Court in Los Angeles City High School Dist. v. State Board of Equalization, 71 Cal.App.2d 486, 488, 163 P.2d 45. These cases have already been discussed. For this reason the Georgia cases are not persuasive.

[13] It should also be pointed out that in 1944 the California act had no exemption of casual and occasional sales. In 1947 Section 6367 was amended so as to exempt occasional sales of tangible personal property from the tax. Market contends that this was a mere codification of existing law. This is not so. Clearly, these changes were intended to and did modify the definition of "business" set forth in Bigsby v. Johnson, 18 Cal.2d 860, 118 P.2d 289, and Los Angeles City High School Dist. v. State Board of Equalization, 71 Cal.App.2d 486, 163 P.2d 45. Thus, the 1947 amendment to Section 6367 is of no aid to Market.

Market also places considerable reliance on two Federal Court of Appeal cases from the Ninth Circuit interpreting the California sales tax act and certain federal statutes. The cases are State Board of Equalization of State of California v. Boteler, 131 F.2d 386, and California State Board of Equalization v. Goggin, 191 F.2d 726, 27 A.L.R.2d 1211. In both cases the court ruled against the contention of the State Board of Equalization that a sales tax was applicable to a sale, by a trustee in bankruptcy, of an entire business as part of the process of liquidating that business. There is undoubtedly language in these cases that supports the contention of Market that the sales tax act is not applicable to the sale of a business. For example, in the Goggin case, supra, at page 729 of 191 F.2d, the court stated: "The California Supreme Court has stated that the tax measure involved is an excise tax for the privilege of conducting a retail business, measured by the gross receipts from sales. [Citations.] * * * when the trustee in bankruptcy disposed of the trucks here involved * * * the sale was not made in the course of conducting a business but in the process of putting an end to a business." In the Boteler case, supra, the Federal Court applied the same rule to a liquidation by many sales, refusing to draw a distinction between a liquidation sale in bulk and one by the piece. This was held although the federal statute provides that trustees in bankruptcy conducting businesses are subject to all state taxes applicable to such businesses.

[14] It is possible that these cases can be explained on the theory that the federal courts there involved felt that a trustee in bankruptcy was not a retailer because of his status under federal law. It seems most likely that the federal courts construed the term "business" in the federal statute in its ordinary commercial sense and not as the California courts have construed the term in the sales tax act. At any rate, even if these cases are contrary to the views herein expressed, this court, as an intermediate state appellate court, is bound in interpreting a state statute to follow the rule laid down by the Supreme Court of this state.

It follows that both as a matter of interpretation and of binding precedent this sale was taxable.

A much more difficult question is presented by Market's contention that Ruling 63, upon which Market admittedly relied, estops the State Board from collecting the tax, penalties, and interest.

As already pointed out, the State Board in 1933 adopted Ruling 63, which provided that "The tax does not apply to any portion of the consideration paid in connection with the sale of an entire business; that is, equipment, fixtures, and so forth. * * *" This ruling remained in effect until October 1, 1944, two days after the consummation of the sale. Ruling 63 was adopted pursuant to Section 7051, which permits the Board to "prescribe, adopt, and enforce rules and regulations relating to the administration and enforcement" of the sales tax and to "prescribe the extent to which any ruling or regulation shall be applied without retroactive effect." There is no doubt but that Market, at the time of the sale, knew of this ruling and relied upon it. The trial court so found. It is also undisputed that the sale by Market to the City had great notoriety, that at least one member of the Board had actual knowledge of the sale at the time it was made, and that no tax was assessed by the Board until 1949, over four years after the sale had been consummated.

The trial court found that, although Market relied on Ruling 63 (the evidence showing that counsel for the company advised the company on the basis of the rule that no tax was payable), the "ruling did not cause plaintiff to change its position or course of conduct with regard to said sale." The court also found that "Reliance by plaintiff on interpretive Ruling 63 * * * did not result in any prejudice to plaintiff. It is untrue that plaintiff could have added sales tax reimbursement to the $7,500,000 purchase price * * * The $7,500,000 provided for in said charter amendment was the maximum amount the City and County of San Francisco was authorized to pay to plaintiff for its operative properties." The court also found that the delay in assessing the tax was not unreasonable and was caused by the failure of Market to file a sales tax return.

[15] It is the correctness of these findings and conclusions that is attacked by Market. It has frequently been stated that an estoppel will not be enforced against the government. Thus, in Boren v. State Personnel Board, 37 Cal.2d 634, at page 643, 234 P.2d 981, at page 986, where the Board agreed to employ the plaintiff in a definite geographical area, the Court concluded that "the authority of a public officer cannot be expanded by estoppel." See also Whitcomb Hotel, Inc. v. California Employment Comm., 24 Cal.2d 753, 151 P.2d 233, 155 A.L.R. 405. But the rule is not an absolute one. As was said in Baird v. City of Fresno, 97 Cal.App.2d 336, 342, 217 P.2d 681, 685: "Ordinarily, a governmental agency may not be estopped by the conduct of its officers and employees but there are many instances in which an equitable estoppel in fact will run against the government where justice and right require it." See for a good discussion, Farrell v. County of Placer, 23 Cal.2d 624, 145 P.2d 570, 153 A.L.R. 323. In Cruise v. City and County of San Francisco, 101 Cal.App.2d 558, 565, 225 P.2d 988, 993, this court had the following comment to make: "Whether an estoppel exists against the government should be tested generally by the same rules as those applicable to private persons. The government should not be permitted to avoid liability by tactics that would never be countenanced between private parties. The government should be an example to its citizens, and by that is meant a good example and not a bad one."

[16] None of these cases involved reliance on an erroneous administrative tax ruling. The State Board cites many cases from this and other jurisdictions to the effect that an estoppel based on reliance upon an erroneous construction of the statute by an administrative ruling will not lie against the government, particularly in tax matters. As a general proposition this is sound law. Obviously, a tax administrator should not be permitted by an erroneous ruling to exempt a taxpayer from the obligation to pay taxes. But that is as far as the rule goes. The proper limitations on that rule were pointed out by this court in La Societe Francaise, etc., v. California Employment Comm., 56 Cal.App.2d 534, 133 P.2d 47, in which a petition for hearing was unanimously denied. In that case the Societe deducted, under the terms of the California Unemployment Insurance Act, the prescribed contributions due from its employees, and allocated its own contributions to the payment of the tax. By a formal ruling of the tax agency it was ruled that the Societe, as a charitable institution, was not subject to the tax. The Societe then, in reliance on the ruling, refunded to the employees the amount that had been deducted from their salaries, and used the money it had allocated for its share of the tax for other purposes. Two years later the tax agency reversed its ruling, this time ruling that organizations like the Societe were subject to the tax. The tax agency then sought to collect from the Societe the total tax imposed on both employer and employees, penalties and interest. It was held that, although no estoppel could apply to the portion of the tax directly due from the Societe, as to the portion of the tax due from the employees, and as to penalties and interest the state was estopped. There are several statements in that case that are applicable here. At page 552 of 56 Cal. App.2d, at page 56 of 133 P.2d this court stated:

"As to such part of the tax, the burden of which the act contemplates will be borne by the employees, and which the employer 'transmits' to the fund, we are of the view that the state may not belatedly hold the employer to payment where he has failed to pay, or to make the necessary deductions from his employees' wages, in reliance on an express ruling that he is not liable for the tax. As between the state and the employer, the state may not in good conscience thus place on the employer a burden which the act itself did not intend that he should bear. We are further of the view that the employer cannot be held to pay interest on contributions which were not paid when due solely in reliance on the official ruling of non-liability. On the other hand, the state should not lose its right to taxes which the employer should have paid from its own funds to discharge its own tax obligation * * * notwithstanding plaintiff failed to make payment when due in reliance on the erroneous ruling of non-liability."

As to that portion of the tax imposed directly on the Societe the court had the following to say, 56 Cal.App.2d at page 553, 133 P.2d at page 57: "It is the general rule that the government does not lose its revenues because of an erroneous ruling of an administrative official as to the meaning of a tax law. [Numerous citations.] An administrative regulation which is in conflict with the statute is invalid and the government is not bound thereby. [Citations.]

The duty of the tax officials is to collect taxes imposed by law. * * * it is generally no defense that taxes were not paid when due in reliance on an official ruling of non-liability. The taxpayer is deemed to act with knowledge that administrative officials cannot bind the government by their erroneous interpretation of tax statutes."

The court then went on to discuss the modern attitude of the courts in ameliorating the harsh rule that the government is not bound by the rulings of tax officials administering the tax laws, and then stated, 56 Cal.App.2d at page 555, 133 P.2d at page 57: "It is our view that in the present case a proper regard for the protection of the interests of the government in its revenues, with recognition also of a degree of responsibility on the part of the government to a taxpayer who has relied to his prejudice on an official ruling, is achieved by requiring the taxpayer to discharge that part of the tax burden which it was contemplated it should bear by the statute imposing the tax, while relieving it from liability for the employees' contributions and interest on delayed payments. The taxpayer will pay from its own funds as much as it would have paid originally but for the erroneous administrative ruling, but it will not pay more." See also Libby, McNeill & Libby v. Wisconsin Department of Taxation, 260 Wis. 551, 51 N.W.2d 796, relying heavily on the La Societe Francaise case and discussing that case at some length.

Market argues that the sales tax is very similar to the employee's contribution involved in the La Societe Francaise case, supra, in that the seller under the Sales Tax Act is empowered to pass the tax on to the consumer. Reliance is placed upon Section 6052 of the Sales Tax Act which provides that "The tax hereby imposed shall be collected by the retailer from the consumer in so far as it can be done." See Clary v. Basalt Rock Co., 99 Cal.App.2d 458, 222 P.2d 24.

[17] So far as the tax itself is concerned, it is fundamentally different from the tax involved in the La Societe Francaise case, supra. So far as the unemployment tax is concerned, the portion of the tax imposed on the employees is a tax payable by those employees, and the employer is a mere collection agency. But the sales tax is not a tax on the buyer, but a tax on the seller, imposed on the privilege of selling goods at retail. While the seller may pass the tax on to the buyer, the tax itself is imposed on the seller, and the payment of it is his primary obligation. The buyer has no direct obligation, so far as the state is concerned, for the payment of the tax. Clary v. Basalt Rock Co., 99 Cal.App.2d 458, 222 P.2d 24. In the case of Crane Co. v. Arizona State Tax Commission, 63 Ariz. 426, 163 P.2d 656, 163 A.L.R. 261, the court was presented with this precise question. There, as here, a seller at retail failed to pass on the sales tax to the buyer in reliance upon an erroneous administrative regulation. The seller urged that the state was estopped, and cited the La Societe Francaise case. In discussing that case the court said, 163 P.2d at page 662: "In that case, the California court held that where the commission had informed the employer it was not subject to the unemployment insurance tax, and for that reason it collected no tax from its employees, the commission was estopped from collecting that portion of the tax which, under the law, the employer was required to collect from employees. The employer was merely a collecting agent for that part of the tax which the act contemplated should be borne by the employees. * * * Here [in reference to the Sales Tax] the appellant is in no sense the tax collector. It is the taxpayer. True, it has the right to pass on the taxes to the purchaser, but it is not under any statutory duty to do so."

[18] We agree with this reasoning. The general rule is that the state cannot be estopped because of acts of its employees from collecting the tax from the taxpayer. If the taxpayer is a mere collection agency the state may be estopped, but not where the tax is imposed on the complaining taxpayer. The public policy behind this rule is self-evident. That is this case. So far as the tax is concerned on the sale to the City, and the taxes on the transactions both before or after the sale, there can be no estoppel.

But this reasoning does not apply to the penalty and interest. Against those items, in a proper case, there can be an estoppel. The question is whether this is such a case.

The trial court held that it was not because, so the trial court found, the taxpayer did not change its position in reliance on the erroneous ruling. This reasoning is based on the fact that although Market admittedly knew of Ruling 63, relied upon it, and was advised by its counsel that no tax was payable, it suffered no detriment because it could not have passed the tax onto the City for the reason that it charged the City $7,500,000, the full amount authorized by the voters, so that there was no money from which to pay an additional sum in taxes. It is also urged that Market failed to file a return and that this was the proximate cause for the imposition of penalty and interest.

[19] This problem, as to interest and penalties, must be divided into three parts: First, interest and penalties on sales made before September 29, 1944; interest and penalty on the sale of September 29, 1944; and interest and penalties on the sales in liquidation made between September 29, 1944, and December 31, 1948. So far as the sales made between 1933 and September 29, 1944, are concerned, a return should have been filed, the tax should have been paid, and there is no ground for an estoppel. Ruling 63 has no application, because that ruling only applied to a sale of an entire business. Therefore, the penalties and interest were properly assessed on the transactions.

[20] But a different situation exists as to the sale of September 29, 1944. Here the taxpayer was told by the State Board by Ruling 63 that the transaction was not taxable. It relied on that ruling. To say that it did not change its position on such reliance because the City could only pay $7,500,000, and could not have paid the tax, is to engage in mere guesswork. Entering into the sale in the induced belief that the transaction was not taxable was a change of position as a matter of law. Would Market have entered into the sale had it known that the transaction was taxable and that it would have to pay the tax? Could the City, from other funds, have legally paid the tax? If Market had known the tax was payable, would it have insisted on the City sponsoring some form of legislation to exempt the transaction from the tax? Would such legislation have passed? These questions, of course, cannot be answered. What Market would have done, had it known that the transaction was taxable, can never be known. The reason that it cannot be known is because the State Board, by its Ruling 63, made the answering of that question unnecessary and impossible. For the State Board now to say that the sale would have gone through anyway is to engage in conjecture and surmise. The very fact that Market did not pay the tax because it was told it did not have to, and so did not file a return and thus incurred the penalty and liability for interest, necessarily, and, as a matter of law, amounted to such a change of position as to raise the estoppel. The finding to the contrary is unsupported and against the law.

But, says the State Board, Market learned of the change in the ruling made on October 1, 1944, not later than December 29, 1944, and should then have known that the change was retroactive. The contention requires but scant consideration. The State Board would impose on Market the duty of knowing that original Ruling 63 was erroneous, that the October 1, 1944, ruling stated the law as it always existed, and was intended to be retroactive. After having entered into the sale on September 29, 1944, in reliance on Ruling 63 the taxpayer was under no duty in December of that year to review the law applicable to the completed sale.

[21] The knowledge gained on December 29, 1944, however, is of some significance. After the sale and up until December 31, 1948, Market engaged in several transfers of tangible personal property in the liquidation of its non-operative properties. Market is liable for the tax on these transactions. So far as penalties and interest are concerned, since these were liquidation sales, penalties and interest on the sales made between September 29, 1944, and December 29, 1944, cannot be collected. The estoppel as to similar penalties and interest as to the sale itself applies equally to these transactions, and for the same reasons. But as to the sales after December 29, 1944 (the date Market became aware of the new ruling as to liquidation sales), and December 31, 1948, no reason for an estoppel exists. After knowledge of the new ruling there could not, as to future transactions, be any estoppel.

It is obvious that the judgment must be reversed to permit the somewhat complex accounting that will be required. The trial court is directed to take such an accounting in accordance with the views herein expressed. For the guidance of the trial court the following is a summary of such views:

1. Market is liable for the tax on all sales made by it of tangible personal property sold to buyers not for resale between August 1, 1933, and December 31, 1948. This includes the tax on the portion of the sale price to the City that represents the sale of tangible personal property.

2. Market is liable for penalties and interest on all sales of such property made by it between August 1, 1933, and September 29, 1944.

3. The State Board is estopped from collecting penalties and interest for failure to pay the tax on the sale to the City, and is also estopped from imposing penalties and interest for failure to pay the tax on liquidation sales of non-operative personal property made between September 29, 1944, and December 29, 1944.

4. Penalties and interest for failure to pay taxes on liquidation sales of personalty made between December 29, 1944, and December 31, 1948, are collectible by the state.

The judgment is reversed with directions to the trial court to take the accounting and enter its judgment in accordance with the views herein expressed.

BRAY and FRED B. WOOD, JJ., concur.

137 Cal.App.2d 403

Nora E. SCHMITT, Plaintiff and Appellant,
v.

JOE MORTON LUMBER COMPANY and J.
E. Morton (herein sued as Joseph Martin), Defendants and Respondents.
Civ. 8680.

District Court of Appeal, Third District,
California.

Nov. 30, 1955.

Breach of contract action, in which, upon defendants' failure to make an appearance, plaintiff had obtained a default judgment. The defendants moved to set aside the default and the default judgment, and the Superior Court, Humboldt County, Carl L. Christensen, Jr., J., entered an order setting them aside. The plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Van Dyke, P. J., held that where defendants' failure to make appearance was due to inadvertence of counsel, and counsel offered poor health and press of other business as excuse for his failure to file his clients' appearance in action, and defendants moved to set aside default and judgment less than month after service of summons, and about two weeks after default was taken, trial court did not abuse its discretion in granting the requested relief.

Order affirmed.

1. Appeal and Error ⇨957(1)

Motions for relief from default are addressed to the sound discretion of the trial court, and the exercise of that discretion, in the absence of a clear showing of abuse, will not be interfered with by an appellate tribunal. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 473.

2. Judgment ⇨143(14, 15)

Where defendants' failure to make appearance was due to inadvertence of counsel, and counsel offered poor health and press of other business as excuse for his failure to file his clients' appearance in action, and defendants moved to set aside default and judgment less than month after service of summons, and about two weeks after default was taken, trial court did not abuse its discretion in granting requested relief. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 473.

Mathews & Traverse, Eureka, for appellant.

Blaine McGowan, Eureka, for respondents.

VAN DYKE, Presiding Justice.

This is an appeal from an order setting aside a default and a default judgment in an action brought to recover damages for breach of contract. Plaintiff appeals.

Appellant's complaint was filed on October 13, 1953. Summons was served upon defendants on January 8, 1954, but they failed to appear or answer within time. On January 21st a default was taken and judgment was entered in favor of plaintiff. Notice of motion to set aside the default and the judgment was filed February 5th. The supporting affidavits contained the following averments: Prior to January 8th respondents engaged an attorney to represent them in any litigation which might arise from the matters upon which the present suit is based and, therefore, when on January 8th summons was served they left the copies of complaint and summons with the secretary of respondents' attorney who assured them the matter would receive the attorney's attention. However, at that time the attorney was absent from his office upon the advice of his physician. He returned to work on January 12th and was then apprised of the pending action and of the deposit of the papers in his office by respondents. He failed to make a timely appearance. His excuse was that due to poor health and the pressure of other business he inadvertently let the time for pleading elapse. He was then spending a limited amount of time at his office because his doctor had advised a curtailment of his activities due to a coronary disturbance he had recently suffered and an attack of intestinal influenza which left him weak and subject to severe coughing spells and nausea. He urged his condition upon the trial court as his excuse for inadvertently failing to file his clients' appearance in the action.

[1, 2] It is well settled that motions for relief from default under the remedial provisions of Section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure are addressed to the sound discretion of the trial court and the exercise of that discretion, in the absence of a clear showing of abuse, will not be interfered with by an appellate tribunal. McNeil v. Blumenthal, 11 Cal.2d 566, 81 P.2d 566. In the cited case the facts shown in excuse of default had been accepted by the trial court as justifying relief. On motion to either dismiss the appeal as frivolous or affirm the order the Supreme Court elected to affirm the order. We feel a similar factual situation is shown by the record here.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

PEEK and SCHOTTKY, JJ., concur.

137 Cal.App.2d 148

DAVIS LUMBER COMPANY, a California Corporation, Plaintiff and Appellant,

v.

Bruce E. HUBBELL, Sr., Defendant and Respondent.

R. W. SCHMITZ, Tes Glammugnani, and Davis Lumber Company, a California Corporation, Plaintiffs and Appellants,

v.

Walter W. SADLER and Julia D. Sadler, his wife, Defendants and Respondents.

Civ. 8691, 8692.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Nov. 18, 1955.

'Appeals from orders of the Superior Court, Yolo County, C. C. McDonald, J., granting motions by defendants in two actions to strike costs after judgments for plaintiffs. The District Court of Appeal, McMurray, J. pro tem., held that defendants, by waiting 20 and 29 days, respectively, after receipt of memoranda of plaintiffs' costs, before filing notices of motions, waived right to object to plaintiffs' filing of cost bills after statutory time therefor.

Orders reversed.

1. Costs ⇐199

The statutory provisions specifying times for filing cost bill and taxing costs are mandatory. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 1033.

2. Costs ⇐206

A party neglecting to apply to court within statutory time for taxation of costs awarded against him is deemed to have assented to correctness and lawfulness of items in verified memorandum of costs filed by adverse party and total amount of such items, on entry thereof in judgment by court clerk, is of same force and effect as any other part of judgment, so that party subject to payment of costs, being entitled to waive all objections to claim therefor, may limit his objections to grounds specified in his motion to tax costs. West's Ann. Code Civ.Proc. § 1033.

3. Costs ⇐199, 206

A party failing to file and serve memorandum of costs within time prescribed by statute is conclusively deemed to have waived any costs accruing in his favor as against timely motion by adverse party to tax costs, but if memorandum is filed and served in due form within time prescribed, adverse party, failing to file or notice such a motion within specified time, is conclusively deemed to have waived all objections to memorandum. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 1033.

4. Costs ⇐206

A court clerk owes no duty to determine regularity of filing of cost bill, but burden of attacking it rests on party who will have to pay costs, and if he fails to move to tax costs within time allowed by statute, he is conclusively presumed to have waived irregularity in filing of bill. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 1033.

5. Costs $\Rightarrow$ 199

Since time to file cost bill may be extended by court and relief may be given under statute, if bill is not filed within time required by statute, such requirement is not jurisdictional, so that failure to file bill within time limit can be attacked only by motion to tax or strike costs within statutory time. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. §§ 473, 1033, 1054.

6. Costs $\Rightarrow$ 206

Defendants, waiting 20 and 29 days, respectively, after receiving of plaintiffs' memoranda of costs before filing notices of motions to strike costs, waived right to object to filing of cost bills after statutory time therefor. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 1033.

Robert M. Cole, Davis, for appellants.

Douglas C. Busath, Sacramento, for respondents.

McMURRAY, Justice pro tem.

The above two actions are consolidated by stipulation for the purpose of appeal as both involve the propriety of orders granting motions to strike costs after judgments obtained by plaintiffs in the trial court. These appeals are presented on agreed statements under Rule 6 of the Rules on Appeal.

The agreed statements define the issue here as:

"If a prevailing party files his cost bill late, is the [right to object to such] lateness of filing waived by the losing party if the losing party does not file an appropriate objection within five days after receiving the cost bill?"

[1,2] The case of San Francisco Unified School District v. Board of National Missions, 129 Cal.App.2d 236, 276 P.2d 829, is apposite here and requires that appellants' position be sustained. It is said therein, 129 Cal.App.2d at pages 241-243, 276 P.2d at pages 832-833:

"* * * Then, some 26 days after service of the cost bill plaintiff moved to strike the whole cost bill on the ground that it was not filed within the time prescribed by law. * * * while it is true that the order from which the appeal here is taken is not, strictly speaking, based on a motion to tax costs, but is founded on a motion to strike the cost bill from the files, yet, in its general purpose and effect, it amounts to the same thing. In fact, the application upon which the order appealed from herein is based has been treated as amounting to the same proceeding as a motion to tax or retax costs.' Markart v. Zeimer, 74 Cal.App. 152, 156, 239 P. 856, 857. The court below denied both motions. Plaintiff appealed apparently only from the order denying the motion to strike. This raises the question of whether a motion to strike a cost bill will lie after the expiration of the time specified in section 1033. It has been held that the section is mandatory as to the time to file the cost bill. Coast Electric Service, Inc., v. Jensen, 111 Cal.App. 124, 295 P. 346. It would seem that if that requirement in section 1033 is mandatory, the requirement in the same section as to the time to tax would likewise be mandatory. In Mojave & B. R. Co. v. Cuddeback, 28 Cal.App. 439, at page 441, 152 P. 943, at page 944, the court said concerning a motion to tax costs under section 1033: 'If, however, the notice of motion be not given within the time specified therefor, the clerk must, upon the expiration thereof, make the entry in accordance with the memorandum of costs filed. * * * Thus, if a party to an action against whom cost is awarded neglects, within the time specified in section 1033, to apply to the court to have the same taxed, he is deemed to have assented to the correctness and lawfulness of the items as claimed in the verified memorandum of costs as filed, the total of which, upon being entered in the judgment by the clerk in accordance with his duty, is of the same force and effect as any other part of the judgment. This being true, and since the party subject to the payment of cost may waive any and all objections to the claim for cost, it follows, we think, that he may limit his objections to such grounds only as he may specify in his motion as the reasons for asking the intervention of the court in taxing the cost.'

[3, 4] "In Griffith v. Welbanks & Co., 26 Cal.App. 477, at page 480, 147 P. 986, at page 988, the court said: 'It follows that if the one party fails, within the time prescribed, to file and serve his memorandum of costs, then he is to be conclusively deemed to have waived the costs, if any, accruing in his favor. And if, the memorandum having been in due form filed and served within the time prescribed, the adverse party fails, within the specified time, to file or notice a motion to have the costs taxed, he is conclusively deemed to have waived any and all objections thereto.'

"Having in mind that Mojave & B. R. Co. v. Cuddeback, supra, 28 Cal.App. 439, 152 P. 943, 944, held that by failing to move to tax within time the party subject to the payment of costs is deemed to have waived 'any and all objections to the claim for cost,' and that it is the duty of the clerk in such event to make entry of the costs in the judgment, it would follow that the language in Griffith v. Welbanks & Co., supra, 26 Cal.App. 477, 147 P. 986, 988, to the effect that the party failing to file his cost bill within time 'is conclusively deemed to have waived' his costs, means as against a motion to tax filed within time only. When a cost bill is filed it is not the duty of the clerk to determine the regularity of its filing. The burden of attacking it rests upon the party who will have to pay the costs, and if he fails to move within the time allowed he is 'conclusively' presumed to have waived such irregularity.

[5] "It must be remembered that under section 1054 the court may extend the time to file a cost bill, Coast

Electric Service, Inc., v. Jensen, supra, 111 Cal.App. 124, 126, 295 P. 346, and that where the bill is not filed in time relief may be given, in a proper case, under section 473, Code of Civil Procedure. Therefore, even though on motion made within due time, the late cost bill, in the absence of relief given under section 473, may be stricken, see Dow v. Ross, 90 Cal. 562, 27 P. 409; Coast Electric Service, Inc., v. Jensen, supra, 111 Cal.App. 124, 295 P. 346, the requirement that the cost bill be filed within five days is not jurisdictional. It not being jurisdictional, the failure to file within the time limit can only be attacked as prescribed by law, which is by a motion to tax (or strike) within the period prescribed by section 1033. Such motion not having been filed within that time and no relief having been sought under section 473, the trial court properly refused to strike the cost bill."

[6] In the instant cases it appears from the statements that respondents waited 20 days and 29 days respectively after receipt of the memorandum of costs before filing the notices of motion to strike in these two actions. Other than that the above quoted language is completely in point.

Although the parties have agreed that the lateness of filing objections to a late cost bill is the only question involved, it appears from the agreed statements that in one case the notice of entry of judgment was filed on March 10, 1954, and the memorandum of costs was served and filed on the same day and that in the other case notice of entry of judgment was filed on April 2, 1954, and the memorandum of costs was served and filed the same day.

Under such a chronology it is difficult to understand the appellants' concession that the cost bills were not filed in time.

There is reference in one of appellants' briefs to the case of Dow v. Ross, 90 Cal. 562, 27 P. 409, as authority for the proposition that actual notice of the decision starts the five-day period for filing a cost bill. That case, decided in 1891, dealt with Code of Civil Procedure Section 1033 as it then read and was in accord with the provisions then contained in that section. Those provisions have been changed and at the time here involved provided that the five-day period should commence to run "after notice of the entry of the judgment, * * *"

In Fisher v. Eckert, 94 Cal.App.2d 890, at page 894, 212 P.2d 64, at page 67, the court, in considering an argument that knowledge of the decision was tantamount to notice of entry of judgment, said:

"Since the dismissal became a judgment and was entered in the clerk's register on October 20, the next question is whether defendants had notice of such entry, within the meaning of section 1033, supra. It is plaintiffs' argument that the presence of counsel for defendants in the court and under the circumstances related was sufficient notice of such entry. Defendants' counsel argues otherwise and maintains that defendants never did have notice of the entry of the dismissal in the clerk's register. It is true that written notice of such entry is not required where there is actual notice of such entry. Dow v. Ross, 90 Cal. 562, 27 P. 409; Mullally v. Irish-American Benevolent Society, 69 Cal. 559, 11 P. 215; O'Neil v. Donahue, 57 Cal. 226.

"It is clear from the proceedings had that defendants did have actual notice that plaintiffs had filed with the clerk a dismissal of the action and that the trial court acted upon such dismissal by excusing the jury from further attendance. However, there is no showing that the clerk at that time had entered such dismissal on his register. In fact, the entry of such dismissal on the register could have been delayed for several days without defendants' knowledge and the time for filing such cost bill would not have run until defendants had notices of such entry. Hauptman v. Heebner, 34 Cal.App.2d 600, 94 P.2d 48; King v. Superior Court, supra, 12 Cal.App.2d [501] at page 508, 56 P.2d 268. It appears that defendants did not have notice of the entry of the dismissal on the clerk's register in the instant action and the time for filing such cost bill would not commence to run until that occurred. The cost bill was therefore filed within time. The order striking same was erroneous."

In accord with the foregoing authorities the orders appealed from are reversed.

VAN DYKE, P. J., and SCHOTTKY, J., concur.

137 Cal.App.2d 73

Fred CONRAD, an individual doing business under the fictitious name of Fred Conrad Company, Plaintiff and Appellant,

v.

Charles P. THOMPSON and Audrey W. Thompson, Defendants and Respondents.

Civ. 5072.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District,
California.

Nov. 17, 1955.

Real estate broker's action for breach of contract. The contract was one for installment sale of land by a vendor to the defendant vendees, and provided for the subdivision and improvement of the land and sale of the lots by vendees and for exclusive listing of the lots with the plaintiff broker at a specified commission. The Superior Court, Riverside County, Russel S. Waite, J., rendered judgment for defendant vendees, and the plaintiff realtor appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Barnard, P. J., held that the statute authorizing rescission of a contract for failure of consideration through fault of the person as to whom one rescinds was applicable as against a third party beneficiary to a contract and authorized rescission as against such third party beneficiary where the consideration promised by him failed.

Affirmed.

1. Contracts ⇨171(1)

Whether a contract is severable or entire, from standpoint of rescission, depends largely on intention of parties and object of contract. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1689.

2. Brokers ⇨10

Where contract for installment sale of land to be subdivided and improved provided that third party realtor was to have exclusive handling of sale of the lots, and provided for his commissions thereon, the listing was severable from the sale portion of contract, and vendor's concurrence was not necessary to rescission of such portion of contract by vendees, nor was it necessary that the vendees repudiate sale portion of contract to rescind the listing. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1689.

3. Contracts ⇨273

As general rule, one must rescind all of his contract and may not retain rights under it which he deems desirable to have and repudiate the remainder of its provisions, but there are certain exceptions where circumstances justify rescission only as to particular matters or particular parties involved in entire transaction. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1689.

4. Contracts ⇨187(1)

Where contract for benefit of third party exists, such party is subject to ordinary rule governing a party to a contract. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1689.

5. Contracts ⇨260

Statute authorizing rescission of contract for failure of consideration through fault of person as to whom one rescinds was applicable as against third party beneficiary to contract and authorized rescission as against him where consideration promised by him failed. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1689.

6. Brokers ⇨10

Where contract for installment sale of land to be subdivided into lots and improved and sold provided for exclusive listing of the lots with certain realtor with specified commission to be realtor, and realtor was not ready, willing and able to perform as contemplated by such contract and failed to invest $5,000 in the project according to his oral promise to vendees, vendees could rescind that portion of contract in favor of realtor. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1689.

7. Brokers ⇨11

In real estate broker's action arising out of vendees' service of notice upon him of termination of listing agreement contained in contract between a vendor and vendees providing for sale of land to be subdivided and improved by vendees and for exclusive handling of the improved lot sales by the broker at specified commission, evidence sustained trial court's finding that broker was not ready, willing and able to perform his duty as contemplated by the contract. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1689.

Best, Best & Krieger, Enos C. Reid, Riverside, for appellant.

Harmon C. Brown, Riverside, for respondents.

BARNARD, Presiding Justice.

The defendants purchased ten acres of land from one Gilmore under a contract dated February 1, 1952. The plaintiff acted as broker and was paid a commission by Gilmore. This contract recited that Thompson desired to purchase this property for the purpose of subdividing and erecting dwellings thereon. It provided for a price of $18,000, with a down payment of $5,000, and an escrow; that the seller should receive $300 from the sale of each lot to apply on the purchase price; and that if any balance remained after two years it should be payable in monthly payments of $50, and secured by a trust deed on the remaining lots. This agreement also contained a paragraph providing that Fred Conrad "shall at all times have the exclusive handling of said property in regard to the sale of all lots and to include all improvements placed thereon"; that "the provision in this paragraph shall be in lieu of any other agreement with the said Fred Conrad"; and that "Charles P. Thompson agrees to pay Fred Conrad a commission of $200 per house and lot as commission for sale of each house and lot and no more."

On March 3, 1952, the defendant served written notice on the plaintiff that his agency for the handling or sale of this property was thereby terminated. The defendants, through a title company, took the necessary proceedings before the Riverside Planning Commission and the State Real Estate Commissioner to subdivide the property and to permit sales of lots therein to be made. The final report of the Real Estate Commissioner was dated May 19, 1952. Thereafter, the defendants proceeded to build homes and sell the lots in this subdivision.

The plaintiff later brought this action, relying on the paragraph above quoted as constituting a contract for his benefit. An amended complaint, filed on January 9, 1953, alleged that this land had been subdivided and 50 houses and lots had been sold; that the plaintiff was at all times ready, willing and able to perform his duty with respect to an exclusive handling of the sale of houses and lots as contemplated in the contract; that the defendants had wrongfully refused to permit him to sell said houses and lots, and wrongfully prevented him from performing; and that he had been damaged in the sum of $10,000. The answer denied the material allegations of the complaint, and alleged as a further defense that in consideration of being thus named in this contract as exclusive agent for the sale of these lots, the plaintiff verbally agreed with the defendants that he would invest the sum of $5,000 and become a limited partner in this venture; that the plaintiff failed and refused to invest $5,000 or any part thereof in said project; and that on March 3, 1952, his agency for the handling or sale of said property was terminated by the defendants.

After a trial, the court found that the defendants proceeded to subdivide said property into 50 lots, upon which houses were erected; that all 50 of said houses and lots were sold; that it is not true that the plaintiff has at all times been ready, willing and able to perform the duty of exclusive handling of said property, and handling the sale of said houses and lots as contemplated in the contract; that it is not true that the defendants have wrongfully refused to permit the plaintiff to sell said houses and lots, or have wrongfully prevented him from performing; that it is true that in consideration of being named as the real estate broker for the sale of the lots and property described in this contract the plaintiff verbally agreed with the defendants that he would invest the sum of $5,000, and become a limited partner in this project; that the plaintiff failed and refused to invest $5,000, or any part thereof, in said project; that on March 3, 1952, his agency for handling or selling said property was terminated by the defendants; and that it is not true that the sum of $10,000, or any amount, is due to the plaintiff. Judgment was entered in favor of the defendants, and the plaintiff has appealed.

The appellant contends that the court should have found that a contract for his benefit as a third party existed in this case; that there was no evidence showing that he was not at all times ready, willing and able to perform his duty thereunder; and that the court should have found, as a matter of law, that there was no effective rescission "of the third party contract." With respect to the matter of rescission, it is argued that a rescission could only be effected by the action of both the seller and the buyer named in the contract; that the attempted rescission or revocation was made by the buyer alone, and no such attempt was made by the seller, Gilmore; that the contract could not be rescinded or revoked after the third party beneficiary had acted upon the contract which was made for his benefit; and that the appellant, prior to March 3, 1952, had done certain things in the nature of preliminary work looking to the subdivision of the property, and had talked to many persons who might become potential buyers.

[1-3] The paragraph upon which appellant relies rather clearly appears to relate to a matter which is separate and apart from the purpose and object of the purchase and sale contract, of which it was a part. That paragraph had nothing to do with the contract of sale itself, which was the real object of the contract. While the contract provided for the subdivision of the property and the sale of individual lots, the seller had no interest in the arrangements made by the buyer for the sale of such lots. This is indicated by the terms of the contract itself and confirmed by the seller's testimony at the trial. The paragraph itself states that it shall be "in lieu of" any other agreement with the appellant. The only reasonable interpretation is that this provision was intended as a substitute for, and to avoid the necessity of, any other writing which would otherwise be required for the collection of a broker's commission. It was nothing more than such a written memorandum or listing, which was severable or divisible from the purchase and sale agreement entered into by the other parties. Whether a contract is severable or entire depends largely on the intention of the parties and the object of the contract. Sweet v. Watson's Nursery, 23 Cal.App.2d 379, 73 P.2d 284. It sufficiently appears here that this portion of the contract was severable from the remainder.

Having no interest in this severable portion of the contract of purchase and sale the seller had no interest in the rescission or termination of that part of the contract, and his participation or concurrence in the notice of rescission given by the respondents was not essential in order to terminate that part of the contract. Nor was it essential that the respondents rescind or terminate the entire contract of sale or give up their rights as purchasers of the property. As was said in Simmons v. California Institute of Technology, 34 Cal.2d 264, 209 P.2d 581, 592:

"Although the general rule undoubtedly is that one must rescind all of his contract and may not retain rights under it which he deems desirable to have and repudiate the remainder of its provisions, there are certain exceptions where the circumstances justify a rescission only as to particular matters or particular parties involved in an entire transaction."

[4-7] There was some evidence that the appellant lost his best salesmen, and did not have the organization required for this work. The evidence also shows that nothing material was done by him toward performing his agreement before the contract was terminated by the respondents. The appellant's testimony in this regard was vague and unsatisfactory, and related to claimed assistance in subdividing the property. He had nothing to do with this, under the contract, and the respondents paid a title company to handle that matter for them. He could not legally sell any lots until after May 19, 1952, and he testified that he did nothing after the notice of termination was given him on March 3.

The court's findings of a failure of consideration, which were fully supported by the evidence, furnish a further reason why the appellant was not entitled to recover. Where a contract for the benefit of a third party exists, such a party is subject to the ordinary rules governing a party to a contract. Section 1689 of the Civil Code provides that a party to a contract may rescind the same "If, through the fault of the party as to whom he rescinds, the consideration for his obligation fails, in whole or in part; * * *." Three witnesses testified that before the contract of sale was entered into the respondents told the appellant that they would not give him an exclusive selling agency unless he invested $5,000 in the project, and there was ample evidence that he agreed to do this and later failed and refused to do so. No contention was made at the trial, or is made here, that the appellant invested any money in this subdivision or had the willingness or ability to do so. The court's finding that the appellant was not ready, willing and able to perform his duty as contemplated in the contract is sustained by the evidence.

The judgment is affirmed.

GRIFFIN and MUSSELL, JJ., concur.

137 Cal.App.2d 197

The PEOPLE of the State of California,
Respondent,

v.

Joseph Godfrey MOORE, Appellant.

Cr. 3122.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 1, California.

Nov. 22, 1955.

Hearing Denied Dec. 21, 1955.

Defendant was convicted of child molestation. The Superior Court, Alameda County, Donald K. Quayle, J., entered judgment and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Peters, P. J., held that evidence supported implied finding that defendant committed the overt acts with the required abnormal sexual motivation.

Affirmed.

1. Vagrancy ⇨

The purpose of vagrancy child molestation statute is protection of children from interference by sexual offenders and the apprehension, segregation and punishment of the latter. Pen.Code, § 647a(1).

2. Criminal Law ⇨13

The meaning of words "to annoy or molest" in vagrancy child molestation statute are sufficiently definite and certain to advise public generally what acts and conduct are prohibited. Pen.Code, § 647a(1).

3. Vagrancy ⇨1

The words "annoy" and "molest" in vagrancy child molestation statute connote abnormal sexual motivation on part of offender. Pen.Code, § 647a(1).

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Annoy" and "Molest".

4. Vagrancy ⇨1

The vagrancy child molestation statute must be construed reasonably as setting up an objective test for annoyance or molestation. Pen.Code, § 647a(1).

5. Criminal Law ⇨1144(13), 1159(2)

On appeal the appellate court must view the evidence in the light most favorable to the prosecution, and if there is any substantial evidence or reasonable inferences from that evidence to support judgment the appellate court must affirm.

6. Criminal Law ⇨1128(4)

Where defendant elected not to present his side of the story to jury at trial, he could not on appeal get his story before the appellate court.

7. Criminal Law ⇨1128(2)

Facts dehors the record could not be considered to determine whether prior conviction was invalid in that the arrest there involved was illegal.

8. Vagrancy ⇨3

In vagrancy prosecution for molesting child, fact that the child did not testify that she was "annoyed" or "molested" was not fatal to the prosecution's case which could be based on other testimony disclosing that accused had the required intent. Pen.Code, § 647a(1).

9. Vagrancy ⇨3

In vagrancy prosecution for molesting child, evidence supported implied finding that defendant committed the overt acts with the required abnormal sexual motivation. Pen.Code, § 647a(1).

10. Criminal Law ⇨1159(4)

Minor discrepancies which are normal and do not raise suspicion that testimony of any witness is fabricated or inherently improbable are matters for jury to consider and are not relevant to the appeal.

11. Criminal Law ⇨721(1)

Where defendant failed to take the stand, prosecutor had a right to comment on the failure and to state that since defendant had not contradicted prosecution's witnesses such testimony stood uncontradicted and that jury could infer that such witnesses told the truth.

12. Criminal Law ⇨713

Statements made by prosecuting attorney at time of sexual psychopath hearing after defendant was convicted by jury of vagrancy molestation offense against eight year old girl could not have affected jury in its consideration of the molestation charge and could not have affected the judge since he found defendant was not a sexual psy-chopath. Pen.Code, § 647a(1); Welfare and Institutions Code, § 5501.

13. Criminal Law ☞655(7), 722½

It is error for prosecution or court to refer to prior conviction, unless relevant for impeachment purposes in cases where defendant testifies.

14. Criminal Law ☞633(2)

Even though first conviction under vagrancy child molestation statute is misdemeanor and subsequent convictions are felonies, fact that the court clerk in reading the charge stated that the offense was a felony did not inform jury there had been a prior conviction. Pen.Code, §§ 647a(1), 1025, 1093, subd. 1.

15. Criminal Law ☞814(3), 1172(6)

The giving of the instruction that defendant was on trial only for offense charged in information and that jury could not convict merely because they believed defendant was guilty of some other crime or offense not charged, was for protection of defendant's rights and should not have been given where there was no evidence of other crimes, but since there was no evidence of any other crime the erroneous giving of it could not possibly have been prejudicial. Pen.Code, § 1025.

Albert T. Shine, Jr., Oakland, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Clarence A. Linn, Chief Asst. Atty. Gen., John S. McInerny, Deputy Atty. Gen., San Francisco, J. F. Coakley, Dist. Atty., of Alameda County, Robert L. Anderson, Deputy Dist. Atty., Oakland, for respondent.

PETERS, Presiding Justice.

Defendant, by information, was charged with having violated Section 647a(1) of the Penal Code. The charge was that on June 23, 1954, he did "annoy and molest" a small girl, and that he had previously been convicted of a similar charge under the same section in Los Angeles County.

Section 647a(1) reads: "Every person who annoys or molests any child is a vagrant and is punishable upon first conviction by a fine of not exceeding five hundred dollars ($500) or by imprisonment in the county jail for not exceeding six months or by both such fine and imprisonment and is punishable upon the second and each subsequent conviction by imprisonment in the state prison not exceeding five years."

[1] The purpose of the section is clear. In People v. Pallares, 112 Cal.App.2d Supp. 895, at page 900, 246 P.2d 173, at page 176, this purpose was expressed as follows: "The object of the enactment of the code section was the protection of children from interference by sexual offenders, and the apprehension, segregation and punishment of the latter. It is common knowledge that the subject of sex offenders, and particularly the protection of the young from improper advances, has in recent years engaged the close attention of the legislature and of the general body of the citizens of this State."

[2-4] 112 Cal.App.2d Supp. at page 901, 246 P.2d at page 176 the proper interpretation of the section was given by the court as follows:

"It seems equally clear that the meaning of the words 'to annoy or molest', as employed in the Code section, are sufficiently definite and certain to advise the public generally what acts and conduct are prohibited. Annoy means to disturb or irritate, especially by continued or repeated acts; [citations] 'to weary or trouble; to irk; to offend; to disturb or irritate, esp. by continued or repeated acts; to vex; to molest; * * * harm; injure'. (Webster's New International Dictionary Second Edition.)

"The same dictionary defines 'molest' as, 'to interfere with or meddle with unwarrantably so as to injure or disturb'. Molest is, in general, a synonym for annoy. The term 'molestation' always conveys the idea of some injustice or injury. Molest is also defined as meaning to trouble, disturb, annoy, or vex. [Citation.]

* * *

"When the words annoy or molest are used in reference to offenses against children, there is a connotation of abnormal sexual motivation on the part of the offender. Although no specific intent is prescribed as an element of this particular offense, a reading of the section as a whole in the light of the evident purpose of this and similar legislation enacted in this State indicates that the acts forbidden are those motivated by an unnatural or abnormal sexual interest or intent with respect to children. It should be noted further that the section must be construed reasonably as setting up an objective test for annoyance or molestation; * * *. The annoyance or molestation which is forbidden is in no sense a purely subjective state on the part of the child. The objectionable acts of a defendant constitute the annoyance or molestation contemplated by the statute. [Citation.]"

This case was approved in People v. McNair, 130 Cal.App.2d 696, 279 P.2d 800. After quoting with approval from the Pallares case, supra, the court stated, 130 Cal. App.2d at page 697, 279 P.2d at page 801: "It is also settled that the element of annoyance as provided in section 647a(1) of the Penal Code is not concerned with the state of mind of the child. It is the objectionable acts of defendant which constitute the offense. (People v. Pallares, supra, 112 Cal.App.2d Supp. 901, 902, 246 P.2d 173.) If the conduct of a defendant is so lewd or obscene that the normal person would unhesitatingly be irritated by it, such conduct would 'annoy or molest' within the purview of section 647a(1), Penal Code. [Citations.]"

[5] The main contention of defendant is that the evidence does not support the finding that he performed any acts with the intent to "annoy" or "molest" the child within the meaning of Section 647a(1) of the Penal Code as interpreted in these two cases. This requires an examination of the record. Before summarizing the evidence, however, it seems necessary to call attention to the well settled but often overlooked rule that on such an appeal the appellate court must view the evidence in the light most favorable to the prosecution. If there is any substantial evidence or reasonable inferences from that evidence to support the judgment the appellate court must affirm. People v. Pianezzi, 42 Cal. App.2d 265, 108 P.2d 732. In People v. Newland, 15 Cal.2d 678, 681, 104 P.2d 778, 779, the Supreme Court restated this rule in the following language: "The court on appeal 'will not attempt to determine the weight of the evidence, but will decide only whether upon the face of the evidence it can be held that sufficient facts could not have been found by the jury to warrant the inference of guilt. For it is the function of the jury in the first instance, and of the trial court after verdict, to determine what facts are established by the evidence, and before the verdict of the jury, which has been approved by the trial court, can be set aside on appeal upon the ground' of insufficiency of the evidence, 'it must be made clearly to appear that upon no hypothesis whatever is there sufficient substantial evidence to support the conclusion reached in the court below. * * * We must assume in favor of the verdict the existence of every fact which the jury could have reasonably deduced from the evidence, and then determine whether such facts are sufficient to support the verdict.' If the circumstances reasonably justify the verdict of the jury, the opinion of the reviewing court that those circumstances might also reasonably be reconciled with the innocence of the defendant will not warrant interference with the determination of the jury. [Citations.]"

The trial judge charged the jury as to the elements of the offense as set forth in the Pallares and McNair cases, supra, both as to the overt acts and the intent required to constitute the offense charged. The instructions told the jury what is necessary to constitute "annoying" or "molesting," and stated that the challenged conduct must be motivated by an abnormal or unnatural sexual interest or intent before a conviction was justified. The basic question is whether the evidence, tested by the standards set forth in the Newland case, supra, supports the implied findings of the jury that such acts were committed by defendant with the required intent.

The sufficiency of the evidence turns upon the credibility of one witness—a Mrs. Dotson. A review of the evidence follows:

The child affected was M. K., a girl eight years old, who lived with her parents in Berkeley. The defendant was employed by a social service organization to solicit contributions for the agency. The child first met defendant on June 20, 1954, while playing in the driveway next to her home. She testified that defendant then appeared quite friendly, and that they had a discussion about the ball with which she was playing. On the next day, June 21, 1954, defendant again visited the area and had a small ball attached to a string which he told M. K. that he would give to her, but did not do so. On this occasion defendant solicited at the home of M. K. for funds for the agency for which he was collecting. On June 23, 1954, defendant again returned to the area to solicit funds. M. K. was then playing with another little girl and boy in a garden adjoining the home of a Mrs. Lott, who was a neighbor of the parents of M. K., and who cared for the child during the day when the mother of M. K. worked. The child testified that she accompanied defendant to the house next to Mrs. Lott's because she wanted the ball he had promised; that when they got to the top of the stairs defendant picked her up and they had a discussion about her weight; that when the occupant of the house came to the door defendant put her down and solicited a contribution; that she then accompanied defendant to the porch of Mrs. Lott's house where defendant again picked her up and they again discussed her weight; that when Mrs. Lott came to the door defendant put her down. Defendant then solicited a contribution from Mrs. Lott. The child testified that, although she had not asked defendant to pick her up, at no time did he hurt her.

So far, the testimony shows nothing but friendly non-criminal activity on the part of defendant. The prosecution sought to show criminality by the testimony of Mrs.

Dotson. Her house was so located that from her kitchen window she could clearly see the garden where M. K. was playing with other children, the stairway of the large house next to Mrs. Lott's, and Mrs. Lott's front porch. The distance from her kitchen window to the stairway of the large house was about 100 feet, and the distance to the front porch of the Lott house slightly less. Mrs. Dotson testified that from her kitchen window on June 23rd she observed M. K. playing in the garden; that she saw defendant approach the child and bring out a ball on a string; that she saw defendant and M. K., hand in hand, ascend the stairway of the house next to Mrs. Lott's; that she saw defendant pick M. K. up, place his hands under her buttocks and then move the front of her body up and down against the front of his body; that the two then descended the stairway and proceeded to the porch of Mrs. Lott's house; that again defendant picked M. K. up, put his hands on her buttocks, pulled her to him, and, with her legs around his hips, moved her up and down against his body; that defendant then put M. K. down and rang Mrs. Lott's doorbell; that both M. K. and defendant were fully clothed during these maneuvers, and that no attempt was made by defendant to remove any of his own clothing or that of the child. Mrs. Dotson testified that she then went over to Mrs. Lott's house to tell her what she had seen, passing defendant on the way, and reported to Mrs. Lott. Mrs. Lott testified that when she heard the first part of Mrs. Dotson's story she called to defendant who was in front of the house and asked him if he knew M. K. The defendant volunteered the statement: "I don't know what this lady told you but I was only playing with the child," and stated that he knew the child and named the street upon which M.K. lived. Mrs. Lott then ordered defendant not to play with the child and turned to hear the balance of Mrs. Dotson's story. After hearing it, she again went out to find defendant, but by this time he had disappeared.

This is substantially the evidence relied upon by the prosecution to support the conviction. Defendant did not take the stand. After the jury brought in its verdict, the trial court, acting under the provisions of Section 5501 of the Welfare and Institutions Code, suspended the imposition of sentence and ordered defendant to a state hospital for a 90-day observation and determination as to whether he was a sexual psychopath. The hospital certified that he was not, and the trial court so found, denied probation and imposed sentence. Defendant, in propria persona, appealed from the judgment and from the order denying his motion for a new trial. He then filed an opening brief in propria persona, but after the filing of respondent's brief requested the appointment of counsel. The request was granted and since that time appellant has been ably and diligently represented by a court-appointed lawyer who was granted permission to, and did, file a supplemental opening brief on behalf of his client.

[6,7] Insofar as the sufficiency of the evidence is concerned, it is obvious that the jury believed the testimony of Mrs. Dotson, and inferred from that testimony that the acts were motivated by an abnormal sexual desire. The jury was told that, in this type of accusation, since it is easily made and difficult to disprove, the testimony of Mrs. Dotson should be viewed with caution. Under these circumstances, it cannot be said that the jury was without power to believe the testimony of Mrs. Dotson. Certainly her testimony was not inherently improbable. It is equally clear that the inference involved is a reasonable one. This being so, under the rule announced in People v. Newland, 15 Cal.2d 678, 104 P.2d 778, this court is without power to disturb the verdict. See also People v. Pettis, 95 Cal.App.2d 790, 213 P.2d 731. This is particularly true in a case where the defendant at the trial failed to dispute the evidence in any way. Appellant does attach to his brief filed in propria persona a statement setting forth his side of the story. Obviously, if appellant wanted this evidence considered he should have presented it to the jury. He elected, as he had a right to do, not to do so. But he cannot on appeal now get his story before an appellate court. People v. Collins, 117 Cal.App.2d 175, 255 P.2d 59; People v. Ruiz, 103 Cal.App.2d 146, 229 P.2d 73. Equally without merit is appellant's attempt to attack the validity of the prior conviction on the ground that the arrest there involved was illegal. The facts relied upon are dehors the record and cannot be considered.

[8,9] The fact that the child did not testify that she was "annoyed" or "molested" is not fatal to the prosecution's case. As was pointed out in People v. McNair, 130 Cal.App.2d 696, 279 P.2d 800, the test is an objective and not a subjective one. The testimony of Mrs. Dotson was sufficient to show the overt act, and the sex intent is reasonably inferred from her testimony.

[10] It is true that the record discloses a few minor discrepancies in the testimony of the various witnesses. The charged discrepancies were all as to minor matters. Certainly these discrepancies were normal and do not raise the slightest suspicion that the testimony of any witness was fabricated or was inherently improbable. These discrepancies were matters for the jury to consider and are not relevant to this appeal. People v. Skaggs, 80 Cal.App.2d 83, 181 P.2d 390; People v. Alexander, 92 Cal.App.2d 230, 206 P.2d 657.

[11] Appellant charges the prosecuting attorney with prejudicial misconduct in several respects. It is charged that the prosecutor stated in his argument that defendant's failure to take the stand created a presumption of guilt. There is no such statement in the record. The prosecutor, of course, had a right to comment on the failure of defendant to take the stand. People v. Adamson, 27 Cal.2d 478, 165 P.2d 3. The record shows that the prosecutor commented on such failure, and properly stated that, since defendant had not contradicted the prosecution's witnesses, such testimony stood uncontradicted in the record, and that from this fact the jury could infer that such witnesses told the truth. This was proper. A careful reading of the balance of the prosecution's argument shows nothing even approaching improper argument, far less anything prejudicial.

[12] The appellant also complains of certain statements made by the prosecuting attorney at the time of the sexual psycho-path hearing. These statements were made after the conviction by the jury, and so, of course, could not have affected that verdict. Moreover, the trial judge found that defendant was not a sexual psychopath, so the challenged statements could not have affected the trial judge.

[13] Counsel for appellant makes the argument that prejudicial error was committed by the trial court in improperly referring to the prior conviction. Of course, it is error of a most serious type for the prosecution or the court to refer to a prior conviction, unless relevant for impeachment purposes in cases where defendant testifies. People v. Sansome, 84 Cal. 449, 24 P. 143; People v. Peete, 28 Cal.2d 306, 169 P.2d 924; People v. Stoddard, 85 Cal.App.2d 130, 192 P.2d 472. It is this rule upon which appellant relies.

[14] It will be remembered that the offense here involved is a felony only if the accused has suffered a prior conviction under the same section. Section 1025 of the Penal Code provides that where the defendant admits the charged prior "the charge of the previous conviction must not be read to the jury, nor alluded to on the trial." Section 1093(1) of the Penal Code requires, in felony cases, that the clerk must read the indictment or information to the jury "and in cases where it charges a previous conviction, and the defendant has confessed the same, the clerk in reading it shall omit therefrom all that relates to such previous conviction." It is appellant's contention that these sections were violated by the court clerk in reading the charge. The clerk properly omitted the portion of the charge referring to the previous conviction, but did read that appellant was accused "of a felony, to wit, a violation of Subdivision 1 of Section 647a of the Penal Code." The ingenious argument is made that because a violation of Section 647a(1) can only be a felony if there has been a prior conviction under the section, the mere reference to the offense being a "felony," necessarily told the jury that there had been a prior conviction. This, it is claimed, violated Sections 1025 and 1093(1) of the Penal Code, supra. The contention is without merit. The word "felony" did not refer to the prior, but to the charge for which defendant was then on trial. Calling the offense a "felony" no more informed the jury that there was a prior than did the fact that the case was being tried in the Superior Court, which only tries felony cases.

[15] A somewhat similar argument is based on the giving of the instruction that "The Defendant is on trial only for the offense charged in the information, and you may not convict Defendant solely or only because you may believe, if you do believe, that Defendant is guilty of some other crime or public offense not charged in the information here under consideration."

Since there was no evidence of any other crime, appellant claims that coupled with the word "felony" this must have focused the jury's attention on the prior. But the jury did not know of the prior. The instruction is one for the protection of defendant's rights. While it should not be given where there is no evidence of other crimes, the erroneous giving of it could not possibly have been prejudicial.

The order and judgment appealed from are affirmed.

BRAY and FRED B. WOOD, JJ., concur.

BENEFICIAL FIRE AND CASUALTY INSURANCE COMPANY, a California corporation, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

KURT HITKE & COMPANY, Inc., a California corporation, et al., Defendant and Appellant.*

Civ. 20998.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 2, California.

Nov. 21, 1955.

Hearing Granted Jan. 18, 1956.

Insurance company brought action against general agent for declaratory judgment to determine method of computing agent's compensation under written contract. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Clarence M. Hanson, J., entered judgment adverse to agent and an order denying agent's motion for a new trial, and the agent appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Ashburn, J. pro tem., held that where contract between insurance company and general agent provided that from gross earned premiums on all policies there should be deducted losses and allocated loss adjustment expense and a fixed charge by company of a sum equal to 20% of gross earned premiums, and that remainder, if any, constituted the agent's commission, with maximum limit of 30% of gross earned premiums, and that cancellation of contract should apply to all provisions except those pertaining to compensation, and that they should remain in full force and effect until all premiums have been earned and losses have been paid, or until an earlier mutually agreeable date has been set, agent's compensation was to be adjusted after termination of contract and on basis of actual experience.

Appeal from order dismissed, and judgment affirmed.

1. Appeal and Error ⇨842(1)

If contract between insurance company and its general agent was unambiguous, and extrinsic evidence was properly excluded, proper interpretation of the contract was a question of law for the reviewing court to decide ultimately.

* Opinion vacated 297 P.2d 428.

2. Declaratory Judgment ⇨258

Where no jurisdiction was reserved for taking or approval of accounting in action by insurance company against general agent for a declaratory judgment to determine method of computing general agent's compensation under written contract, the judgment was not interlocutory.

3. Insurance ⇨84(1)

Where contract between insurance company and general agent provided that from gross earned premiums on all policies there should be deducted losses and allocated loss adjustment expense and a fixed charge by company of a sum equal to 20 per cent of gross earned premiums, and that remainder, if any, constituted the agent's commission, with maximum limit of 30 per cent of gross earned premiums, and that cancellation of contract should apply to all provisions except those pertaining to compensation, and that they should remain in full force and effect until all premiums had been earned and losses had been paid, or until an earlier mutually agreeable date has been set, agent's compensation was to be adjusted after termination of contract and on basis of actual experience.

4. Evidence ⇨450(6)

In action by insurance company against general agent for declaratory judgment to determine method of computing agent's compensation under unambiguous written contract, parol evidence was properly excluded.

5. Evidence ⇨448, 593

Where contract is not ambiguous, parol evidence is inadmissible, and, if received, must be disregarded.

6. Contracts ⇨170(1)

Evidence concerning practical construction of a contract by the parties thereto is admissible only in case of ambiguity of contract.

7. Evidence ⇨450(6)

In action by insurance company against general agent for declaratory judgment to determine method of computing agent's compensation under written contract, evidence which went to meaning and legal effect of contract and not to some specific word or phrase therein was not admissible under statute providing that terms of writing are presumed to have been used in their primary and general acceptance, but evidence is admissible that they have a local, technical, or otherwise peculiar signification, and were so used and understood in the particular instance, in which case the agreement must be construed accordingly. West's Ann.Code Civ. Proc. § 1861.

8. Customs and Usages ⇨17

Evidence of custom is not receivable in teeth of a writing which shows that it is at variance with alleged custom.

9. Evidence ⇨458

Statute providing that a contract may be explained by reference to the circumstances under which it was made, and the matter to which it relates, does not authorize consideration of extrinsic evidence of a contract which is clear and certain on its face. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1647.

10. Evidence ⇨458

Statute providing that for proper construction of an instrument, circumstances under which it was made, including situation of subject of instrument, and of parties to it, may also be shown, so that judge be placed in position of those whose language he is to interpret, does not authorize consideration of extrinsic evidence of a contract which is clear and certain on its face. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 1860.

11. Appeal and Error ⇨110

Order denying motion for new trial was not appealable, and attempted appeal therefrom would be dismissed.

John S. Bolton and F. V. Lopardo, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Hill & Attias, Henry Attias and Philip Glusker, Beverly Hills, for respondent.

ASHBURN, Justice pro tem.

Action for declaratory judgment brought by Beneficial Fire and Casualty Insurance Company against its general agent, Kurt Hitke & Company, Inc., to determine the method of computing the agent's compensation under a written contract, and to have it declared that some $59,087.48 previously paid the agent was an advance only, subject to adjustment and perhaps repayment after all earned premiums and all losses have been ascertained on the basis of actual experience. The court adopted plaintiff's contentions.

Defendant on appeal complains principally about exclusion of parol evidence as to trade customs concerning general agent commissions, offered in an effort to establish that monthly payments made to the agent were final and not provisional. Its counsel also contend that the court's construction of the contract is erroneous, even upon the assumption that parol evidence was properly excluded.

The object of the contract is described in the findings: "Under the terms of the contract, the defendant was appointed plaintiff's 'general agent'. Defendant was authorized to underwrite and issue policies of automobile public liability insurance in the name of plaintiff covering certain substandard risks such as taxi cabs, trucks and busses, and also was to settle and adjust claims under policies written by it."

The contract was made on February 16, 1950, and the action filed on October 14, 1952, some two and one-half years later. The instrument provides for cancellation upon 30 days written notice by either party. No such notice was given but the court found that after the filing of the complaint, "there have been no new policies written under the contract, the term of all policies written under the contract has expired," and "All premiums covering the policies written by defendant under the contract have now been earned. That is, the period of coverage applicable to any premium paid in advance under any of said policies has passed. However, a number of open claims remain undisposed of, and thus not all losses to be paid under all of said policies have been paid." These findings are not challenged.

[1] Holding the contract to be unambiguous, the court excluded parol evidence and construed the contract by consideration of the language found within its four corners. In such circumstances, assuming that extrinsic evidence was properly excluded, the proper interpretation of the contract is a question of law for the appellate court to decide ultimately. In re Estate of Platt, 21 Cal.2d 343, 352, 131 P.2d 825; Fox v. Fox, 42 Cal.2d 49, 52, 265 P.2d 881; Meyer v. State Board of Equalization, 42 Cal.2d 376, 381, 267 P.2d 257. The interpretation thus placed upon the writing by the trial judge appears to this court to be correct, as a review of the provisions of the instrument will presently reveal.

Defendant, as such general agent, had the duty to investigate all losses and cooperate with the claim department of the company in the settlement thereof, or as stated in the findings: "[T]o settle and adjust claims under policies written by it." Paragraph (15) of the contract prescribes a formula for computing the agent's compensation upon a contingent basis. From gross earned premiums upon all policies there shall be deducted, (a) losses and "allocated loss adjustment expense," and (b) a fixed charge by the company of a sum equal to 20% of such gross earned premiums, and the remainder, if any, constitutes the agent's commission, with a maximum limit of 30% of the gross earned premiums. The text of paragraph (15), except the last subparagraph thereof, is set forth in the margin.¹ Manifestly, this provides a contingent fee which is to be accepted "as compensation in full for all services to be performed under this contract" by the general agent—contingent because the actual losses and "the allocated loss adjustment expense" may be so heavy as to absorb the entire premiums when added to the arbitrary deduction of 20% of gross earned premiums. Paragraph (15) is the basic compensation provision. Paragraph (14) provides for monthly payments to the agent which are necessarily interim and provisional in their nature.² This paragraph calls for monthly computation made by the company of all premiums earned during the preceding month, followed by a statement to the agent of the computed amount thereof, together with "a record of all losses and loss expense paid and of all reserves for losses incurred on a case basis." The phrase "reserves for losses" is plainly the equivalent of "allocated loss adjustment expense" which is defined in paragraph (15) to be: "Loss Adjustment expense is hereby defined to be the allocated direct and overhead cost of the General Agent of the adjustment of each claim arising under this Agreement," and which is described in paragraph (16) as "reserves for the outstanding losses and loss adjustment expense." Necessarily, this item must originate in defendant's records

1. "The General Agent agrees to accept as compensation in full for all services to be performed under this contract, and the Company agrees to pay the General Agent for the performance of such services, such compensation to be determined in the following manner: From the gross earned premium under all policies of insurance, renewals, endorsements or binders, there shall be deducted the following items: (a) Losses and allocated loss adjustment expense; (b) a fixed charge by the Company of a sum equal to 20% of such gross earned premium; (c) from the residue remaining shall be paid a sum as commission to the General Agent not to exceed 30% of the gross earned premium.

"Loss adjustment expense is hereby defined to be the allocated direct and overhead cost of the General Agent of the adjustment of each claim arising under this Agreement. The amount charged as loss adjustment expense shall be subject to review by the Company, and in the event of dispute shall be settled by arbitration as hereinafter set forth."

2. (14) "On or before the 30th day of each month, the Company will compute all premiums earned during the previous month and will furnish the General Agent with a statement thereof, together with a record of all losses and loss expense paid and of all reserves for losses incurred on a case basis. At such time the Company shall remit to the General Agent all commission earned during said previous month. In the event the computation of commission earned at the end of any regular monthly adjustment period results in a deficit against the General Agent, this deficit shall be fully covered by a subsequent commission earning before any earned commission shall be due the General Agent."

and be furnished by the agent to the company. Counsel so conceded at the trial. In the nature of things it can be but an estimate, hence the provision in paragraph (16) for review by the company and arbitration of the item in event of dispute. That paragraph prescribes the method of arbitration and the result is stated as follows: "And the decision of any two shall be used for the reserve in the computation of the compensation and underwriting profits provided for in Paragraph 14 until subsequent developments occur which may change the extent of liability." Manifestly, the reserve for loss expense is an estimated provisional item originating with the agent, and so the payment based thereon normally would be subject to later adjustment. Hence the concluding sentence in paragraph (14) which, in effect, says that so long as the contract continues a deficit occurring in one month shall be offset by earnings in a later month or months before payments are to be resumed. It is to be noted that all these monthly payments are based upon reserve for losses which may prove through experience to be too large or too small to fit individual cases. Standing alone, paragraph (14) provides and suggests no method of ultimate correction if the reserves prove to be too low. Even an arbitration under (16) is binding only "until subsequent developments occur which may change the extent of liability."

The last subparagraph of (15) provides for an annual computation of "underwriting profits" in this language: "As soon after December 31 of each calendar year as practicable, the underwriting profits arising out of the net retained business under this contract shall be computed and 50% thereof shall be payable to the General Agent. That retained business shall be defined as the net amount of risk assumed by the Company after deducting quota share reinsurance." It was stipulated that no such profits were ever made. But this portion of (15) does enter into the problem of construction now before the court. Counsel for defendant at the trial defined the phrase "underwriting profits" in this language: "You see, underwriting profits have a definite definition and it, of course, includes paid losses, reserve for losses, paid loss expense, and producers' commissions which are credited to the general agent because you always have to pay your agent * * *." Respondent's brief gives substantially the same meaning to the term.

In the case of Massachusetts Bonding & Ins. Co. v. Lundy, 8 Cir., 160 F.2d 680, 682, it is said: "The contract related solely to division of 'underwriting profits' of the company, which in common understanding and by dictionary definition could only mean the excess of the company's income over its expense and loss from the underwriting business." To same effect see 44 C.J.S., Insurance, § 49, p. 500; Bullion v. Aetna Ins. Co., 151 Ark. 519, 237 S.W. 716, 718. The "reserve for losses" mentioned in defendant's attorneys' definition of underwriting profits would necessarily be a part of the computation, for no method of periodic elimination of errors in reserves is prescribed and the underwriting profit arises only after monthly payment of agent's commissions, and so this additional item of compensation to the agent remains either faulty or subject to readjustment on the basis of experience.

Paragraph 19 takes care of the whole problem. It provides for cancellation by either party upon giving of 30 days prior written notice, and then says: "Cancellation in this instance shall apply to all provisions in the contract except those items which pertain to the compensation of the General Agent, which items shall remain in full force and effect until all premiums have been earned and losses have been paid, or until an earlier mutually agreeable date has been set. With respect to those items the Company agrees to pay the General Agent any and all amounts due the General Agent and the General Agent agrees to pay the Company any and all amounts due the Company." Plainer language could scarcely be found to express the thought that the agent's compensation should be ultimately adjusted after termination of the contract and on the basis of actual experience. The word "items" refers to all elements of the compensation computation and the agreement of the agent to pay the company, or the company to pay the agent, is made "with respect to those items." This language rules out appellant's contention that the agent's obligation to pay on final accounting refers to such things as premiums received by it and not previously turned over, a matter which is covered elsewhere in paragraphs 3, 4 and 6.

[2, 3] The judgment says: "The plaintiff is entitled to a judgment decreeing and declaring that upon cancellation of the contract, and after all premiums have been earned and all losses have been paid, an accounting shall be made in accordance with the provisions of paragraph 19 of the contract. Such accounting shall follow the compensation formula set out in paragraph 15. * * * If the defendant has been paid, under the provisions of paragraph 14 of the contract, an amount in excess of such amount as the above accounting shall show it is entitled to receive as compensation, the defendant shall promptly pay to the plaintiff the amount of such excess. If the defendant has not been paid, under the provisions of paragraph 14 of the contract, the amount to which it is entitled as compensation, to be shown by such final accounting, the plaintiff shall promptly pay to the defendant the amount of compensation to which the defendant is entitled less the amount the plaintiff shall have theretofore paid to the defendant under the provisions of paragraph 14 of the contract." No jurisdiction was reserved for the taking or approval of the accounting.³ This judgment reflects a correct interpretation of the contract, made without the aid of any oral evidence.

Appellant urges that these cases are to the contrary: Massachusetts Bonding & Ins. Co. v. Lundy, supra, 8 Cir., 160 F.2d 680; Aldrich v. New York Life Ins. Co., 235 N.Y. 214, 139 N.E. 245. Examination discloses that they are not opposed to the judgment rendered at bar. The Massachusetts Bonding Company case does say that the contract does not require the general agent "to pay a loss to the company if such should result from his employment," but the respondent does not claim, and the trial court did not hold, that defendant must bear or repay any of the losses incurred under the instant contract, only that his compensation becomes nil if the final accounting discloses that the overall operation resulted in no balance when losses and the 20% of gross earned premiums are deducted from the total of such premiums.

Respondent cites Milwaukee Mechanics' Ins. Co. v. Warren, 150 Cal. 346, 89 P. 93, and National Union Fire Ins. Co. v. Nason, 21 Cal.App. 297, 131 P. 755, as sustaining the trial court's ruling. In a measure they do so. The Milwaukee Mechanics' Insurance case dealt with a general agent's contract which prescribed as his compensation 35% of the gross premiums "after deducting all return premiums, rebates, and reinsurances." [150 Cal. 346, 89 P. 96.] The term of the agency was one year and it remained in effect some 14 months before the controversy as to the computation of the agent's compensation developed. The agent objected to being charged in an accounting between the parties with his share of premiums which had to be returned. This contention was rejected, the court saying, 150 Cal. at page 354, 89 P. at page 96: "Certainly it was never understood by the parties that, if Warren and Lanktree wrote a policy on the day before the expiration of their agency, they would be entitled to retain 35 per cent. of the entire amount of the premium, even though on the day after they ceased to be agents the policy was canceled by the insured and the company compelled to return the greater part of the premium. It was necessarily in the contemplation of the parties that return premiums might be payable after the termination of the agency, and the right of Warren and Lanktree to retain 35 per cent. of the premiums on any business written by them was always subject to the contingency that the policy might be canceled, and that they might, therefore, be liable to the company for 35 per cent. of the amount refunded by the company upon such cancellation. See American Steam

3. Hence the judgment is not to be deemed interlocutory. Lyon v. Goss, 19 Cal.2d 659, 670, 123 P.2d 11.

Boiler Ins. Co. v. Anderson, 57 N.Y.Super. Ct. 179, 6 N.Y.S. 507. If it be said that under this construction there could be no final settlement of account on the termination of the agency, it may be answered that the contract plainly shows that such immediate settlement was not within the purview of the parties at the time the contract was made."

[4-6] Appellant's contention that parol evidence was improperly excluded cannot prevail, for the contract is not ambiguous, and of course that is the primary criterion upon the question of the admissibility of such evidence, Hicks v. Whelan Drug Co., 131 Cal.App.2d 110, 114, 280 P.2d 104; if received with respect to an unambiguous writing the evidence must be disregarded. Hale v. Bohannon, 38 Cal.2d 458, 465, 241 P.2d 4; 18 Cal.Jur.2d, sec. 256, p. 740. Appellant's offer to show practical construction by the parties runs headlong into the parol evidence rule. Such an aid to the interpretation of a contract is admissible only in case of ambiguity. Bettis Rubber Co. v. Kleaver, 104 Cal.App.2d 821, 826, 233 P.2d 82; 12 Cal.Jur.2d, sec. 129, p. 342.

[7] In an effort to avoid the effect of the rules just mentioned appellant's counsel rely upon section 1861, Code of Civil Procedure,⁴ and cases holding it applicable even in the absence of ambiguity on the face of the writing. The cited cases are: Ermolieff v. R.K.O. Radio Pictures, 19 Cal.2d 543, 122 P.2d 3; Wachs v. Wachs, 11 Cal.2d 322, 79 P.2d 1085; Body-Steffner Co. v. Flotill Products, 63 Cal.App.2d 555, 147 P.2d 84; Higgins v. California Petroleum & Asphalt Co., 120 Cal. 629, 52 P. 1080; Ross v. Frank W. Dunne Co., 119 Cal.App.2d 690, 260 P.2d 104; Ferris v. Emmons, 214 Cal. 501, 6 P.2d 950; Associated Lathing & Plastering Co. v. Louis C. Dunn, Inc., Cal.App., 286 P.2d 825. They deal with the meaning of specific words or phrases and rest upon the concept thus expressed by Mr. Justice Holmes in his customary felicitous phrasing: "A word is not a crystal, transparent and unchanged, it is the skin of a living thought and may vary greatly in color and content according to the circumstances and the time in which it is used." Towne v. Eisner, 245 U.S. 418, 425, 38 S.Ct. 158, 159, 62 L.Ed. 372, L.R.A.1918D, 254. But the offer made at the trial was not so restricted. It went to the meaning and legal effect of the contract, not some specific word or phrase therein. We quote extracts from the offer: " * * * that never in the general agency contracts used in the insurance business for more than a hundred years has any general agent been required to return any of his earned commission under even the contingency theory * * *. It is a specialist field and it has been in existence for many hundreds of years and there are just certain things that don't occur, and one of them is that a general agent is never required to pay back out of earned commissions, as I mentioned before." On motion for new trial appellant's counsel said, with respect to a proffer of testimony of Mr. Ray Meyer, former vice president of plaintiff: "His testimony will be that his interpretation, his understanding of the way the contract was operated by Mr. Dillingham, Vice President for Hitke, and the Beneficial Vice President, was that it was an earned commission, not refundable at any time; that that monthly payment of earned commission was final." Even if there were an ambiguity in the instrument, such conclusions would not be competent evidence. In Achen v. Pepsi-Cola Bottling Co., 105 Cal.App.2d 113, 233 P.2d 74, an action for declaratory relief to have franchise contracts construed so as to prohibit cancellation, the court adopted defendant's construction of the contract which gave it the right to cancel. Plaintiff had sought to introduce evidence of what some officers of defendant had stated to the effect that the contract prohibited unilateral cancellation.

4. "The terms of a writing are presumed to have been used in their primary and general acceptation, but evidence is nevertheless admissible that they have a local, technical, or otherwise peculiar significance, and were so used and understood in the particular instance, in which case the agreement must be construed accordingly."

105 Cal.App.2d at page 123, 233 P.2d at page 80, the court said: "Appellants particularly point to the testimony of some of the distributors who testified that the officers of the company interpreted the language of the contracts to mean, as for instance, that the term of the contract was for an indefinite period and could not be cancelled. The short answer to the contention is that the exception to the hearsay rule which permits declarations or admissions by a party to be shown applies only to declarations or admissions of fact and not to the interpretation, legal or otherwise of the facts. Here the factual language set forth in the contracts was not only equally available, but known to the respective parties. What the language used in the contracts meant was a matter of interpretation for the courts and not controlled in any sense by what either of the parties intended or thought its meaning to be if it ran contrary to the court's interpretation of it. The views expressed by any party to the contracts were, at best, his opinion or conclusion and as such not admissible, under any exception to the hearsay rule or otherwise."

[8] It is likewise true that evidence of custom is not receivable in the teeth of a writing which shows that it is at variance with the alleged custom. See India Paint & Lacquer Co. v. United Steel Prod. Corp., 123 Cal.App.2d 597, 613, 267 P.2d 408; Miller v. Germain Seed, etc., Co., 193 Cal. 62, 66, 222 P. 817, 32 A.L.R. 1215.

[9,10] Appellant's reliance upon section 1647, Civil Code⁵ and section 1860, Code of Civil Procedure,⁶ is misplaced. Neither of these sections authorizes the consideration of extrinsic evidence of a contract which is clear and certain on its face. Courtright v. Dimmick, 22 Cal.App. 2d 68, 70-71, 70 P.2d 269; United Iron Works v. Outer Harbor, etc., Co., 168 Cal. 81, 84, 141 P. 917; Leonard v. Huston, 122

Cal.App.2d 541, 548, 265 P.2d 566; Parker v. Meneley, 106 Cal.App.2d 391, 401, 235 P.2d 101. There was no error in the exclusion of the proffered parol evidence.

[11] Defendant appeals from the judgment and attempts to appeal from the order denying its motion for new trial. That order is not appealable and the attempted appeal is dismissed.

The judgment is affirmed.

McCOMB, Acting P. J., and FOX, J., concur.

Hearing granted; McCOMB, J., not participating.

137 Cal.App.2d 251

William H. MILLER, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Fred JENSEN, Individually and doing business under the fictitious name and style of Jensen & Pitts, and Gerald Detels, Defendants and Appellants.

Civ. 16494.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 1, California.

Nov. 28, 1955.

Hearing Denied Jan. 25, 1956.

Motorist brought action against owner and driver of dump truck for injuries sustained in collision at intersection. The Superior Court, Marin County, Jordan L. Martinelli, J., entered judgment for motorist, and owner and driver of truck appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Bray, J., held that where there was no evidence that any portion of roadway on which motorist and truck driver intended to travel or did travel was closed to traffic, Superior Court was not required to instruct that compliance with requirement circumstances under which it was made, including the situation of the subject of the instrument, and of the parties to it, may also be shown, so that the Judge be placed in the position of those whose language he is to interpret."

5. Civil Code, sec. 1647. "A contract may be explained by reference to the circumstances under which it was made, and the matter to which it relates."

6. Code Civ.Proc., sec. 1860. "For the proper construction of an instrument, the of Vehicle Code that a vehicle be driven on the right half of the roadway, is excused when right half of roadway is closed to traffic while under construction or repair.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Appeal and Error ⇨928(4)

The District Court of Appeal, in determining whether trial court erred in failing to give instructions favorable to defendants, was required to take defendants' evidence and reasonable inferences therefrom in their most favorable light to defendants.

2. Automobiles ⇨147

An act or failure to act below statutory standard of the Vehicle Code is negligence per se and is negligence as a matter of law.

3. Automobiles ⇨159

Circumstances of emergency or unusual conditions may be shown to excuse violation of the Vehicle Code.

4. Automobiles ⇨147

Unless and until justification or excuse for violation of the Vehicle Code appears, such violation must be treated as negligence per se.

5. Automobiles ⇨147

The fact which will excuse violation of the Vehicle Code is one resulting from causes or things beyond control of person charged with the violation.

6. Automobiles ⇨159

In applying rule that violation of Vehicle Code is negligence per se, but that circumstances of emergency or other conditions may be shown to excuse the violation, each violation must be considered in connection with surrounding circumstances.

7. Automobiles ⇨245(68)

Ordinarily, question whether there is an excuse for violation of the Vehicle Code, presents a question of fact for jury, but if court is impelled to say that, from the facts, reasonable men can draw but one inference and that pointing unerringly to negligence of plaintiff contributing to his injury, it is then a matter solely for court.

8. Trial ⇨252(8)

In action by driver of automobile against owner and driver of dump truck for injuries sustained in intersectional collision, trial court, which read to jury portion of statute requiring a vehicle to be driven on the right half of a roadway, was not required to read exceptions providing that statute was not applicable when right half of a roadway is closed to traffic while under construction or repair, where there was no evidence that any portion of the highway on which motorist or truck driver intended to travel or did travel was closed to traffic. Vehicle Code, § 525(a) (3).

9. Trial ⇨252(8)

In action by driver of automobile against owner and driver of dump truck for injuries sustained in intersectional collision, wherein there was no evidence of any excuse that would have justified truck driver in failing to drive on right half of roadway, court, which instructed jury with reference to statute requiring a vehicle to be driven on right half of roadway, did not err in failing to instruct that violation of statute was not necessarily negligence if excused by the circumstances. Vehicle Code, §§ 525, 525.1, 540, 544.

Keith, Creede & Sedgwick, Scott Conley, San Francisco, for appellants.

Lewis, Field & DeGoff, San Francisco, for respondent.

BRAY, Justice.

In a personal injury action, the jury returned a verdict for plaintiff of $18,000. From the judgment entered thereon defendants appeal.

Question Presented.

The sole question presented is whether the trial court should have instructed that violation of Vehicle Code sections 540 and 544 (which it read to the jury) was not necessarily negligence if (a) excused by the circumstances, or (b) if excused by the situation set forth in section 525(3).

Evidence.

Defendant Detels was driving a heavy dump truck loaded with 6 tons of asphalt belonging to defendant Jensen easterly along Belvedere Drive in Marin County towards its intersection with Reed Boulevard. That intersection is unusual in shape. By reason of the curving corners the intersection is larger than the ordinary one where two streets cross. Defendant Jensen was doing some road surfacing on the west half of Reed south of the intersection. In order to make the asphalt topping to be applied later, stick, it was necessary to sweep the street clean of gravel so that the "black coat" could be applied. From 1 to 3 days prior to the accident the west half of Reed through to the northwest corner of the intersection had been swept. Thus the westerly half of the intersection had been swept. The evidence fails to disclose whether it was to be oiled. Presumably it was at least as far as the middle of the intersection. It is not clear whether the westerly half of Reed had been oiled (received its adhesive "black coat.") Presumably it had because the paving (with asphalt) had started 400 to 500 feet south of the intersection and was progressing towards it. At no time had the paving on Reed approached within 60 feet of the intersection. There was roadmaking equipment around the intersection. Jensen's foreman first testified that there was a roller on the southwest corner. Later he testified to a roller being with other equipment in the northwest corner of the intersection off the highway, the roller being on Belvedere. There was a sign on Belvedere, "Danger, men and equipment working," 300 or 400 feet from Reed, and apparently one at the southwest corner of the intersection. There were present an 800 gallon oil tank and one or two barricades (just where they were located does not appear). About 60 feet down on Reed was an asphalt spreader. This was a sort of box into which the asphalt was poured and which did the actual spreading of it. Detels testified that he intended to drive along Belvedere to the gravelled area at the southeastern corner of the Reed intersection, wait there until the spreader was ready, after which he would have driven the truck south into and down the east side of Reed and then swung westerly in an arc so as to bring him north of the spreader box which was on the west side of Reed, and then he would back his truck into the box and dump the load. (Thus, he had no intention of making a right hand turn into Reed, but intended to cross over to the opposite side of Reed before turning right out of Belvedere into the easterly side of Reed.) Traveling along Belvedere at 15 to 20 miles per hour, his right wheels when he was about 20 feet from the intersection were about 4 feet from the right edge of Belvedere. Although looking as he did in the right hand mirror he could see back about 100 feet, and in the left hand mirror he could see a considerable distance back. He could not see a vehicle directly back of the truck and within 75 feet of it, because of the great width of the truck. Just as he entered the intersection he gave a signal for a right turn. Detels looked in the mirrors on three different occasions as he crossed the intersection and did not see anything. He veered about 2 feet to the left and going about 5 to 7 miles per hour he started to make a right turn. Then through his window he saw plaintiff, applied his brakes, stopped immediately and was standing still. Plaintiff's car then traveled about 6 feet. The truck's front right bumper and the front of the left rear fender of plaintiff's car collided. At that time the truck's right front wheels were in the gravel area.

Plaintiff's version of the accident was that proceeding about 20 to 25 miles per hour he was following the truck at first about 200 to 250 feet behind it. The truck was moving at a slower speed. When the truck was approximately 200 feet from the intersection it moved out toward the center of the road. Plaintiff was then about 150 feet behind the truck. Belvedere there turns slightly to the right. The truck continued in a straight line, thereby bringing it nearer the center of the road. The truck seemed to be about to make a left turn. The right side of Belvedere was clear to plaintiff's right (down Reed) and he saw no traffic there. He then looked forward and saw that the truck had apparently changed direction and was coming to the right. Plaintiff slammed on his brakes and turned the steering wheel to the right. His car skidded forward on the loose gravel about 10 feet. Plaintiff then took his foot off the brake, stepped on the gas, turned the wheel to the left in an endeavor to avoid the accident by getting across the intersection ahead of the truck. He was probably going about 20 to 25 miles per hour when the vehicles collided. When he struck the gravel the car moved sideways out of control. Plaintiff saw no signal given by the truck.

Both plaintiff and Detels drew on the map the line each claimed the truck traveled through the intersection up to the point of impact. Detels' line indicates a very narrow arc to the left, while plaintiff's line indicates a much wider one. The investigating police officer placed the point of impact as indicated by the debris at a point which corroborates plaintiff's line and indicates that the truck when struck was not yet entering the easterly side of Reed, as claimed by Detels.

One Redmon, an employee of defendant Jensen, who was at the spreader box, saw the truck coming on Belvedere. He traced the truck's course generally about the same as did Detels, except that near the center of the intersection he drew a slightly wider arc to the left than did Detels. It appeared to him the truck was stopped when hit. When the witness first saw plaintiff's car it was coming about 40 to 45 miles per hour on Belvedere. It reduced its speed about the center of the intersection and was going about 10 to 15 miles per hour at the time of collision. It did not skid. It stopped quickly. (The police officer testified to skid marks of 20 feet.)

[1] Summing up the testimony, and taking defendants' evidence at its most favorable, including the reasonable inferences therefrom,¹ it is clear that Detels did not keep to the right side of Belvedere, but swung to the left and was making a right turn into the far side of Reed when the accident occurred. While there is some confusion as to whether there was a roller at the southwest corner of the intersection, such roller, if it were there, in no wise caused Detels to fail to turn into the west or near side of Reed. The only reason given by Detels for his disregard of the requirements of the Vehicle Code was, in effect, that it was more convenient for him later to reach the spreader. He at no time testified that he followed the route he did because the repairs, the equipment or any physical condition of the streets made it necessary for him to do so.

Instructions.

The court read to the jury section 540, a right turn at an intersection must be made as close as practicable from the right side or edge of the highway and a left turn from the right portion of the highway nearest the center; section 525, vehicles must be driven upon the right half of the highway; section 525.1, any vehicle proceeding at less than normal traffic speed shall be driven as close as practicable to the right hand edge; section 544, no turn shall be made from a direct course until the move can be made with reasonable safety and after appropriate signal given continuously for the last 50 feet.

The court then instructed that a violation of each or any of these sections would constitute negligence as a matter of law. Defendants contend the court erred (a) in not reading the second portion of section 525, Vehicle Code, and (b) in not stating that such violation would not constitute negligence per se if the violation was excusable or justifiable. They contend the instructions should have been so qualified.

[2-7] The law relating to the effect of violations of the Vehicle Code is well de-

1. This we are required to do in determining whether the court erred in failing to give instructions favorable to defendants. The rule, of course, is just the contrary in determining whether the evidence supports the verdict. Here there is no contention that it does not.

fined in Satterlee v. Orange Glenn School Dist., 29 Cal.2d 581, 177 P.2d 279—an act or failure to act below the statutory standard is negligence per se and is negligence as a matter of law. Circumstances of emergency or unusual conditions may be shown to excuse the violation. Unless and until justification or excuse for violation appears, the general rule applies and it must be treated as negligence per se. 29 Cal.2d at page 588, 177 P.2d 279. “* * * the fact which will excuse the violation of a statute has been defined by the court as one resulting ‘from causes or things beyond the control of the person charged with the violation.’” 29 Cal.2d at page 589, 177 P.2d at page 283. In the application of the rule each violation must be considered in connection with the surrounding circumstances. Ordinarily the excuse presents a question of fact for the jury, but if the court is impelled to say that from the facts reasonable men can draw but one inference and that pointing unerringly to the negligence of the plaintiff contributing to his injury, it is then a matter solely for the court. 29 Cal.2d at page 590, 177 P.2d 279.

(a) Section 525, Vehicle Code.

[8] This section requires a vehicle to be driven on the right half of a roadway. The portion omitted is “except as follows: * * * (3) When the right half of a roadway is closed to traffic while under construction or repair.” There was not the slightest evidence that any portion of either Belvedere or Reed which Detels intended to travel, or did travel, was closed to traffic. So there was no basis whatever for mentioning this exception.

De Yo v. Umina, 121 Cal.App.2d 505, 263 P.2d 623, is not in point. At that time section 525, Vehicle Code, read that vehicles must be driven upon the right half of the highway except when overtaking and passing another proceeding in the same direction. The trial court failed to read the exception. There was evidence through a presumption in the plaintiff's favor that at the time of the accident the plaintiff was overtaking and passing another vehicle, hence under the circumstances of the case the court in merely reading a portion of the section erroneously instructed the jury. Here there is no evidence to require the reading of the omitted portion.

(b) Were the violations excusable?

[9] We fail to find any evidence or reasonable inferences therefrom which would justify Detels driving down Belvedere away from the normal position on the right side, in arcing to the left, and in attempting a turn into the far side of Reed. He, himself, makes no excuse for it other than convenience in later approaching the spreader. Certainly, convenience does not meet the requirement above stated that the violation of a statute must arise from causes or things beyond Detels' control. See Kuehn v. Lowthian, 124 Cal.App. 2d 867, 269 P.2d 666, discussing and supporting the cases holding that the excuse must be based upon causes beyond the appellant's control. Defendants contend that the street work being done on Reed approaching the corner (still more than 60 feet therefrom) and equipment scattered around, justified Detels in his action. In the first place, Detels at no time according to his own testimony was actuated by any feeling of necessity to do what he did; he did it for convenience alone. Secondly, there is no evidence upon which such a necessity could have been based, no showing that anything at all prevented Detels from continuing on the right hand side of Belvedere and then making a right turn into the west side of Reed and proceeding southerly to the feeder box, all as the law required him to do. While it is true that Reed was under repair, such fact in itself would not justify violations of the statute. If reasonably necessary in order not to delay or impair the work going on, the jury could determine that such violations were justified. Here, practically the only claim of justification is based upon the fact that had the truck obeyed the law and gone down Reed on the right hand side it later would have had to maneuver across Reed in order to back up to the feeder box. Obviously this would be a matter of convenience only. As said in Cavagnaro v. City of Napa, 86 Cal.App.2d 517, 528, 195 P.2d 25, 32: “* * * in the Satterlee case it is stated with cited authority (29 Cal.2d at page 588, 177 P.2d at page 283) that unless and until justification or excuse for violation of a statute appears, the general rule applies and it must be treated as negligence per se."

Defendants offered no qualifying instructions, contending that it was the duty of the court to give them of its own motion, citing Ornales v. Wigger, 35 Cal.2d 474, 478, 218 P.2d 531; Satterlee v. Orange Glenn School Dist., supra, 29 Cal.2d 581, 177 P.2d 279, and Gallup v. Sparks-Mundo Engineering Co., 43 Cal.2d 1, 271 P.2d 34. These cases, however, do not so hold. The Ornales case stated that the general rule is that before an appellant may complain of the lack of an instruction he must request that the charge be made more specific or ask for qualifying instructions, but that this rule is qualified by the rule that the appellant may complain, in the absence of such request, where the instruction erroneously states the applicable law and prejudice is suffered thereby. It then specifically held that the appellant could not complain of the failure of the trial court to give an instruction qualifying its instructions on the effect of the violation of a statute, for the reason that the appellant had offered no such qualifying instruction. In the Satterlee case it was held that the trial court was justified in refusing to give an instruction offered by the appellants to the effect that violation of section 550, Vehicle Code, would be negligence per se because it did not cover the issue as to whether the circumstances were such as to excuse violation, as the facts in the case would have warranted a finding that the violation was excused. In the Gallup case, it was held, likewise, that the trial court was justified in refusing an instruction offered by the appellants that violation of a certain statute was negligence per se and in giving instead an instruction to that effect but qualifying it if the violation could reasonably be excused. None of these cases considered whether it was the duty of the court to give a qualifying instruction of its own motion. In Cavagnaro v. City of Napa, supra, 86 Cal.App.2d 517, 528, 195 P.2d 25, one of the grounds given by the reviewing court, after considering the Satterlee case, supra, upon which defendants rely, in upholding the failure of the trial court to qualify an instruction upon the effect of the violation of a statute was that the appellant had made no request for such instruction. In Mehling v. Zigman, 116 Cal. App.2d 729, 735, 254 P.2d 141, after considering the Ornales case, supra, upon which defendants also rely, the reviewing court refused to hold erroneous an instruction given by the trial court that violation of section 502, Vehicle Code, was negligence per se, without qualification, pointing out that no qualifying instruction was offered by the appellants.

Fuentes v. Panella, 120 Cal.App.2d 175, at page 183, 260 P.2d 853 at page 858, holds: "But these cases do not stand for the proposition that excuse instructions can be given only where there is an admitted violation and the violator offers evidence of justification for such violation. The jury may believe that a violation of the law has taken place, and thus disbelieve the testimony to the contrary, but at the same time believe that such violation, under all the circumstances, was justifiable because of the circumstances." However, that rule is of no comfort to defendants here because the circumstances of our case bring it within the other rule set forth, 120 Cal.App.2d at page 183, 260 P.2d at page 858: "Of course, where there is no evidence at all of justification, or the surrounding circumstances do not show it, it is error to instruct on excuse."

The instructions given by the court here were not erroneous. They were correct as far as they went. If defendants desired to have them qualified they should have so informed the trial court. See Kuehn v. Lowthian, supra, 124 Cal.App.2d 867, 873, 269 P.2d 666, holding that since the appellants had not offered a proper instruction on the subject they could not complain that the excuse instruction there given did not contain the qualifications the appellants claimed it should have.

The judgment is affirmed.

PETERS, P. J., and FRED B. WOOD, J., concur.

137 Cal.App.2d 41

Marty MARTYN and Ted Kneeland,
Plaintiffs and Appellants,

v.

Jacques LESLIE, Phillip Wain, Joseph Shane, Richard Hungate, Defendants and Respondents.

Marty MARTYN and Ted Kneeland,
Plaintiffs and Appellants,

v.

Jacques LESLIE and Richard Hungate,
Defendants and Respondents.

Civ. 20786, 20787.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
 Division 3, California.

Nov. 17, 1955.

Hearing Denied Jan. 5, 1956.

Consolidated actions were brought for damages for alleged usury in transactions, through which loans of money were made, and for money had and received, and one of the defendants filed a cross-complaint. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Arthur Crum, J., entered judgments adverse to the plaintiffs, and they appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Nourse, J. pro tem., held that evidence sustained finding that there was no usury.

Judgments in each action against the plaintiffs and in favor of the defendants affirmed, and judgment in favor of one of the defendants on his cross-complaint reversed.

1. Usury ☞117

In consolidated actions for damages for alleged usury in transactions through which loans were obtained, and for money had and received, evidence sustained finding that there was no usury. West's Ann. Civ.Code, § 1916-1 et seq.; West's Ann. Const. art. 20, § 22.

2. Appeal and Error ☞996

Inference to be drawn from the evidence is the province of the trial court and not the District Court of Appeal on appeal.

3. Usury ☞52

Fact that defendants, through contracts with third persons, insured themselves against loss and insured themselves a profit over and above rate of interest, which they would have been entitled to receive had transaction in fact been that of a loan, does not establish usury. West's Ann.Civ. Code, § 1916-1 et seq.; West's Ann.Const. art. 20, § 22.

4. Usury ☞52

If, as a part of a transaction through which a loan of money is made, lender in addition requires borrower to sell lender property of a value much in excess of price paid, excess value of property will be considered as an exaction for the use of the money and will render the entire transaction usurious. West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 1916-1 et seq., 1916-2; West's Ann.Const. art. 20, § 22.

5. Usury ☞117

In consolidated actions for damages for alleged usury in transactions, through which loans were made, and for money had and received, evidence sustained finding that price paid by defendants for interests in the transactions was adequate and that the sale of such interests was not a subterfuge under the Usury Act. West's Ann. Civ.Code, §§ 1916-1 et seq., 1916-2; West's Ann.Const. art. 20, § 22.

6. Usury ☞103

A borrower is not estopped from asserting usury merely because he has knowingly met the usurious exactions of the lender. West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 1916-1 et seq., 1916-2; West's Ann.Const. art. 20, § 22.

7. Discovery ☞79

Where defendants took depositions of plaintiffs, and plaintiffs offered and read into evidence the depositions taken by defendants, court properly sustained defendants' objections to plaintiffs' answers which were not responsive. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 2056.

8. Discovery ☞79

Where defendants took depositions of plaintiffs, and plaintiffs offered and read into evidence the depositions taken by the defendants, court properly sustained defendants' objections to plaintiffs' answers which constituted hearsay or conclusions of the witnesses, since defendants by taking deposition of plaintiffs did not waive incompetency of the plaintiffs' testimony West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 2032.

9. Usury ⚖115

The parol evidence rule is not applicable in cases involving the claim of usury, and parol evidence is, in such cases, admissible to show the actual nature of the transaction, and in no way depends on the existence of an ambiguity in a written contract. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1916-1 et seq.; West's Ann.Const. art. 20, § 22.

10. Appeal and Error ⚖1047(3)

Where substance of matter stricken was later received in evidence through answers to other questions, those who had introduced the stricken matter were not prejudiced by the striking of such matter.

11. Usury ⚖114

In consolidated actions for damages for alleged usury in transactions, through which loans were made, and for money had and received, wherein plaintiffs contended that the sale of them of the 15% interest in the transactions for $500 was but a subterfuge under the Usury Act, court properly sustained objections to questions asked of plaintiffs whether they would have sold the 15% interest for $500 if the sale had been unconnected with loan, since state of mind of plaintiffs was not in issue or relevant. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1916-1 et seq.; West's Ann.Const. art. 20, § 22.

12. Partnership ⚖5

Though, in written partnership agreements, there was no mention of the sharing of losses by the parties, sharing of losses was implied.

13. Partnership ⚖22

Where contract created a partnership, declaration in contract that it would not be deemed to create a partnership would not change the legal status.

14. Joint Adventures ⚖5(1)

Partnership ⚖108

A partner or joint adventurer is not entitled to sue the other members of the partnership or venture at law until an accounting has been had, and it has in fact been determined that they are indebted to him.

15. Partnership ⚖108

Where there had been no accounting and it had not been determined whether partnership venture resulted in a loss, judgment in favor of one of the partners on his cross-complaint for an accounting and for money due and owing was erroneous.

Minter & Feder, Hollywood, Stanley M. Arndt, Los Angeles, for appellants.

Belcher, Kearney & Fargo, Los Angeles, for respondents.

NOURSE, Justice pro tem.

The above entitled actions were consolidated for trial. The action in which Leslie and Hungate are the only defendants will be hereinafter designated the second action. The lower court did not follow the rule laid down in Wolfson v. Beatty, 118 Cal.App.2d 392, at page 398, 257 P.2d 1017, but made findings of fact and conclusions of law and judgments in each action. The record here, therefore, consists of one reporter's transcript and two clerk's transcripts.

The plaintiffs appeal from the judgment in favor of the defendants in each action. What we will hereafter say will apply to both appeals unless the context indicates to the contrary.

The issues will be clarified by an analysis of the pleadings. In the following analysis the amounts set forth in brackets are taken from the allegations in the second action. In substance, the plaintiffs allege that plaintiffs were partners doing business under the fictitious name and style of "Marted"; that defendants Leslie and Hungate were at all times mentioned in the complaint joint adventurers and partners in the transactions therein set forth and that the defendant Leslie acted for himself and as the duly authorized agent of the defendant Hungate; that the defendants loaned to the plaintiffs the sum of $36,000 [$28,000] and that contemporaneously with the making of the loan, the plaintiffs executed the written instruments labeled "Assignment", a copy of which is annexed as Exhibit A to the complaint. That pursuant to the terms of Exhibit A, the plaintiffs executed to defendants their promissory note in the sum of $35,500 [$27,500] payable on or before six months after its date and bearing interest at 5 per cent per annum [6 per cent] and secured by chattel mortgage. A copy of the note is set forth and incorporated as Exhibit B. That by the terms of Exhibit A plaintiffs agreed to sell and assign to defendants 15 per cent of their right, title and interest in a series of television programs which were described in Exhibit A and known as "Double Play", in consideration of the payment by defendants to plaintiffs of the sum of $500. That said Exhibit A further provided that plaintiffs were granted an option to reacquire said 15 per cent interest for the sum of $8,000 [$6,750], said option to be exercised in writing within thirty days after the expiration of six months from the time of sale. That as partial security, the defendants required that defendant United Television Programs, Inc., and its president, one King, execute a written guaranty for the payment of said promissory note, a copy of that guaranty being annexed to the complaint and incorporated as Exhibit C. That as part of the transaction and prior to making the loan, the defendants further required United and King to execute "a guaranty agreement" guaranteeing that if the plaintiffs failed to exercise their option to repurchase said 15 per cent interest from the defendants, then United and King would, upon demand, purchase said interest for the sum of $8,000 [$6,750]. The copy of said alleged guaranty is made a part of the complaint as Exhibit D. That in truth and in fact the sale of said 15 per cent interest by the plaintiffs to the defendants, the option granted to plaintiffs to repurchase said 15 per cent, and the guaranty of United and King to purchase said interest in the event plaintiffs failed to do so, was a sham, subterfuge, trick and device on the part of defendants to exact a bonus of $7,500 [$6,250] in addition to the interest reserved by the promissory note and for the loan of the $36,000 [$28,000] and to evade the Usury Act of the State of California and Article XX, § 22 of the Constitution of this State. That plaintiffs paid to the defendants the principal of said promissory note together with the interest reserved therein and within the option period paid to the defendants the sum of $8,000 [$6,750] and that of said sum of $8,000 [$6,750] the sum of $7,500 [$6,250] was in truth and in fact a bonus paid to the defendants for the loan of $36,000 [$28,000] and over and above the interest reserved by the promissory note. That the return of interest charged by the defendants for said loan is not clearly or otherwise expressed in writing, nor was any return of interest clearly expressed in writing, other than the 5 per cent set forth in the promissory note. That the defendants and each of them have exacted, demanded and received in the aggregate $8,036.21 [$6,931.61] for the use of the amount of $36,000 [$28,000] actually loaned to the plaintiffs. That treble the amount so received, to wit, $24,108.63 [$20,794.83] is payable to plaintiffs from the defendants.

By a second cause of action which is in the form of a common count for money had and received, plaintiffs allege that the defendants are indebted to them in the amount of the interest and alleged bonus paid and that no part of said sum has been paid.

The defendants by their answer admit the execution of all the instruments referred to in the complaint. They deny that Leslie and Hungate were partners or joint venturers in the transactions described in the complaint or that Leslie acted as agent for Hungate in those transactions. They allege that Leslie at all times mentioned in the complaint was a joint venturer with the plaintiffs and that acting as such and as the agent for the plaintiffs, participated in the transactions involved. They deny that they had loaned to the plaintiffs the sum of $36,000 [$28,000] or any amount in excess of the sum of $35,500 [$27,500], and allege that concurrently with the making of said loan they had purchased from the plaintiffs for the sum of $500, a 15 per cent interest in the proposed television series described in the complaint and had granted the plaintiffs an option to repurchase said interest for the sum of $8,000 [$6,750]. They deny that they had required the execution of the guaranty agreements annexed to the complaint, but allege that said guaranty agreements were executed by United and King as an inducement to the defendants to make said loan and to purchase said 15 per cent interest. They deny that the option and guaranty agreements were a sham, subterfuge, trick or device to exact a bonus in any sum whatsoever. They admit the payment to them of the principal and interest provided for in the promissory note and admit the receipt from the plaintiffs of the further sum of $8,000 [$6,750], but allege that prior to the payment to them of said sum plaintiffs had voluntarily exercised their option to repurchase said 15 per cent interest and that upon the payment to them of said sum they retransferred and reassigned to plaintiffs said interest. They deny that said sum of $8,000 [$6,750] or any part thereof was paid or received as a bonus for any loan. They acknowledge receipt of the interest reserved under the terms of the promissory note, but deny that they exacted, demanded or received any bonus or additional interest and deny that there is any sum due to the plaintiffs. They deny the material allegations of the second alleged cause of action. In an affirmative defense defendants plead facts which they assert estopped plaintiffs from asserting that the monies paid to them were paid as a bonus or interest or were usurious. It is not necessary here to go into the details of these affirmative allegations. In the second action, defendant Leslie cross-complained against the plaintiffs.

From this analysis of the pleadings it appears that the issues of ultimate fact tendered by the pleadings were:

First, was the assignment to the defendants with the option to the plaintiffs to repurchase and the agreement of United and King to purchase the 15 per cent interest, a subterfuge and sham to cover the real transaction between the parties?

Second, was there in fact a loan to the plaintiffs of the sum of $36,000 [$28,000]?

Third, were the amounts paid by the plaintiffs in the exercise of the alleged option in fact the payment of a bonus for the loan rather than the payment of a purchase price?

Fourth, were the plaintiffs estopped?

Upon all of these issues of fact, the trial court made findings against the plaintiffs and in favor of the defendants. The appellants make four assignments of error on this appeal: (1) that the court erred in not holding that usury was involved; (2) that the court erred in its ruling as to the admission of evidence; (3) in giving judgment to the defendant Leslie on his cross-complaint; and (4) that certain findings are contrary to the evidence.

Appellants' first and fourth assignments of error in reality constitute a claim on their part that the findings are contrary to and not supported by the evidence. We have come to the conclusion that the findings, with certain exceptions hereafter noted, are supported by substantial evidence.

The following facts were established either without contradiction or by substantial evidence:

The defendant Leslie was at all times material to the controversy here the attorney for the plaintiffs and acted as such in the drafting of all of the pertinent instruments and in the negotiations between the plaintiffs and the other defendants involved in the first action and between the plaintiffs and himself and the defendant Hungate involved in the second action. He was also, at all times, the owner of an interest in the business conducted by the plaintiffs and to which business the transactions involved here relate. He also, at times acted for his co-defendants and received compensation from them. He held, as trustee for the benefit of himself and his co-defendants, practically all of the assets of the plaintiff partnership. To say the least he carried water on both shoulders.

The plaintiffs were partners doing business under the name of Marted. Upon the formation of the partnership they undertook the production of a television program entitled "Double Play" in which were to be starred a nationally known baseball personality and his wife, a well known actress. This program was to consist of a serial running through twenty-six (later changed to thirty-nine) episodes, one to be released each week.

The partners entered into a contract with one Mohr whereby he agreed to finance the productions and to distribute them. Three episodes were produced with money advanced by Mohr, but he failed to advance enough to pay the salaries ($1,250 per week) of the stars and certain other expenses incurred, and refused further advances.

The plaintiffs then produced three more episodes with monies procured from various sources, but the stars still remained unpaid and the partnership was now indebted to the stars in the sum of $7,500 for salaries and to a bank from which it had borrowed the sum of $2,500, upon the guaranty of the defendant Leslie. It was unable to proceed with the production of the remaining episodes and unless it could proceed, the six that it had produced were worthless.

At this time, and in February, 1952, the partnership entered into two further contracts, both drafted by Leslie. By the first of these, the partnership agreed that Leslie should receive 15 per cent of the net profits of the entire series as compensation for the legal services performed and to be performed by him for the partnership (Mar-ted). It further assigned to him an undivided 15 per cent of all assets and profits now owned or which might be hereafter acquired by it. The second contract was with United Television Programs, Inc., hereinafter called "United", of which corporation one Gerald King was president. This contract will be hereafter referred to as the "distribution agreement". By it United was given the exclusive right to distribute the entire series and agreed to advance $2,500 in cash to pay off the partnership indebtedness to the bank, and to deliver to the stars the promissory note of another corporation in satisfaction of the $7,500 due them as salary. By the contract United was entitled to certain percentages of all amounts received from sponsors of the series but agreed to forego its commission from the first $81,000 of gross returns and in lieu thereof to take double commission on the second $81,000 of gross returns. This was to enable the partnership to use the first gross returns to further finance the venture. Shortly thereafter, the partnership's agreement with Mohr was cancelled and he agreed to take a stated amount out of 50 per cent of the net profits in lieu of any rights he might have in the venture under the cancelled contract.

The partnership now sought further financing but was unable to procure it. While the partnership was endeavoring to further finance its venture, King discussed the matter with the defendant Wain (United's accountant) telling him that if he, Wain, would finance the remaining portion of the series United would defer its commission until Wain's investment was repaid and that King and United would guaranty him against loss. Wain told King he had a friend, the defendant Shane, who might be interested in coming in with him, but that both he and Shane were primarily interested in capital gains, not ordinary profits. Wain contacted Shane, and Shane King. King advised Shane that he could guaranty the results of the deal because of commitments and contracts he already had with sponsors. King advised plaintiffs of Shane's and Wain's interest, and at their request, defendant Leslie contacted them. They told Leslie that they were not interested in the deal unless something could be worked out that would result in their realizing a capital gain. They later told him they would not be interested unless Leslie himself went into the deal. Leslie advised plaintiffs of his conversation with Wain and Shane and later advised them that he had devised a scheme which he thought would satisfy Wain and Shane and which might result in their realizing capital gains. Plaintiffs directed Leslie to submit the scheme to Wain and Shane. This he did. The scheme was, in substance that defendants would loan the partnership $37,500 and would purchase from plaintiffs a 15 per cent interest in "Double Play", plaintiffs to reserve an option to repurchase this interest at a date six months after the consummation of the purchase from the partnership. Upon the scheme being presented to Shane, he advised Leslie that before he would go ahead he wanted to find out if King would stand by his statement that he and United would guaranty him (Shane) against loss. Shane contacted King and told him he would make the deal as outlined by Leslie if King and United would: (1) guaranty the loan; (2) allocate the first money received from distribution to repayment of the loan, and (3) agree to purchase for $8,000, the 15 per cent interest which defendants were to purchase from plaintiffs if they (plaintiffs) failed to exercise their option to repurchase. To this King agreed.

Leslie then drafted four instruments. The first of these instruments was designated "Assignment", and will be hereafter so designated.

By the terms of this agreement, the plaintiffs assigned to defendant Leslie all their interest in the television program series, including all negatives, etc., made or developed in connection therewith, their agreement with Mohr, their agreements with the stars, their agreement with United, to be held by him in trust for defendants Shane, Wain, Leslie and for Gerald King, until such time as the plaintiffs should have executed chattel mortgages, assignments of accounts receivable, notes, pledges and "any other documents that may be required in connection with the loan to us of $35,000". They further agreed to execute an agreement guaranteeing that twelve additional films in the series would be produced for the sum of $35,500; that if sums in excess of $35,500 were required to be advanced by the lenders, that they would convey absolutely to the lenders a 5 per cent interest in the enterprise for each $1,000 so advanced. They further agreed that all sums so advanced should be recouped and paid "from the proceeds accruing from the distribution and exploitation of the television series together with interest at 5 per cent per annum". They agreed to execute a document providing for the repayment of $35,500 together with interest at 5 per cent per annum "which sum shall be payable from the first proceeds derived from the distribution and exploitation of said television series". They agreed to sell to defendants Shane, Wain and Leslie a 15 per cent interest of their right, title and interest in the television program in consideration of payment to them of the sum of $500, and in further consideration, that they be granted an option to repurchase said 15 per cent interest for the sum of $8,000, said option to be exercised in writing at any time after September 1, 1952, and prior to October 31, 1952. By the terms of the instrument, Leslie was directed and authorized to hold any monies payable to the plaintiffs by United under the distribution agreement until such time "as we shall advise him whether or not it is our intention to exercise said option".

The second instrument has been referred to in the record as a promissory note, and will be hereafter referred to as such. By the terms of this instrument the plaintiffs promised to pay on or before six months to defendants Shane, Wain and Leslie the sum of $35,500 with interest at 5 per cent per annum, "pursuant to the terms of those certain agreements dated March 14, 1952, entered into in connection with a series of television photoplays produced under the title 'Hot Stove League' or 'Double Play' or both."

The third agreement is entitled "Guaranty Agreement", but hereinafter will be referred to as the "Note Guaranty". By the terms of this instrument United and King, as an inducement to the three defendants above named to lend to plaintiffs the sum of $35,500, guaranteed repayment to the lenders of said sum with interest. United agreed by the terms of the instrument to transfer and assign to the defendants all monies received by it under its Distribution Agreement until such time as the sum of $35,500, with interest, had been paid to the defendants. King and United agreed that if they were required to make good upon their guaranty, they should do so by paying the lenders not less than the sum of $2,000 per week. By the terms of the instrument, defendants Shane, Wain and Leslie agreed to loan plaintiffs the sum of $35,500. The instrument was signed by United, King and the three defendants named.

The fourth agreement was also entitled "Guaranty Agreement", but will be here referred to, in order to distinguish it from the Note Guarantee, as "United Purchase Agreement". By the terms of this agreement it was provided that as an inducement to defendants Shane, Wain and Leslie to purchase an undivided 15 per cent interest in the television program, United and King would, in the event plaintiffs failed to exercise their option to repurchase said 15 per cent interest on or before October 31, 1952, on demand of the defendants, purchase said interest and pay therefor the sum of $8,000.

The first of these four instruments is dated March 17, 1952. The others are all dated March 14, 1952, but it is apparent from the record that they were all executed on the 17th, and the court so found.

There also was drafted an instrument entitled "Mortgage of Chattel, Pledge and Assignment", by the terms of which plaintiffs mortgaged the six television photoplays theretofore produced, all other television photoplays thereafter produced in connection with the series and all literary, musical or dramatic or other material upon which the programs were based, all copyrights in the physical properties used in connection therewith to secure the payment of $35,500 with interest and any additional sums loaned by the mortgagee to the plaintiffs. Defendant Shane was the only person named as mortgagee.

Upon the execution of these instruments, the defendants paid to the plaintiffs the sum of $36,000. Of this sum one-third was advanced by Shane, one-third by Wain, one-sixth by Leslie and one-sixth by Hungate, Hungate having been declared in on the deal through a collateral agreement between himself and Leslie.

The $36,000 was all deposited in one bank account established in the name of Martyn, Leslie and King. Between March 17, and the first part of May, 1952, twelve pictures or episodes were produced and sales to exhibitors totaling more than $80,000 had been made by United which reported to defendant Leslie that the weekly income from these contracts was sufficient to cover the loans made by the defendants "plus the repayment fee".

This money was not immediately available and $27,000 additional capital was required to produce the additional pictures necessary to make the total number of twenty-six which United had guaranteed to the exhibitors with which it had signed contracts.

Wain and Shane were unwilling to do any further financing and plaintiffs were unable to interest others, but finally induced Leslie and Hungate to do the financing. Leslie then prepared documents which were duplicates of the documents prepared as to the first transaction, except that Hungate and Leslie only were involved as lenders and purchasers, and the principal sum in the promissory note was $27,500, and the rate of interest 6 per cent. There was, of course, a difference in the dates of payment and in the option dates.

This series of documents and the transactions under them are the basis of the second action. Upon the new contracts of guarantee and purchase by United and King being prepared, plaintiff Martyn took them to King and requested that he execute them. King at first refused, but after a conference with defendant Leslie, executed them. After the execution of these documents, Leslie and Hungate, over a period extending from May 16, to June 26, advanced the sum of $28,000, which was placed in an account in the name of "Leslie or Hungate and Kneeland or Martyn".

The principal and interest on the note of $35,500 were paid in installments covering the period from June 3, through August 6, 1952.

Shortly after the date upon which the plaintiffs could first exercise their option to repurchase the 15 per cent interest sold to the defendants in the first transaction, they did in writing exercise their option. They did this without any request or demand being made upon them by the defendants so to do. By their direction, defendant Leslie, on September 19, paid to himself and his three codefendants from the funds held by him as trustee, the total sum of $8,000 that being the option price.

Thereafter, the remaining films were produced. But prior to the date upon which the plaintiffs could exercise their option to repurchase the 15 per cent interest assigned to Leslie and Hungate in the second transaction, plaintiff Martyn had an opportunity to sell his interest in the venture to one Sax, but Sax would only buy if he could secure a 50 per cent interest in the venture. At this time Leslie held a 20 per cent interest (this being the amount assigned to him, separate and apart from the 15 per cent interest involved in the transactions we have mentioned). Martyn told Leslie and Hungate that he and Kneeland would not exercise their option to repurchase the 15 per cent assigned to said defendants unless Leslie would reduce his 20 per cent interest to 8 per cent. This Leslie finally agreed to and he and Hungate also agreed to permit the option to be exercised prior to the expiration of the six month period. They were paid not only the principal and interest on the note of $27,500, but the option price of $6,750. Shortly thereafter, these actions were commenced and at the time of the payments last mentioned the plaintiffs had in contemplation the commencement of these actions.

[1] While undoubtedly from the facts we have stated, and other evidence received, the trial court might well have drawn inferences that would have upheld findings that these transactions were usurious and that the sale and option to repurchase, together with the "United Purchase Agreement", were but a cloak devised to hide the real transactions, and that there were in fact loans of $36,000 and $28,000, it was not bound to draw these inferences. On the other hand, the facts established by the evidence and hereinbefore set forth, undoubtedly support the findings made.

[2] What inferences should be drawn from the evidence is the province of the trial court, not this court. In re Estate of Bristol, 23 Cal.2d 221, 223, 143 P.2d 689.

Here the instruments did not on their face show a loan or forbearance of money, except to the extent of amounts set forth in the promissory notes. These instruments on their face do show the sale of an interest in motion pictures to be produced, with an option in the plaintiffs to repurchase. It was for the trial court to determine from all of the circumstances whether the intent of the parties was that disclosed by the face of the instruments or whether in fact those instruments were a sham and a subterfuge to cover up the real intent of the parties.

Appellants contend, if we understand them correctly, that the facts we have stated compel the drawing of the inference that the transaction was in reality a loan of $36,000 [$28,000], and that the sale with options to repurchase and the guaranties were but a subterfuge to cover up the true nature of the transaction. While they point to a number of facts shown by the evidence from which inferences could be drawn which would support findings in their favor, their main reliance is upon the fact that because King and United had agreed that they would, upon demand of the defendants, purchase the 15 per cent interest sold to the defendants in the event the plaintiffs failed to exercise their option to repurchase, and as there was an absolute promise on the part of the defendants to repay $35,500 [$27,500], none of the defendants' money was at hazard and that therefore, the entire transaction must be treated as a loan.

They rely principally upon Martin v. Ajax Construction Co., 124 Cal.App.2d 425, 269 P.2d 132. That case, however, is not in point here. In the cited case plaintiffs had loaned to defendants the sum of $5,000, and received back from the defendants an unconditional note in the sum of $10,000, payment of which was guaranteed by the principal stockholders of the defendant. In the cited case, the instruments on their face showed a loan of $5,000, and an unconditional promise to repay $10,000, within one year, although a collateral agreement did provide for payments to be made upon the note out of funds derived by the defendant from a construction project for which the monies were borrowed. In the case at bar, the instruments on their face show a loan of $35,500 [$27,500], with a guaranty of that loan by United and King. But they further show on their face a purchase of a 15 per cent interest in the series of motion pictures (not in Marted, the plaintiff partnership) with an option on the part of the plaintiffs to repurchase their interest at a price greatly in excess of that for which they had sold it.

It is true that by means of the "United Purchase Agreement" defendants insured themselves not only against loss, but of a profit. However, they did not thereby exact any payment from the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs were under no obligation to exercise their option, and there was no evidence that they were in any wise obligated to reimburse King or United if they purchased the 15 per cent interest. The evidence is all to the contrary.

The "United Purchase Agreement" was not a contract of guaranty, though so denominated. A guarantor is one who promises to answer for the debt, default or miscarriage of another. Civ.Code, § 2787. King and United did not by this contract undertake to answer for any debt or default of plaintiffs, for, as we have pointed out, plaintiffs had the right, but not the obligation, to exercise their option. By failing to exercise it, they did not default in the performance of any obligation owed to defendants, and King's and United's obligation to purchase could only arise after the plaintiffs' rights to purchase had expired. This being true, there is nothing in the agreements that exacted from plaintiffs any interest or charge for the use or forbearance of money, other than the lawful interest reserved in the promissory notes. It is only the unlawful exaction of interest or other charges for the use or forbearance of money that is prohibited by the Usury Act and the Constitution.

[3] While it is apparent from the evidence, despite the findings of the trial court to the contrary, that defendants would not have loaned the $35,500 [$27,500] to the plaintiffs, or have purchased the 15 per cent interest, unless they could protect themselves not only against loss of the money loaned and their investment, but also against the loss of the expected capital gain, this does not establish, as a matter of law, the exaction of anything from the plaintiffs other than the interest that they expressly promised to pay. The fact that the defendants, through contracts with third persons, insured themselves against loss and insured themselves a profit over and above the rate of interest which they would have been entitled to receive had the transaction in fact been that of a loan, does not establish usury. 55 Am.Jur. 386; 91 C.J.S., Usury, § 47, p. 630; Salvin v. Myles Realty Co., 227 N.Y. 51, 124 N.E. 94, 6 A.L.R. 581; McArthur v. Schenck, 31 Wis. 673, 677; Wilhoit v. Flack, 123 Ark. 619, 185 S.W. 460; Gleason v. Childs, 52 Vt. 421.

[4] Appellants further assert that the inadequacy of the price of $500, paid for the 15 per cent interest in each transaction, shows that the sale of that interest was but a subterfuge under the Usury Act. Undoubtedly, it is true that if as a part of a transaction through which a loan of money is made, the lender in addition required the borrower to sell to him property of a value much in excess of the price paid, the excess value of this property will be considered as an exaction for the use of the money and will render the entire transaction usurious. The Usury Act, by its express terms, prohibits the taking of property, as well as money, for the loan or forbearance of money, if the value of the property taken exceeds the lawful charge. Deering's Gen.Laws, 1953, Act 3757, § 2, West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1916-2.

[5] In the case at bar, however, no direct evidence was offered to establish the value of the interest purchased by the defendants. There was evidence from which it might have been possible for the court to draw the inference that this 15 per cent interest had a value in excess of the $500 paid for it, and it may be that it could have drawn the inference that the value of this interest was so great as to make the transaction usurious. The trial court was not bound to draw these inferences. On the other hand, there was direct evidence that at the time of the transactions, the interest purchase had little if any present value, although it undoubtedly had a comparatively large prospective value which depended upon the success of the venture. The evidence, therefore, supported the findings of the trial court that the price paid by the defendants was adequate and we cannot substitute our judgment for its.

Appellants also specifically attack a number of the findings made by the trial court as being contrary to the evidence. What we have said covers all of these assignments of error, except three. In finding No. 3 the court found that the defendant Leslie had at no time acted on behalf of the defendant Hungate. This finding is contrary to all of the evidence, as it is clear that Leslie was Hungate's agent and that he acted for him in both transactions. This issue, however, was not a material one in view of the court's finding upon the other issues. It might have been material in order to hold Hungate in the first transaction had the court's findings upon the other issues been in favor of plaintiffs.

By finding No. 17 the court found upon many probative facts, none of which, however, is inconsistent with its findings upon the ultimate facts we have heretofore mentioned. Some of the probative facts found seem to us to be unsupported by the evidence, but had the findings been to the contrary, it could not have affected the court's findings upon the ultimate facts. In this finding the court found, among other things, that the $35,500 [$27,500] loan was payable out of the proceeds of the distribution of the television series and that said loan was, therefore, uncertain and speculative and a hazard upon the success of the venture. Considering the terms of the assignment and the note alone, this finding would be fully sustained by the evidence. By the assignment it was provided that the plaintiffs would execute a document providing for the repayment of the sum of $35,500, together with interest thereon "which sum shall be payable from the first proceeds derived from the distribution and exploitation" of the television series, and the promissory note executed pursuant to the assignment provides for its payment pursuant to the terms of the agreement just quoted from. Plaintiffs' promise to pay, therefore, was not an unconditional one, but a promise "to pay out of a particular fund". When, however, these instruments are read in connection with the "Note Guaranty" executed by King and United as a part of the same transaction, the finding ceases to be supported by the evidence, for by the terms of the "Note Guaranty" the guarantors were unconditionally bound to pay the defendants $35,500 [$27,500], if plaintiffs did not, and plaintiffs as principles would, consequently, be likewise bound. Inasmuch, however, as the court found that the sale and option portion of the transaction was not a part of the loan transaction, the fact that the finding we have just discussed is contrary to the evidence cannot affect the judgment.

[6] The court, by its conclusions of law, found that the plaintiffs were estopped from asserting that the loan made by defendants to plaintiffs was usurious or in violation of the usury laws or of the pertinent provisions of the Constitution. This conclusion is based upon the facts found in paragraphs 22 and 23 of the findings. By these the court, in substance, found that the plaintiffs freely and voluntarily and without obligation so to do, exercised their option to repurchase the 15 per cent interest which they sold to the defendants, and that in paying to the defendants the sum of $8,000 [$6,750] they deliberately and intentionally lead defendants to believe that they were in good faith exercising the option and repurchasing said 15 per cent interest, and to believe in the validity of the loan purchase and the option to repurchase, and in reliance thereon to in good faith make said loan and purchase and to permit plaintiffs to exercise their option to repurchase. These findings and conclusions (except the finding that the plaintiffs freely and voluntarily and without obligation exercised their option) are, as appellants say, "amazing." The whole scheme was the device of the defendant Leslie. If it was a subterfuge and the transaction was in reality but a loan of money, no one knew it better than he and his co-defendants, and no borrower is estopped from asserting usury merely because he has knowingly met the usurious exactions of the lender. Stock v. Meek, 35 Cal.2d 809, 817, 221 P.2d 15; 39 Cal.L.Rev. 604, 607-08. But here again these findings and conclusions are not material, for inasmuch as the court's findings of fact and conclusions of law upon the other issues tendered by the complaint and answer (exclusive of the affirmative defense) upheld and compelled the judgment rendered, the question of estoppel was no longer of importance.

Appellants make two assertions of error as to the trial court's rulings on the admission of evidence. The major part of the testimony taken at the trial consisted in the reading of the depositions of the parties. The plaintiffs had taken the depositions of the defendants, and the defendants those of the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs offered and read into evidence the depositions taken by the defendants. In a number of instances, in answers to questions propounded at the taking of their depositions by counsel for the defendants, the plaintiffs had given answers which were subject to a motion to strike, upon the ground that the answers constituted hearsay or a conclusion of the witness or as not responsive. When the evidence elicited by these questions was offered by the plaintiffs, defendants' counsel objected upon the appropriate ground. The trial court sustained the objections to the reading of the answers, or where they had been read, struck the answers. It was appellants' contention in the trial court, and is his contention now, that the answers having been elicited by questions asked by counsel for the respondents on the taking of the deposition, he waived all right to object to the answers given.

[7] Insofar as the rulings of the trial court were based upon the grounds that the answers were not responsive are concerned, there can, of course, be no possible merit in appellant's point, for that ground for a motion to strike would have been open to respondents had they offered the testimony of these witnesses by themselves reading the depositions. Code Civ.Proc. § 2056.

[8] As to the rulings that were based upon the grounds that the answers constituted hearsay or a conclusion of the witness, the rulings of the trial court were correct. Appellants rely, in support of this point, upon the case of McClenahan v. Keyes, 188 Cal. 574, 206 P. 454, and a number of cases from other jurisdictions. These cases are not in point. Each of them involved waivers as to the competency of the witness to testify. None of them involved the competency of the testimony which he gave. In each of the cited cases (most of them involved the Dead Man's statute) the court held that although the witness was incompetent to testify, that when the party who had the right to claim his incompetency made him a witness by taking his testimony by means of a deposition, he waived his right to claim the incompetency. That is not the situation here. Here the witness was competent, but the testimony he gave incompetent. This incompetency the examining party did not waive, for he was not bound to offer this testimony at the trial, and if the opposing party did use it he could only do so "subject to all legal exceptions" unless the objection went to the form of the question. Code Civ.Proc. § 2032. This same question was raised and decided adversely to appellants in Madera R. Co. v. Raymond Granite Co., 3 Cal.App. 668, 686, 87 P. 27.

[9] Appellant contends that the parol evidence rule is not applicable in cases involving the claim of usury and that parol evidence is, in such cases, admissible to show the actual nature of the transaction, and in no way depends upon the existence of an ambiguity in a written contract. In this claim he is fully supported by the decisions of our Supreme and appellate courts. Terry Trading Corp. v. Barsky, 210 Cal. 428, 292 P. 474; Milana v. Credit Discount Co., 27 Cal.2d 335, 163 P.2d 869, 165 A.L.R. 621; Van Noy v. Goldberg, 98 Cal.App. 604, 277 P. 538.

[10] The trial court did not, however, as appellants claim, violate the rule established by these cases. The trial court struck out certain answers given by the plaintiff Kneeland concerning his understanding of the contracts. None of these answers concerned any conversation with the defendants or any of them, or any fact or circumstance surrounding the making of the contracts, nor did they concern the negotiations between the parties or the conduct of any of the parties. We have carefully examined each of the instances in which it is claimed the court so erred, and are of the opinion that not only was the trial court correct in its rulings, but that the substance of the matter stricken was later received in evidence through answers to other questions. Appellants were therefore not prejudiced by the rulings of the court even though they might be found to have been erroneous.

[11] Upon the plaintiffs being called as witnesses on their own behalf, they were asked in substance whether or not they would have sold a 15 per cent for $500, if the sale had been unconnected with the loan of $35,500 [$27,500]. Appellants assert that the trial court erred in sustaining objections to these questions. There is no merit in this claim. The state of mind of the plaintiffs was not in issue or relevant to any issue. The questions were as to a purely hypothetical set of facts. There was no evidence that the parties ever considered or discussed such a sale as that hypothesized. The evidence is uncontradicted that each of the deals in question was a package deal covering the loan and the alleged sale. The package was wrapped up in the "Assignments". Affirmative answers to the questions propounded would not have tended to prove that the defendants intended to exact usury or that the sale evidenced by the face of the instruments executed pursuant to the assignment was not in fact a sale but a cloak behind which the true transaction was hidden. Plaintiffs might have been unwilling to sell under the facts recited in the question, and still have been willing to sell under the circumstances shown by the evidence.

The judgment on the cross-complaint. In the second action the defendant Leslie filed a cross-complaint for an accounting and for money due and owing. The trial court rendered judgment in his favor for the sum of $185.65, the amount prayed for. By this cross-complaint Leslie alleged in substance that the cross-defendants, the plaintiffs, were joint adventurers doing business under the fictitious name of Marted Productions and were the owners of the proposed television series and that the cross-complainant was the owner of 8 per cent of all of the net profits theretofore or thereafter derived from the proposed television series; that the said television series had been successfully produced and that substantial net profits had been realized in an amount unknown to the cross-complainant, but that cross-complainant had been paid no part of that profit; that he had demanded an accounting but that the cross-defendants refused to account or to pay him his share of the profits. By a second cause of action he alleged that defendants were indebted to him in the sum of $185.65, for monies loaned and advanced. He prayed for an accounting and for judgment in the sum above mentioned, plus his share of the profits as found by the accounting. The trial court found that the series of motion pictures had not been successfully produced; that the cross-defendants had not realized a net profit from the venture; that cross-defendants were indebted to cross-complainant for the sum of $185.65, on account of monies loaned, and rendered judgment in favor of cross-complainant. This judgment cannot be sustained.

The cross-complainant was, under uncontradicted evidence, a joint adventurer, if not a general partner with the cross-defendants. The evidence shows without conflict the following facts: February 1, 1952, cross-complainant drafted an agreement in letter form between himself and the partnership. By this letter it was recited that Leslie had rendered legal and other services to the partnership; that he agreed to act as attorney for the partnership and to render any and all legal services which might be required by it, other than those involving accounting or tax problems. That in consideration for all the services theretofore rendered or to be rendered, the partnership agreed to pay him a sum equal to 15 per cent of all the net profits derived by or accruing to the partnership from the distribution of the television series; that all profits payable to the partnership should be divided and apportioned 42½ per cent each to Marted and Kneeland, 15 per cent to Leslie. Further, by the terms of the agreement the cross-defendants assigned to Leslie 15 per cent of all assets and profits "now owned or which may be hereafter acquired by Marted Productions", and further agreed that all ventures and transactions in the motion picture, television or radio field by Marted or Kneeland should be conducted through the partnership. It further provided that nothing contained in the agreement should be "termed to constitute or create a partnership". Leslie's percentage was later increased to 20 per cent, and later still, as we have shown, was reduced to 8 per cent.

In his answer to plaintiffs' complaint, Leslie construed this agreement, for in paragraph I of his answer he alleges that by virtue thereof he became and remained a joint venturer with plaintiffs.

The evidence further shows that during the production of the last picture of the series and after the consummation of the transactions out of which the second action arises, the partnership became short of funds and that Leslie, at the request of his co-adventurers, deposited in the account maintained by him and them the sum of $712.50, to cover an overdraft. Of this amount he was repaid all of his advance except the amount for which the court gave him judgment.

[12, 13] While in the written agreements between the parties there is no mention of a sharing of losses, this is implied, Constans v. Ross, 106 Cal.App.2d 381, 389, 235 P.2d 113, and the declaration in the contract that it should not be deemed to create a partnership does not change the legal status which it in fact creates. San Joaquin Light & Power Corp. v. Costaloupes, 96 Cal.App. 322, 330-336, 274 P. 84.

[14, 15] A partner or joint adventurer is not entitled to sue the other members of the partnership or venture at law until an accounting has been had, and it has in fact been determined that they are indebted to him. Here, admittedly, there has been no accounting and it has not been determined whether the venture resulted in a loss. Until that has been determined there is no basis for the finding that the cross-defendants are indebted to the cross-complainant. Cunningham v. deMordaigle, 82 Cal.App.2d 620, 186 P.2d 423; Danelian v. McLoney, 124 Cal.App.2d 435, 441, 268 P.2d 775; Stowe v. Matson, 94 Cal.App.2d 678, 211 P.2d 591.

The judgments in each action against the plaintiffs upon their complaints and in favor of the defendants are affirmed. The judgment in the second action in favor of the defendant and cross-complainant Leslie upon his cross-complaint is reversed. The defendants will recover their costs against the plaintiffs; the cross-defendants will recover costs against cross-complainant Leslie in an amount equal to one-fourth of the amount expended by them in the preparation of their brief, the reporter's transcript and the clerk's transcript in Appeal No. Civil 20787.

SHINN, P. J., and PARKER WOOD, J., concur.

H. J. WILSON, Plaintiff and Appellant.

v.

Charles H. BEVILLE, City of Los Angeles, et al., Defendants.

City of Los Angeles, Defendant and Respondent.*

Civ. 20995.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Nov. 21, 1955.

Rehearing Denied Dec. 12, 1955.

Hearing Granted Jan. 18, 1956.

Action against city and others to quiet title and to obtain ejectment. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Leroy Dawson, J., entered judgment adverse to plaintiff, and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Ashburn, J. pro tem., held that, where failure to join lienholder, under street improvement bond, in condemnation proceeding brought by city for street purposes left lien unimpaired by judgment in condemnation proceeding, but no claim was even filed against city under claims statute by plaintiff, who claimed under city treasurer's deed issued after foreclosure sale, or by plaintiff's predecessors, plaintiff did not have right to recover from city amount previously awarded and paid to record owner as result of the condemnation proceeding.

* Opinion vacated 306 P.2d 789.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Eminent Domain ⇨152(1)

Where condemnation award is on deposit in the court, a lien, whether it be a mortgage, trust deed, or tax lien, attaches to the award and is removed from the condemned land.

2. Eminent Domain ⇨166

A condemnation action is not strictly one in rem but is quasi in rem.

3. Eminent Domain ⇨177

In condemnation proceeding, all persons in interest, including lienholders, must be joined as defendants if their rights are known or appear of record. West's Ann. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1244, subd. 2, 1245.3, 1246, 1248.

4. Eminent Domain ⇨152(1)

Under statute providing that, where property sought to be taken is encumbered by lien and indebtedness secured by lien is not due at time of entry of judgment, amount of such indebtedness may, at option of plaintiff, be deducted from judgment and that lien shall be continued until such indebtedness is paid applies not only to voluntary liens but also street assessment and similar involuntary liens. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 1248, subd. 8.

5. Eminent Domain ⇨152(1), 154

In matter of rights of lienholder who has not been joined in an eminent domain proceeding, there is no distinction between a mortgage and a tax lien, and both liens are entitled to protection in the proceeding. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1244, subd. 2, 1245.3, 1246, 1246.1, 1248, 1252, 1252.1.

6. Eminent Domain ⇨152(1)

Where holder of lien arising from street improvement bond was not joined as defendant in condemnation proceeding by which city took, for street purposes, part of land covered by lien, failure to join lienholder left his lien unimpaired by the judgment. Streets and Highways Code, §§ 5000-6794; West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1244, subd. 2, 1245.3, 1246, 1246.1, 1248, subd. 8, 1252, 1252.1.

7. Eminent Domain ⇨268

Where lien arising under street improvement bond was not impaired by judgment in condemnation proceeding because of failure to join lienholder in the proceeding, by which city took an easement for street purposes, plaintiff, who claimed through city treasurer's deed issued after foreclosure sale under the bond, was precluded by city's devotion of the condemned land to public use from gaining possession, but intervention of such public use did not destroy plaintiff's right to recover his debt. Streets and Highways Code, §§ 5000-6794; West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1244, subd. 2, 1245.3, 1246, 1246.1, 1248, subd. 8, 1252, 1252.1.

8. Evidence ⇨31

The District Court of Appeal would take judicial notice of the municipal claims statute contained in charter of the city of Los Angeles.

9. Eminent Domain ⇨277

Claims statutes, such as that contained in charter of city of Los Angeles, are fully applicable to claims for compensation under the doctrine of inverse condemnation, and compliance therewith is an indispensable prerequisite to maintenance of an action thereon.

10. Eminent Domain ⇨277

Where failure to join lienholder, under street improvement bond, in condemnation proceeding brought by city for street purposes left lien unimpaired by judgment in condemnation proceeding, but no claim was ever filed against city under claims statute by plaintiff, who claimed under city treasurer's deed issued after foreclosure sale, or by plaintiff's predecessors, plaintiff did not have right to recover from city amount previously awarded and paid to record owner as result of the condemnation proceeding. Streets and Highways Code, §§ 5000-6794; West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1244, subd. 2, 1245.3, 1246, 1246.1, 1248, subd. 8, 1252, 1252.1.

—♦—
Guerin & Guerin, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Roger Arnebergh, City Atty., Peyton H. Moore, Jr., Chief Deputy City Atty., Spencer L. Halverson, Deputy City Atty., Los Angeles, for respondent.

ASHBURN, Justice pro tem.

Action to quiet title and for ejectment. Plaintiff claims title by virtue of a city treasurer's deed issued to his predecessor in interest after foreclosure sale under a street improvement bond issued pursuant to Improvement Act of 1911 (now secs. 5000-6794, Streets and Highways Code). The assessment resulting in this bond was levied under said Act of 1911 and recorded on November 23, 1927. On November 25, 1927, two days later, the city of Los Angeles commenced a condemnation action entitled City of Los Angeles v. Howse, in which it took an easement for street purposes (south La Brea Avenue) across part of the land upon which the street bond constituted a lien. The owner of that lien (who at that time would be the contractor) was not joined as a defendant, nor was he or any holder of the bond ever brought into the action. That fact gives rise to the primary question in this case.

The assessment was recorded on November 23, 1927, the action was filed on November 25, 1927, the bond was issued under said Act of 1911 on December 28, 1927, to Municipal Bond Company. A certificate of a treasurer's sale was issued to one Al Schuh on October 19, 1938, same was transferred on March 8, 1950 to Betty Wilson. The amount set forth in the notice to redeem was $295.06, but should have been $309.41. The treasurer's deed was issued to Betty Wilson on August 23, 1950. She quitclaimed to plaintiff on April 12, 1951, and he filed this action on the following day.

Final judgment of condemnation was entered on July 23, 1931, and the record owner of the portion condemned was awarded and paid the sum of $5,376.20. The city took possession of the condemned property on January 22, 1932, and forthwith devoted it to public use as a part of a city street. No portion of the assessment or bond has been paid.

The court rendered judgment that plaintiff is the owner of the condemned parcel subject to the city's street easement. Plaintiff appeals from the judgment claiming that the city acquired title subject to the lien of his bond, that that lien ripened into a fee title in plaintiff and, alternatively, that the city should have been required by way of inverse condemnation to pay to the plaintiff the amount previously awarded and paid to the record owner, not merely the amount of plaintiff's bond. The city, as respondent, contends first, that the lien of the bond was transferred by the condemnation to the award made in that action regardless of nonjoinder of the lien holder, and that his remedy was to appear and assert his rights in the eminent domain case or to collect the amount of the bond from the owner who received the award.

[1] The question of whether a tax or assessment lien is lifted from the land and transferred to the condemnation award regardless of nonjoinder of the holder of the lien has not been definitely answered in this state.¹ The general proposition that a lien, whether it be a mortgage, trust deed or tax lien, attaches to the award and is removed from the condemned land, has been stated from time to time in this jurisdiction. Pomona College v. Dunn, 7 Cal.App.2d 227, 232, 46 P.2d 270; Rose v. Conlin, 52 Cal. App. 225, 230, 198 P. 653; Los Angeles Trust & Savings Bank v. Bortenstein, 47 Cal.App. 421, 423, 190 P. 850. Certainly that is the result when the award is on deposit in the court. Board of Capitol Managers v. Brasie, 72 Colo. 153, 210 P. 63;

1. 79 A.L.R. 116 carries an annotation on the subject entitled "Taxes—property taken by eminent domain."

United States v. Cohen, D.C., 81 F.Supp. 340; United States v. 909.30 Acres of Land, etc., D.C., 114 F.Supp. 756; United States v. Certain Parcels of Land, D.C., 44 F. Supp. 936; Weber v. Wells, 9 Cir., 154 F.2d 1004. But none of the cases just cited (those in California or other jurisdictions) involves the point here presented—the right of a lien holder who has not been joined as a defendant and who has received no part of the award, same having been paid to the owner of the fee.

[2, 3] In California a condemnation action is not strictly one in rem, it is quasi in rem. Harrington v. Superior Court, 194 Cal. 185, 189, 228 P. 15; 18 Cal.Jur.2d, sec. 257, p. 10. An examination of the statute discloses that it is contemplated that all persons in interest, which of course includes lien holders, must be joined as defendants where their rights are known or appear of record.

[4] Code of Civil Procedure, sec. 1244, states the requirements of the complaint and subdivision 2 says it must include: "The names of all owners and claimants, of the property, if known, or a statement that they are unknown, who must be styled defendants". Of course this means they must be joined. The first sentence of sec. 1245.3 contains this: "In any action brought under this title the plaintiff may name as defendants, in addition to those persons who appear of record or are known to plaintiff to have or claim an interest in the property, 'all persons unknown claiming any title or interest in or to the property,' naming them in that manner * * *." Section 1246 requires each defendant to set forth his estate or interest in the property described and the amount of damages claimed by him. It also says: "All persons in occupation of, or having or claiming an interest in any of the property described in the complaint, or in the damages for the taking thereof, though not named, may appear, plead, and defend, each in respect to his own property or interest, or that claimed by him, in like manner as if named in the complaint." Section 1248 requires the court or jury to fix the value of the property sought to be condemned, "and of each and every separate estate or interest therein; if it consists of different parcels, the value of each parcel and each estate or interest therein shall be separately assessed". (This is not affected by sec. 1246.1 which was not enacted until after the proceedings now under discussion.) Section 1252 provides that: "Payment may be made to the defendants entitled thereto, or the money may be deposited in Court for the defendants, and be distributed to those entitled thereto." And sec. 1248, subd. 8: "When the property sought to be taken is encumbered by a mortgage or other lien, and the indebtedness secured thereby is not due at the time of the entry of the judgment, the amount of such indebtedness may be, at the option of the plaintiff, deducted from the judgment, and the lien of the mortgage or other lien shall be continued until such indebtedness is paid."³ The last quoted subsection has been held to apply not only to voluntary liens but also street assessment and similar involuntary liens. City of Los Angeles v. Superior Court, 2 Cal.2d 138, 140, 39 P.2d 401. There is nothing in these statutory provisions to indicate any legislative recognition of a right to dispose of any lien upon property involved in an eminent domain proceeding without making the owner thereof a party and giving him an opportunity to be heard, not unless his claim is unknown and does not appear of record.

The case last cited, City of Los Angeles v. Superior Court, supra, was an action in eminent domain. Between the time of filing the complaint and the making of interlocutory judgment, assessments for street improvements became liens upon the property. The same not being due at the time of judgment, the city withheld the amount thereof and tendered the balance of the money to the owner of the fee, who refused to accept it. Thereupon the city brought an action in mandamus to compel him to fully satisfy the judgment upon receipt of the said money. The court first disposed of the contention that the terms of sec. 1248, subd. 8 do not include involuntary liens, such as a street assessment, and then explained the purpose of that subdivision as follows: "The purpose of the statute is obviously to prevent a situation wherein the condemnor will pay the full value of the land, and thereafter will be forced to pay again to holders of liens on the land, when the liens become due. Bearing this purpose in mind, it certainly makes no difference whether the lien was created by the owner, as in the case of a mortgage, or arose in other ways." 2 Cal.2d at page 140, 39 P.2d 401. The court relied somewhat upon Marin Municipal Water Dist. v. North Coast Water Co., 40 Cal.App. 260, 180 P. 620.

2. (Emphasis added.) This section was not enacted until after the proceedings in City v. Howse, but its phraseology is at least a legislative interpretation of the meaning of subdivision 2 of sec. 1244.

3. Section 1252.1, Code of Civil Procedure, providing for payment of taxes and assessments through the eminent domain proceeding, was not enacted until 1953.

In that instance plaintiff water company had condemned land of defendant in a previous action; shortly before the interlocutory judgment was entered city and county taxes became a lien thereon; later, an order for possession was made and possession taken upon payment of the award to the defendant; the taxes were then due and were a lien upon the land but were not in default. 40 Cal.App. at page 262, 180 P. 620. Plaintiff later redeemed the premises from a tax sale and then sued defendant to recover the amount it had paid for that purpose. Judgment for defendant was affirmed, the court saying, 40 Cal.App. on page 262, 180 P. on page 621, relative to sec. 1248, subd. 8: "It gives to the person taking property by proceedings in eminent domain the right to retain from the sum of money to be paid for it the amount necessary to discharge any lien existing thereon, but his neglect to adopt this course would not give rise, in the absence of some other provision of law creating it, to a right of action to recover it when once paid. The right given by this section seems to be one the extent of which is measured by the mode prescribed for its exercise. In eminent domain proceedings the only obligation resting upon the defendant is to prove his damages. * * * [40 Cal.App.

at page 263, 180 P. at page 621:] We are of the opinion that the facts set out in the complaint fail to show any obligation on the part of the defendant to have removed the lien of the taxes at the time of the transfer of the land to the plaintiff; and that, there being no such covenant or duty, there could be no liability created either by the fact that the defendant did not pay such taxes, or that the plaintiff did pay the same."

Section 1248, subd. 8 speaks as of the time of entry of judgment, and these two cases recognize that the condemnor must take care of liens accruing before that time or accept the risk of having to pay that portion of the award a second time.

In Thibodo v. United States, 9 Cir., 187 F.2d 249, plaintiff, the holder of street improvement bonds issued in 1931, which were a lien upon land condemned by the United States, sued the government to have the amount of his bonds declared a lien upon the condemned property; he had not been joined as a defendant and had received no part of the award. The condemnation action was filed and a declaration of taking and an order for possession made on February 9, 1943. The improvement resulting in the bonds under consideration in the Thibodo case was made pursuant to the Improvement Act of 1911 (which is digested in footnote 3 at page 252 of the opinion) and the court held, first, that the recordation of the assessment in accordance with the Act gave constructive notice to all persons of the existence of the lien, citing Castle v. Schulman, 32 Cal.2d 222, 195 P.2d 781. The court then said at page 255 of 187 F.2d: "We hold that the lien here involved is a subject of public record, charging a subsequent condemnor with constructive notice thereof. Armed with this knowledge, the amount of the lien could have been withheld for its rightful claimant." At page 256 of 187 F.2d: "Under the California law, a lienholder has a present proprietary interest in the subject matter of land sought to be taken by eminent domain proceedings which confers a right to have such interest considered and determined in said action. City of Vallejo v. Superior Court, 1926, 199 Cal. 408, 249 P. 1084, 48 A.L.R. 610; Calif.Code Civ.Proc. (1949) §§ 1244, subd. 2, 1246, 1246.1, 1248. See Harrington v. Superior Court, 1924, 194 Cal. 185, 228 P. 15. Section 1248, subd. 8, of the California Code of Civil Procedure provides that if the amount of a lien is not due at the time of entry of the judgment, the amount may be deducted from the judgment, with the lien continuing until the indebtedness is paid. This section is held applicable to street improvement liens. * * * If the lien is due and overdue, the security holder is entitled to have the money awarded in the condemnation proceedings applied to the payment of his claim. * * * The very purpose of the statute is to prevent a situation wherein the condemnor will pay the full value of the land, and thereafter will be forced to pay again to holders of liens on the land. * * *

"While it is true that the above cases seem to imply that the lienholder is not a necessary party to the proceedings, they leave no doubt of the fact that his interest must be protected in some practical manner." The court, at page 256 of 187 F.2d, adverted to the rule that one who seeks relief for deprivation of constitutional rights must first exhaust his remedies in the state court. Then said at page 257 of 187 F.2d: "Plaintiff should be given the opportunity to amend his complaint to show that he has exhausted the state remedy or that this relief is not available to him, or that pursuit for relief through the state courts would be fruitless. When appellant has taken proper steps as just suggested he may then state his claim for relief based upon a deprivation of constitutional rights, by virtue of the 'taking' of his right to have his bonds discharged through foreclosure of the lien upon the land." The essence of this decision is that the holder of a street improvement bond, who is not joined as a party defendant in the eminent domain proceeding, does not lose any of his rights by the awarding and payment of the entire amount of damages to the owner of the fee.

In State v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 75 Neb. 4, 105 N.W. 983, the holder of a tax lien was omitted from the condemnation action brought by the railway company. The lien was in existence at the time the suit was brought and it was held that the title acquired by the railway company was subject to the tax lien. At page 985 of 105 N.W. the court said: "The property of an individual cannot be taken for the use of a railway company by condemnation proceedings without payment therefor. Under our statute the payment must be made to the owner of the land, and the doctrine is well settled that all persons who have an interest in the land are owners within the meaning of this statute. * * * The lien of these taxes was a matter of record. It could have been easily ascertained, and could have easily been provided for. Several cases have been brought to our attention in which the courts of other states have held that upon the suggestion of the railway company the court would require taxes then existing upon the land to be paid out of the condemnation money while the same was in the hands of the court. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Pennsylvania S. V. R. Co., [151 Pa. 569] 25 A. 177. However this may be, there can be no doubt that under our statute the railway company might protect itself by making lienholders parties to the proceedings, and, if it neglects to do this, and allows the holder of the fee to obtain the entire award, it cannot afterwards insist that the lienholders shall, by such proceeding, be deprived of their interest in the property." This ruling was followed in Ehlers v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 118 Neb. 477, 225 N.W. 468.

Municipal Securities Corp. v. Kansas City, 195 Mo.App. 464, 193 S.W. 880. In this instance the plaintiff owned tax bills which were liens upon land later condemned by the city. The plaintiff was not made a party to the condemnation action and the entire award was paid to others. He sued the city to recover the amount of the liens held by him and recovered. In affirming the judgment the court said, 193 S.W. at page 881: "On this state of facts, the question is: Has the defendant city become liable to plaintiff for the amount of the tax bills? In our opinion no valid reason can be given why a liability does not exist. Three prominent facts stand out in the record: One, that plaintiff had the lien; and, second, that defendant appropriated the property on which the lien existed; and, third, that defendant paid out condemnation money to the owners, whose condemned lands it knew were subject to the lien of plaintiff's tax bills, without ever having given plaintiff any notice of its proceedings and of which plaintiff had no knowledge until about six months after the money had been paid. * * *

"That one with an interest in land cannot have it taken from him by a condemnation proceeding without being made a party thereto is a fundamental proposition of law which finds apt illustration in Holmes v. Kansas City, 209 Mo. 513, 528, 108 S.W. 9, 1134, 123 Am.St.Rep. 495." At page 882 of 193 S.W.: "Defendant next insists that the lien for plaintiff's tax bills was taken off the land and transferred to the money arising out of its condemnation, and that therefore that fund should be followed by some appropriate action against the owners who received it from the city. It is not necessary to inquire what other remedy or remedies plaintiff may or may not have, as long as the one it has elected to pursue rightfully belongs to it and upon every just and legal principle affords relief."

[5] In this matter of the rights of a lien holder who has not been joined in an eminent domain proceeding we see no distinction between a mortgage and a tax lien. Both are entitled to protection in the condemnation action. It was specifically so held as to mortgagees in Rose v. Conlin, supra, 52 Cal.App. 225, 198 P. 653; City of Vallejo v. Superior Court, 199 Cal. 408, 416, 249 P. 1084, 48 A.L.R. 610; and impliedly so held in City of Los Angeles v. Superior Court, supra, 2 Cal.2d 138, 39 P. 2d 401, and Marin Municipal Water Dist. v. North Coast Water Co., supra, 40 Cal. App. 260, 180 P. 620.

[6] We conclude that the failure to join the lien holder in the case of City of Los Angeles v. Howse left his lien unimpaired by the judgment.

[7] The city counters this conclusion with an argument that its title was per-fectured through devotion to public use and the doctrine of inverse condemnation (See 17 Cal.Jur.2d, sec. 7, p. 585; 18 Cal.Jur. 2d, sec. 374, p. 95; Hossom v. City of Long Beach, 83 Cal.App.2d 745, 754, 189 P.2d 787; Chilberg v. City of Los Angeles, 54 Cal.App.2d 99, 103, 128 P.2d 693; Hillside Water Co. v. City of Los Angeles, 10 Cal. 2d 677, 688, 76 P.2d 681), which is undoubtedly applicable to the extent of precluding plaintiff from gaining possession, thus disrupting the public use; but the intervention of the public use does not destroy a lien holder's right to recover his debt; for instance, after foreclosure and inability to obtain possession he may have an action for mesne profits, (Dobbins v. Economic Gas Co., 182 Cal. 616, 634, 641, 189 P. 1073; Lowe v. Los Angeles Suburban Gas Co., 182 Cal. 649, 189 P. 1084); or he may sue to recover the value of his lien on the date of taking by the public agency.

[8,9] Through application of this doctrine the lien holder becomes a money claimant and is required to comply with any applicable claims statute, such as sections 363 and 376 of the charter of the City of Los Angeles, of which we take judicial notice. They require filing with the city clerk of a written demand for any money or damages alleged to be due from the city provide that no suit may be brought on any such claim unless it has been made and rejected, in whole or in part, and that the demand must be presented within six months after the occurrence from which the damages arose. These claim statutes are fully applicable to claims for compensation under the doctrine of inverse condemnation, Powers Farms v. Consolidated Irr. Dist., 19 Cal.2d 123, 126, 119 P.2d 717; Veterans' Welfare Board v. City of Oakland, 74 Cal.App.2d 818, 826, 169 P.2d 1000, and compliance therewith is an indispensable prerequisite to the maintenance of an action thereon. Chilberg v. City of Los Angeles, supra, 54 Cal.App.2d 99, 104, 128 P.2d 693; Huffaker v. Decker, 77 Cal.App. 2d 383, 386, 175 P.2d 254; Cathey v. City and County of San Francisco, 37 Cal.App. 2d 575, 576, 99 P.2d 1109.

[10] The court found that no claim was ever filed by plaintiff or his predecessors in interest and this finding is not challenged. It follows that plaintiff has no right to recover herein.

The judgment is affirmed.

McCOMB, Acting P. J., and FOX, J., concur.

Hearing granted; McCOMB, J., not participating.

137 Cal.App.2d 286

The PEOPLE of the State of California,
Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Luis OLGIN, Defendant and Appellant.
Cr. 5500.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California.

Nov. 28, 1955.

Rehearing Denied Dec. 12, 1955.

Hearing Denied Dec. 28, 1955.

Defendant was convicted of unlawful possession of heroin and he filed a petition for writ of error coram nobis. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, denied the petition and directed that notice of appeal attached thereto be not filed, and petitioner appealed and the People of the State of California moved to dismiss the appeal. The District Court of Appeal, White, P. J., held that conduct of petitioner, who was confined in prison, constituted constructive filing of notice of appeal within the time allowed and satisfied jurisdictional requirement, in view of fact that petitioner had no notice of ruling on petition and request that attached notice of appeal be filed until after expiration of time allowed for taking an appeal.

Motion to dismiss appeal denied.

Criminal Law §1081

Where petitioner, who was confined in prison, attached notice of appeal to petition for writ of error coram nobis to review conviction for possession of heroin with request that it be filed if petition was denied and petitioner had no notice of order denying petition and directing that notice of appeal not be filed until after expiration of time allowed for taking appeal, conduct of petitioner constituted constructive filing of notice of appeal within the time allowed and satisfied jurisdictional requirement. West's Ann.Rules on Appeal, rule 31; West's Ann. Health & Safety Code, § 11500.

Luis Olgin, in pro. per.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., William E. James, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

WHITE, Presiding Justice.

Respondent moves to dismiss the appeal herein upon the ground that the notice of appeal was filed too late. Appellant counters with the claim that the particular circumstances shown by the record in this case are such as to preclude dismissal of his appeal.

The following chronology is admittedly correct:

July 13, 1954—An information was filed in the Superior Court of Los Angeles County wherein appellant was charged with a violation of Sec. 11500 of the Health and Safety Code (Possession of Heroin). Said information also charged five prior felony convictions for which appellant served terms of imprisonment in a state prison. All prior convictions were admitted.

October 25, 1954—Appellant was adjudged guilty.

November 12, 1954—Judgment was pronounced committing appellant to State Prison. No appeal was taken from such judgment.

May 17, 1955—Appellant filed in the superior court a petition for writ of error coram nobis and for an order to show cause why the writ should not be granted.

May 18, 1955—The petition was denied.

June 14, 1955—Notice of appeal was filed with the Clerk of the Superior Court from "the judgments and the whole thereof".

Rule 31 of the Rules on Appeal provides that "an appeal [in a criminal case] may be taken by filing a written notice of appeal with the clerk of the superior court within 10 days after the rendition of the judgment". In the instant case the clerk received appellant's notice of appeal on June 14, 1955—"twenty-seven days" rather than "ten days" after rendition of the judgment denying his petition for writ of error coram nobis.

In opposition to respondent's motion to dismiss the appeal, appellant, appearing in propria persona, filed an answer reciting that when his original petition was filed in the court below, he attached thereto a notice of appeal requesting the Clerk of the Superior Court to file the same in the event his petition for writ of error coram nobis was denied. In this regard the record reflects that when, on May 18th, the appellant's aforesaid petition was called for hearing (he not being present) the court made the following order:

"The petition is denied, and it is directed that the notice of appeal attached to the petition be not filed, it having been sent to the Court prematurely. In other words, notice of appeal was sent before the Court had an opportunity to rule on the situation."

The record further reflects that on May 26, 1955 the Clerk of the Superior Court wrote appellant at Folsom State Prison, Represa, California, advising him of the denial of his petition and that the "purported notice of appeal attached to the petition is not to be filed or considered as a notice of appeal because it is premature". This letter was postmarked as mailed on May 25th, and appellant sets forth in his answer (which is not denied), "That due to censor regulations at said prison the said letter was not received by appellant until the 6th day of June of 1955".

In answer to respondent's contention that appellant "does not claim that he did anything within the ten-day period to perfect his appeal," the latter asserts, "The court will take judicial notice of the calendar that May 25th (the date notice of denial of his petition was mailed), was Wednesday; and that in ordinary mail delivery would not have reached Folsom Prison until Friday, May 28th, 1955, or ten days after the ruling. The Court will also take judicial notice that mail is not delivered direct to the inmate but is censored and in matters or documents containing legal notices is directed to the regularly appointed person in the prison to be inspected before delivery.

"It is to be further noted that Monday, May 30th, 1955 was a legal holiday so that the first possible day the said letter could come to the attention of the proper official was the 31st of May, 1955, or three days after the ten day period had expired, and that in fact appellant did not read the said letter until June 6th at which time he promptly and without delay forwarded an additional notice of appeal. It is to be remembered that until the 6th of June, 1955, appellant had no notice of any kind and further that he relied on the Clerk of the Superior Court to file said notice in accordance with directions.

"How then can the respondent successfully contend that appellant did nothing during the ten day period to perfect his appeal—What else could he have done?"

Under the foregoing circumstances it must certainly be said that in all justice and equity appellant should have some avenue for relief in the courts.

We are not unmindful of the holding in In re Estate of Hanley, 23 Cal.2d 120, 123, 142 P.2d 423, 424, 149 A.L.R. 1250, that, "In the absence of statutory authorization, neither the trial nor appellate courts may extend or shorten the time for appeal [citations], even to relieve against mistake, inadvertence, accident, or misfortune [citations]", as well as other cases relied upon by respondent. However, these cases present no parallel considerations with the one now engaging our attention. Here, appellant, aware of the "disability", occasioned by his imprisonment, which might prevent him from complying with appeal requirements, attached a notice of appeal to his petition for writ of error coram nobis with the request that it be filed in the event of an adverse ruling, and it might well have been filed. Appellant had no notice of such ruling until more than 10 days had expired due to the fact that the county clerk did not mail him notice thereof until 6 days after its rendition and prison regulations which delayed delivery thereof to him. Obviously, appellant was powerless to do other than he did until he received notice of the adverse decision, and this, through no fault of his own. We are satisfied that this case comes within the sphere of the philosophy—both legal and moral—enunciated in the case of People v. Slobodion, 30 Cal.2d 362, 181 P.2d 868, and that for the reasons therein stated, the conduct of appellant herein, under the facts above narrated, constituted a constructive filing within the prescribed time limit and satisfied the jurisdictional requirement as contemplated by law. See Cochran v. State of Kansas, 316 U.S. 255, 62 S.Ct. 1068, 86 L.Ed. 1453.

The motion to dismiss the appeal is denied.

DORAN, J., and ASIIBURN, J. pro tem,
concur.

Frederick Sheets LORENZ, Petitioner
and Appellant,

v.

BOARD OF MEDICAL EXAMINERS OF THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA,
Respondent.*
Civ. 16735.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 2, California.

Nov. 21, 1955.

Rehearing Denied Dec. 21, 1955.

Hearing Granted Jan. 18, 1956.

Proceeding for writ of mandate to set aside order of Board of Medical Examiners revoking doctor's certificate to practice medicine and surgery. The Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, Harry J. Neubarth, J., denied writ of mandate, and doctor appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Kaufman, J., held that trial court was free to make its own findings on whether offense of which doctor had been convicted involved moral turpitude, in view of fact that action before trial court was a trial de novo.

* Opinion vacated 298 P.2d 537.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Physicians and Surgeons ⇨11(3)

Where, from face of record of conviction alone it can be determined that crime committed by doctor is one of moral turpitude, the Board of Medical Examiners could refuse to receive any contradictory evidence in proceeding to obtain revocation of doctor's certificate to practice medicine and surgery, since record would be conclusive of the question. West's Ann.Gov.Code, § 11500 et seq.; West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, §§ 2361, 2383, 25658(a).

2. Attorney and Client ⇨49

Physicians and Surgeons ⇨11(3)

Where it is not possible to tell from face of record whether moral turpitude was involved in crime of which doctor or attorney was convicted, discipline of doctor or of attorney on basis of such conviction should be imposed by nonsummary procedures. West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, § 6106 et seq.

3. Physicians and Surgeons ⇨11(3)

Where, in proceeding to obtain revocation of doctor's certificate to practice medicine and surgery, doctor was sufficiently advised of nature of testimony he would be confronted with as shown by fact that he had witnesses ready to testify in defense of accusations made, and doctor had waived his right to object to form of accusation, doctor was not deprived of full and fair hearing. West's Ann.Gov.Code, §§ 11500 et seq., 11506(a, b), 11517(c); West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, §§ 2361, 2383, 25658(a), 6101, 6102.

4. Administrative Law and Procedure ⇨676

Review of administrative proceedings must be confined to issues which appear in record as made out by parties to the proceeding.

5. Mandamus ⇨173

In writ of mandate proceeding to set aside order of Board of Medical Examiners revoking doctor's certificate to practice medicine and surgery, trial court was free to make its own findings on whether offense of which doctor had been convicted involved moral turpitude, in view of fact that action before trial court was a trial de novo. West's Ann.Gov.Code, §§ 11500 et seq., 11506(a, b), 11517(c); West's Ann. Bus. & Prof.Code, §§ 2361, 2383, 25658(a), 6101, 6102.

6. Mandamus ⇨ 174

Upon trial de novo in writ of mandate proceeding to set aside order of Board of Medical Examiners revoking doctor's certificate to practice medicine and surgery, court has power to make its findings of fact and conclusions of law. West's Ann. Gov.Code, §§ 11500 et seq., 11506(a, b), 11517(c); West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, §§ 2361, 2383, 25658(a), 6101, 6102.

Lowell L. Dryden, Denison, Dietrich & Anderson, Los Angeles, Hutchinson & Quattrin, San Francisco, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., of California, Dan Kaufmann, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

KAUFMAN, Justice.

This is an appeal from a judgment of the Superior Court in and for the City and County of San Francisco, denying a writ of mandate to appellant, Dr. Frederick Sheets Lorenz, who sought to set aside an order of the Board of Medical Examiners revoking his certificate to practice medicine and surgery in this state.

An Accusation was filed against appellant before the Board on or about April 9, 1953, pursuant to the provisions of the Administrative Procedure Act. Government Code, § 11500 et seq. Paragraph III of said Accusation charged appellant with unprofessional conduct, contrary to the provisions of §§ 2361 and 2383 of the Business and Professions Code in that "on or about the 3rd day of October, 1952, the respondent herein was duly convicted of an offense involving moral turpitude in the Justice's Court of the Brawley Judicial District, * * * in an action entitled 'The People of the State of California, Plaintiff v. Frederick S. Lorenz, Defendant', No. 646, in that respondent was convicted therein, upon his plea of guilty, of a violation of Section 61(a) of the Alcoholic Beverage Control Act of the State of California".

Paragraph IV alleged that for the limited purpose of assisting the Board in ascertaining the extent of discipline to be imposed, should the charges be found to be true, that appellant had had his certificate to practice medicine and surgery in California previously revoked on or about March 13, 1947, for unprofessional conduct consisting of conviction of a crime involving moral turpitude, that such revocation had been suspended and respondent had been placed on probation for five years.

A trial of the charges was held before a hearing officer at Los Angeles on February 23, 1954. His proposed decision found that appellant had been convicted of violation of § 61(a) of the Alcoholic Beverage Control Act (now Business and Professions Code, § 25658(a)), upon his plea of guilty; that said conviction arose out of the isolated act of giving to a minor of the age of 17 years a drink containing more than one-half of one per cent of alcohol by volume; that said crime did not involve moral turpitude. He found the prior disciplinary record of appellant, alleged in Paragraph IV of the Accusation, to be true. His recommendation was that the Accusation be dismissed.

On July 9, 1954, the Board of Medical Examiners rejected the Hearing Officer's decision, as they have power to do under § 11517(c) of the Government Code. Both parties filed written arguments with the Board.

On September 27, 1954, the Board rendered its decision finding that appellant's conviction of a violation of § 61(a) of the Alcoholic Beverage Control Act was a conviction of a crime involving moral turpitude and that appellant's prior disciplinary record was true. The Board revoked appellant's license to practice medicine and surgery in California.

Appellant having filed a petition for a writ of mandate in the Superior Court of San Francisco, a trial was had on the record before the Board, consisting of the pleadings, exhibits, and testimony taken before the Hearing Officer.

On January 19, 1955, the Superior Court rendered its judgment denying the writ. The court found as had the Hearing Officer and the Board, that petitioner had been convicted of violation of § 61(a) of the Alcoholic Beverage Control Act. It also found that this conviction was of a crime involving moral turpitude "in that it arose from the furnishing of intoxicating liquor by the petitioner on or about August 17, 1952, at the Travelodge Motel in Brawley, California, to a minor, David Hardenbrook, without just cause or explanation, and that at said time and place and in connection with the furnishing of said intoxicating liquor the petitioner did engage in immoral acts with the said minor."

Section 2383 of the Business and Professions Code, reads in part as follows: "The conviction of a felony, or of any offense involving moral turpitude, constitutes unprofessional conduct within the meaning of this chapter. The record of the conviction is conclusive evidence of such unprofessional conduct."

Section 25658(a), Business and Professions Code (formerly Sec. 61(a) of the Alcoholic Beverage Control Act) provides that "Every person who sells, furnishes, gives, or causes to be sold, furnished, or given away, any alcoholic beverage to any person under the age of 21 years is guilty of a misdemeanor."

The Accusation filed against appellant by the Board, as heretofore noted, charged that appellant had been convicted of a crime involving moral turpitude.

At the trial before the Hearing Officer, the minor, David Hardenbrook, testified that he was 17 years of age at the time of the alleged offense, and resided in Brawley, California. He had first met appellant when he had been hospitalized at Children's Hospital in Los Angeles when he was nine or ten years of age. Appellant had planned to take David with him on a trip to New Mexico. David was waiting at the Travelodge Motel in the evening when appellant drove in from Hermosa Beach. The witness said that appellant registered, went with David to David's home, and then both returned to the motel. Appellant got bottles of coke, took a bottle of gin from his suitcase, mixed drinks of gin and coke which both of them drank. After this they disrobed and engaged in sex play. They also took photographs of each other. About ten o'clock that evening appellant took David home.

Several character witnesses testified to appellant's good reputation for morality, truth, honesty and veracity in the community. Two doctors testified that they had examined appellant and did not find that he had any homosexual tendencies. A private investigator testified to statements made by David Hardenbrook prior to trial which were contradictory to those made by him at the trial.

Appellant testified that he had practiced for six and one half years in Hermosa Beach, specializing in pediatrics. He denied seeing David at the motel in Brawley, and testified that he saw him at his home. While he admitted having had gin in his suitcase, he denied having given David a drink at the motel. He denied having had a conversation with Deputy Sheriff Thomas to the effect that David was waiting for him at the motel when he arrived; that he did not remember telling him that they went to David's house and then returned to the motel where they talked; that he did not recall telling him that he took a picture of David at the motel. He denied the acts of sexual misconduct. Deputy Sheriff Thomas testified that appellant told him that he would have a mixed drink, and David would drink the mix; that appellant said that David was at the Travelodge Motel when he arrived, that they went to David's home for dinner, returned to the motel for half to three quarters of an hour, and that he had taken a picture of David in his room at the motel.

It is the Board's position that in determining whether or not the appellant had been convicted of a crime involving moral turpitude, the Board of Medical Examiners could consider all of the circumstances surrounding the commission of the violation of the state liquor law, and it relies principally upon the case of Brainard v. State Board of Medical Examiners, 68 Cal.App.2d 591, 157 P.2d 7, and Wyatt v. Cerf, 64 Cal.App. 2d 732, 149 P.2d 309.

[1,2] Appellant argues that whether or not a crime involves moral turpitude is a question of law which must be determined from the record of the conviction alone. In the case of In re McAllister, 14 Cal.2d 602, 604, 95 P.2d 932, 933, a disbarment case, the Supreme Court said that "whether petitioner was convicted of a crime involving moral turpitude or of one not involving moral turpitude was a question of law and not one of fact," and that the court was limited to "the consideration of the record of conviction as certified to us by the clerk of the trial court, as section 287 of the Code of Civil Procedure makes said record conclusive evidence of petitioner's conviction." The cited case was a summary disbarment proceeding now provided for in sections 6101 and 6102, Business and Professions Code, which allow summary disbarment of attorneys convicted of a felony or misdemeanor involving moral turpitude upon certification to the Supreme Court of the record of conviction. Section 2383 of that same code does not provide for mandatory revocation of a physician's license summarily upon certification of the record of conviction to the board, as is true in cases involving attorneys. It provides that conviction constitutes unprofessional conduct, and that the record of conviction is conclusive evidence of such unprofessional conduct, and the Board may revoke or suspend the license. Section 2361, Business and Professions Code empowers the Board to act when instances of unprofessional conduct are brought to its attention. Undoubtedly in cases where from the face of the record of conviction alone it could be determined that the crime was one of moral turpitude, the Board could refuse to receive any contradictory evidence, for in such cases the record would indeed be conclusive of the question. There may be cases, however, where it is not possible to tell from the face of the record whether or not moral turpitude was involved in the crime of which the licensee was convicted. As was said by the Supreme Court in In re Hallinan, 43 Cal.2d 243, 253, 272 P.2d 768, 774, "Although every conviction for violating section 145 [subdivision] (b) may not involve moral turpitude, some convictions may. In such cases discipline or disbarment should be imposed by non-summary procedures. Bus. & Prof.Code, § 6106 et seq." (Emphasis added.) In the present case discipline was imposed by non-summary procedure after a full hearing.

The case of Brainard v. State Board of Medical Examiners, 68 Cal.App.2d 591, 157 P.2d 7, 8, (petition for hearing by the Supreme Court denied), is very similar to the present case. Petitioner therein was charged with unprofessional conduct in that he had been convicted of a crime involving moral turpitude, violation of section 11225 of the Health and Safety Code, failure to keep records of narcotics dispensed. The record of conviction was attached to the complaint, showing that petitioner had entered a plea of guilty to the charge of violating section 11225. A hearing was held at which a narcotics inspector testified that marked money had been given to an "operator", a narcotic addict, who entered petitioner's office and returned with narcotics, and that the marked money was later recovered from petitioner; that an examination of petitioner's records disclosed a shortage in his supply of narcotics.

[3] Petitioner in the cited case contended that he had not been found guilty of a crime involving moral turpitude in the municipal court of Los Angeles, pointing out that he had been given a suspended sentence of one day upon entry of his plea of guilty to the charge of failure to keep a record of narcotics dispensed. The court there said: "Whether or not the offense committed did in fact involve moral turpitude depends upon all of the surrounding circumstances. The Board of Medical Examiners was not limited by the sentence pronounced by the municipal court, but it was justified in hearing evidence concerning all of the circumstances surrounding the offense for the purpose of determining if indeed moral turpitude was involved." The court there relied on In re Hatch, 10 Cal.2d 147, 73 P.2d 885, and In re Disbarment of Rothrock, 16 Cal.2d 449, 106 P.2d 907, 131 A.L.R. 226, which involved disbarment of attorneys. Petitioner in the Brainard case claimed that he had been deprived of his license without due process of law, in that the complaint before the Board charged him only with a misdemeanor. Petitioner in the present case complains also that the Accusation was insufficient to advise him that he would be called upon to defend himself against a sex crime. However, the court in the cited case held that the charge in the complaint that he had been convicted of a crime involving moral turpitude was sufficient to notify petitioner that he would be called upon to meet the accusation that circumstances surrounding the commission of the offense involved moral turpitude. That petitioner herein was sufficiently advised of the nature of the testimony he would be confronted with is evident from the fact that, although the trial took place entirely on one day, February 23, 1954, and although petitioner's counsel sought to have all evidence excluded but the bare record of the conviction, he had medical witnesses ready to testify that they had examined petitioner and had found that he had no homosexual tendencies. There has therefore, been no showing that petitioner was deprived of a full and fair hearing. Furthermore, as found by the trial court, appellant waived his right to object to the form of the Accusation since he failed to present any objection to it in the proceeding before the Board. Government Code, Sec. 11506(b).

Appellant notes that in the opinion in the Brainard case, the court concluded with the statement "It is not claimed that a charge of unprofessional conduct may not be based upon the furnishing of narcotics to an addict." However, appellant therein was charged, not with furnishing narcotics to an addict, but with the failure to keep required records. The basis of the decision was that the Board could inquire into all the circumstances surrounding the commission of the crime for which he was convicted to determine whether or not it involved moral turpitude. Although appellant argues that any offense involving narcotics is one which on its face involves moral turpitude, that is not true. A failure to keep proper records, the crime charged in the Brainard case, might very well result from negligence alone.

It is contended that in the Brainard case, the appellant merely argued that the evidence was insufficient and did not object that the evidence of the "background" crime was outside the issues, an objection which was raised in the present case. However, appellant therein argued that he was not convicted of a crime involving moral turpitude in the municipal court, and the court therein explicitly held that the Board in determining that issue was not limited to the sentence pronounced by the municipal court but could inquire into the circumstances surrounding the commission of the offense.

The Brainard case relied upon only two California cases both involving attorneys, In re Hatch, supra, and In re Disbarment of Rothrock, supra. The Hatch case, as noted in the later Hallinan case, was not a summary proceeding. Hatch had been convicted of violation of the Corporate Securities Act. The court there said that "Conceivably not in every case of the conviction of violations of the Corporate Securities Act will the face of the record of conviction indicate conclusively whether the offense involved moral turpitude. * * * There is necessarily a field of doubtful cases where the determination as to whether moral turpitude was involved may fall on one or the other side of the line, depending upon the circumstances of the particular case. * * * This court would not be justified in holding that, because the circumstances of any one such case might indicate a mere technical omission without the stigma of moral guilt, the entire class of offenses is one not involving moral turpitude." [10 Cal.2d 147, 73 P.2d 886.]

Appellant points out that the medical cases and attorney disbarment cases are not truly parallel, in that Section 6106 of the Business and Professions Code, provides that any act involving moral turpitude is cause for disbarment whether the act is a felony or misdemeanor or not. The Medical Act has no similar provision. Thus, in In re Hallinan, Section 6106 was relied on as authority for the State Bar Board to inquire as to "whether in the commission of the crime the convicted lawyer was guilty of misconduct that requires his suspension or disbarment." The court there held that the conviction did not involve intent to defraud as an essential element of the crime proscribed, and that the issue of fraud or dishonesty was not necessarily involved and was not res judicata. A reference to the Board of Governors of the State Bar Board was therefore ordered for a hearing "as to whether the facts and circumstances surrounding the commission of the offense" of which petitioner was convicted "involved moral turpitude or other misconduct warranting disbarment or suspension." This case holds that if the investigation disclosed that the crime of which petitioner was convicted did involve moral turpitude, the court then could disbar him for that conviction after hearing, or if other misconduct not involving moral turpitude but warranting disbarment was disclosed, the court could of course, act on that matter.

In an earlier case, In re Richardson, 15 Cal.2d 536, 102 P.2d 1076, 1079, a reference was ordered for an investigation "whether, under all the circumstances, moral turpitude was involved in the charge and plea." Later, in In re Richardson, 20 Cal.2d 894, 123 P.2d 11, the charge was ordered dismissed because the report showed that "the facts and circumstances surrounding the conviction" of petitioner did "not disclose moral turpitude to have been involved in the commission of the offense".

Respondent contends that the act of furnishing liquor to the minor who was seventeen years of age, not being excused or justified in any way, was an act of moral turpitude, since it was an act contributing to the delinquency of a minor.

Appellant argues that the evidence respecting the drink furnished to the minor will not sustain respondent's order because there is nothing in the evidence to connect the drink with the lewd conduct to which the minor testified. The minor did not testify that the drink had any effect on him, that it paralyzed his will, or that it was any inducement to what happened later. However, the Board, as well as the trial court, was entitled to infer from the testimony of the minor that the drinking of the intoxicating liquor had some connection with what followed. It cannot be said as a matter of law that it did not. People v. Koosistra, 58 Cal.App. 277, 279, 208 P. 316.

[4-6] It is urged that prejudicial error was committed in making findings upon issues not presented by the administrative record, or the pleadings. It is fundamental that the review of administrative proceedings must be confined to issues appearing in the record as made out by the parties to the proceedings. Bohn v. Watson, 130 Cal.App.2d 24, 278 P.2d 454. It is claimed that the trial court went beyond the issues in making the finding concerning the sex crime and its connection with the liquor violation. However, the trial court was free to make its own findings on whether or not the offense involved moral turpitude, for in a trial de novo in this type of case the court has power to make its findings of fact and conclusions of law. Dare v. Board of Medical Examiners, 21 Cal.2d 790, 801, 136 P.2d 304. As was earlier noted, appellant was well aware of the nature of the moral turpitude with which he was charged, since at the beginning of the hearing he came prepared with two medical witnesses who were ready to and did testify that he had no homosexual tendencies. Appellant had the right to object to the sufficiency of the Accusation, Government Code, § 11506(a), and this he did not do. See, Marlo v. State Board of Medical Examiners, 112 Cal.App. 2d 276, 246 P.2d 69; Stuck v. Board of Medical Examiners, 94 Cal.App.2d 751, 755-756, 211 P.2d 389.

We conclude that the findings and judgment of the trial court are amply supported by the evidence and the law and that no prejudicial error appears in the record before us.

Judgment denying writ of mandate affirmed.

NOURSE, P. J., concurs.

DOOLING, Justice.

I concur because I feel bound by the rule announced in Brainard v. State Board of Medical Examiners, 68 Cal.App.2d 591, 157 P.2d 7, in which the Supreme Court denied a hearing. Were it a matter of first impression I would hold that the violation of the Beverage Control Act did not involve the subsequent alleged sex offense of which appellant has never been convicted, and hence did not involve moral turpitude.

137 Cal.App.2d Supp. 849

Joseph G. KENNEDY and Frank Barnes, etc., Plaintiffs and Respondents,
v.

Mr. Pierre DOMERQUE, et ux., etc.,
Defendants and Appellants.

C. A. 8804.

Appellate Department, Superior Court,
Los Angeles County, California.

Nov. 9, 1955.

Action to recover damages authorized by Civil Code in case an innkeeper refuses accommodation because of color of applicant. The Municipal Court of Santa Monica Judicial District, Harry J. Bordé, J., rendered judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appealed. The Appellate Department of the Superior Court, Bishop, Acting P. J., held that there was no such community of interest between the two plaintiffs who had made and checked on lodging reservation and the persons for whom lodgings had been reserved as would permit of a representative suit by such plaintiffs.

Reversed.

I. Parties ⇐12

Representative action by two individuals on behalf of themselves and four others would not lie, since four persons are not so numerous that it would be impractical to have them appear as plaintiffs, should they desire to press cause of action.

2. Parties ⇐11

There was no such community of interest, between the two plaintiffs who had made and checked on lodging reservation and persons for whom lodgings had been reserved, as would permit of a representative suit by such plaintiffs for damages authorized by Civil Code section in case an innkeeper refuses accommodation because of color of applicant. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 52; West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 382.

3. Principal and Agent ⇐23(5)

Evidence, on issue as to plaintiffs' right to sue innkeeper for refusal because of color, of accommodations to four other persons, would not sustain finding that plaintiffs had acted as agents for the four persons allegedly denied accommodations. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 52; West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 382.

4. Judgment ⇐253(1)

Where complaint alleged that, by reason of innkeeper's refusal of accommodations because of color of plaintiffs, plaintiffs had suffered damages in sum of $100 each, no plaintiff was entitled to more than $100. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 52; West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 382.

Carl B. Sturzenacker, Hollywood, for appellants.

Carter, Flournoy & Woods, Los Angeles, for respondents.

BISHOP, Acting Presiding Judge.

This is an action to recover the damages authorized by section 52, Civil Code, in case an innkeeper refuses accommodations because of the color of the applicant. Two plaintiffs, Joseph G. Kennedy and Frank Barnes, bring the action on behalf of themselves and four others, alleging in the complaint that the others for whom they purport to act "are so numerous and in varied localities that it would be impractical to bring all before the Court as individual plaintiffs * * *" four persons are not so numerous that it would be impractical to have them appear as plaintiffs, should they desire to press a cause of action. Of greater consequence, the plaintiffs and the persons on whose behalf the present action was brought, do not have a "community of interest" that brings them within the purview of the section. Weaver v. Pasadena Tournament of Roses, 1948, 32 Cal.2d 833, 837-840, 198 P.2d 514, 517; Ballin v. Los Angeles County Fair, 1941, 43 Cal.App.2d, Supp., 884, 887-888, 111 P.2d 753, 756.

[1,2] Section 382, Code of Civil Procedure, does not authorize this attempt at a representative action. In the first place,

[3] In support of the judgment—which provided that plaintiffs recover from defendants the sum of $400—the plaintiffs argue that they acted as agents for the other plaintiffs in seeking lodging and as agents could bring this action. Without seeking to determine whether or not an agent may prosecute an action on his principal's behalf, in such a situation as we have here, we find plaintiffs' argument lacks convincing force because it is supported neither by the pleading nor by the evidence. The theory of the complaint was that this is a representative action, not one brought by an agent on behalf of his principal. The evidence revealed that the only connection that plaintiff Frank Barnes had with the affair was that, upon receipt of a telegram from plaintiff Bailey requesting him to reserve 1 double room and 2 single rooms, he did so—nothing more. No agency to bring an action on behalf of Bailey, or any plaintiff, can be spelled out of these facts. Plaintiff Joseph Kennedy did go around to see about the lodgings that Bailey had reserved, probably on behalf of the other plaintiffs (not including Barnes, who was not desirous of accommodations), but there is nothing in that circumstance to warrant an inference that he thereby became the agent of the others to bring this action.

[4] For another reason the judgment should be reversed. The complaint refers to the two who bring the action and the four on whose behalf it is brought, as plaintiffs. After alleging that the plaintiffs made application for lodging, which the defendants refused them solely because of their color, the complaint concluded its allegations with the statement "that by reason of the premises these plaintiffs have suffered damages in the sum of one hundred dollars ($100.00) each." A prayer for $500 followed. The findings, by reference, find the allegation as to damages true (except as to plaintiff Willie, who was nonsuited). But by the judgment that was entered it was ordered, etc., "that plaintiffs recover from defendants the sum of $400.00." No plaintiff was entitled to more than $100. The plaintiff Barnes was not refused lodging, so far as appears, and he was not entitled to any judgment in his favor. We are not passing upon the question whether those plaintiffs who did not personally appear to claim their lodgings have a cause of action.

The judgment is reversed.

SWAIN, J., concurs.

PATROSSO, Judge.

I concur, with this additional comment: Assuming that the plaintiffs, as well as the other named persons upon whose behalf the action purports to be brought, could properly be joined as parties plaintiff (See Code of Civil Procedure, section 378), and disregarding, in the absence of a special demurrer, the fact that their individual causes of action are not separately stated, a joint judgment in favor of all such plaintiffs is not authorized. Emery v. Pacific Employers Ins. Co., 1937, 8 Cal.2d 663, 666, 67 P.2d 1046.

136 Cal.App.2d 887

Ethel Leona LEGG, Plaintiff, Respondent and Cross-Appellant,

v.

MUTUAL BENEFIT HEALTH AND ACCI-DENT OF OMAHA, Defendant, Appellant and Cross-Respondent.

Leona Ethel LEGG, Plaintiff and Appellant,

v.

MUTUAL BENEFIT HEALTH AND ACCI-DENT OF OMAHA, an association, and United Benefit Life Insurance of Omaha, a company, Defendants and Respondents.

Nos. 20687, 20952.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 2, California.

Nov. 30, 1955.

Action to recover monthly disability benefits under policy issued to plaintiff by defendant. The jury returned a verdict in favor of plaintiff, and the Superior Court, Los Angeles County, entered judgment accordingly. Plaintiff moved for a new trial, and defendant appealed from order granting the motion. Plaintiff appealed from the judgment and from order denying her application for default judgment. The District Court of Appeal, 289 P.2d 550, affirmed the order granting the new trial and the order denying default judgment and dismissed the appeal from the judgment. On defendant's petition for rehearing, the same court held that where attack upon sufficiency of notice of motion for new trial to raise issue of sufficiency of evidence to support verdict was made for first time in petition for rehearing, and it did not appear that any objection to asserted defect had been urged in trial court, objection came too late.

Rehearing denied.

Leona Ethel Legg, pro. per.

J. Edward Haley, Los Angeles, for respondent.

PER CURIAM.

In its petition for rehearing defendant-appellant Mutual Benefit for the first time attacks the sufficiency of the notice of motion for new trial to raise the issue of the sufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict. It does not appear that any objection to the asserted defect was urged in the trial court. Bauer v. Helene Curtis Industries, Inc., 117 Cal.App.2d 66, 68-69, 254 P.2d 931, and it is now too late to raise the point for the first time. Nittler v. Continental Casualty Co., 94 Cal.App. 498, 506, 271 P. 555, 272 P. 309—opinion on denial of rehearing.

Rehearing denied.

137 Cal.App.2d 405

BANK OF AMERICA NATIONAL TRUST AND SAVINGS ASSOCIATION, a national banking association, as Administrator with the Will Annexed of the Estate of Cordella McTarnahan, Deceased, Plaintiff and Appellant,

v.

George E. BEARD and Irene L. Beard, Defendants and Respondents.

Civ. 8683.

District Court of Appeal, Third District,
California.

Nov. 30, 1955.

Appeal and Error ⇐832(4)

Where attack upon sufficiency of notice of motion for new trial to raise issue of sufficiency of evidence to support verdict was made for first time in petition for rehearing, and it did not appear that any objection to asserted defect had been urged in trial court, objection came too late.

Action by administrator on note executed by defendants in favor of deceased. The Superior Court, Shasta County, Richard B. Eaton, J., in trial without jury, entered judgment for defendants, and administrator appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Schottky, J., held that evidence was sufficient to establish that deceased had intended to, and did effectively, release obligation evidenced by the note.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Appeal and Error $\S$ 931(1), 989, 1010(1)

Issues of fact must be determined by the trial court, and an appellate tribunal is bound by the familiar rule that, before it can be justified in reversing judgment on ground of insufficiency of evidence, it must appear from record that, accepting the full force of the evidence, together with every inference which may reasonably be drawn therefrom, favorable to the prevailing party, and excluding all evidence in conflict therewith, it still appears that the law precludes such a party from recovering a judgment.

2. Release $\S$ 57(1)

In action by administrator on note executed by defendants in favor of deceased, evidence was sufficient to establish that deceased had intended to, and did effectively, release obligation evidenced by the note.

Leroy P. Anderson, Costa Mesa, for appellant.

Carlton & Shadwell, Redding, for respondents.

SCHOTTKY, Justice.

Appellant, as administrator, commenced an action against respondents to recover on a promissory note executed by respondents in favor of Cordelia McTarnahan, deceased, in the principal sum of $1,500. Respondents filed an answer denying that the promissory note had not been paid in full and alleging "that on June 14, 1949, Cordelia McTarnahan executed and delivered to the defendants an acknowledgment that said note was paid in full and acknowledging that she had received full payment thereunder and that she no longer had any claim against said defendants because of the execution of said promissory note."

Following a trial before the court sitting without a jury, the court found in accordance with the allegations of the answer and rendered judgment in favor of respondents.

Appellant has appealed from the judgment and its sole contention is that the judgment is contrary to the evidence.

The record shows that Cordelia McTarnahan was the aunt of respondent George E. Beard. George E. Beard testified that partial payments were made on the note, in the total sum of $204.81, by three checks dated February 1, 1949, March 1, 1949, and June 12, 1949, respectively. On or about June 14, 1949, George E. Beard paid Cordelia McTarnahan $800 in cash, and received from her a written release signed by her, indicating that the note had been satisfied in full. This release was introduced in evidence and respondent George E. Beard testified that it was prepared at his aunt's request and that she signed it.

Appellant offered no evidence to dispute the genuineness of the release, or to show that it had been obtained by fraud, coercion or mistake. The only evidence offered to support the contention that there is still a balance due on the note was the testimony of Leroy P. Anderson, appellant's attorney at the trial. Mr. Anderson testified to conversations between Mrs. McTarnahan and respondent George E. Beard in April, 1950, made in the presence of Mr. Anderson and George McCartney, in which Mrs. McTarnahan asked respondent what he was going to do about paying the balance on the note, and in which said respondent stated that he would pay it as soon as he could make arrangements. Respondent George E. Beard denied having been asked that by Mrs. McTarnahan. He was not asked whether he had at that time promised to pay a balance still due, and there is no admission by him anywhere in the record of any such statement. George McCartney was not produced to give his version of the conversations in question. Appellant offered no other evidence.

Appellant argues that the record shows that respondent George E. Beard made statements after the date of the written acknowledgment indicating that he still owed money on the note. Appellant states:

"It is the contention of the Appellant that the Respondent, George E. Beard made declarations against interest on April 29 and 30, 1950. That his statements of said dates were sufficient to overcome the effect of the purported receipt dated June 14, 1949.

"The declarations of George E. Beard of April 29 and 30, 1950 were proof that he owed a balance on the Promissory Note.

"The Finding of Fact that said Promissory Note was paid and satisfied in full on the 14th day of June, 1949, should be set aside on the ground that it is contrary to the evidence in the case."

[1] It is apparent that the issue on this appeal is one of fact and that the evidence is conflicting. Appellant's argument is but an argument as to the weight of conflicting evidence. Issues of fact must be determined by the trial court, and an appellate tribunal is bound by the familiar rule that before it can be justified in reversing a judgment upon the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence, it must appear from the record that accepting the full force of the evidence, together with every inference favorable to the prevailing party which may reasonably be drawn therefrom, and excluding all evidence in conflict therewith, it still appears that the law precludes such party from recovering a judgment.

[2] The following from the oral opinion of the trial court is fully supported by the record:

"* * * There is affirmative testimony, not directly contradicted or apparently acceptable [susceptible] of direct contradiction at this time, that in consideration of a payment of eight hundred dollars in cash made before such sum or the greater part thereof was due, and for the convenience in another transaction of the obligee, and further for considerations of a personal character, that the said obligee did make in writing a release in satisfaction of the obligation. The intention of the payee of the note to release it by such document is possibly somewhat impeached by the testimony of the later reference thereto, but the document itself is explicit and if genuine has in it more convincing weight than testimony respecting oral statements made at a later date. At least, I believe the law to be that if at the time the obligee did knowingly and explicitly release an obligation it would be released regardless of what she might say about it thereafter. The document is explicit in term; it is payment of a time obligation before it is due as an additional consideration. The signature appears generally compatible with that found on the checks, whose genuineness is not disputed. The lady at the time may have made a poor bargain, but considering the family relationship involved she was free if she chose to act in part for motives not commercial in character.

"I find the balance of probability to be that she at that time did intend to, and effectively did, release the obligation."

The judgment is affirmed.

VAN DYKE, P. J., and PEEK, J., concur.

45 Cal.2d 623

Treasure Alice ARENS, Administratrix de bonis non of the Estate of Chauncey L. Hartman, deceased, Petitioner,
v.

SUPERIOR COURT of the State of California in and for the COUNTY OF SAN BERNARDINO, Respondent.

Maude H. McLaren, Real Party in Interest.

L. A. 23765.

Supreme Court of California,

In Bank.

Nov. 29, 1955.

Proceeding on motion to vacate an order setting aside a probate homestead. The Superior Court, San Bernardino County, R. Bruce Findlay, J., denied motion, and movant petitioned for certiorari. The Supreme Court, Traynor, J., held that order setting aside a probate homestead was appealable, and certiorari was unavailable to review question whether court had jurisdiction to enter order even though petitioner had had no notice of the proceeding to have the homestead set apart.

Proceeding dismissed.

Schauer, J., dissented.

1. Executors and Administrators ⇨194(6, 7)

Order setting aside probate homestead was an appealable order and became final when time for appeal expired, irrespective of whether it was in excess of jurisdiction of court. Probate Code, § 1240.

2. Certiorari ⇨5(1)

Certiorari does not lie to review an appealable order. West's Ann.Code Civ. Proc. § 1068.

3. Appeal and Error ⇨113(1)

An order denying a motion to vacate is not appealable.

4. Certiorari ⇨5(1)

Where order sought to be set aside was appealable, certiorari did not lie to review an order denying a motion to vacate the original order. West's Ann.Code Civ. Proc. § 1068.

5. Executors and Administrators ⇨194(1)

Statute describing form of notice to be given upon petition to set aside a probate homestead does not require actual notice. Probate Code, § 1200.

6. Certiorari ⇨5(1)

Order setting aside a probate homestead was appealable, and certiorari was unavailable to review question whether court had jurisdiction to enter order even though petitioner had had no actual notice of the proceeding to have the homestead set apart. West's Ann.Code Civ. Proc. § 1068.

Krag & Sweet and Donald R. Krag, Alhambra, for petitioner.

No appearance for respondent.

Lonergan & Jordan and A. M. Sessions, San Bernardino, for real party in interest.

TRAYNOR, Justice.

On March 7, 1951, approximately 19 years after the death of Chauncey L. Hartman, a verified petition was filed in the Superior Court of San Bernardino County on behalf of his widow, Nellie May Hartman, by her son-in-law, Charles R. McLaren, alleging that the decedent had an undivided two-thirds interest in certain real property of the value of $4,075 and that the widow had an undivided one-third interest therein. The petition prayed that the real property be set apart to the widow "for her lifetime, as a probate homestead, and for such other relief as may be proper in the premises."

On April 18, 1951, the court entered the following order:

"The verified petition of Chas. R. McLaren for an order setting apart a homestead under the provisions of Sections 660 and 661 of the Probate Code, heretofore filed in this Court, came on regularly to be heard this 23rd day of March, 1951; it appears to the satisfaction of the Court, and the Court finds, that notice of the hearing on said petition has been regularly given in accordance with the provisions of Section 1200 of the Probate Code; and the Court having heard the evidence, it appearing therefrom that the allegations in the petition are true and that at the time of decedent's death, Nellie May Hartman, the surviving widow, was a member of decedent's family, and it having been duly made to appear to the Court that no homestead had been selected during the lifetime of the decedent, and it further appearing the property hereinafter described was owned, as to an undivided one-third interest, by Nellie May Hartman, the surviving widow of decedent, as her separate property, and as to the remaining two-thirds interest by decedent, as his separate property, and that said real property should be set aside to the surviving widow.

"It is hereby ordered that the land described as follows, to wit: [description omitted] * * * be and the same is hereby set apart to Nellie May Hartman, the widow of decedent, as a homestead for the use of Nellie May Hartman, and that said real property so set aside shall vest absolutely in and belong to her."

On February 3, 1952, Nellie May Hartman died leaving a will in which she sought to devise the real property to her daughter Maude H. McLaren. On September 7, 1954, petitioner herein, Treasure Alice Arens, the daughter of decedent Chauncey L. Hartman, noticed a motion to vacate the order of April 18, 1951, setting apart the probate homestead absolutely to Nellie May Hartman, on the grounds that the relief granted was in excess of that prayed for, see Burnett v. King, 33 Cal.2d 805, 205 P.2d 657, 12 A.L.R.2d 333, and that under Probate Code section 661 the court acted in excess of its jurisdiction in setting apart the probate homestead to Nellie May Hartman absolutely instead of for life. After a hearing the court on September 23, 1954, denied the motion on the grounds that "it appears from the record that since no requests for notice were filed, the notice as given was legally adequate" and that "petioners' remedy was a timely appeal from the Order made." Petitioner seeks a writ of certiorari to review the order denying the motion to vacate the order setting apart the probate homestead.

[1-4] The order setting aside the probate homestead was an appealable order and became final when the time for appeal expired, Prob.Code, § 1240, whether or not it was in excess of the jurisdiction of the court. Phelan v. Superior Court, 35 Cal.2d 363, 366, 217 P.2d 951. Certiorari does not lie to review that order, for the writ can issue only when "there is no appeal." Code Civ.Proc. § 1068. Nor can this rule be avoided by means of a motion to vacate the order. Although the order denying the motion to vacate is not appealable, Kramer v. Superior Court, 36 Cal.2d 159, 161, 222 P.2d 874, review of that order would require a review of the order to be vacated, and the appealability of the latter prevents a review thereof by certiorari.

[5,6] Petitioner contends, however, that she could not appeal from the order setting apart the probate homestead because she received no notice of the petition filed by Charles R. McLaren or of the order made pursuant thereto, and that therefore certiorari is an available remedy. See, Grinbaum v. Superior Court, 192 Cal. 528, 556, 221 P. 635. It is immaterial that petitioner received no actual notice of the petition or of the court's order. Section 1200 of the Probate Code, which prescribes the form of notice to be given upon a petition to set apart a probate homestead, does not require actual notice. It provides, however, for special notice to be given to persons requesting it at their post office address given in the request for special notice. Petitioner made no such request. Section 1200 also provides: "Proof of the giving of notice must be made at the hearing; and if it appears to the satisfaction of the court that said notice has been regularly given, the court shall so find in its order, and such order, when it becomes final, shall be conclusive upon all persons." Since the order of April 18, 1951, quoted above, shows that the foregoing conditions were met, the order is "conclusive upon all persons." Since no such statutory provision was involved in Grinbaum v. Superior Court, supra, and since the record therein affirmatively showed that the required notice was not given, an exception to the rule prescribed by section 1068 of the Code of Civil Procedure cannot be made under the authority of that case.

Since it is clear that certiorari does not lie, we do not reach the question whether or not the order of April 18, 1951 was in excess of the court's jurisdiction.

The proceeding is dismissed.

GIBSON, C. J., and SHENK, EDMONDS, CARTER, and SPENCE, JJ., concur.

SCHAUER, Justice.

I dissent. In my opinion the trial court was without power to grant relief which exceeded that authorized by statute (Prob. Code, § 661), requested in the petition for order to set apart probate homestead, and designated in the notice of hearing on the petition as the relief sought. Furthermore, it is my opinion that the writ of certiorari should be available to Treasure Alice Arens for the reason that she lost her right to appeal from the order setting aside the homestead without fault on her part because she had no actual notice of the making of such order, and even if she had received actual notice she would have had no reason to anticipate that she should appear to oppose the granting of relief in excess of that prayed for and statutorily authorized.

The real property in question was acquired by decedent Chauncey L. Hartman by purchase prior to his marriage to Nellie May Hartman; from this it would appear to have been wholly his separate property. However, the order which purports to set it aside absolutely to Nellie May Hartman states that it appears that such property "was owned, as to an undivided one-third interest, by Nellie May Hartman, the surviving widow of decedent, as her separate property, and as to the remaining two-thirds interest by decedent, as his separate property." This language substantially follows language of the petition for an order to set apart a homestead. It is apparently based upon a will of decedent which was filed with a petition for letters of administration but was not probated because proof of the signatures of the subscribing witnesses could not be obtained. The will stated that Chauncey L. Hartman and Nellie May Hartman had mutually agreed that he owned a two-thirds interest in the realty as his separate property and she owned a one-third interest as her separate property; it purported to devise decedent's two-thirds interest to Nellie May for life with remainder to decedent's two children, Treasure Alice and Donald.

The petition for order setting apart a probate homestead prays that the order set apart the property to Nellie May Hartman "for her lifetime." In the notice of hearing the relief prayed for is not stated but the "petition is hereby referred to for further particulars." The order finds "that notice of the hearing on said petition has been regularly given" (italics added). Yet the superior court proceeded to order that the real property "shall vest absolutely in and belong to" Nellie May Hartman.

Whether the decedent owned the entire fee in the real property or a two-thirds interest as his separate property, the probate court was authorized by statute to set it aside only for a limited period not exceeding the lifetime of the widow. Section 661 of the Probate Code provides, in material part, that the court must select a homestead "out of the community property or out of real property owned in common by the decedent and the person or persons entitled to have the homestead set apart, or if there be no community property and no such property owned in common, then out of the separate property of the decedent. If the property set apart is the separate property of the decedent, the court can set it apart only for a limited period, to be designated in the order, and in no case beyond the lifetime of the surviving spouse * * *". Under this section the separate property interest of a decedent, whether it be the entire ownership of the property or an interest in common with the survivor entitled to the homestead, can be set apart for a limited time only. (In re Estate of Maxwell (1935), 7 Cal.App.2d 641, 642, 46 P.2d 777.)

It has been stated and held that an order setting aside absolutely a probate homestead to a widow from separate property of the deceased husband, although erroneous, is not void. (In re Estate of Bette (1915), 171 Cal. 583, 585-586, 153 P. 949; In re Estate of Huelsman (1899), 127 Cal. 275, 276, 59 P. 776; In re Moore (1892), 96 Cal. 522, 531, 31 P. 584; Fergodo v. Donohue (1919), 40 Cal.App. 670, 671, 181 P. 819; see also In re Estate of Burns (1880), 54 Cal. 223, 227-228; Rountree v. Montague (1916), 30 Cal.App. 170, 176-178, 157 P. 623.) The foregoing cases, however, did not concern an attack by certiorari upon the order setting apart the homestead, nor did they concern the effect of an order which granted relief in excess of that prayed for in the petition and designated in the notice as the relief which would be sought.

For the purpose of determining the right to review by certiorari, action contrary to that authorized by statute (here, the granting of relief in excess of that authorized by section 661 of the Probate Code) is action in excess of jurisdiction. (See, e. g., Burtnett v. King (1949), 33 Cal.2d 805, 807, 205 P.2d 657, 12 A.L.R.2d 333; Abelleira v. District Court of Appeal (1941), 17 Cal. 2d 280, 288, 109 P.2d 942, 132 A.L.R. 715; Rodman v. Superior Court (1939), 13 Cal. 2d 262, 270, 89 P.2d 109.) Furthermore, in a proceeding instituted in the probate court by statutorily authorized posted notice, where interested persons have no actual notice, policy should demand that the relief granted cannot exceed that which, according to the notice, will be sought. Such policy is analogous to that which underlies the rule that in civil default actions a decree which grants relief in excess of that prayed for exceeds the court's jurisdiction and is void. (Burtnett v. King (1949), supra, 33 Cal.2d 805, 808, 205 P.2d 657, 12 A. L.R.2d 333.)

I agree with petitioner's contention that, despite the theoretical availability of the remedy of appeal, certiorari should be available because without any fault on her part she had no actual knowledge of the proceeding to set apart the homestead and therefore could not appeal. (Grinbaum v. Superior Court (1923), 192 Cal. 528, 556, 221 P. 635; see also Lee v. Small Claims Court (1939), 34 Cal.App.2d 1, 4, 92 P.2d 937, and cases there cited [the statute which resulted in a situation where the time for appeal from the judgment of the small claims court might well expire without defendant having notice of entry of judgment against him has been since amended (Code Civ.Proc., § 117, am. Stats. 1951, ch. 1143, p. 2912, § 1; Stats.1951, ch. 1737, p. 4087, § 20; Stats.1955, ch. 566, § 1)].)

For the foregoing reasons, I would annul the order of April 18, 1951, which sets apart the homestead absolutely.

137 Cal.App.2d 477

Clifford H. ECHOLS and Lenore Echols, Plaintiffs and Appellants,

v.

Carl C. Fabyunkey, Sr., Defendant and Respondent.

Civ. 8662.

District Court of Appeal, Third District,
California.

Dec. 2, 1955.

Parents' action against truck owner for wrongful death of their son, age 2 years and 10 months. The Superior Court, Yuba County, Warren Steel, J., entered judgment for truck owner and parents appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Schottky, J., held that evidence sustained finding that truck driver was not negligent as to lookout immediately preceding accident in which truck struck boy as he was running across a lightly traveled gravel road.

Affirmed.

1. Appeal and Error ⇨110

Order denying motion for new trial is nonappealable, and appeal therefrom must be dismissed. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 963.

2. Automobiles ⇨244(7)

In parents' action to recover for wrongful death of their son, age 2 years and 10 months, evidence sustained finding that truck driver was not negligent as to lookout immediately preceding accident in which truck struck boy as he was running across a lightly traveled gravel road.

3. Appeal and Error ⇨1010(1)

On issues of fact, trial court and appellate tribunal are bound by the familiar rule that before a judgment may be reversed on the ground of insufficiency of evidence, it must appear from record that accepting full force of the evidence, together with every inference favorable to the prevailing party which may reasonably be drawn therefrom, and excluding all evidence in conflict therewith, it still appears that the law precludes such party from recovering a judgment.

Erling S. Norby, Marysville, for appellants.

Rich, Fuidge & Dawson, Marysville, for respondent.

SCHOTTKY, Justice.

[1] Plaintiffs commenced an action for damages alleging that the death of their son, Thomas Echols, aged 2 years, 10 months, was caused by the negligent operation of defendant's 1948 pickup truck. Defendant filed an answer denying any negligence on his part and also setting up the defense that plaintiffs were negligent in that they failed to exercise due care for the safety of their son and were themselves guilty of negligence and contributory negligence. The action was tried before the court sitting without a jury and the court found that "said accident occurred without negligence on the part of either said decedent or of said defendant and was unavoidable in character." Judgment was entered in favor of defendant, and plaintiffs made a motion for a new trial which was denied. Plaintiffs have appealed from the judgment and from the order denying that motion for a new trial. The order denying the motion being nonappealable, Code Civ.Proc., sec. 963; Pipoly v. Benson, 20 Cal.2d 366, 369, 125 P.2d 482, 147 A.L.R. 515, the appeal therefrom must be dismissed.

The only issue involved upon this appeal is the sufficiency of the evidence to support the judgment. Appellants' argument may be summarized in their own words as follows:

"* * * it is the contention of plaintiffs that the defendant was negligent as a matter of law in that he utterly failed to keep a proper lookout ahead; that the defendant at the time of and preceding the accident was not exercising that degree of prudence and watchfulness—a proper lookout ahead—that the law requires of him in the operation of a motor vehicle."

The accident occurred a little after 5 o'clock of the afternoon of March 15, 1953, on a lightly traveled, unpaved but graveled foothill road, 28 feet 2 inches of flat surface across, with about an 18 foot graveled portion in the center. At the place of impact the generally traveled path followed by vehicle traffic was westerly of the center of the graveled portion so that a vehicle following the more firmly packed down traffic tracks, and going northerly, would have its left wheels 5 or 6 feet from the left edge of the graveled portion. This is known as the Texas Hill road and runs in a straight northeasterly direction from the point at which respondent entered upon it for over 100 yards to the point of impact and for some distance beyond. Going northerly the road is upgrade to the extent that respondent was proceeding in second gear and at a speed of 15 miles per hour. For at least 100 yards respondent had a clear view of the road and meadow on each side, and he saw three children playing just off the edge of the shoulder of the road on the left (decedent was the fourth child). He traversed this road two to three times a day and often saw children playing in the vicinity of the road near this location.

About ten minutes before the accident, decedent, his half-brother Jerry, aged 8, and two younger children had been playing about a little cave-like indentation and a piece of tin material, off the right side of the road. Then Jerry and two of the children crossed over to the left side of the road where they were playing when respondent saw them. The decedent, Tommy, remained on the right side. Although the testimony of Jerry is confusing, the court found that when respondent was approximately 30 feet from the point of impact, decedent ran across the road from right to left and after reaching safety, Jerry, who was confused because of the imminent peril, advised him to "go back," when he meant to say "come back", and Tommy again ran out into the road from left to right and was struck. At the time of impact respondent's vehicle had passed Jerry and was between Jerry and Tommy and Jerry did not see the collision. Respondent saw no child on the road at any time. He only saw a "flash like a bird" directly ahead of his right headlight and going from right to left. He didn't know that he had struck a child until he stopped the car, got out and looked back. When he picked the child up his head was where the left wheel would come.

Respondent was 68 years of age, wore glasses and had had an operation for cataract on one eye in 1947 and on the other in 1950. However, he demonstrated to the satisfaction of the court that his eyesight was satisfactory.

[2,3] We are unable to agree with appellants' contention that respondent was negligent as a matter of law. We believe that the evidence presented an issue of fact and that the court's determination that respondent was not guilty of negligence is supported by the record. As is so often stated in instructions to juries in negligence cases, negligence is not an absolute term but a relative one and in deciding whether there was negligence in a given case the conduct in question must be considered in the light of all the surrounding circumstances as shown by the evidence. Appellants' argument upon the question of the sufficiency of the evidence is but an argument as to the weight of conflicting evidence. Issues of fact must be determined by the trial court and an appellate tribunal is bound by the familiar rule that before it can be justified in reversing a judgment upon the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence, it must appear from the record that accepting the full force of the evidence, together with every inference favorable to the prevailing party which may reasonably be drawn therefrom, and excluding all evidence in conflict therewith, it still appears that the law precludes such party from recovering a judgment.

It would serve no useful purpose to review the cases cited by appellant as the factual situations in those cases were different from those in the instant case. Each case must be determined upon its own facts. In the instant case the court found that respondent did all he was required to do under the circumstances and that the tragedy was an unavoidable accident. The trial court in denying appellants' motion for a new trial stated: "I can't see anything at all as far as liability is concerned. I think it is just one of those unavoidable accidents that could have happened to you or me or anyone else driving along at that rate of speed. * * * It was just a question of whether or not he acted as a reasonable, prudent driver would have under the circumstances as they developed there and to hold him negligent would be wrong in my opinion."

In view of the foregoing we are satisfied that the conclusion reached by the trial court finds substantial support in the record.

The judgment is affirmed and the purported appeal from the order denying the motion for a new trial is dismissed.

VAN DYKE, P. J., and PEEK, J., concur.

Maurice Wilson ALLEN, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

JIM RUBY CONSTRUCTION COMPANY, a California corporation et al., Defendant
and Appellant. ***

Civ. 20937.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 3, California.

Nov. 30, 1955.

Rehearing Granted Dec. 27, 1955.

Action by employee against contractor for injuries sustained when employee fell into pit which contractor had excavated on employer's premises. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Samuel R. Blake, J., entered judgment upon the verdict for employee, and contractor appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Shinn, P. J., held that, where employee had actual knowledge of existence of the pit, contractor's failure to barricade the pit would not constitute negligence as to such employee.

Judgment reversed with instructions to enter judgment for defendant.

1. Negligence ⇨50, 52

Even if presence of rod on ground by pit being dug by contractor on employer's premises created a dangerous condition, and contractor knew, or, in exercise of ordinary care would have known, of such conditions, such facts would not impose upon contractor any duty toward employee, who fell into pit, to remedy the condition or give warning of it.

2. Negligence ⇨32(2.10)

Employee, who had not been forbidden to use certain part of employer's premises, and whose presence on such part of premises was to be expected as incidental to his work, was, in regard to such part of the premises, an invitee of employer, but, as to contractor making excavation on such part of the premises, employee was at most a bare licensee.

3. Negligence ⇨32(1)

Where employee was on mission personal to himself as he walked beside pit which contractor had excavated on employer's premises, contractor, in suffering employee to be there, did not assume any duty toward employee except to refrain from causing employee injury by willful or wanton negligence or by actions which would constitute active negligence.

4. Negligence ⇨105

Where person goes upon another's premises without invitation and simply as a bare licensee, and property owner passively acquiesces in his coming, if an injury is sustained by reason of mere defect in the premises, owner is not liable for negligence, since such person has taken all the risk upon himself.

5. Negligence ⇨51

Where employee, who was on way to a washroom, fell into pit which contractor had excavated on that part of employer's premises over which employee was expected to go as incidental to his work, and employee had actual knowledge of existence of the pit, contractor's failure to barricade the pit would not constitute negligence as to such employee.

Schell, Delamer & Loring, Louis M. Welsh, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Levy, Russell & De Roy, George De Roy and Jack Levine, Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHINN, Presiding Justice.

In this action for personal injuries the complaint alleged that Jim Ruby Construction Company (a fictitious name under which Jim Ruby was doing business), while doing construction work for Freuhauf Trailer Company upon the latter's property caused an opening, hole, and excavation to be so carelessly and negligently left open and unguarded that plaintiff, while lawfully on the premises, fell into said opening and received injuries; defendant answered denying the material allegations of the complaint. The cause was tried to a jury and verdict and judgment were in favor of plaintiff for $6,000; defendant appeals from the judgment.

* Opinion vacated 291 P.2d 991.

There was evidence of the following facts. In the course of the work in which defendant was engaged it was necessary to make an excavation which involved a breaking up of concrete, the cutting off and removal of steel rods and the removal of all material necessary in the excavation of a pit. Removal of the concrete was done by Air Power Tools Company, subcontractor of defendant, and it had been completed several days before the accident occurred. In this work the concrete was broken up, rods were cut, and the material was thrown out of the pit by hand onto the ground where it was picked up by hand and thrown into trucks to be hauled away. Defendant's contract was not completed; he still had to lower the pit to a uniform depth of 10 feet and line it with concrete. At the time of plaintiff's accident there was in existence an excavation 33 feet by 11 feet, which was at ground level at the west end and graduated to a depth of 9 feet at the east end. Plaintiff was an employee of Freuhauf, assembling trailers, and had come to work about 4 p. m., November 2, 1951, while some of defendant's employees were still at the location. Plaintiff was working on the northerly side of the pit about 10 feet distant therefrom when he decided to walk past the pit on the north side to a washroom. As he proceeded he stumbled on a steel bar or rod 3 or 4 feet long, which was lying on the ground 4 or 5 feet north of the pit and about midway between the easterly and westerly ends of the pit. His foot struck the bar; he lost his balance and went forward into the pit. There was no barrier around the pit. No witness observed plaintiff's fall into the pit. Plaintiff had observed work on the pit for about a week, had looked into it and knew how deep it was. He testified that he believed the rod was a reinforcement rod; it had ridges on it; it was 3 or 4 feet long and maybe an inch thick. As he stumbled he did his best to light on his feet in the bottom of the pit and he did light on his feet but his legs doubled under him. There was a pile of dirt across the west end of the pit; there were some air hoses lying on the ground and some electric cords, which were not closer than 6 to 10 feet from the pit, and these were used in Freuhauf's work; he had not seen the iron rod before; he saw it from some distance after he was assisted and "hobbled" out of the hole but not before; he didn't examine the rod to see what it was. He glanced at it after he came out of the hole. He was in excruciating pain at the time. He was not sure whether the rod was something that was used by the Freuhauf people; it could have been, but he did not know.

As we have seen, the complaint charged negligence of defendant in failing to maintain a barricade around the pit. In plaintiff's brief it is argued that this was negligence. We shall dispose of this contention after we have discussed the claim of negligence in allowing the rod to lay on the ground.

The briefs argue the question whether there was sufficient evidence that defendant was guilty of a breach of duty. Plaintiff argues (1) it could have been inferred that the rod had been left by workmen of defendant or his subcontractor, since plaintiff testified it had ridges on it, and presumably was the type of rod the subcontractor had been removing with the concrete; (2) if this were true defendant was chargeable with knowledge that the rod was there; (3) if some one else placed the rod there it could have been inferred that it had been there long enough for defendant to discover it; (4) as a necessary conclusion defendant was negligent in failing to remove the rod.

It is unnecessary to notice at length defendant's replies to these arguments. It is sufficient to state that it is contended that plaintiff's version of the accident was incredible because he could not have stumbled into the pit and yet landed on his feet; defendant's witness McSweeney, Freuhauf employee and lead man on plaintiff's shift, testified that plaintiff received his injuries while he and fellow employees Montes and Bustamente were jumping in the pit from the shallow end into sand toward the deeper end; also there was no evidence from which it could have been inferred that defendant was responsible for the placing of the rod on the ground or that he had actual or constructive knowledge of its presence.

Although the defendant's arguments are somewhat impressive, it is unnecessary to discuss them.

[1-4] Even if it be assumed that the presence of the rod on the ground created a dangerous condition on the premises and that defendant knew or in the exercise of ordinary care would have known of that condition, those facts did not impose upon him any duty toward plaintiff to remedy the condition or to give warning of it. Both in his complaint and in his brief plaintiff assumes that he was an invitee of defendant, although he mentions no fact indicative of the existence of that relationship. His sole theory of the case is illustrated by his citation of Louie v. Hagstrom's Food Stores, 81 Cal.App.2d 601, 184 P.2d 708, which he says is a case exactly in point. In that case the defendant, operating a food market, was held to a high quantum of care to keep his premises in a safe condition for his customers and chargeable with knowledge of an unsafe condition. There was no such relationship between plaintiff and defendant. It may be granted that defendant was an occupier of the portion of the premises he was using in the course of his work and as such had a duty toward those who might come upon the property, but the assumption that plaintiff was defendant's invitee is clearly in error. To be sure he was an invitee of Freuhauf, his employer, and it is not questioned that he had a right to traverse the area around the pit, inasmuch as he had not been forbidden to use it, and his presence there was to be expected as incidental to his work. While plaintiff was an invitee of Freuhauf, as to Ruby he was, at most, a bare licensee. While both Freuhauf and Ruby had duties toward plaintiff they were not the same because the relationships were different. Plaintiff's presence in the vicinity of the pit was of no concern to defendant. They had no business together. Plaintiff was on a mission personal to himself as he walked beside the pit and in suffering him to be there defendant assumed no duty toward him except to refrain from causing him injury by wilful or wanton conduct or by actions which would constitute active negligence. There is, of course, no contention there was a breach of any such duty. The sole claim is that defendant tolerated an unsafe condition on the premises. The law with respect to licensees is " * * * where a person goes upon the premises of another without invitation and simply as a bare licensee, and the owner of the property passively acquiesces in his coming, if an injury is sustained by reason of a mere defect in the premises, the owner is not liable for negligence for such person has taken all the risk upon himself." Fisher v. General Petroleum Corp., 123 Cal.App.2d 770, 777, 778, 267 P.2d 841, 845; see, also, Koppelman v. Ambassador Hotel Co., 35 Cal.App.2d 537, 540, 96 P.2d 196; Oettinger v. Stewart, 24 Cal.2d 133, 139, 148 P.2d 19, 156 A.L.R. 1221; Saba v. Jacobs, 130 Cal.App.2d 717, 279 P.2d 826; Palmquist v. Mercer, 43 Cal.2d 92, 272 P.2d 26.

The facts previously stated suggest the further question whether defendant had any duty to keep the premises surrounding the pit free from material such as broken concrete, pieces of metal rods and earth that was removed from the pit. Was it his duty to clean up the premises whenever his workmen quit for the day or did he have a right to assume that Freuhauf employees would use the premises as they found them, knowing that the work was going on and uncompleted? We mention the question only to remark that in our discussion we do not assume that defendant would have had a duty even toward a business invitee to keep the premises clean and safe. As to plaintiff the question is not presented.

[5] The claim of negligence in failing to barricade the pit falls for the reason previously stated. An additional ground of untenability would be that plaintiff had actual knowledge of the existence of the pit and therefore could not complain of the absence of a barrier as a warning of its presence.

It is unnecessary to discuss other contentions of defendant.

The judgment is reversed with instructions to enter judgment for defendant.

PARKER WOOD, J., and NOURSE, Judge pro tem., concur.

137 Cal.App.2d 408

The PEOPLE of the State of California,
Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Earl Wayne ELLIS, Defendant and Appellant.
Cr. 2637.

District Court of Appeal, Third District,
California.

Nov. 30, 1955.

Defendant was convicted of sodomy. The Superior Court, Stanislaus County, Gregory P. Maushart, J., entered judgment and defendant appealed therefrom and from order denying motion for new trial. The District Court of Appeal, Schottky, J., held that under the circumstances the failure of trial court to give instructions on subject of accomplices and as to necessity for corroboration of their testimony constituted reversible error.

Judgment and order reversed.

1. Criminal Law §742(2)

In prosecution for sodomy, evidence as to whether prosecuting witness was coerced and forced to submit to defendant's attack in fear of great bodily harm and as to such witness' resistance raised question for jury as to whether prosecuting witness was accomplice whose testimony must be corroborated. Pen.Code, §§ 26, 286, 1111.

2. Criminal Law §824(7)

In sodomy prosecution, even though defendant did not request specific accomplice instruction, the court should not only have instructed jury fully as to law relating to testimony of accomplices but should have instructed the jury that they should decide as to accomplice status of prosecuting witness upon whose testimony the State must rely to obtain a conviction. Pen.Code, §§ 286, 1111.

3. Criminal Law §780(1), 1173(2)

In prosecution for sodomy, where there was not sufficient corroboration of prosecuting witness' testimony to support judgment of conviction, the failure of trial court to give instructions on the subject of accomplices and necessity for corroboration of their testimony constituted reversible error. Pen.Code, §§ 286, 1111.

Muir Woolley, Modesto, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Doris H. Maier, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

SCHOTTKY, Justice.

Appellant was charged with a violation of section 286 of the Penal Code, it being alleged in the information that he "did wilfully, unlawfully and feloniously commit the infamous crime against nature upon the person of Wallace Richard Page, a human being and a male person." He pleaded not guilty and a jury trial resulted in a verdict of guilty. His motion for a new trial was denied and judgment was pronounced against him. He has appealed from the judgment and from the order denying his motion for a new trial.

Appellant urges two major grounds for a reversal of the judgment: 1. That the evidence is insufficient to support the verdict because it consisted entirely of the uncorroborated testimony of the witness, Page, who, appellant contends, by submitting himself to the act of perversion, became an accomplice within the meaning of section 1111 of the Penal Code; 2. That the court erred in failing to give the jury proper or any instructions with regard to accomplices and the necessity of corroborating their testimony. Before discussing these contentions we shall give a brief summary of the evidence.

Wallace Richard Page, the victim of the offense charged in the information, was taken to the Stanislaus County Road Camp on January 25, 1955, to serve a sentence for burglary. At about five o'clock of the afternoon that Page arrived, he encountered the defendant Earl Wayne Ellis, also an inmate of the road camp, in front of Page's barracks. At this first meeting Page asked the defendant about a disturbance which had occurred at Page's mother's cafe and defendant replied that they would talk about it later. After supper of the same day, defendant went to Page's barracks and engaged Page in a conversation about his sentence. During this conversation Page and defendant left the barracks and walked behind the latrine. While there, defendant told Page that defendant had served three months in the road camp because he had assaulted a girl in Page's mother's cafe. Defendant offered to fight but Page refused, offering defendant money if defendant wouldn't bother him. Appellant then told Page that Page would have the option of committing one of two types of sex perversion with him, and also that unless Page agreed to one or the other of these acts, defendant would get three or four men and force him to do so. When Page refused, defendant became angry and ordered Page to go to defendant's barracks. While in defendant's barracks, Trager, a friend of defendant, asked Page if he had "fixed Ellis up." When Page said that he had not, Trager made the threat that unless Page did so three or four men would hold him and force him to do so. Then Trager told Page to leave and that Trager and defendant would come to get him later.

After the roll call the appellant came over to Page's barracks where they talked about a burglary for a while and then walked out together, meeting Trager on the outside of the building. The appellant led the way and they sneaked around to a boiler room. The appellant and Page went into the boiler room first, Trager following. Page testified that he accompanied both appellant and Trager to the boiler room in fear of being beaten up and having the acts committed anyway if he refused to go peacefully. In the boiler room, following the orders of appellant, Page submitted to the commission of the act denounced by said section 286, first by appellant, then by Trager, and again by defendant. All three men then left the boiler room and Page, who was the last to leave, returned to his barracks.

The following morning Page requested the director of the road camp to transfer him back to jail. He testified that he was afraid to reveal the acts done by defendant and Trager the night before as a reason for wanting a transfer, and since he had no other reason to give, his request was denied.

On January 29, 1955, Page left the road camp and started in the direction of Modesto. He testified that he left the road camp because of his fear that he would be further attacked by appellant's friends, although Ellis had left the camp on the night of the 26th. He was apprehended by officers on the way and taken to the county jail where he revealed for the first time what defendant had done to him.

Appellant did not testify but called two witnesses for the purpose of impeaching the complaining witness, Page, as to his reasons for leaving the road camp. Both testified to conversations with Page in which he made no mention of any improper acts by appellant but gave other reasons for desiring to leave the road camp. Appellant's father was called and testified that he had never heard that appellant was abnormal sexually.

It is apparent from the foregoing that the judgment of conviction depends upon the testimony of Page and that therefore the principal question presented upon this appeal is whether or not it can be held as a matter of law that Page was not an accomplice. Section 1111 of the Penal Code provides:

"A conviction cannot be had upon the testimony of an accomplice unless it be corroborated by such other evidence as shall tend to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense; and the corroboration is not sufficient if it merely shows the commission of the offense or the circumstances thereof. An accomplice is hereby defined as one who is liable to prosecution for the identical offense charged against the defendant on trial in the cause in which the testimony of the accomplice is given."

In People v. Featherstone, 67 Cal.App.2d 793, at page 796, 155 P.2d 685, at page 687, an attempted sodomy case involving a 15 year old boy, the court said:

"Undoubtedly, where the persons participating in an offense of this character do so without compulsion, each is an accomplice of the other, and is liable to prosecution as such. * * *

In such case there is a common intent to unite in the attempt to commit the offense."

Appellant argues that Page's testimony shows that during the time appellant was at Page's barracks after roll call and they met Trager outside and went to the boiler room where the acts were committed, there were no threats made. Appellant argues that these facts establish that Page voluntarily participated.

In answer to respondent's contention that Page was not an accomplice because he was coerced and forced to submit to appellant's perverted attack in fear of great bodily harm, appellant cites Section 26 of the California Penal Code:

"All persons are capable of committing crimes except those belonging to the following classes:

* * * * *

"Eight. Persons (unless the crime be punishable with death) who committed the act or made the omission charged under threats or menaces sufficient to show that they had reasonable cause to and did believe their lives would be endangered if they refused."

The appellant contends, in effect, that not only was there a lack of evidence of immediate threats to Page, but also that there was no evidence of threats of danger to Page's limb or life. Appellant argues that the record only shows statements that Page was told that if he didn't conform to the other parties' wishes they would do it anyway, and that these statements were made several hours before the acts occurred.

Appellant also cites the case of People v. Hart, 98 Cal.App.2d 514, 220 P.2d 595 (hearing denied), which was a prosecution for sex perversion in which the evidence showed that the defendant displayed a knife while he proposed the commission of the act. The prosecution contended that the witness being in such a position was not an accomplice when he acquiesced because acting under coercion. In holding contrary to the People's contention that the witness was not an accomplice, the court said, 98

Cal.App.2d at page 515, 220 P.2d at page 596:

"An accomplice is hereby defined as one who is liable to prosecution for the identical offense charged against the defendant on trial in the cause in which the testimony of the accomplice is given."

"Under this definition M is an accomplice unless the evidence is sufficient to support a finding bringing the case as to him within subd. 8, sec. 26, Penal Code, above quoted, i. e. that M did believe that his life would be endangered if he refused. [Citing cases.]

"The People argue that the evidence shows that M was afraid that if he resisted it would endanger his life. Not only did M not testify at any point that he feared that his life was in danger but he expressly twice testified:

"* * * I did participate because I was afraid to break my leg over again and didn't want to fight him back."

"I didn't want to break my leg over again."

"A reading of the entire evidence satisfies us that it is not sufficient to support a finding that M actually believed that his life was in danger."

Appellant argues that the Hart case above was a much stronger case than the present for finding duress, as there was no weapon involved here and no threats near the time of the act. Respondent, in reply, contends that appellant's assertion that Page must have feared that his life was in danger in order not to be an accomplice is not a complete statement of law and cites People v. Battilana, 52 Cal.App.2d 685, at page 697, 126 P.2d 923, at page 930, in which the court stated:

"* * * It is clear that a victim who consents to the perpetration of sodomy or fellatio upon himself, solely because of the infliction of physical violence or on account of threats of great bodily harm, is not an accomplice to the crimes. The consent to participate in a crime, which constitutes one an accessory thereto, must be knowingly, willingly and voluntarily given, with full appreciation of the nature of the act."

Respondent asserts that People v. Peterman, 103 Cal.App.2d 322, 229 P.2d 444, 446, decided subsequent to the Hart case, refutes the appellant's theory that the Hart case, supra, established that a fear of death is necessary to hold that Page was not an accomplice, in holding:

"* * * Where a violation of said section 288a is committed without the consent of the prosecuting witness, it is not necessary that the testimony of such witness be corroborated. * * * A person who participates in an act in violation of said section solely because such person has been threatened with, and is in fear of, great bodily harm, is not an accomplice. People v. Battilana, supra, 52 Cal.App.2d [685, 695] at page 697, 126 P.2d 923."

However, in the Peterman case defendant accomplished rape and fellatio by pushing her into the back seat of his car and threatening to kill her.

Respondent asserts that there is no pat definition for what will constitute great bodily harm, but it may result from an attack with hands and fists, People v. Bumbaugh, 48 Cal.App.2d 791, 120 P.2d 703; People v. McCaffrey, 118 Cal.App.2d 611, 258 P.2d 557, and it has been held that a person may have a reasonable fear of great bodily harm even though no spoken threats as to possible consequences are made. People v. Flores, 62 Cal.App.2d 700, 145 P.2d 318.

[1] We believe that under the evidence in the instant case it was for the jury to determine, under proper instructions, whether or not Page was an accomplice of appellant. We do not believe that, as a matter of law, the evidence compels the conclusion that Page participated in the acts charged against appellant only because of fear of great bodily harm, nor do we believe that the degree of resistance shown by him was sufficient, as a matter of law, to compel a finding that he was not an accomplice.

As stated in People v. Coffey, 161 Cal. 433, at page 436, 119 P. 901, at page 902, 39 L.R.A.,N.S., 704:

"When the question of an accomplice arises in the trial of a case, the general and accepted rule is for the court to instruct the jury touching the law of accomplices, and leave the question whether or not the witness be an accomplice for the decision of the jury as a matter of fact."

Appellant offered a number of instructions regarding the testimony of accomplices but the court refused to give any of them. The only instruction given by the court which can be considered as relating to accomplices was as follows:

"Any person who, with full appreciation of the nature of the act, voluntarily, willingly or knowingly consents to the commission of the infamous crime against nature upon his body and thus intentionally participates in the conduct, is equally guilty with the other participant."

Nowhere in the court's instructions does the word "accomplice" appear.

Respondent argues that "the court did not err in refusing to submit instructions on accomplices to the jury because there was no conflict in the evidence." However, we are satisfied that under all the facts and circumstances shown by the record there was a reasonable basis for an inference that Page's participation in the crime charged was not because of fear of great bodily harm, and that his failure to ask the authorities in charge of the road camp for protection after he had been informed of appellant's intention to commit the act, his failure to tell the same authorities of the commission of the act, his failure to tell about it until after his escape from the road camp and his apprehension, were circumstances that the jury might well have taken into consideration, together with the remainder of the evidence, if they had been instructed as to the rules of law applicable to the testimony of accomplices and that they should determine from the evidence whether or not Page was an accomplice.

[2] Even though appellant did not request the specific instructions that should have been given in this case, we believe that the court should not only have instructed the jury fully as to the law relating to the testimony of accomplices but should have instructed the jury that they should decide whether or not Page was an accomplice. For as stated in People v. Hughes, 107 Cal.App.2d 487, at page 492, 237 P.2d 64, at page 67:

"* * * [U]ndoubtedly it is the law that in a criminal case the jury should be instructed on the general principles of law which apply to the case, and even though not requested by the parties, the court of its own motion, should give such instructions."

And as stated in People v. Buffum, 40 Cal.2d 709, at page 724, 256 P.2d 317, at page 325:

"Defendants did not request an instruction based upon section 1108. In a criminal case, however, the trial judge is required to instruct the jury of his own motion upon the law relating to the facts of the case and upon matters vital to a proper consideration of the evidence. [Citing cases.] Under this rule it has been held that, in an appropriate case, the jury must be instructed as to sections 1110 and 1111 of the Penal Code, which, like section 1108, provide that the testimony of certain witnesses must be corroborated. [Citing cases.] It follows, therefore, that the trial court erred in failing to give an instruction on its own motion with respect to section 1108."

[3] In the instant case it is not contended that there was sufficient corroboration of Page's testimony to support the judgment of conviction. We therefore conclude that the failure of the trial court to give proper instructions on the subject of accomplices and as to the necessity for corroboration of their testimony constituted reversible error.

The judgment and order are reversed.

VAN DYKE, P. J., and PEEK, J., concur.

137 Cal.App.2d 461

Jose Angel MENDEZ, Petitioner,

v.

The SUPERIOR COURT of The State of California, IN AND FOR The COUNTY OF LOS ANGELES, The Honorable David Coleman, Presiding Judge, Respondent.

Civ. 21332.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

Dec. 2, 1955.

Rehearing Denied Dec. 27, 1955.

Hearing Denied Jan. 25, 1956.

Proceeding by a state prison inmate for a writ of mandate requiring the clerk of the Superior Court in and for the County of Los Angeles to file a notice of appeal from an order of such Court, David Coleman, P. J., denying petitioner's motion to vacate a judgment sentencing him to the prison and to prepare and certify a record on appeal. The District Court of Appeal, Shinn, P. J., held that petitioner's mailing to the clerk of a notice of the motion, together with the written motion and notice that petitioner appealed to the District Court of Appeal from the order, if Superior Court denied motion, was sufficient to cause an appeal to be lodged in the District Court of Appeal.

Writ granted.

1. Criminal Law ⇨1081

A state prison inmate's mailing to Superior Court clerk of notice of motion to vacate judgment sentencing him to prison, together with the written motion and notice that he appealed to District Court of Appeal, if Superior Court denied motion, was sufficient to cause appeal to be lodged in District Court of Appeal.

2. Criminal Law ⇨1081

Ordinarily, failure to file notice of appeal from judgment or order in criminal case within ten days after rendition of judgment or making of order, as required by rule, is fatal to appeal. West's Ann. Rules on Appeal, rule 31.

3. Criminal Law ⇨998, 1144(17)

Notice of Superior Court's ruling on state prison inmate's motion to vacate judgment sentencing him to prison is not required by law to be given him, and it may not be presumed that notice will be given.

Jose Angel Mendez, in pro. per.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., William E. James, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

4. Criminal Law §1081

The limitation of time for filing of notice of appeal from judgment or order to ten days after rendition of judgment or making of order by rule on appeal in criminal cases goes to reviewing court's jurisdiction to entertain appeal, and its purpose to facilitate disposition of appeals is defeated when notice is not given in manner and within time prescribed by rule, but not by treating as valid a notice offered for filing conditionally in advance of ruling. West's Ann.Rules on Appeal, rule 31.

SHINN, Presiding Justice.

Jose Angel Mendez, an inmate of a state prison, seeks a writ of mandate requiring the clerk of the superior court to file a notice of appeal from an order denying his motion to vacate a judgment sentencing him to state prison and to prepare and certify a record on appeal. Petitioner mailed to the clerk a notice of a motion together with a written motion to vacate the judgment, enclosing therewith a notice that he "hereby appeals to the District Court of Appeal of the State of California, Second Appellate District, from the Order If the aforementioned Superior Court denies the petition in the above entitled cause. This Notice of Appeal, Grounds of Appeal and Application for Clerk's and Reporter's Transcript on Appeals, is to be dated and Filed Only in the event that the above entitled cause is denied." The notice was addressed to the court, the county clerk and the district attorney. The motion was duly heard and denied and the minutes say "The Court finds that the purported notice of appeal is premature and does not constitute a notice of appeal."

5. Criminal Law §1144(19)

A state prison inmate's notice of appeal, delivered to Superior Court clerk for filing, if court denied inmate's motion to vacate judgment sentencing him to prison, is deemed to have been filed after court's denial of motion, though clerk did not endorse it as filed before such ruling. West's Ann.Rules on Appeal, rule 31.

6. Criminal Law §1081

Filing of notice of appeal, held by Superior Court clerk in such capacity, from order denying state prison inmate's motion to vacate judgment sentencing him to prison, was not invalidated by his instructions to clerk that such notice, enclosed with mailed written motion and notice thereof, was to be dated and filed only if motion were denied. West's Ann.Rules on Appeal, rule 31.

[1] The question is whether the steps taken were sufficient to cause an appeal to be lodged in this court. We think they were sufficient.

7. Criminal Law §1081

A notice of appeal, given by prisoner through only facilities available to him, cannot be denied validity because of failure to file it within ten days after rendition of judgment or making of order appealed from, as required by rule, since prisoner is not required to hazard right of appeal on chance that he may have opportunity to forward timely notice after learning of court's ruling. West's Ann.Rules on Appeal, rule 31.

[2,3] Rule 31 of Rules on Appeal in Criminal Cases provides that a notice of appeal be filed within ten days after the rendition of the judgment or the making of the order. Under ordinary circumstances failure to file a notice within the limited time after rendition of the judgment or making of the order would be fatal to an appeal. But inmates of state prisons encounter difficulties and handicaps which may not be ignored in the decision of our question. As a rule they are not represented by counsel and have prepared their moving papers in the prison in accordance with restrictive prison rules. The law does not require that notice of the court's ruling on a motion be given to the prisoner and it may not be presumed that notice will be given. The prisoner's situation is to be considered with respect to his right to notice; and he has no such right. If the clerk voluntarily sends him a notice it may or may not be received in time for him to prepare and forward a notice of appeal. He may or may not receive the prompt assistance of prison authorities in the forwarding of a notice of appeal. If he relies upon but does not receive voluntary cooperation in these matters he is helpless and without means to prevent the loss of his right of appeal through the expiration of time.

[4-7] The problem is not a new one. It is a somewhat common practice for prisoners to mail a notice of appeal with their moving papers on motions to vacate judgments or orders. Some trial courts cause the notices of appeal to be filed and treat them as valid; others decline to permit them to be filed for the reason that they have been presented prematurely, and in the latter cases the notices are regarded as if they had been filed too late. The two situations are obviously quite different, since the limitation of time for filing the notice goes to the jurisdiction of a reviewing court to entertain an appeal. Its purpose, of course, is to facilitate the disposition of appeals, and that purpose is defeated when notice is not given in the manner and within the time prescribed by the rules on appeal. People v. Figuieredo, 136 Cal.App.2d 171, 288 P.2d 271. But the purpose is not defeated by treating as valid a notice that is offered for filing conditionally in advance of the ruling. The petitioner here had a right to appeal and he availed himself of a practice that has been prevalent for many years. If that practice is to be condemned and held for naught, petitioner will not be the only one to suffer the loss of his right of appeal. There will be many others whose efforts to appeal will fail for the same reason, even if they make use of the facilities which are available to them. We could not be satisfied to hold prisoners to a procedure that would compel them to rely upon the assistance of others who are under no legal duty to render assistance. A similar situation was before the court in People v. Rameriz, 137 Cal.App. 472, 30 P.2d 577, 578. Rameriz, confined in state prison, forwarded a written motion to vacate a judgment, accompanying the same with a brief, a motion to be brought into court at the time of hearing, a notice of appeal and a request for a transcript, the notice of appeal containing a statement that it was to be entered only in the event the court denied the motion. The motion was denied and in the reviewing court a motion was made by the Attorney General to dismiss the appeal. At that time under section 1239 of the Penal Code an appeal could be taken from an order denying a motion only by announcement made in open court at the time the order was made. The prisoner was not represented by counsel and his application for leave to be brought into court was denied. Of this situation the court, through Presiding Justice Barnard, spoke as follows: "Under such circumstances he filed in advance a written notice of appeal with the request that it be entered in the event his motion was denied. This was the only thing he could do and the only way in which it was possible for him to claim the right to which he was entitled under the statute. Under such circumstances, we think the written notice of appeal filed was such a substantial compliance with the statute as should be considered sufficient." We are in full agreement with this conclusion. When the court made its ruling in the instant case denying petitioner's motion the notice of appeal was in the hands of the clerk. Having been delivered to the clerk for filing it was deemed to have been filed even though the clerk had not, prior to the ruling, endorsed it as having been filed. In re Estate of Sankey, 199 Cal. 391, 396, 249 P. 517. The clerk held the notice in his capacity of clerk and filing was not invalidated by the instructions that were given with respect to the time when it was to be deemed filed. Both reason and justice forbid denying validity to notices of appeal given by prisoners through the only facilities available to them. People v. Slobodion, 30 Cal.2d 362, 181 P.2d 868. They are not required to hazard the right of appeal upon the chance that they may have an opportunity to forward a timely notice after learning of the court's action.

Let a writ of mandate issue as prayed.

PARKER WOOD and VALLÉE, JJ.,
concur.

137 Cal.App.2d 378

J. Paul CAMPBELL and Paul W. Campbell, co-partners, doing business under the firm name and style of Trojan Lumber and Supply Company, Plaintiffs and Respondents,

v.

PONTICOPOULOS, Inc., a corporation,
Defendant and Appellant.

Civ. 20904.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California.

Nov. 30, 1955.

As Modified on Denial of Rehearing
Dec. 22, 1955.

Hearing Denied Jan. 25, 1956.

Action by lumber dealer against contractor to recover for lumber sold on contract and for wrongful breach thereof.
The Superior Court of Los Angeles County,
Herbert V. Walker, J., entered judgment for lumber dealer and contractor appealed.
The Court of Appeal, Doran, J., held that evidence supported findings that contractor, who claimed to have received an inferior grade of lumber, had wrongfully breached contract.

Affirmed.

Sales 6-383

In action by lumber dealer against contractor to recover for lumber sold on contract and for wrongful breach thereof, evidence sustained finding that contractor, who claimed to have received an inferior grade of lumber, had wrongfully breached the contract.

Lehman & Van Buskirk, M. Lewis Lehman, Wayne L. Van Buskirk, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Thompson, Thompson & Olson, Burbank,
Henry F. Walker, Los Angeles, for respondents.

DORAN, Justice.

This is an appeal from the judgment.

The action is for money due for lumber sold and delivered to defendant and for damages for breach of contract. The complaint, in four counts, alleges in Count I that defendant wrongfully terminated the contract. Count II is a common count for goods sold and delivered. Count III is upon an account started and for damages and Count IV is an action upon an open book account.

Defendant and appellant filed an answer denying the material allegations of the complaint as they pertain to the damages and the performance of the contract by respondents. Appellants also set up in its answer a second and separate defense, the right of defendant to cancel the contract should plaintiffs default in their performance and such default continue for 24 hours, and further alleges that plaintiffs failed to deliver lumber of the specified grade, which caused defendant to perform extra labor and carpentry in the construction of its houses, all to its damage in the sum of $30,950.00, and that defendant was compelled to purchase lumber of the proper grade elsewhere and was thereby damaged in the sum of $36,967.00. Said second defense further contained the item of damage that the lumber delivered was of less value than the amounts contracted for, and that, as a result, defendant was damaged in the sum of $11,838.99.

Appellant's answer also contained a third and separate defense, alleging that the inferior lumber delivered caused delay in the construction schedule and increased the interest on defendant's loans and increased defendant's overhead for maintaining a large project, all to defendant's damage in the sum of $12,741.72.

Defendant also filed a cross-complaint, wherein it is alleged that the provisions of the agreement pertaining to the size and grades of lumber were violated, and the fact that a substantial portion of the lumber delivered in the later stages of the contract was one to two grades below that specified in the contract; that extra carpentry had to be used; that lumber was purchased at a higher price from another firm, after cancellation; and alleged substantially the same items of damages as set forth in the separate defenses of defendant's answer.

Plaintiffs filed an answer to the cross-complaint, alleging that they had performed under the terms of the contract; that said contract was wrongfully terminated by defendant.

It is argued by appellant that,

"The findings hereinbelow set forth are unsupported by and contrary to the substantial evidence at the trial"; "The trial judge did not keep an open mind, he prejudged the issue, he assumed facts not in evidence, and committed other acts of prejudicial error"; "Evidence improperly admitted" and "Evidence improperly excluded"; "The law applied by the court in interpreting the rights of the parties in and under the written contract was not applicable and was contrary to the facts"; and "The trial court erred in not applying the law of implied warranty."

The contract in question, dated February 29, 1952, was for the purchase and sale of lumber to be used "for the construction of approximately seven hundred units, being individual dwelling houses and appurtenances, proposed to be built by said defendant in three subdivisions or tracts of land". September 23, 1952 defendants notified plaintiffs by letter that, "it would take no more lumber from plaintiffs, but was going to secure the balance of the lumber requirements elsewhere".

As recited in respondent's brief, "In reply to this September 23rd letter, plaintiffs wrote a letter September 25, 1952, which was stipulated to have been received by defendant, denying the lumber was not of proper grade, stating they were ready, willing and able to furnish lumber for the remaining units and their intent to hold defendant liable for damages if it refused to permit them to do so, and demanded payment of the balance due and unpaid as heretofore billed. Despite plaintiffs' demands for payment, defendant paid nothing on the $154,659.72 balance until January 13, 1953. Defendant then paid $74,903.73 and no more." Plaintiffs were awarded judgment of approximately $91,000.

In connection with the above noted contention, "That the trial judge did not keep an open mind, he prejudged the issue", etc., appellant cites a number of incidents that occurred during the trial and the comments of the trial judge in connection therewith. The argument on the subject concludes as follows:

"It is apparent from the above examples that the trial court went far beyond the rules cited in the various cases; that his frequent comments indicated that he had prejudged and made up his mind concerning a number of the issues; and that his thinking either intentionally or unintentionally was against the interests and cause of the defendant."

Appellant also argues that, "it should be kept in mind that this trial extended over a period of approximately seven months, being tried at intervals of thirty to sixty days with three or four days of trial on each occasion. It is obvious that the attitude of the trial court changed during this lengthy period of time." In connection with this argument it is important to bear in mind that the case was tried without a jury. An examination of the record refutes appellant's contention in this regard and discloses nothing whatever in support of the argument that the trial judge did not keep an open mind, prejudged the issue, assumed facts not in evidence and committed acts of prejudicial error.

The findings of fact are comprehensive and fully cover the issues involved and the conclusions of law are correct in the circumstances.

A review of the record reveals that no prejudicial errors resulted from the admissibility or exclusion of evidence.

Appellant's contention relating to "the law of implied warranty" is highly technical and discloses no prejudicial error.

The evidence of course is conflicting as to some questions, but a review thereof shows it sufficient, as a matter of law, to support the judgment.

There being no prejudicial errors in the record, the judgment is affirmed.

WHITE, P. J., concurs.

NOURSE, J. pro tem., concurs in the judgment.

137 Cal.App.2d 321

SAINT FRANCIS MEMORIAL HOSPITAL, a nonprofit corporation, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO, a political subdivision of the State of California, a body corporate and politic, Defendant and Appellant.

No. 16430.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 1, California.

Nov. 29, 1955.

Rehearing Denied Dec. 29, 1955.

Hearing Denied Jan. 25, 1956.

Action by hospital to recover taxes which were paid under protest and which were levied on three parcels of hospital realty which hospital alleged were exempt under welfare exemption statute. The Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, I. L. Harris, J., held that the property came within the welfare exemption and the city and county appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Fred B. Wood, J., held that evidence was sufficient to support finding that hospital was organized and operated for hospital and charitable purposes and was not organized to operate for profit, and fact that operation of part of hospital property, not claimed as welfare exemption, resulted in a surplus, did not warrant conclusion that all hospital properties were operated with intent of making profit thereon and consequently were not entitled to exemption under the taxation welfare exemption statute.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Taxation $\S$ 241(1)

The test indicated by the phrase "operated for profit" or "conducted for profit" contained in charitable tax exemption tax statutes is not necessarily whether there is or may be a profit but whether the claimant is operated or conducted for the purpose of making a profit; that is, whether the charges are fixed with the intention of yielding a surplus over and above operating expenses. Revenue and Taxation Code, $\S$ 214(1, 3).

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Conducted for Profit" and "Operated for Profit".

2. Taxation $\S$ 241(2)

Where hospital had annual budget of nearly \$3,000,000 with a payroll in excess of \$1,600,000, a surplus of \$130,400 did not necessarily token a calculated plan to operate the institution for profit within meaning of tax exemption law. Revenue and Taxation Code, $\S$ 214.

3. Taxation $\S$ 251

In action by hospital to recover taxes paid under protest which were levied on three parcels of hospital realty, evidence was sufficient to show that owner of property for which exemption was claimed was organized and operated for hospital and charitable purposes and was not organized to operate for profit. Revenue and Taxation Code, $\S$ 214(1, 3).

4. Taxation $\S$ 251

In action by hospital to recover taxes levied on three parcels of hospital realty, evidence was sufficient to support finding that hospital properties, part of which were operated as doctors' offices, a pharmacy, a parking lot, and coffee shop were not operated for profit within meaning of exemption provision of tax code providing that to be eligible for the exemption an owner must not be organized or operated for profit and that the property used or operated by owner must not be operated for a profit. Revenue and Taxation Code, § 214(1, 3).

5. Taxation $\S$ 241(2)

Under welfare exemption statute providing that property used exclusively for hospital purposes shall be exempt from taxation if owner is not organized or operated for profit, or property is not used or operated by owner or by any other person for profit, even if part of hospital premises used as medical offices, pharmacy building, parking lot and coffee shop were purposefully operated for profit and thus not exempt for that year, such fact did not affect exemptability of main hospital building, living quarters for resident personnel, and building used for hospital school nursing. Revenue and Taxation Code, § 214.

6. Taxation $\S$ 241(2)

Under welfare exemption statute providing that property used for hospital purposes shall be exempt from taxation if no part of net earnings of owner inures to benefit of any private or general individual, fact that plaintiff negotiated promissory notes upon which interest was paid during tax year in question for payment of part of purchase price of hospital plant at interest rate not greater than $4\frac{1}{2}$ per cent per annum payable semi-annually from net earnings did not constitute a violation of statute and prevent hospital property from claiming welfare exemption. Revenue and Taxation Code, § 214(2).

7. Taxation $\S$ 241(2)

Under welfare exemption statute providing that property used exclusively for hospital purposes shall be exempt from taxation if "irrevocably dedicated" to religious, charitable, scientific or hospital purposes, there is no requirement that a hospital corporation own and operate no property which is not exempt under the welfare exemption statute but rather the requirement is more concerned with ultimate purposes as shown in the articles of incorporation of the institution claiming the welfare exemption. Revenue and Taxation Code, § 214(6).

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Irrevocably Dedicated".

8. Taxation $\S$ 241(2)

Under taxation welfare exemption statute providing that property used exclusively for hospital purposes and owned and operated by corporation for hospital purposes shall be exempt from taxation if irrevocably dedicated to hospital purposes, fact that part of hospital property was operated for purposes which were not specific hospital functions, but which were closely related, did not deprive hospital from successfully claiming it was organized and operated for hospital or charitable purposes and entitled to welfare exemption, where hospital's articles of incorporation showed an irrevocable dedication to operation as a hospital. Revenue and Taxation Code, § 214(6).

9. Taxation $\S$ 251

Fact that hospital had timely filed its welfare exemption claim with city and county assessor and had included in its claim for exemption certain lots numbers 2 and 3 did not preclude hospital from filing a revision of claim after deadline, withdrawing lots 2 and 3 from scope of its original claim. Revenue and Taxation Code, § 254.5

Dion R. Holm, City Atty., Agnes O'Brien Smith, Jerome Cohen, Deputy City Attys., San Francisco, for appellant.

Clark, Heafey & Martin, by Leon A. Clark and Gerald P. Martin, Oakland, for respondent.

FRED B. WOOD, Justice.

In this action brought by the Saint Francis Memorial Hospital to recover taxes which had been levied by the City and County of San Francisco upon three separate parcels of real property in 1951 and had been paid under protest, the trial court found and concluded that each of the properties and the hospital as owner of each met the requirements prescribed by section 214 of the Revenue and Taxation Code for the "welfare exemption" which section 1c of article XIII of the state Constitution authorized the Legislature to grant.

The principal question is whether or not the evidence supports the findings and conclusions.

The properties in question are lot 10, which is the site of the six-story main hospital building and of a building that is used as a nurses' residence; lot 13, which has a three-story building used as living quarters for residents and externes with about 15% of the ground floor space used as a barber shop; and lot 21, which has a four-story building used for the hospital's school of nursing.

We entertain no doubt that these properties were "used exclusively for * * * hospital * * * or charitable purposes," a requirement imposed by the Constitution and the statute as a condition for the granting of the welfare exemption. Precisely such facilities were involved in Cedars of Lebanon Hospital v. County of Los Angeles, 35 Cal.2d 729, 735-742, 221 P.2d 31, 15 A.L.R.2d 1045, and were there determined to be used exclusively for hospital purposes.

The city and county conceded during the trial that the revenues and expenditures in relation to these properties and functions in 1951 were such that the hospital would have been entitled to the exemption that year but for a surplus of $130,400 which resulted principally, if not entirely, from the conduct of certain other functions and properties by the hospital.

The other properties and functions included lots 2 and 3, improved to a medical building which houses a pharmacy operated by the hospital and contains a number of offices which are rented to various doctors and dentists, and a coffee shop which is operated by a tenant;¹ also, a parking lot which is operated by a tenant for the use of doctors who patronize the hospital.

This overall $130,400 "surplus" furnishes the nub of the present controversy. The city and county contends that such a surplus furnishes proof irrefutable that in 1951 both the "property" and the "owner" of the property were "operated for profit," and thus failed to meet the requirements of subdivisions (1) and (3) of section 214. There are several fallacies in this argument.

[1] The fact that a surplus results in a given year does not necessarily mean that either the property or its owner was operated "for" profit. There is an element of intent involved. "In relation to tax laws, the phrase 'conducted for profit,' which appears to be the equivalent of 'operated for profit', has presented some difficulty but has been generally held to convey the meaning of operated or conducted for the purpose of making a profit. [Citations.] Accordingly, the test indicated by such phrases, as so construed, is not necessarily whether there is or may be a profit but whether the claimant is operated or conducted for the purpose of making a profit; that is, whether the charges are fixed with the intention of yielding a surplus over and above operating expenses. [Citations.]" Sutter Hospital of Sacramento v. City of Sacramento, 39 Cal.2d 33, 37, 244 P.2d 390, 392.

[2] A surplus might be accidental, not calculated. When an institution, such as this, has an annual budget of nearly $3,000,000, with a payroll in excess of $1,600,000, a surplus of $130,400 (about 4.4% of gross receipts) does not necessarily token a calculated plan to operate the institution for profit. It quite persuasively tokens prudent management. No one could seriously contend that a hospital must show a deficit at the end of each year in order to qualify as not operating for profit.

Here, the owner of the property is a nonprofit corporation organized under the

1. In 1951 the coffee shop showed a loss, not a gain. It was started that year and was operated for a time by the hospital, until a tenant could be found.

laws of this state. Its articles clearly spell a nonprofit nature and, not inconsistently therewith, declare how "any receipts in excess of expenses shall be applied."²

There is evidence that the charges for patients' rooms at the hospital were less than the payroll expense per patient day; that the rates are not fixed with the idea or purpose of creating a profit in operation; they are set to cover operating expenses and provide necessary funds for maintenance in compliance with licensing laws; plaintiff's expenses including salaries are not excessive; the hospital had charity patients in 1951; it cared for 252 patients on a free or a part-pay basis; in addition, obstetrical and arthritic clinics and an obstetrical out-patient clinic were established for patients unable to pay the full cost of private hospital care.

[3] It seems abundantly clear that the plaintiff, the owner of the properties for which the exemption is claimed, was organized and operated for hospital and charitable purposes and was not organized or operated for profit. Certainly, the evidence supports the trial court's findings thereon and no reviewing court may disturb them.

2. Article II declares the following purposes: To carry on the business of a nonprofit hospital association, to conduct schools for nurses, to provide facilities for the care and hospitalization of those patients unable to pay for such services; that none of its objects or purposes contemplates the distribution of any gains or projection dividends to any member of the corporation "but any receipts in excess of expenses shall be applied by the Board of Trustees to the care of free or part pay or entirely charity patients, to the equipment and enlargement of its institutions, and to the carrying out of the purposes of this corporation in such manner as in the judgment of the Board of Trustees may be deemed desirable and profitable." (Art. II of the original articles.) Here, the word "profitable," quite obviously, is used in the sense of "useful, helpful, beneficial."

Article III was amended in 1946 to provide: "This corporation shall have no capital stock, is not formed for profit, does not contemplate pecuniary gain or [4] The same test we have just applied in respect to the "owner" should be used in determining whether a particular item of "property" was "operated * * * for profit" as that term is used in subdivision (3) of section 214. Use of that test convinces us that the evidence supports the trial court's finding on this subject. The administrative head of the hospital testified that without the income from the properties for which the welfare exemption is not claimed (office rentals, parking lot rentals, coffee shop rental, pharmacy proceeds) there would have been a deficit, and some of the exhibits tend to support him. However, defendant questions his conclusion in that regard, calling attention to the fact that on plaintiff's books the interest paid that year (about $33,000) was all charged to the hospital proper, none to the nonexempt properties. Defendant also claims that some of the hospital's insurance and overhead should be charged, in due proportion, to one or more of the nonexempt properties.³ We find merit in such suggested readjustments but do not believe they would effect a change in the conclusions properly to be drawn. The resultant "surplus" thus accruing from the operation of the exempt properties would not furnish an adequate profit to the members thereof, and no part of its net earnings shall inure to the benefit of any member or individual and no part of its activities shall be devoted to carrying on propaganda or otherwise attempting to influence legislation. The property of this corporation is irrevocably dedicated to charitable, scientific or hospital purposes and upon the liquidation, dissolution or abandonment thereof will not inure to the benefit of any private person, but shall be distributed to a fund, foundation or corporation organized and operated for charitable, scientific or hospital purposes."

3. It does not clearly appear that plaintiff charged the pharmacy for the value of the use of the space in the medical office building which it occupied. If not, and such a charge were to be made, the pharmacy's excess of receipts over operating expenses would be reduced without charging the amount of the overall "surplus." The difference would be credited to rentals.

basis for a reviewing court to hold, as a matter of law, that the exempt properties were operated with the intent of making a profit therefrom.

Whether or not the other properties were operated with such an intent, we need not decide. If they were (it is quite conceivable that the offices and the parking lot rental rates were fixed with knowledge that they would produce a net income) the only immediate consequence would be that of rendering those particular properties ineligible for the welfare exemption in view of the provisions of subdivision (3) of section 214. Thus, in Young Men's Christian Ass'n of Los Angeles v. County of Los Angeles, 35 Cal.2d 760, 221 P.2d 47, the disallowance of the welfare exemption for properties and portions of properties devoted to restaurants, clothing shops and similar services did not render the properties and portions of properties devoted to dormitories ineligible, nor was the owner deemed ineligible to claim the exemption for the dormitories. Similarly, in Cedars of Lebanon Hospital v. County of Los Angeles, supra, 35 Cal.2d 729, 221 P.2d 31, the ineligibility of the "thrift shop" did not prevent the owner from obtaining the welfare exemption for the nurses' training school property or the residences for nurses, student nurses, internes, resident doctors and other essential personnel, or the tennis court.

[5] We are not holding that the medical offices and pharmacy building and the parking lot were purposefully "operated * * * for profit" in 1951 or that plaintiff was not entitled to claim the welfare exemption for them. We hold simply that even if they were so operated for profit and thus not exempt that year, those facts do not under the circumstances of this case adversely affect the exemptability of the main hospital building, the living quarters for resident personnel, and the building used for plaintiff's school of nursing. Any institution organized in whole or in part for a charitable purpose must obtain money from some source with which to defray the costs of carrying on its charity function. That source might be public subscriptions, private donations,⁴ endowment funds invested in revenue producing properties⁵ whether the revenue comes as interest, dividends, rentals, net returns of a business enterprise, or revenue in some other form, or a combination of several varied types of income. The purposeful pursuit of such income, devoting it, when received, to the financing of the charitable function to which dedicated, does not, we think, make the institution any the less a hospital or charitable institution, despite defendant's urge to the contrary.

In passing, we note that the income producing activities in question are not foreign to plaintiff's hospital and charitable functions. An off-street parking area for the convenience of doctors who use the hospital bears an obvious relation to those functions. A pharmacy is a necessary adjunct to any hospital. The operation of a coffee shop for the convenience of resident personnel and visitors would seem to be a reasonable incidental activity. The renting of offices to doctors and dentists bears a less obvious relation. But these offices are in the same building as the pharmacy and this building, it would seem, was acquired as a part of an entire hospital plant from plaintiff's predecessor in ownership. In the prudent management of plaintiff's affairs it would seem reasonable and desirable to continue this rental service.

[6] Defendant makes the further contention that plaintiff is disqualified to claim the exemption because, defendant asserts, a "part of the net earnings of the owner", plaintiff herein, "inures to the benefit" of "private shareholder[s] or individual[s]." § 214, subd. (2). This assertion is predicated upon the fact that in 1951 interest was paid upon certain promissory notes which plaintiff issued in 1938 in payment of

4. Donations would produce nearly 100% net income. The cost of solicitation and of entering their receipt upon the books of the donee probably would be negligible.

5. Interest and dividends derived from securities owned would involve somewhat greater operating expenses (the cost of managing the investments, deciding what and where to buy or sell) but still should be largely net in their return.

part of the purchase price of its plant. These notes, dated August 1, 1938, are payable on or before 20 years after date, bear interest at a rate not greater than $4\frac{1}{2}\%$ per annum, and are payable semiannually from the "net earnings" of plaintiff as ascertained and determined by plaintiff's board of trustees to be applicable to said interest payments.

It seems obvious that we are dealing here with a debtor-creditor relationship. If this debt were in the usual form of an absolute, unqualified obligation to pay $4\frac{1}{2}\%$ interest per annum, no one would question its payment as a legitimate operating cost, ahead of the ascertainment and declaration of "net earnings," a charge and a payment not within the purview of subdivision (2) of section 214. We do not believe that the mere fact that plaintiff negotiated more favorable terms respecting the payment of this particular obligation brings it within the purview and proscription of subdivision (2). It is somewhat akin to the public debenture known as the "revenue bond," which is distinguishable from the "general obligation bond" because payable only out of a specific fund or out of the revenues of a particular revenue producing facility. But the revenue bond is still a "bond," a debt, not an ownership interest. The very use of the word "shareholder" in subdivision (2) of section 214 suggests an intent there to deal with an ownership not a debtor-creditor relationship.

[7,8] Defendant makes the further argument that "all of the property is not irrevocably dedicated to hospital and charitable purposes," apparently invoking subdivision (6) of section 214. It inferentially if not explicitly, contends that thereby plaintiff became and is incapable of successfully claiming it is organized and operated for "hospital or charitable purposes." There are several fallacies here. The "irrevocably dedicated" feature of subdivision (6) is a quality which "property" must possess in order to have the "welfare exemption." There is no requirement that a "hospital or charitable" corporation own and operate no property that is not exempt under section 214. Also the "requirement of irrevocable dedication is concerned with ultimate purposes rather than with present uses. Thus, the claimant's manner of operation and its use, past or present, of its properties are wholly immaterial. The critical factor is its powers with respect to its properties; and these powers, in the case of a corporate claimant, must ordinarily be ascertained from its articles of incorporation." Pacific Home v. County of Los Angeles, 41 Cal.2d 844, 849, 264 P.2d 539, 541. We think that article III⁶ of plaintiff's articles of incorporation, as amended in 1946, clearly effects the irrevocable dedication which subdivision (6) of section 214 requires property to have as a condition for the granting of the "welfare exemption"; as clearly as, if not more clearly than, the articles of incorporation of the plaintiff did in Pacific Home v. County of Los Angeles, supra, 41 Cal.2d 844, 849-852, 264 P.2d 539.

Plaintiff places considerable reliance upon a former judgment between these parties, one which found and declared these same properties tax exempt under section 214 during the fiscal years 1945-46 through 1948-49. This judgment, coupled with testimony that there has been no change in the condition or manner of operation of plaintiff or of these properties, plaintiff claims calls into play the doctrine of res judicata as to most if not all of the issues here involved. We entertain some doubts on that subject but deem it unnecessary to determine that question in view of our conclusions based upon the evidence herein, which we have found supports the judgment herein without the aid of the doctrine of res judicata.

[9] Plaintiff filed its welfare exemption claim with the city and county assessor on March 18, 1952, as required by section 254.5 of the Revenue and Taxation Code, claiming as exempt lots 2 and 3 and the building thereon known as the medical offices and pharmacy building, in addition to lots 10, 13 and 21 and the structures thereon which comprise the main hospital building, the nursing school, and the living quarters for resident personnel.

6. See text thereof in footnote 2, above.

Later, plaintiff filed a revised financial statement and a letter dated June 26, 1952, withdrawing its welfare exemption claim for lots 2 and 3 and the improvements thereon. The financial statement was designed to show certain adjustments incident to this withdrawal. Then, on June 30, 1952, apparently in response to a suggestion from the assessor's office, plaintiff filed a letter and statement comparing the original and the revised claims and furnishing considerable explanatory detail.

The parties have discussed at some length the right, if any, of the plaintiff to file a revision of claim after April 1, 1952, the deadline prescribed by section 254.5 of the code. We entertain no doubt of the right of plaintiff to withdraw lots 2 and 3 from the scope of its claim. The owner certainly had the power to waive as to those lots by not claiming the exemption for them in the first instance. We find in the statute no mandate prohibiting waiver after the filing of an exemption claim therefor. The revised financial statement is not pivotally important to the effective withdrawal or waiver of such a claim but in the instant case it did contain some information that was helpful though not indispensable in considering the remaining properties.

The principal new item in the revised statement was a change in the method of depreciation, from the original cost plus additions to the replacement value method. This would have increased the depreciation to such an extent as to produce an overall deficit instead of a surplus. However, that change in method had not yet been made at the time of the filing date (April 1, 1952); indeed, it apparently was not made or entered on plaintiff's books, if at all, until after the fiscal year which ended June 30, 1952. Accordingly, without holding that method unavailable to plaintiff for the 1951 tax year, we have made our analysis and have drawn our conclusions upon the basis of the depreciation method reflected in the claim as first filed. We understand that defendant does not question this method. During the trial defendant's counsel said it was permissible to use it in 1951.

The judgment is affirmed.

PETERS, P. J., and BRAY, J., concur.

137 Cal.App.2d 259

DIVISION OF LABOR ENFORCEMENT, DEPARTMENT OF INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS, State of California, Plaintiff,

v.

Mrs. Albert GIFFORD, Defendant.

Mrs. Albert GIFFORD, Cross-Complainant and Appellant,

v.

DOCTORS HOSPITAL, Milton E. Denmark,
John M. Hohl, First Doe, Second Doe, Third Doe, Frances E. Faulkner, Cross-Defendants and Respondents.

Civ. 16365.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 2, California.

Nov. 28, 1955

Action by widow of deceased against hospital, doctor and nurses for alleged negligence in causing deceased's death and for damages against doctor on account of performance of autopsy on deceased without permission. From adverse judgments of the Superior Court, County of Santa Clara, Leonard P. Avilla, J., widow appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Kaufman, J., held that where written permission for autopsy named doctor who was present at autopsy, permission was sufficient to authorize performance thereof by surgeon with whom doctor was associated, and evidence sustained finding that there was no negligence by hospital, doctor or nurses which caused the post-operative death of deceased who was suffering from hypertension and obesity.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Hospitals ⚖8

Physicians and Surgeons ⚖18(8)

In action against doctor, hospital and nurses for damages on account of alleged negligence which caused deceased's death, evidence sustained findings that no negligence or malpractice on the part of any of the defendants contributed to post-operative death of deceased who was suffering from hypertension and obesity.

2. Dead Bodies ⚖1

Since 1955 amendments to statutes respecting performance of autopsies, written permission is necessary for all autopsies performed by doctors in hospitals or elsewhere. West's Ann. Health and Safety Code, §§ 7113, 7114.

3. Dead Bodies ⚖9

In widow's action for damages against doctor for performance of unauthorized autopsy on deceased, evidence, including written permission to other doctor who participated in autopsy, sustained finding that autopsy was performed by doctor with widow's consent. West's Ann. Health and Safety Code, §§ 7113, 7114.

4. Appeal and Error ⚖1050(1)

In widow's action against doctor for damages for malpractice in allegedly causing decedent's death, there was no prejudicial error in admitting in evidence doctor's electrocardiograms taken of deceased, even though such electrocardiograms were not among the medical records produced by hospital custodian pursuant to subpoena. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 2055.

5. Evidence ⚖553(4)

Although hypothetical questions which are based on facts not shown by the evidence are not competent, minor variances between the facts assumed and the facts in evidence do not render the question incompetent.

6. Evidence ⚖553(4)

In widow's action against doctor for alleged malpractice for causing decedent's death, hypothetical question which assumed deceased's blood pressure to be the same for a four week period when only one blood pressure reading was in evidence for that period, was not incompetent as being unsupported by sufficient evidence.

7. Appeal and Error ⚖1054(1)

In a trial before the court, admission of incompetent evidence will not be deemed prejudicial if other competent evidence in the record adequately supports the findings and judgment.

John B. Kramer, Hildebrand, Bills & McLeod, Oakland, for appellant.

Lamb, Hoge & Killion, San Francisco, for respondents.

KAUFMAN, Justice.

This is an appeal from a judgment of the Superior Court of the County of Santa Clara decreeing that defendant and cross-complainant take nothing, and that cross-defendants have judgment for costs on cross-complainant's action for damages for performance of an unauthorized autopsy on the body of cross-complainant's deceased husband by cross-defendant physician, and for negligence and malpractice causing his death.

A complaint for wages for certain nurses was filed against Mrs. Albert Gifford, by the Division of Labor Law Enforcement of the Department of Industrial Relations. She filed an answer and a cross-complaint consisting of four causes of action, the first for negligence on the part of the cross-defendant Doctors Hospital through its agents, servants and employees in regard to facilities, care and treatment; the second against Doctors Hospital and cross-defendant Dr. Milton E. Denmark for performance of an unauthorized autopsy; the third for malpractice on the part of Dr. Denmark in advising surgery, in the performance thereof and in the post-operative care; the fourth was for negligence against cross-defendant Frances Faulkner, a nurse, who was alleged to be an agent and employee of Dr. Denmark and the Doctors Hospital.

Mr. Albert Gifford entered Doctors Hospital in San Jose, California, on January 30, 1952, under the care of Dr. Denmark. He was examined by Dr. Denmark and Dr. Irene Gayus. He was suffering from high blood pressure and a pyloric ulcer which was leaking into the pancreas. There appeared to be no severe heart damage at the time the operation was decided upon, and there was no abnormal condition detected in the kidneys. Dr. Denmark decided that a gastrectomy was necessary, and with his assistance this operation was performed on Mr. Gifford on February 1, 1952 by Dr. Denmark and his assistant, Dr. Kumera. Mr. Gifford was a man of forty-one years of age; five feet four inches in height, and weighed 230 pounds. He had been treated for high blood pressure and obesity at Doctors Hospital in the autumn of 1951.

Following the operation, Mr. Gifford's condition was poor and thereafter became progressively worse. He died on February 9, 1952. Doctor Denmark stated that the cause of death was lower nephron syndrome which is kidney failure. There was testimony that the operation was normal and skillfully done.

There was medical testimony to the effect that decedent's very high blood pressure could cause kidney damage and that such a patient had less chance of recovery from this type of major surgery than does a patient with normal blood pressure. Fatalities after such operations average between two and four per cent.

Dr. Denmark performed an autopsy upon the remains, and testified that in his opinion death was due to a lower nephron syndrome. Dr. Gayus also participated in the autopsy.

The case was tried by the court without a jury. The court made detailed findings of fact on each cause of action. None of the alleged acts of negligence were found to be true, except that the special nurses did fail to chart all medicines administered. It was found that no acts or omissions of the cross-defendant Doctors Hospital contributed in any way to proximately cause the death of Albert Gifford. The court found that it was not true that Dr. Denmark performed the autopsy without the consent of Mrs. Gifford; that it was not true that Doctors Hospital or Dr. Denmark failed to disclose the results of the autopsy to Mrs. Gifford, nor that she was deprived of the means of establishing the cause of death of said Albert Gifford. As to the third cause of action it was found that there was no act of negligence on the part of Dr. Denmark or any failure to exercise the degree of skill ordinarily possessed by surgeons in the San Jose area or similar communities, in the performance of the operation, or in the care and treatment of Mr. Gifford. As to the fourth cause of action against the nurse Mrs. Faulkner, it was found that judgment in favor of Mrs. Faulkner had been stipulated to, and no proof of negligence on her part had been made.

[1] The only one of the above findings of fact that is directly attacked as unsupported by the evidence is that Dr. Denmark performed the autopsy with permission. There is abundant evidence in the record to support the findings of fact that no negligence or malpractice on the part of Dr. Denmark or the hospital employees contributed to causing Mr. Gifford's death, and such findings could not therefore be directly attacked. Appellant's complaint is that the evidence on which these findings were based was so inconsistent, contradictory, evasive and incredible as to not meet the required standard of substantial testimony.

At the time this action arose, sections 7113 and 7114 of the Health and Safety Code, dealt with the matter of autopsies. Section 7113 then read as follows:

"When autopsy permitted: Liability for autopsy. A cemetery authority or a licensed funeral director may permit an autopsy of any remains in its or his custody upon the receipt of a written authorization of a person representing himself to be any of the following:

"(a) The surviving spouse. * * *

Section 7114 of the same code provides:

"Performance of autopsy without written authorization.

"Any person who performs an autopsy on a dead body without having first obtained the written authorization required by Section 7113 of this code is guilty of a misdemeanor, except that this shall not be applicable to the performance of an autopsy by the coroner or other officer authorized by law to perform autopsies."

In 1955 section 7113 was amended to read: "A cemetery authority or licensed funeral director or a licensed hospital or its authorized personnel may permit or assist, and a physician may perform, an autopsy of any remains in its or his custody upon the receipt of a written authorization from a person representing himself to be any of the following: (a) The surviving spouse; * * *." Section 7114 was also amended to conform with the change in the foregoing section.

[2,3] It is contended that since Section 7114 was added in 1949, after an opinion by the Attorney General of California in 1948 (11 Op.Atty.Gen. 150) to the effect that oral permission was sufficient to permit a post mortem examination of a body in a Veterans Home, that it is clear that Section 7114 required written authorization directly to Dr. Denmark in this case. However, even if Section 7114 was enacted for that purpose, it does not appear to have accomplished it. A reasonable interpretation of the section is that it established a penalty for violation of Section 7113, for it refers to performance of an autopsy on a body without the "written authorization required by Section 7113", and that section is concerned only with autopsies of remains in the custody of cemeteries or funeral directors. Since the 1955 amendments to these sections, it is now clear that written permission is necessary for all autopsies performed by doctors in hospitals or elsewhere. But even if it is assumed that written permission for the performance of an autopsy by a doctor in a hospital was required by the law as it existed at the time this case arose, it does not specifically require that the permission must run directly to the person performing the autopsy. If a funeral director had written consent to an autopsy by the spouse of a deceased person, certainly any doctor performing that autopsy would be within the law. In the instant case Dr. Denmark requested Dr. Gayus, with whom he worked on this case, and who was a personal friend of Mrs. Gifford, to get written permission. Both of them took part in the autopsy, although the writing mentioned only Dr. Gayus' name. However, Dr. Denmark had discussed with Mrs. Gifford the fact that he would want to perform such an examination if her husband did not survive, and she had consented. Dr. Denmark was a surgeon, and Dr. Gayus apparently was not practicing surgery. Dr. Gayus used stationery of Dr. Denmark's on which to have Mrs. Gifford record the written permission. The finding that Dr. Denmark performed the autopsy with Mrs. Gifford's consent is therefore adequately supported.

What the law is concerned with is that the body is not mutilated without the consent of the person having the right to its disposition. Appellant says that written permission is not required for a post mortem examination but is required for an autopsy, because an autopsy is an examination to determine the cause of death, and the state has concern for what caused a person's death but has less interest in an examination for other purposes. However, it is to be noted, that where the State has reason to be concerned, as in cases where there is suspicion of death by criminal means, the coroner has the right to perform an autopsy without written permission. § 7114, Health & Safety Code. The opinion of the Attorney General cited by appellant clearly stated that Section 7113 made it necessary for a cemetery or licensed funeral director to obtain a written authorization before permitting an autopsy, but not for a hospital. Despite this opinion, it was not until 1955 that licensed hospitals and physicians were included in the statute.

Appellant maintains that prejudicial error was committed in admitting in evidence Defendant's Exhibits A and B, two electrocardiograms, which had been made after the operation. Appellant had subpoenaed all the medical records of Mr. Gifford from Doctors Hospital. The custodian brought these records but the EKG's were not among them. The custodian stated that it was the practice of the hospital to include the EKG tracings in the person's medical record if the patient was confined in the hospital at the time they were taken. Dr. Denmark testified that they were kept in the hospital records part of the time and in his own office in a locked file part of the time. He also stated that such tracings were the property of the physician who orders them, and may be kept in the physician's personal file.

[4] It is difficult to see how appellant can seriously contend that she was prejudiced by the introduction of the EKG's by respondents. Immediately after the absence of the EKG's from the file was noted upon examination of the custodian of the records at the beginning of the trial, Dr. Denmark was called by appellants under Section 2055, Code of Civil Procedure. He was questioned at length about the EKG's that he had ordered, he stated that they had been referred to Dr. Hayden for his opinion, and discussed their value to a doctor in examination and treatment of this type of case. Appellant was aware of the existence of the EKG's at least since the taking of Dr. Gayus' deposition prior to trial. They made no request to see the EKG's when they were examining Dr. Denmark, nor did they ask him where they were then located although they then knew they were not in the hospital file. Dr. Ralph Hayden, a specialist in Internal Medicine, who had examined the electrocardiograms, was called as a witness on behalf of appellant. He stated that he recalled that the EKG's had shown heart damage, and that he definitely felt the deceased had coronary disease. He was then asked: "Now, I assume that you could give a much more complete analysis if you could see the tracings, could you not?" He answered "Yes". If counsel was seriously interested in having the EKG's available to Dr. Hayden, he might have asked Dr. Denmark as to their whereabouts and availability. When the point was argued before the court, counsel for appellant accused respondents of concealing evidence. Counsel for respondents stated that Dr. Denmark had the cardiographs out when he was testifying under Section 2055. The court took a short recess in order to go over his notes on some of the testimony, and upon his return ordered the exhibit admitted for identification. They were later admitted in evidence. Clearly, the court's ruling was correct, as under these facts no showing of prejudice was made.

Appellant contends that a hypothetical question on a material matter which was lacking in essential elements was permitted over objection. The following question was asked: "Doctor, assume for approximately four weeks, while Mr. Gifford, the hypothetical man we have been talking about, was confined at Doctors Hospital, that he had this blood pressure of 250, 280, over 140. Also, assume, Doctor, that he was discharged. He left the hospital and then returned again in January of 1952, for an operation for this ulcer; that at that time his blood pressure was approximately 220 over 130.

"Now, with those facts in mind, Doctor, and that time limit I have put on that, can you determine or could you say that that would have any effect on Mr. Gifford's kidneys?" Counsel for appellant objected that there was no evidence in the record that Mr. Gifford had a blood pressure of 250 to 280 for a period of four weeks. Dr. Gayus, who had taken care of Mr. Gifford in his four week stay at Doctors Hospital in the autumn of 1951, testified that he came to the hospital at that time suffering from hypertension and obesity. She was asked what was his blood pressure when admitted to the hospital, and she said "between 250 and 280 over, and the diastolic was about 140." Appellant says the basis of the objection is that there is no testimony that that was the blood pressure for the four week period referred to, and that this was an attempt to establish kidney failure upon high blood pressure of long standing.

[5-7] Although there is just the one reading for the four week period referred to, there is abundant evidence in the record that the deceased was suffering from high blood pressure or hypertension during the four weeks of his first stay at the hospital. He was still suffering from it on his admission in January 1952, though the reading was then somewhat lower. It is true that hypothetical questions which are based on facts not shown by the evidence are not competent. However, minor variances between the facts assumed and the facts in evidence do not render the question incompetent. (19 Cal.Jur.2d 30-31, sec. 301). In the case of Forbis v. Holzman, 5 Cal.2d 407, 55 P.2d 201, it was charged that error was committed in the asking of a hypothetical question which was not based on facts developed by the testimony. There it was assumed that the patient's blood pressure had been normal during the anaesthesia. Defendant's evidence pointed to a drop in pressure before death. It was said that the last blood pressure reading that had been taken had been normal, and that the exact time of cessation of respiration was not observed. Hence it was possible there had been no drop in blood pressure. The question was held not to be prejudicial. The court there cited with approval the case of Treadwell v. Nickel, 194 Cal. 243, 267, 228 P. 25, a case in which it was observed that considerable latitude is allowed in framing a hypothetical question. It appears that the question asked herein had sufficient background in the evidence. Furthermore, even if incompetent, in a trial before the court it would not be deemed prejudicial, if other competent evidence in the record adequately supports the findings and judgment. Jaffe v. Vitz, 84 Cal.App.2d 810, 813, 191 P.2d 802. The findings in the case herein do not depend for their support upon this particular item of evidence.

Appellant contends that the testimony of Dr. Denmark was so evasive, contradictory, inconsistent and incredible as not to meet the requirement of substantial testimony, and cites Herbert v. Lankershim, 9 Cal.2d 409, 71 P.2d 220 to the effect that although an appellate court will not interfere when a judgment is entered where there is a substantial conflict in evidence, this rule does not relieve the appellate court from its duty of analyzing the evidence in the light of reason and human experience. This case does not, however, sanction a disregard of genuine conflicts in the evidence.

See, Roeder v. Roeder, 118 Cal.App.2d 572, 582, 258 P.2d 581; Ventimiglia v. Hodgen, 112 Cal.App.2d 658, 662, 247 P.2d 123. Appellant herein has devoted some thirty pages of her brief to numerous short excerpts from the testimony of Dr. Denmark, and references to portions of testimony by medical experts to prove that the evidence establishes without substantial conflict that the patient died of shock because of insufficient administration of fluids. A chart is included to show that the total of fluids in the days following the operation totaled 2405 cc's less than the total intake. It is to be remembered that the trial judge found that the special nurses did not chart all of the medicines administered. Dr. Denmark tried to estimate at the time of trial, nearly two years after the patient's death, how much more fluid was given than had been recorded by the nurses, and these estimates were included in the chart. There was considerable testimony that the patient was so irrational and difficult during the last few days of his life that the nurses had difficulty in keeping him in bed, hence could not always chart items immediately. This condition also made it harder for the nurses to keep the intravenous fluid running. Dr. Denmark testified that considering the condition of the patient it was fortunate that any records were kept. Both doctors, Denmark and Gayus, visited the patient several times a day and talked with the nurses.

A reading of the record discloses substantial evidence supporting the trial court's finding that neither Doctors Hospital nor Dr. Denmark were guilty of negligence or malpractice in the treatment of appellant's deceased husband.

We conclude that the findings and judgment find support in the record before us.

Judgment affirmed.

NOURSE, P. J., and DOOLING, J., concur.

137 Cal.App.2d 382

Myron M. KINLEY, Plaintiff and Respondent,
v.

Ford I. ALEXANDER, Defendant and Appellant.
Civ. 20754.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 2, California.

Nov. 30, 1955.

As Modified on Denial of Rehearing
Dec. 23, 1955

Action by patent licensor to recover royalties. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, William J. Palmer, J., rendered judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, McComb, Acting P. J., held, inter alia, that where action for damages for fraud in depriving plaintiff of patent license royalties was brought within three-year limitation period, it was not barred by laches, even though plaintiff had once previously filed an action and dismissed it without prejudice.

Affirmed.

1. Appeal and Error ⇨931(1)

On appeal, evidence is viewed in light most favorable to sustaining judgment.

2. Patents ⇨219(5)

In action for patent license royalties, evidence sustained findings adverse to defendant.

3. Fraud ⇨38

Where action for damages for fraud in depriving plaintiff of patent license royalties was brought within three-year limitation period, it was not barred by laches, even though plaintiff had once previously filed an action and dismissed it without prejudice. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 338, subd. 4.

4. Dismissal and Nonsuit ⇨42

The mere filing of an action and dismissing it without prejudice is not a bar to the filing of a subsequent action, within statutory period, predicated on same cause of action.

5. Patents ⇨219(5)

In action against patent licensee for royalties of which plaintiff allegedly had been deprived on account of defendant's fraud in inducing plaintiff to sell his interest in patent to third party, who had agreed to reconvey the interest to defendant, there was no evidence to support defendant's contention that defendant and third party were joint tort-feasors.

6. Patents ⇨219(2)

That patent licensor cashed licensee's checks for unpaid royalties due was no bar to licensor's action for subsequent royalties.

7. Compromise and Settlement ⇨23(3)

In action by patent licensor to recover royalties, evidence sustained finding that check which licensor had received and cashed had been for royalties past due, rather than in settlement of differences.

8. Trusts ⇨95

Where patent licensee fraudulently induced third party to buy licensor's interest, licensor was not obligated to attempt to rescind license agreement upon discovery of fraud, but was entitled to stand upon his right to have constructive trust declared, with a concurrent equitable monetary adjustment made by court.

9. Patents ⇨219(5)

In action by patent licensor for royalties, of which licensor allegedly had been deprived on account of licensee's fraud in inducing licensor to sell his interest in patent to third party, who had agreed to reconvey interest to licensee, evidence supported finding that licensor did not, by his dealings with third party, intend to waive, affirm or acquiesce in licensee's fraudulent act.

10. Patents ⇨218(1)

Where patent license entitled licensor to royalties from patent and the invention, licensor was entitled to share in royalties which licensee received from foreign company and which licensee testified were royalty payments.

11. Patents ⇨219(5)

In action by patent licensor for royalties, evidence sustained finding that amounts licensee had received as "commissions" from a certain corporation were in fact royalties in which licensor was entitled to share.

12. Patents ⇨219(5)

In patent licensor's action for royalties, licensee had burden to establish his affirmative defense that amounts refunded by licensee to sub-licensee were royalties, with which licensee should be credited in accounting with licensor.

13. Patents ⇨219(5)

In action by patent licensor for royalties, evidence supported finding that amounts which licensee had refunded to sub-licensee had not been royalties, and that licensee was not entitled to be credited with such amounts in accounting with licensor.

14. Patents ⇨218(5)

Where patent licensee fraudulently induced licensor to sell his interest to third party, who had agreed with licensee that interest would be reconveyed to licensee, licensee, in accounting for royalties, was entitled to credit only for one-half of amount which licensor had received from third party in payment.

15. Patents ⇨218(5)

Where patent licensee, by fraud, induced patent licensor to sell his interest to third party, who had agreement with licensee that third party would reconvey patent to third party in return for a license agreement, licensee, in accounting to licensor for royalties, was entitled to credit for amount received by licensor from third party, but was not entitled to credit for amount licensee had been obliged to repay third party.

16. Patents ⇨219(1)

Where patent licensee is deprived of royalties by licensee's fraud, an allowance of interest is proper. West's Ann.Civ. Code, §§ 3287, 3288.

17. Witnesses ⇨275(6)

In action by patent licensor arising out of transaction wherein licensee fraudulently induced licensor to sell patent to third person, who had agreed with licensee to reconvey patent to licensee in return for license agreement, licensee was properly prevented from cross-examining licensor as to whether licensor had been satisfied with price received from third party, in view of facts that material question was whether licensor was satisfied with price and also satisfied to let licensee retain licensor's interest in patent, and that licensee had already examined into licensor's state of mind relative to purchase price.

Pines & Walsh, Adele Walsh and Harry A. Pines, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Landon Morris, Los Angeles, for respondent.

McCOMB, Acting Presiding Justice.

From a judgment decreeing that (a) plaintiff was the owner of a right to participate in certain patent license royalties; (b) defendant holds title to such royalty interest in trust for plaintiff; (c) plaintiff was entitled to recover the sum of $196,263.96 from defendant for accrued royalties; and (d) plaintiff was entitled to one half of the royalties thereafter accruing on such patent rights, defendant appeals.

[1] Facts:* On December 15, 1942, United States Patent No. 2,305,261 was issued to plaintiff covering the method of removing sections of pipe which became stuck in an oil well. This is referred to as the "back-off" patent. About September 9, 1946, plaintiff learned that defendant was successfully using a similar back-off method in California and wrote him to notify him of the existence of the back-off patent. Up to this time plaintiff had made no successful use of his discovery and had been unable to persuade the oil industry in the mid-continent area to use it.

Following negotiations between plaintiff and defendant, on September 9, 1946, they entered into an agreement by which plaintiff assigned the legal title to the patent and the invention to defendant upon the understanding that defendant would exploit and develop its use for their joint benefit and would pay plaintiff one half the royalty proceeds from the use of the patent, exclud-

* The evidence is viewed in the light most favorable to sustaining the judgment, pursuant to the rule set forth in Re Estate of Isenberg, 63 Cal.App.2d 214, 216 [2], 146 P.2d 424 (hearing denied by the Supreme Court), and Murphy v. Ablow, 123 Cal.App.2d 853, 858 [1b] et seq., 268 P.2d 80 (hearing denied by the Supreme Court).

ing revenues from its use in the states of California, Oregon and Washington.

Defendant violated the obligations imposed upon him by the agreement by secretly and fraudulently acquiring plaintiff's interest in the patent. This was accomplished in the following manner:

Commencing shortly after the agreement of September 9, 1946, was entered into, defendant falsely represented to plaintiff on numerous occasions that he believed the patent was weak and unenforceable. Plaintiff had reason to believe that the McCullough Tool Company was infringing upon the patent, and several times told defendant of his suspicions. Defendant replied that he could not proceed against the company unless plaintiff supplied him with evidence of its infringement. At these very times defendant not only knew this company was infringing the patent, but he was actually assisting it in its unlicensed use of the patent.

During this period of time, defendant attempted to buy out plaintiff's interest in the patent for himself, but plaintiff refused to sell to defendant, telling him that if the patent was good enough for defendant it was good enough for him. Realizing he could not acquire plaintiff's interest in the patent directly from plaintiff, defendant finally told plaintiff that he himself was going to sell out and had a buyer, to wit, the Houston Oil Field Material Company, hereinafter referred to as "Homco", which would buy each of their interests for the same sum, that is, $50,000. Plaintiff told defendant that if he were selling out and they were both receiving the same price, namely $50,000 each for their respective interests in the patent, he would sell.

The fact was that in the negotiations between Homco and defendant, concerning which plaintiff knew nothing, the least amount for which defendant had offered to sell his one-half interest was the sum of $450,000. At the meeting in which defendant told plaintiff he was willing to sell to Homco, he offered to act as plaintiff's agent in negotiating and consummating a sale of plaintiff's interest to Homco, and specifically instructed plaintiff to stay away from Homco and not enter into negotiations with it. Plaintiff agreed to this and in fact stayed away, believing defendant was acting as his agent.

Plaintiff, believing defendant was selling his interest in the patent to Homco, upon defendant's instructions, gave an option to said company to purchase his interest in the patent for a total of $50,000. Thereafter, plaintiff assigned the same to Homco, still believing defendant also was selling his interest to the company for the same amount. Knowing that plaintiff had given his option to Homco in the belief that defendant was also selling his interest in the patent to that company for the same amount, defendant entered into an agreement with Homco, which he concealed from plaintiff, by which he agreed to grant Homco a license to use the patent for a royalty of 10% of their charges for its use, with a minimum annual royalty of $20,000, provided that as a condition precedent to his granting the license, Homco would exercise plaintiff's option to purchase plaintiff's interest in the patent and then assign it to defendant.

This transaction was consummated without the knowledge of plaintiff with the result that defendant not only did not sell his patent to Homco in accordance with his representation to plaintiff, but retained it and also acquired plaintiff's interest therein for nothing, thereby securing for himself alone all the benefits of the license agreement with Homco.

On October 21, 1947, defendant entered into a so-called "Commission Agreement" with the Ford Alexander Corporation, which was in fact a disguised agreement for the payment of additional royalties to defendant for the use of the patent. Defendant concealed the existence of this agreement from plaintiff, and concealed the extra royalty he received thereunder, by cutting off the accounting sheets which he submitted to plaintiff those parts which disclosed payment to him of such extra royalties.

Defendant's Contentions

First: There is not any substantial evidence to sustain the trial court's material findings of fact.

This contention is devoid of merit. In his brief, defendant has set forth only the evidence favorable to his contentions and has utterly disregarded conflicting evidence which supports the findings in favor of plaintiff.

It is not the province of a reviewing court to present by way of opinion a detailed argument on the sufficiency of the evidence to support a judgment, where, as here, it appears that the question is one of resolving a conflict in the evidence, and determining which witnesses are to be believed or disbelieved. Mr. Justice Vallée, in Overton v. Vita-Food Corp., 94 Cal.App. 2d 367, 370, 210 P.2d 757, 759 (hearing denied by the Supreme Court), apropos of this rule, pertinently said:

"André Gide once observed: 'Everything has been said already; but as no one listens, we must always begin again.' With rhythmic regularity it is necessary for us to say that where the findings are attacked for insufficiency of the evidence, our power begins and ends with a determination as to whether there is any substantial evidence to support them; that we have no power to judge of the effect or value of the evidence, to weigh the evidence, to consider the credibility of the witnesses, or to resolve conflicts in the evidence or in the reasonable inferences that may be drawn therefrom. No one seems to listen." (See Murphy v. Ablow, 123 Cal.App.2d 853, 858 [1b], et seq., 268 P.2d 80 (hearing denied by the Supreme Court); Marson v. Rand, 107 Cal. App.2d 466, 468 [3], 237 P.2d 18 (hearing denied by the Supreme Court); see also numerous cases cited in 6 West's Calif. Digest (1951) Appeal and Error, ¶989, p. 606.)

[2] We have examined the record and are of the opinion there was substantial evidence which, when considered with such inferences as the trial court may have reasonably drawn therefrom, sustains each and every material finding of fact upon which the judgment in favor of plaintiff was necessarily predicated. A detailed recital of the evidence supporting the findings in favor of plaintiff would serve no useful purpose. (Thatch v. Livingston, 13 Cal.App. 2d 202, 203, 56 P.2d 549.)

Second: The trial court erred in finding against defendant's affirmative defenses.

This contention is devoid of merit.

A. The first affirmative defense was that plaintiff was guilty of laches in prosecuting his action.

[3, 4] This proposition is erroneous. The fraud against plaintiff was consummated in May of 1949. The present action was instituted on December 27, 1951, approximately 2 years and 7 months after the actual commission of the fraud. Thus it is apparent the action was brought within the three year period provided by the statute of limitations (Sec. 338, subd. 4, Code Civ. Proc.) Defendant's claim that since plaintiff had filed a previous action and dismissed it without prejudice before he instituted the present action, plaintiff was barred from filing the instant case is untenable. The mere filing of an action and dismissing it without prejudice is not a bar to the filing of a subsequent action, within the statutory period, predicated upon the same cause of action.

B. The second affirmative defense alleged by defendant was that he and Homco were joint tort-feasors.

[5] The trial court found against this contention, which finding the record discloses was sustained by substantial evidence. The fact is there was an entire absence of evidence in the record to support a contrary finding.

C. The third to sixth, inclusive, affirmative defenses are predicated upon the theory that a settlement of the differences between the parties had been made by plaintiff's cashing on June 20, 1949, a check from defendant for $2,901.80.

[6, 7] Clearly the cashing of this check did not constitute a bar to the present action, nor does it sustain defendant's contentions, because the check was given by defendant to plaintiff for unpaid royalties due him, and, as later appears, this occurred before plaintiff discovered the fraud. This is fully demonstrated and borne out by the following correspondence between the parties. On June 27, 1949, the check was mailed to plaintiff by defendant, accompanied by this letter:

"Dear Mr. Kinley:

"Upon his return to the city, Mr. Alexander contacted us and has asked that we transmit to you the enclosed accounting covering royalties due you from him under the agreement of September 9, 1946, for the months of January, February, March, April and May, 1949, together with his check to your order in the sum of $2901.80 in payment of your share of said royalties."

In response to the foregoing letter, plaintiff wrote defendant on June 29, 1949, as follows:

"Dear Mr. Alexander:

"After I talked with our attorney regarding the 'Receipt' which you sent with the royalty check, I do not feel that I need to sign this instrument as the check sent represented back royalty which was already due.

"The check has been deposited and the cancelled check will act as your receipt. I do not quite understand why this 'Receipt' was sent."

D. A seventh affirmative defense was predicated upon the theory that plaintiff by his dealings with Homco affirmed the previous actions of defendant and waived any fraud upon the latter's part.

[8,9] This contention is clearly fallacious. Plaintiff was not obligated to attempt to rescind upon discovery of the fraud, Mabry v. Randolph, 7 Cal.App. 421, 426, 94 P. 403; 12 Cal.Jur.2d p. 784, sec. 50; he was entitled to stand upon his right to have a constructive trust declared, with a concurrent equitable monetary adjustment made by the court. There is ample evidence in the record which sustains the finding that plaintiff did not intend to waive, affirm or acquiesce in the fraudulent acts of defendant.

Third: The trial court erred in settlement of the accounting in the following particulars:

A. In treating amounts received by defendant for services rendered to Petro-

Tech Service Company in Venezuela as royalties, subject to the accounting.

[10] This proposition is not sound for the reason that the license agreement between plaintiff and defendant gave plaintiff one half the royalties from licenses of the "patent," the patent being expressly defined in the license agreement to include both the United States patent and the invention itself. Defendant testified that the money he received and was receiving from Petro-Tech was royalty payments to him. Therefore this sum was properly included in the accounting.

B. In classifying "commissions" received by defendant from the Ford Alexander Corporation as royalties, subject to accounting.

[11] This classification was correct. The trial court properly held the amount received by defendant from the Ford Alexander Corporation was royalty for the use of the patent, and not commissions to defendant for other services. The evidence sustains this finding as appears in the statement of facts, supra.

C. In disallowing to defendant a credit for one half the commissions and royalties refunded to the Ford Alexander Corporation.

[12, 13] Defendant's assertion is fallacious for the reason that there is no evidence in the record, as contended, that the litigation which defendant settled with the Ford Alexander Corporation involved a dispute over royalties for the use of the patent, and therefore plaintiff should be charged in the accounting with one half of such amount. The burden was upon defendant to establish by competent evidence this affirmative defense. He introduced none and none was received in evidence. Therefore the trial court properly found against defendant's contention on this issue.

D. In disallowing to defendant a credit in the sum of $45,000, representing the purchase price payable by Homco to plaintiff.

[14] Defendant argues that although plaintiff received only $35,000 from Homco, he should be credited with one half of $45,000, which was the sum Homco originally agreed to pay plaintiff. This theory is unsound because all that plaintiff actually received from Homco was $35,000; hence defendant was properly credited with one half this amount, which is in accordance with the rule announced in Schwartz v. Artel, 40 Cal.App.2d 433, 441.

E. In disallowing to defendant a credit for the refund adjustment to Homco.

[15, 16] It is defendant's contention that he should have received credit for the entire $35,000 which plaintiff received from Homco and plaintiff charged with one half the $30,000 he subsequently agreed to repay Homco. The trial court found it would be inequitable for plaintiff to have restored to him his royalty rights and also retain the $35,000 received by him. He therefore gave defendant credit for the $35,000 received by plaintiff; disallowed defendant credit for the $30,000 he was obliged to pay Homco. This was equitable. It is to be noted that plaintiff prayed for interest at the rate of 7% per annum, to be added to the amounts due him. An allowance of interest would have been proper, but was not awarded. (Civil Code, §§ 3287, 3288.) Interest on plaintiff's share of royalties from dates due to date of judgment, after allowing defendant credit for interest on one half the $35,000, would have amounted to $15,974.51 more to plaintiff. It appears that the trial court dealt fairly and equitably with the parties.

Fourth: The trial court erroneously excluded material testimony on cross-examination.

This final contention is likewise devoid of merit. One of the issues presented was whether plaintiff, after being made aware of all the facts, preferred to keep the $45,000 obligation from Homco rather than to set the transaction aside and repossess himself of his royalty rights of unknown value.

During the course of the cross-examination of plaintiff the following occurred:

"Q. By Mr. Houck: When you learned about the transaction entirely, which you testified was on August 23, 1949, were you then dissatisfied with your $45,000 price for your patent rights?

"The Court: Do you object, counsel?

"Mr. Morris: No, I decided not to object, your Honor.

"The Court: Your question is rather vague and indefinite, but we will let the witness answer it.

"Q. By Mr. Houck: Well, let me rephrase it. I am referring now to the period when you learned about the entire transaction by having examined the documents in Mr. O'Leary's office. That I think was August 23, 1949. Now, going back to that time were you then satisfied with your $45,000 price for your patent rights?

"Mr. Morris: Well, now, again I want to object on the grounds that that is incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial.

"The Court: I will sustain the objection to that question, counsel. It is a question that has too many possibilities for misinterpretation.

"Q. By Mr. Houck: Were you then willing to return the money to Homco if you got your rights back?

"Mr. Morris: Now just a moment. I object to that again on the ground it is a hypothetical question.

"The Court: Sustained.

"Q. By Mr. Houck: All right. Isn't it a fact, Mr. Kinley, that when you learned about the entire details of the Homco-Alexander transaction on August 23, 1949, you were still satisfied with the price that you received for your rights, and you weren't willing to give up that price in return for your rights?

"Mr. Morris: Of course the question is complex and compound, but I think I understand what he is driving at, and furthermore it is immaterial.

"The Court: Objection sustained, counsel."

Defendant contends that the trial court ruled to his prejudice in sustaining the objections set forth above. Defendant's thesis is not well taken for the following reasons:

I. The questions objected to and concerning which defendant now complains related to whether or not plaintiff was dissatisfied with the $45,000 he received from Homco, and whether or not he was willing to give back the $45,000 to Homco if he got his patent rights back as of August 23, 1949, at which time plaintiff learned the truth concerning the transaction between Homco and defendant. As of August 23, 1949, defendant had neither paid $45,000 nor any other sum for plaintiff's rights in the patent, nor was he under any obligation to do so. It was not until August, 1950, that he agreed fraudulently with Homco to repay part of this sum. Plaintiff could have answered these questions only affirmatively or negatively. Had he answered either way, it could not have been material so far as defendant was concerned because plaintiff's state of mind towards Homco on August 23, 1949, since Homco was not a joint tort-feasor with defendant, had no probative value concerning plaintiff's state of mind toward defendant's fraud.

The material question was whether or not plaintiff at that time was satisfied with the $45,000 and satisfied to let defendant retain plaintiff's interest in the patent also. Such a question was actually asked, no objection was made, and it was answered.

[17] II. Defendant had already examined into plaintiff's state of mind relative to the purchase price he received from Homco, speaking as of April, 1949, plaintiff testified:

"Q. And you thought that was a good idea? A. I thought it was a good idea. Also, I asked him about how he was going to handle it for income and he told me that he was going to handle his as capital gains. We probably talked about something else, but anyway I consented. I said, 'Well, if you are going to sell and figure that it is good to get out, why, I will get out too.'

"Q. And, 'If you will sell for $50,000, so will I.'? A. I will sell for $50,000.

"Q. You were satisfied with the $50,000 price then at that time? A. That's what he was getting.

"Q. And you were satisfied with it under those circumstances? A. If he was getting fifty, yes."

From the foregoing, it is apparent that the trial court's rulings were correct.

In view of our conclusions no useful purpose would be served by discussing other minor points urged by defendant, since it would not result in a reversal of the judgment.

Affirmed.

FOX, J., and ASHBURN, Justice pro tem., concur.

Howard A. CLARK, Plaintiff and Appellant,
v.

Dean S. LESHER, Daniel B. Halcomb, and Roy Wolfe, Defendants and Respondents.

Civ. 8613.

District Court of Appeal, Third District,
California.

Nov. 29, 1953.

Hearing Granted Jan. 25, 1956.

Action by surviving partner against newspaper publisher, his manager, and receiver of assets of partnership, which had published competing newspaper, for alleged conspiracy whereby defendants compelled cessation of publication of the competing newspaper and sale of partnership assets to publisher at depreciated price. The Superior Court, Madera County, Sherrill Halbert, J., entered judgment for defendant, and surviving partner appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Van Dyke, P. J., held that, where assignment provided that, in consideration of concurrent entry of judgment in certain action then pending and in trial, partner and his wife assigned to publisher all their interest in certain estate and claims they had filed against estate or might thereafter assert against estate and all their interests in partnership and partnership assets, such assignment did not pass to publisher the cause of action for the alleged conspiracy.

* Opinion vacated 299 P.2d 865.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded for retrial as to certain issues and for entry of judgment for plaintiff on pleas of res judicata.

See also, 106 Cal.App.2d 403, 235 P.2d 71.

1. Partnership ⇨104

In absence of statutory permission, action at law, as distinguished from one in equity, cannot be maintained between partners in regard to partnership's transactions, even though dissolution of partnership has taken place before action is brought.

2. Partnership ⇨258(2)

Where, after partnership had been dissolved except for liquidating purposes by death of one partner, and after third party had purchased all interest in partnership assets except those owned by surviving partner, third party allegedly damaged and in part destroyed value of the assets and then purchased depreciated assets from surviving party, actions of third party and of his alleged co-conspirators were not partnership transactions, and damages which might be covered by surviving partner against third party would be surviving partner's property and would not feed the partnership assets.

3. Appeal and Error ⇨916(1)

Where, in tort action, affirmative defenses were tried first, and evidence concerning alleged fraud and conditions under which it was committed were not permitted to be shown, allegations of complaint would be taken on appeal as stating the truth. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 597.

4. Contracts ⇨176(1)

Trial ⇨136(3)

Question of interpretation of contract or other written instrument is one of law if there is not extrinsic evidence properly admitted thereon, or if evidence is without conflict and not susceptible of conflicting inferences.

5. Contracts ⇨147(2)

In interpreting the contract or other written instrument, undisclosed intention of parties is immaterial, and outward manifestation of expression of assent is controlling.

6. Contracts ⇨176(1)

Construction of a contract is always a matter of law for court, regardless how ambiguous, uncertain, or difficult are its terms, and jury can only assist court by determining disputed questions of fact.

7. Assignments ⇨138

In determining affirmative defense that plaintiff's cause of action had passed to one defendant in certain assignment, question of interpretation of contract of assignment as to whether it included within its terms the cause of action sued upon was one for the court.

8. Appeal and Error ⇨1008(3)

Where construction of contract is based solely on terms of written instrument without aid of evidence, reviewing court is not bound by such construction.

9. Assignments ⇨80

Where assignment provided that, in consideration of concurrent entry of judgment in certain action then pending and in trial, plaintiff and his wife assigned to defendant all their interest in certain estate and claims they had filed against estate or might thereafter assert against estate and all their interests in partnership and partnership assets, such assignment did not pass to defendant a cause of action against defendant and others for alleged conspiracy to bring about bankruptcy and elimination of newspaper which had been operated by partnership of which plaintiff had been a member. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1908, 1910, 1911.

10. Trial ⇨350(3)

In tort action in which affirmative defenses were tried first, it was error to submit to jury question whether plaintiff was estopped to deny that he had transferred his cause of action to one defendant by representations made by him before execution of assignment to such defendant and entry of judgment thereon, in view of fact that plaintiff had not been allowed opportunity to prove truth of his allegations of fraudulent conspiracy which involved transactions relating to the assignment.

11. Judgment Ⓒ958(2)

Where former judgment is set up as a bar or estoppel, question whether there is identity of parties and of subject matter or cause of action necessary to support plea of res judicata is one of law for court if it is determinable from an inspection of record alone.

12. Judgment Ⓒ958(2)

Where extrinsic evidence is required to establish necessary identification of parties or of subject matter or cause of action for purpose of supporting plea of res judicata, or such evidence was necessary to escape effect of judgment set up as a bar or estoppel, question whether there is such identity becomes one of fact for jury unless proof admits of only one conclusion or unless right to have issue tried by jury has been waived.

13. Judgment Ⓒ958(2)

It is for court to decide and declare effect which shall be given to former judgment as evidence in subsequent action or as bar to maintenance of subsequent action.

14. Judgment Ⓒ524

It is always court's duty to construe judgment and interpret its meaning the same as any other written instrument that may be offered in evidence, and, in determining meaning, reference must be had to pleadings and issues tried.

15. Estoppel Ⓒ61

Party may assert a counter estoppel against estoppel offered by adverse party, and, where estoppel exists against an estoppel, matter is set at large or left as if neither estoppel had been offered, and the two estoppels destroy each other.

16. Judgment Ⓒ585(3)

Where newspaper publisher, his manager, and receiver of assets of partnership which had published competing newspaper allegedly conspired to compel cessation of publication of a competing newspaper and sale of partnership assets to publisher at depreciated price, surviving partner was not obligated to litigate such cause of action in action against him by administrator of deceased partner or in action against him by receiver, and, therefore, judgments in such action were not res judicata in subsequent action by surviving partner against publisher, manager, and receiver for such conspiracy.

17. Judgment Ⓒ713(2), 735

Generally, judgment is conclusive not only as to that actually determined but also to every other matter which parties might have litigated in the action, but such general rule is not applicable to independent matters which parties might have, but were not required to and did not in fact plead or rely upon, or to new rights which were acquired while the action was pending and which might have been but were not required to be injected into the case Stutsman, Hackett & Nagel, and H. A. Savage, Fresno, for appellant.

Green, Green & Plumley, Madera, for respondent Leshner.

S. Everett Phillips, Fresno, for respondent Halcomb.

Everett Coffee, Madera, for respondent Wolfe.

VAN DYKE, Presiding Justice.

Plaintiff appeals from a judgment in favor of defendants in an action brought by him to recover damages alleged to have been suffered by him through defendants' tortious acts.

His third amended complaint alleged the following: For more than twenty-eight years before he began this action "The Madera Daily Tribune and Mercury" was a daily newspaper of general circulation published in Madera by plaintiff and his father, George A. Clark, as a partnership enterprise; George A. Clark died September 7, 1944, and by his will plaintiff, who owned a one-half interest as a partner in the partnership and its assets, became the owner of an additional one-sixth interest; the remainder of the father's interest was devised to plaintiff's brother and sister; as surviving partner plaintiff continued publication of the paper; before the death of George A. Clark defendant Dean S. Leshner, hereinafter called "Leshner" was the owner and publisher of a newspaper in Merced, California, which circulated in the County of Madera; after George A. Clark died Leshner purchased "The Madera Daily News", a newspaper published in Madera; both the Merced paper and the Madera Daily News competed with plaintiff's paper; Leshner appointed defendant Halcomb as manager of his Madera Daily News; thereupon Leshner and Halcomb conspired together and agreed they would eliminate plaintiff's paper and cause it to cease publication, to the end that Leshner would be the owner and publisher of the sole newspaper published in Madera; in furtherance of the conspiracy Leshner first purchased the interest of defendant's brother and sister in plaintiff's paper, subject to administration in the estate of George A. Clark; one R. S. Jay was appointed as administrator with the will annexed of the estate of George A. Clark, deceased; after that appointment Leshner, without the knowledge and consent of Jay, caused an action to be started in the Superior Court of Madera County, entitled "R. S. Jay, Administrator, etc., v. Howard A. Clark"; this suit had for its purpose and as a part of the conspiracy aforesaid to bring about the bankruptcy and consequent elimination of plaintiff's paper from competition in the Madera County field; the two conspirators succeeded, through the medium of said administrator's action, in having a receiver appointed to take charge of the assets of the former partnership; defendant Wolfe qualified as such receiver; thereafter he joined said conspiracy, all three agreeing they would contrive to cause plaintiff's paper to cease publication and thus eliminate its competition with Leshner's papers; Wolfe, as receiver, procured an order in the action of Jay, as Administrator, v. Clark, that he take possession of all the assets of the former partnership, including the newspaper and the job printing business conducted in connection therewith and sell the assets including the newspaper; this order, however, required that the receiver sell the newspaper as a going concern and directed the receiver to continue to operate it until sale; Wolfe went into possession as receiver and then obtained a second order, which order was obtained by falsely and fraudulently representing to the judge of the superior court, presiding in the cause of Jay, as Administrator, v. Clark, that it was impossible to continue to publish the newspaper because there were no funds with which to pay expenses for labor and supplies and that it was immediately and imperatively necessary that publication of the newspaper cease; these representations were made for the purpose of carrying out the conspiracy and accomplishing through fraud the cessation of publication, with the further purpose of destroying in large part the value of the newspaper so that it could be purchased by Leshner at a depreciated value; said second order so obtained ordered the receiver to sell the partnership assets, including the newspaper, within a period of 30 days following publication of a notice of sale and in the meantime and within ten days from the date of the second order to cease publication; thereupon Wolfe stopped publication of the paper and continued with the sale thereof and of the partnership assets and Leshner purchased the whole for the sum of $30,550; had the newspaper been sold as a going concern, the partnership assets would have been worth much more; after Leshner's bid was accepted and the sale was confirmed to him the partnership assets were transferred to him; by reason of said wrongful acts of the conspirators plaintiff was damaged in the sum of $50,000.

Wolfe answered the complaint. He denied the conspiracy and the fraud. He set up affirmative defenses as follows: 1. That all of the acts complained of were done by him as receiver pursuant to valid court orders and that plaintiff had no cause of action against him except such as would have to be necessarily advanced in the matter of the receivership. 2. That all of the issues raised by the complaint had been determined in a prior action (that of Wolfe as receiver v. Clark, et al.) and were res judicata. Leshner and Halcomb also answered, raising the general issue and likewise asserting special defenses as follows: 1. That before this action was begun there was pending an action brought by Roy Wolfe as receiver against appellant, Leshner, and others and that while it was so pending appellant had executed a written assignment to Leshar, for valuable consideration, which provided as follows: That in consideration of the concurrent entry of a certain stipulated judgment in said action Clark transferred and assigned to Leshar all his right, title and interest in the properties of the estate of George A. Clark, deceased, and all claims which Clark had filed against said estate or might thereafter assert against said estate; that he further assigned to Leshar all his interest in the partnership of Clark & Clark and in the assets of said partnership; that the cause of action asserted in plaintiff's complaint here, if any there was, had constituted an asset of said former partnership and passed to Leshar by the assignment. 2. That the judgment entered in the action of Roy Wolfe, Receiver, v. Howard A. Clark was res judicata of the issues tendered by the complaint herein. 3. That plaintiff herein was equitably estopped to assert that the cause of action sued upon had not passed by the assignment and had not been barred by said judgment in the action of the receiver against Clark, because he had led Leshar to believe that such would be the result of the assignment and the judgment. 4. That the things alleged to have been done by the receiver to the damage of plaintiff were done under valid court orders and that plaintiff was limited to said receivership action for relief, if entitled to any. 5. That certain orders entered in the action of Jay, as Administrator, v. Clark were res judicata of the issues raised by plaintiff's complaint.

This action was called for trial before a jury and defendants moved that, pursuant to the provisions of Section 597 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the affirmative defenses be first tried. The motion was resisted by plaintiff, but was granted by the court. In support of the defenses of res judicata the judgment rolls in the subject actions were introduced in evidence. No evidence was otherwise taken. In support of the defense of equitable estoppel evidence was taken as to the conversations preceding the assignment and Leshar testified that therefrom he had gained the understanding that the assignment constituted in substance a general release. No evidence was permitted concerning the fraud alleged in the complaint.

The following instructions in substance were given to the jury, after general instructions, sometimes called stock instructions: The court told the jury that the complaint alleged a conspiracy between the defendants to procure the cessation of publication of the Madera Daily Tribune and Mercury prior to its sale by means of fraudulently procuring an order therefor and that these allegations had all been denied by the defendants; that the case had been heard only as to the special defenses alleged by the defendants and that the determination of a conspiracy or of a fraud in procuring said order was not before the jury; that it would be improper for them to consider the truth or falsity of the allegations of conspiracy as stated in the complaint since no evidence had been given or permitted on either side on such issue; that the sole duty of the jury was to consider the evidence tending to prove or disprove the allegations set forth in the special defenses; that defendants Leshar and Halcomb had set up four special defenses and defendant Wolfe had set up two; that Leshar and Halcomb claimed that before the commencement of the action plaintiff had assigned to Leshar all his interest in the properties in the estate of his father, all his interest in the assets of the former partnership of Clark & Clark, all his interest in the assets of the Madera Daily Tribune and Mercury and that said defendants claimed as a result of such assignment that plaintiff had no basis for the action, since the cause of action, if any existed, actually belonged to Leshar and not to the plaintiff; further that defendants Leshar and Halcomb claimed that Leshar had consented to the entry of the judgment in the case of Wolfe, Receiver, v. Clark, relying upon the representations of plaintiff and his counsel that by doing so all litigation between plaintiff and defendant Leshar would be terminated and that Leshar would not have so consented otherwise; that this defense was sometimes known as "the defense of equitable estoppel". Further, on this subject of equitable estoppel the court told the jury that the vital principle thereof was that he who by his language or conduct leads another to do what he would not otherwise have done should not subject such person to loss or injury by disappointing the representations upon which he acted; that such a change of representation involves fraud and falsehood, abhorrent to the law. The court further told the jury that Leshner and Halcomb claimed as a special defense "that the gravamen of Plaintiff's cause of action grows out of acts by the Defendant Wolfe, as a Receiver, and that if Plaintiff has any cause of action, it should be against the Defendant Wolfe as a Receiver"; that in respect of this defense said defendants specifically referred to the case of "Wolfe, Receiver, v. Clark, et al.", and alleged that any remedies open to plaintiff should have been taken in that action; that this particular defense actually consisted of two parts, namely that said defendant should be exonerated from liability in connection with these matters because Wolfe was so acting as receiver and not as an individual, and, second, the plea of res judicata. The court further told the jury that defendants Leshner and Halcomb claimed as a further defense that all of the issues "raised by the Plaintiff in this case were adjudicated and determined in the case of 'Jay v. Clark,' which is Action No. 6555 in this Court", and again this defense was a plea known as "res judicata". Similar instructions were given covering Wolfe's special defense based on his status and actions as a receiver and the plea of res judicata in respect of the judgment in the action he brought against Clark. The court defined "res judicata" as being a matter settled by judgment, and quoted to the jury portions of section 1908 of the Code of Civil Procedure concerning the effect of a final judgment. The court also quoted a portion of sections 1910 and 1911 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The court then gave to the jury the following instruction: "If you find against the Defendants on all of the special defenses now on trial before you, then you should return a verdict for the Plaintiff. On the other hand, if you find for all of the Defendants on any one or more of the special defenses now on trial before you, then I instruct you that you shall return a verdict in favor of the Defendants." There was then given to the jury two forms of verdict, and the jury, after deliberation, returned one of them, reading as follows: "We, the Jury, find for the Defendants, Dean S. Leshner, Daniel B. Halcomb and Roy Wolfe, on the trial of the special defenses." Judgment was thereupon entered. That judgment recited that after hearing the evidence the jury was instructed, the cause submitted to it, and that it returned the aforesaid verdict. The judgment then concluded as follows: "Wherefore, It is Ordered, Adjudged and Decreed, that Judgment be, and the same is hereby rendered in favor of Defendants, Dean S. Leshner, Daniel B. Halcomb and Roy Wolfe, on the special defenses and against Plaintiff Howard A. Clark * * *".

It is apparent from the foregoing that the trial court submitted to the jury for its determination the following issues: 1. Did the plaintiff by executing the assignment to Leshner assign to him, in addition to the matters specifically mentioned in the instrument, the cause of action sued upon by him in this case? 2. By reason of the circumstances shown in the evidence, was the plaintiff estopped to deny that he transferred his cause of action to Leshner by said instrument of assignment and estopped to deny the res judicata effect of the stipulated judgment? 3. Was the stipulated judgment in the case of Wolfe, Receiver, v. Clark res judicata as to the issues tendered by Clark's complaint herein? 4. Were the orders entered in the case of Jay v. Clark et al. res judicata as to the issues tendered by appellant's complaint?

We will discuss first the question of the legal effect of the assignment instrument. The provisions of this document may be summarized as follows: In consideration of the concurrent entry of a judgment in the action of Wolfe, Receiver, v. Clark, then pending, and which action was then in trial, Clark and his wife assigned to Leshner all of their interest in the properties of the estate of George A. Clark, deceased, all of their interest in all claims they had theretofore filed against that estate or which they might thereafter assert against that estate, all of their interest in the partnership of Clark & Clark, all of their interest in the assets of that partnership; they also expressly waived "all interest in said assets and in said partnership." At the time this instrument was executed the action here under review had not been filed. It was filed about two and one-half weeks after the execution of the assignment and the entry of the stipulated judgment. The assignment says nothing about a transfer of any cause of action which Clark might have against Leshar, Halcomb or Wolfe and nothing in its language justifies the inference that if such a cause of action existed it was thereby being transferred to Leshar. However, the assignment was executed concurrently with the entry of a stipulated judgment in the action then on trial and purports to be, in part at least, in consideration of the entry of that judgment. The judgment must, therefore, be considered. That judgment contained the following recitals: "* * * [A]ll parties having in open Court stipulated and agreed to the entry of this judgment in this form; and all counsel having waived Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law and having waived an accounting by the Receiver; and the said Howard A. Clark and the said Anita L. Clark having agreed, in consideration of this stipulated Judgment, to transfer and assign to the said Dean S. Leshar all of the claims in this proceeding and against the Estate of George A. Clark, Deceased, and all of their interest in the Estate of George A. Clark, Deceased, and all of their right, title, and interest in and to the partnership of Clark & Clark, dba Madera Daily Tribune and Mercury * * *." It was then decreed that the receiver should out of moneys in his hands pay to Clark and his wife the sum of $5,000; that a certain life insurance policy was an asset of the partnership and was transferred to Leshar who was adjudged to be its owner; That certain items of personal property which had been claimed by the receiver as constituting partnership assets were in fact the personal property of Mrs. Clark. The judgment directed: "That said Receiver, Roy Wolfe, be not required to render an accounting." Concerning what had been assigned to Leshar this judgment was a restatement of the assignment. On the face of the assignment, therefore, read in connection with the judgment therein referred to, there is a specific description, although in general terms, of the property and claims passing to Leshar by the assignment, and the cause of action here sued on is conspicuously absent from that statement. We have no plea for reformation of the assignment. On its face, therefore, the written assignment does not transfer the cause of action herein to Leshar. Was it shown by evidence in aid of interpretation that such transfer was in fact intended and effected by the instrument? Defendants placed three witnesses on the stand. They were Harold M. Child, Dean S. Leshar and Roy E. Wolfe. Mr. Child was the first witness sworn. When he began to testify to the execution of the instrument of assignment and to the transactions between the parties antedating the entry of judgment, objection was made that to permit him to so testify would permit him to substitute his testimony in the place of the judgment which was entered and in place of the provisions of the assignment. Thereupon it was stated to the court that the purpose of the defendants in introducing oral testimony of Mr. Child was to establish the equitable estoppel. Said Mr. Green, the attorney for Leshar: "The purpose of the question, Your Honor, is to go to the matter of estoppel that has been pleaded as an affirmative defense, and as to the representations made by the parties to this action that were relied upon by the Defendant Leshar in executing the documents that have been introduced in evidence in support of it, the files." Said the court: "It is my understanding of the statement by Mr. Green that this is offered only as to their special defenses in the nature of estoppel, where Mr. Leshar claims that he would not have signed the document if he had not understood that it settled all of the matters in question. It is a question of fact for the Jury to determine whether or not that is the situation. * * * I will overrule the objection, but it is limited to that aspect of the matter, and that is the evidence that will be received." Although Mr. Child gave a good deal of testimony concerning conversations between counsel as to statements made to the court before the entry of the judgment in the receivership action, since his testimony was limited to the defense of estoppel we need not here narrate it. Mr. Leshner was next called to the stand. At the outset of his examination the following occurred: "Mr. Nagel: If Your Honor please, may the record reflect that we voice the same objection to these questions and this line of testimony as heretofore stated? The Court: The objection will be overruled at this time." Mr. Green had previously stated: "Now, Mr. Leshner, will you please confine your testimony in this regard to one or two points, * * *, so that we can attempt to confine it within the limits of the 'special defenses'." When the witness sought to relate a conversation antedating the execution of assignment, attorneys for the appellant objected again as follows: "Your Honor, I dislike making objections like this, but I feel that this is going beyond the scope of the defense in this matter. I have no objection to the evidence coming in, if we will have opportunity to rebut the statements that are being made as purported facts. However, I feel that it goes beyond the scope of the defense * * *. The Court: This, I understand, is a conversation, is that right, Mr. Leshner? The Witness: That is correct, Your Honor. The Court: I will permit the conversation, but I will not permit any evidence about the facts. * * *." The witness went on to relate conversations between the parties and then the further question was asked: "Q. Mr. Leshner, if it had not been for the conversation with Mr. Savage which you have just related here, regarding the settlement and the release of all claims and the termination of all litigation, would you have executed the document entitled, 'Assignment', in which you released your right to an accounting by Howard Clark?" The witness answered that he would not, except for the conversation he had related, have executed the assignment, nor have stipulated to the entry of the judgment. We think it cannot be held otherwise than that, just as the testimony of Mr. Child was limited to the defense of estoppel, so was the testimony of Mr. Leshner. The next witness was Mr. Wolfe, but his testimony was confined to matters of record and when objection was made that said matters were immaterial the court asked of his attorney the following question: "And now, you are going into your defense of res judicata? Mr. Coffee: That is right, Your Honor." Appellant Clark was called to the stand in rebuttal, but his evidence was solely confined to equitable estoppel. We find nothing in the record which would throw light upon the proper interpretation of the contract of assignment. Therefore it was for the court to determine as matter of law whether or not the assignment included the cause of action sued upon. We therefore hold that the assignment, read in connection with the stipulated judgment, did not pass title to the cause of action unless, as respondents argue, it passed by the assignment to Leshner of the assets of the partnership.

[1] Respondents argue that the cause of action sued upon, assuming that a cause of action existed, would, so far as the damages inflicted by the conspiracy be concerned, constitute an asset of the partnership; that even if, as we held in Clark v. Leshner, 106 Cal.App.2d 403, 235 P.2d 71, Clark had a right to sue individually for said damage, a recovery would feed the partnership assets; that he could not recover in his own individual right. These contentions of the respondents cannot be sustained. It is a generally-accepted rule that, in the absence of statutory permission, an action at law as distinguished from an action in equity cannot be maintained between partners with respect to partnership transactions; and that the mere fact that dissolution of the partnership has taken place before the action is brought does not change the rule that no action at law can be maintained between partners. Nevertheless, this partnership had been dissolved except for liquidating purposes by the death of George A. Clark, and when thereafter Leshner, having purchased all of the interest in the partnership assets except those owned by appellant, tortiously and secretly damaged and in part destroyed the value of the assets and then purchased the depreciated assets from appellant, his actions and those of his alleged co-conspirators were not in any sense actions with respect to partnership transactions. When appellant here sold his interest in the assets of the partnership to Leshner at, so far as anything appears here to the contrary, their full value at that time and thereafter determined as he alleged in his testimony he did, and in his pleadings, that these assets had been depreciated by the fraudulent conduct of Leshner, Wolfe and Halcomb, he was not compelled to set aside what had been done but could sue for the deceit practiced upon him and the damages thereby inflicted. Johnstone v. Morris, 210 Cal. 580, 292 P. 970. We quote the following from the case of Laughlin v. Haberfelde, 72 Cal.App.2d 780, 790, 165 P.2d 544, 549, where in a similar case that court said:

"While the facts in the instant case are somewhat different the basic principles are essentially the same and, under the authorities above cited, it must be held that this case comes within one of the exceptions to the general rule and that the trial court was in error in concluding that this action for damages could not be maintained separate and apart from an action for an accounting. In a very real sense, the acts of which the appellant complains were not acts 'with respect to partnership transactions'. While the formation of the partnership furnished the opportunity, the acts constituting the tort were entirely outside of and apart from the partnership business."

[2,3] By purchasing the assets of the partnership Leshner did not purchase the appellant's cause of action; and by selling the appellant did not sell said cause of action nor his right to recover damages for the fraudulent conduct of Leshner as alleged in the appellant's complaint, measured by his proportionate ownership of the partnership. Such damages when recovered would be his property and would not feed the partnership assets. In testing this matter we must remember that, because the evidence as to the alleged fraud and as to the conditions under which it was committed were not permitted to be shown, we must take the allegations of plaintiff's complaint as stating the truth.

[4-6] Before leaving this question of the proper construction of the contract of assignment, it is well to recall that the interpretation of a contract or other written instrument, if there is no extrinsic evidence thereon properly admitted, or if the evidence is without conflict and not susceptible of conflicting inferences, is a question of law. In re Estate of Platt, 21 Cal.2d 343, 352, 131 P.2d 825. It is also settled that the undisclosed intention of the parties is immaterial and that the outward manifestation of expression of assent is controlling. Brant v. California Dairies, Inc., 4 Cal.2d 128, 133, 48 P.2d 13; 1 Restatement of Contracts, sec. 20. Further, the construction of a contract is always a matter of law for the court, no matter how ambiguous or uncertain or difficult its terms, and the jury can only assist the court by determining disputed questions of fact. O'Connor v. West Sacramento Co., 189 Cal. 7, 207 P. 527. The same case holds that it is error to submit to the jury the question of intention, to be derived in part from the language of the contract and in part from extrinsic evidence. We quote the following from, 189 Cal. at page 18, 207 P. at page 532 of said opinion:

"* * * If the facts and circumstances to be considered in the interpretation of the contract are undisputed, there is nothing to submit to the jury, and the court must direct a verdict in accordance with the construction placed on the contract by the court in the light of the admitted circumstances. On the other hand, if such circumstances are in dispute, and the meaning of the contract is to be determined one way according to one view of the facts and another way in accordance with the other view of the facts, then the determination of the disputed fact must be left to the jury, but in no case can the proper construction of the contract be left to a jury." See also California W. D. Co. v. California M. O. Co., 178 Cal. 337, 341, 177 P. 849.

[7-9] It is apparent from the foregoing that the court erred in submitting the interpretation of the contract of assignment to the jury for its general verdict, as to whether or not it included within its terms the cause of action sued upon. But, in view of the long history of this litigation, the legal effect of the assignment ought to be here determined. The special defense based upon respondents' claims as to its proper meaning has been tried and respondents did not see fit to present extraneous evidence. We may here construe the assignment. "An appellate court is not bound by a construction of the contract based solely upon the terms of the written instrument without the aid of evidence." In re Estate of Platt, supra, 21 Cal.2d at page 352, 131 P.2d at page 830. This court's construction is that by the assignment the cause of action herein did not pass.

[10] We take up next the second question asked the jury when the cause was submitted: Is the plaintiff estopped to deny that he transferred his cause of action to Leshar by representations made by him before the execution of the assignment and the entry of the accompanying judgment? We think it apparent that there was error in submitting this issue to the jury without having given to the appellant an opportunity to prove the truth of his allegations of fraudulent conspiracy. The issue could not be fairly and fully tried without going into the merits of the action as set out in plaintiff's complaint. Mr. Child testified concerning the circumstances under which the assignment was executed. He related that at the time the parties were in trial in the action which Wolfe, as receiver, had brought against Clark, Leshar and others, there was also pending the action of Jay, as Administrator, v. Clark. He said that Mr. Savage, Clark's attorney, proposed that the litigation all be settled. He testified that so far as any causes of action by Clark against Leshar were concerned, he had intended that all of them should be settled and that such was the conversation between the parties. Leshar testified much to the same effect; in fact, he went further and said that general language was used to the effect that if he would agree to do as Clark wanted him to in settling matters, Clark would forego any and every claim which he might have against Leshar. (No language of general release appeared in the assignment.) It is Leshar's claim, therefore, that upon such evidence he had shown appellant was estopped to deny that he had released the cause of action here sued upon. He claimed that he knew nothing about the existence of that cause of action and that nothing was specifically mentioned about it; he said that if any hint had been made that further litigation would ensue he would not have entered into the agreement of assignment; that he was shocked and amazed when some two and a half weeks after the assignment had been executed and the stipulated judgment entered this action was begun. We will assume, for purpose of argument, that this proof would have been sufficient to sustain a holding of estoppel. But it becomes immediately apparent that if we also assume to be true, as we must in approaching this question, all of the allegations of the complaint which appellant was not permitted to prove, then, although Leshar testified he knew nothing of the claim of appellants here sued upon, yet that was false for he was in fact guilty of the fraudulent acts with which he has been charged and was in no position to urge an equitable estoppel. Since he committed the tort he must have known that thereby he created in appellant a cause of action for damages for his deceit. In so far as Wolfe and Halcomb are concerned, and in so far as they seek to find shelter behind the plea of equitable estoppel advanced by Leshar, what we have said applies also to them. Therefore, if the general verdict of the jury was based upon the defense of equitable estoppel, the judgment must be reversed for error in the rejection of rebuttal evidence.

We pass now to the pleas of res judicata.

[11-13] "When a former judgment is set up as a bar or estoppel, the question whether there is such an identity of the parties and of the subject matter or cause of action as will support the plea of res judicata is a question of law for the court when it is determinable from an inspection of the record alone; but if extrinsic evidence is required to effect the necessary identification, or to escape the effect of a judgment set up as a bar or estoppel, it becomes a question of fact and must go to the jury unless the proof admits of only one conclusion or the right to have the issue tried by the jury has been waived. In any case, when this point is established, or if it is not disputed, it is for the court to decide and declare the effect which shall be given to the former judgment as evidence in the pending action or as a bar to its maintenance. (Italics ours). 50 C.J.S., Judgments, § 846, p. 420.

[14] “* * * It is always the duty of the court to construe the judgment and interpret its meaning the same as any other written instrument that may be offered in evidence, and in determining what is meant by the language used in the judgment reference must be had to the pleadings in the case, and the issues to be tried must be ascertained before it can be determined what the judgment means.” Raney v. Home Ins. Co., 213 Mo.App. 1, 246 S.W. 57, 60-61. See Koontz v. Whitaker, Mo.App., 111 S.W.2d 197, and cases cited in 34 C.J., page 1080, note 93; see, also, California W. D. Co. v. California M. O. Co., supra, 178 Cal. at page 341, 177 P. 849.

At the trial herein and in support of the pleas of res judicata the proof consisted of the introduction in evidence of the entire clerk's file in the cases of Jay v. Clark and Wolfe v. Clark.

During the course of administration of the estate of George A. Clark, deceased, his administrator, R. S. Jay, filed an action against appellant herein and it is claimed that orders entered in that action constitute adjudications of the issues tendered by the complaint herein. The complaint in Jay v. Clark alleged that appellant had continued as surviving partner to carry on the partnership affairs; that he had failed to keep accounts and was for that reason unable to render accounts to Jay, as administrator, concerning his handling of the partnership business; that Jay had been unable to obtain a settlement of partnership affairs and the payment to him of sums due deceased from partnership assets. The relief asked was that Clark be compelled to account, that the partnership assets be sold, the debts of the partnership paid and the surplus distributed. To this pleading Clark filed his answer and also a cross-complaint. He admitted he had continued to carry on the partnership business, and had not theretofore rendered an account. He denied he had failed to keep accounts and alleged that after the settlement of partnership debts there would be nothing due the plaintiff administrator. By his cross-complaint he asserted that he had a claim against his father's estate for something in excess of $2,000 for services rendered and he prayed for a judgment in that amount, but the cross-complaint was dismissed by court order on motion of the plaintiff administrator. The cause was tried and the court found that Clark had been guilty of failing to wind up the partnership affairs and of failing to account for his activities as surviving partner; that there had never been any settlement of partnership accounts during the lives of both and that the value of the interest of deceased could not be ascertained without an accounting, which accounting had been refused. The court thereupon, by an interlocutory judgment or order, directed the surviving partner to account and ordered that all of the property of the partnership be sold and that all obligations be paid. It was further decreed that a receiver was necessary to wind up the partnership affairs; that when that had been accomplished and when the accounts of the receiver had been settled final judgment should be entered in the administrator's favor as to any sum found to be due the estate of deceased. Appellant herein appealed from said interlocutory judgment and this court affirmed the same. See Jay v. Clark, 85 Cal.App.2d 88, 192 P.2d 462. It appears from the file of the cause that thereafter Wolfe was appointed as receiver and that he thereafter reported to the court he had taken possession of the partnership assets, including the newspaper, and had sold all of the assets to Leshar; that he had received from the sale the sum of $30,750, which he had on hand, less claimed expenses; that he had filed a suit as receiver against appellant herein, his wife and various Does. (We will examine the record of the judgment in said receiver's action hereinafter.) He also reported that a stipulation had been entered into whereunder he was, from assets in his hands, to pay to appellant herein and to his wife a total sum of $5,000 in full satisfaction "of all claims and demands against said receiver and against the Estate of George A. Clark, Deceased" and he reported said sums have been paid as stipulated. He further reported that all interested parties had agreed as follows: 1. To the waiver of any account by the receiver in the receivership proceedings. 2. To the entry of an order discharging the receiver as though a full and complete accounting had been made. 3. To permit the receiver to draw a check from the receiver's assets in the sum of $1,800 to himself as receiver in compensation for his services as such. 4. To pay certain sums to a Mr. Coffee in compensation for his services as attorney for the receiver. 5. To pay all remaining sums to Jay, as administrator of the estate of Clark. He reported it was further agreed that without notice orders carrying out the agreements could be made. It appears that orders were made in the receivership in accordance with the receiver's said report and that, without accounting, he was discharged upon making the disbursements aforesaid. It appears from the clerk's file received in evidence that no final judgment in the action of Jay, as Administrator, v. Clark was made.

An examination of the file in the case of Wolfe v. Clark, which was the action filed by Wolfe as receiver against appellant herein, and which is pleaded as res judicata of the issues tendered in appellant's complaint in this action, discloses that the receiver by his complaint alleged the following matters: That pursuant to court orders he had as receiver sold and delivered all of the assets of said partnership to Leshner and had received the price therefor from him; that Clark and others, however, claimed an interest in and to that part of the assets consisting of the newspaper and the proceeds from the sale thereof adverse to the receiver, which claims were without right. He prayed a decree declaring that such claims of adverse interests were without right. Appellant herein as defendant in the receiver's action answered the complaint and admitted that he did claim an interest in the funds and property in the hands of the receiver as such and affirmatively alleged that he had a claim against the assets of the receivership for services rendered in conducting the newspaper, both before and after the appointment of the receiver; that he also held a certain life insurance policy which he claimed belonged to him, but which the receiver refused to give over. He asserted his half interest in the partnership assets and that he was, therefore, entitled upon conclusion of liquidation proceedings to receive one-half the net proceeds. Leshner also filed an answer in said action alleging that he appeared as having been sued as Doe One. He admitted the allegations of the complaint, but said he had not received the assets which he purchased at the receiver's sale and that he also claimed the life insurance policy as a part of those assets. He further alleged his purchase of all partnership assets; that he had not received delivery of the same and had been damaged thereby. He also cross-complained against the receiver and against the other parties, but his cross-complaint was based on the same matters referred to in his answer. The receiver filed answers to the various counter pleadings and thereafter the stipulated judgment hereinbefore referred to was entered in the cause. The exact form of the judgment to be entered was stipulated to and the form was adopted by the court and entered as the court's judgment.

[15-17] It is apparent from an examination of the two causes claimed to have resulted in adjudication of the issues tendered by the complaint in this action that said judgments do not in any way expressly adjudicate said issues. No mention, direct or inferential, is made therein concerning the claim herein sued upon, that is, appellant's claim that Leshner, Halcomb and Wolfe had fraudulently conspired to compel cessation of publication of the

Madera Daily Tribune and Mercury and to compel its sale to Leshar at a depreciated price and that they had succeeded in consummating their conspiracy. Respondents make no claims to the contrary, but they say that such issues, nevertheless, could have been, by the appellant herein, affirmatively tendered in various ways in the action brought against him by Jay, as administrator, and in the action brought against him by the receiver and by way of opposing the receiver's account; that, therefore, since appellant did not so tender such issues, but on the contrary withheld them he is now estopped to litigate such issues in this action. Of course all this assumes that when the stipulated judgment was entered in the receiver's action, when accounting by the receiver was waived, and when the issues of fraudulent conspiracy were not injected into the administrator's action that appellant herein knew that he had been damaged by the conspirators and had a cause of action against them, for, of course, if he did not have such knowledge then nothing done or not done by him in said actions could estop him from seeking redress in this action. It is equally true that if his ignorance was due to the conspirators' having concealed their nefarious activities behind the shield of the receivership, they would themselves be estopped to rely upon estoppel by judgment. "A party may assert a counter estoppel against an estoppel offered by the adverse party. Where an estoppel exists against an estoppel, the matter is set at large, or is left as if neither estoppel had been offered; the two estoppels destroy each other and the interest of justice requires that both parties be liberated therefrom." 31 C.J.S., Estoppel, § 65. Thus as against the claim that what he did and failed to do in the actions counted upon as affording support for the plea of res judicata, he could have shown the fraud alleged in his complaint and his ignorance thereof at the time he might have urged the same in said pending actions. This he was not permitted to do since by the orders of the trial court no evidence would have been received touching upon the matters alleged in the appellant's complaint. However, we think that in any event the plea of res judicata is not borne out by the evidence here, consisting, as it does, solely of the record in the two pending actions. We have hereinbefore said that by virtue of the situation existing when the alleged tort was committed its commission gave to appellant a right of action completely separate from the partnership affairs and constituting no part of partnership assets. Therefore, he was not obliged to litigate that cause of action in either of the two pending actions.

"* * * '[T]he general rule that a judgment is conclusive, not only as to that which is actually determined, but also as to every other matter which the parties might have litigated in the action, is not always applicable literally.' It has no application to those independent matters which the parties may, but are not required to and do not in fact plead or rely upon, such as other causes of action which may be joined or independent matters which might form the basis of a counterclaim or cross-complaint, or constitute an equitable defense to an action at law; nor does it apply to new rights acquired pending the action which might have been but were not required to be injected into the case * * *" (15 Cal.Jur. "Judgments", sec. 194, p. 145.)

We hold that the pleas of res judicata were as a matter of law not sustained by the evidence offered in support thereof.

In accordance with the foregoing it is ordered that the judgment appealed from be and the same is hereby reversed and the cause is remanded for the limited purpose of retrial as to the issues of equitable estoppel and as to the merits. It is further ordered that judgment be entered in favor of plaintiff on the pleas of res judicata.

PEEK and SCHOTTKY, JJ., concur.

137 Cal.App.2d 277

Meier SCHNEIDER, Appellant,

v.

CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION of the COUNTY OF LOS ANGELES, acting ex officio as the Civil Service Commission of the Air Pollution Control District of the County of Los Angeles, State of California, and Winston W. Crouch, Harry Albert and Hayden F. Jones, constituting the members of the said Commission, Air Pollution Control District of the County of Los Angeles, Air Pollution Control Board of the Air Pollution Control District of the County of Los Angeles, State of California, and Roger W. Jessup, Herbert C. Legg, John Anson Ford, Burton Chace and Kenneth Hahn, constituting the members of the said Board, and Gordon P. Larson, Air Pollution Control Officer and Director of said District, Respondents.

Civ. 21145.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California.

Nov. 28, 1955.

Proceeding for writ of mandate to review a decision of the Civil Service Commission of Los Angeles County sustaining the discharge of an employee from his civil service position as chemist. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Arnold Praeger, J., affirmed the action of the commission and the employee appealed. The District Court of Appeal, White, P. J., held that in view of evidence that employee had violated orders and office procedure, had criticized and ridiculed his supervisors, and criticized his fellow employees, had engaged in deliberate and disturbing loud talking, and had refused to make an analysis, commission did not abuse its discretion in sustaining discharge of employee.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Appeal and Error ⇨931(8)

On appeal, findings of fact must be read together, and so construed as to uphold rather than to defeat the judgment, and ambiguities or uncertainties in findings must, if reasonably possible, be construed to support the judgment.

2. Appeal and Error ⇨1026

Where appellant has not been injured or prejudiced by claimed error, a reversal is not warranted.

3. Officers ⇨72(1)

The findings of a majority of the county civil service commission constitute the findings of the commission, while the findings of the dissenting commissioner do not.

4. Officers ⇨72(2)

Upon review of decision of county civil service commission upholding discharge of employee, sole question before trial court was whether there was substantial evidence in record to support findings of commission. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 1094.5

5. Mandamus ⇨187(9)

In proceeding before county civil service commission relating to discharge of chemist of air pollution control district, where trial court found that all allegations of paragraphs of petition for writ of mandate were true, and paragraph 12 thereof related to statements by dissenting commissioner, and court also found that there was substantial evidence to support commission's findings, contradiction between court's findings was neither material nor prejudicial. West's Ann.Const. art. 6, § 4½; West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 475.

6. Mandamus ⇨70

The Civil Service Commission of Los Angeles County is a local administrative tribunal exercising quasi judicial powers, and its actions may be reviewed by mandamus.

7. Mandamus ⇨172

Upon review by mandamus of decision of county civil service commission, the chief issues are whether the person affected has been accorded a fair hearing, and whether there is any substantial evidence to support determination of commission and the court must confine itself to the showing made before the commission with regard to the sufficiency of the evidence.

8. Officers ⇨72(1)

The power to make the determination whether or not there is a basis for the discharge of the employee is vested in the county civil service commission.

9. Mandamus ☞172

In the absence of a claim that the county civil service commission proceeded without or in excess of jurisdiction, or that the trial was not full or fair, or that there was a prejudicial abuse of discretion in some other respect, the court is confined to question whether decision of commission is supported by findings, and whether the findings are supported by substantial evidence in the light of the entire record.

10. Evidence ☞83(4)

In proceeding to review by writ of mandate a decision of the county civil service commission sustaining discharge of employee, the ruling of the commission comes before the court attended by a strong presumption that official duty has been regularly performed.

11. Officers ☞69.7

In proceeding before county civil service commission relating to discharge of chemist, in view of evidence that employee had violated orders and office procedure, had criticized and ridiculed his supervisors, and criticized his fellow employees, had engaged in deliberate and disturbing loud talking, and had refused to make an analysis, commission did not abuse its discretion in sustaining discharge of employee. West's Ann.Rules on Appeal, rule 10(b).

12. Officers ☞69.7

Under civil service, fitness and suitability include a disposition to refrain from creating disorder or inciting dissension, and the qualities of self-discipline and cooperation in maintaining standards of public service, and, a tendency to foment strife and discontent is a proper ground of unsuitability as basis for discharge of employee.

13. Officers ☞72(2)

Only where there is no difference of opinion, and the charge appears clearly unsupported, will the court hold that the county civil service commission has acted arbitrarily or capriciously in sustaining the discharge of an employee.

14. Officers ☞72(2)

Where civil service commission had sustained discharge of employee, though dissenting commissioner thought a 30 day suspension was sufficient punishment, and findings of commission were supported by substantial evidence, the court would not act to change penalty, since the determination of the penalty to be imposed is vested in the commission and not in the court.

Preston D. Orem, Pasadena, for appellant.

Harold W. Kennedy, County Counsel,
Andrew O. Porter, Deputy County Counsel,
Los Angeles, for respondents.

WHITE, Presiding Justice.

This is an appeal from a judgment of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County denying a peremptory writ of mandate and discharging an alternative writ theretofore issued, thereby affirming the action of the Civil Service Commission of Los Angeles County sustaining the discharge of appellant from his civil service position as Senior Air Pollution Chemist of the Air Pollution Control District of said county.

On March 31, 1954 appellant was served with an amended letter of discharge containing 15 charges upon which his discharge was predicated. Appellant answered said letter and requested a hearing before respondent Civil Service Commission. The matter was tried before said commission at a formal two-day hearing at which witnesses testified under oath, the testimony was recorded by a court reporter, and documentary evidence was received. The reporter's transcript of the commission hearing and the original exhibits were in evidence before the superior court, and, pursuant to Rule 10(b), Rules on Appeal, have been transmitted to this court.

The foregoing amended letter of discharge set forth, "Your attitude, inability and refusal to carry out orders, violation of direct orders, your approach to the air pollution control program and your actions in regard to the supervisors and fellow employees are such that your continued employment is a detriment to the Air Pollution Control District." Then follows fifteen specific charges, each set up in a numbered paragraph.

At the hearing before respondent commission, several of the charges were dismissed, while others were found "not true" or "not established", leaving charges 1, 2, 5, part of 12, 13, 14 and 15, upon which the question arises as to whether the evidence supports respondent commission's finding that appellant's discharge was justified.

Following the hearing before respondent commission the latter made findings upon the charges preferred against appellant from which the following conclusions were made:

"The Commission therefore concludes that said employee, Meier Schneider, refused to carry out orders, violated direct orders. A majority of the Commission concludes that said employee was guilty of actions making his continued employment in the District a detriment to the District.

"The majority of the Commission therefore concludes that the facts and reasons stated justify the discharge of said Meier Schneider.

"Dated this 8th day of July, 1954.

"/s/ Winston W. Crouch
"President

"/s/ Hayden F. Jones

"I concur in the statement of facts and in the conclusion that said employee refused to carry out orders and violated direct orders, but dissent from the conclusion that his actions made his continued employment a detriment. I believe a thirty day suspension is sufficient punishment for the acts alleged, many of them being trivial, and that the facts do not justify the discharge of Meier Schneider.

"Dated this 8th day of July, 1954

"/s/ Harry Albert"

Appellant's first contention is that the Findings of Fact upon a material issue are contradictory and irreconcilable, and therefore the judgment must be reversed. The claimed contradictory finding concerns the truth or falsity of Paragraph XII of appellant's petition for writ of mandate which reads as follows: "That, as stated by Civil Service Commission Member Harry Albert in his dissenting opinion Exhibit 'C', (page 4), the 'facts do not justify the discharge of Meier Schneider', nor did petitioner's actions make 'his continued employment a detriment.'"

Paragraph I of the Findings of Fact by the trial court reads in part, "That all the allegations of Paragraphs * * * XII * * * of the Petition for Writ of Mandate are true * * *".

It is appellant's contention that by adopting Paragraph XII of the Petition for Writ of Mandate as "true" the court found, quoting from said Paragraph XII, that the "facts do not justify the discharge of Meier Schneider", nor did appellant's actions make "his continued employment a detriment". Appellant insists that this finding is contradictory of and irreconcilable with that portion of Paragraph III of the Findings of Fact which states, "That there was substantial evidence to support each and every one of the findings made by the Civil Service Commission, and the finding support the Commission's conclusion that Petitioner's discharge was justified". Appellant insists that the court below adopts both the "findings of the majority of the Commission and the findings of Commissioner Albert in that the sentence quoted does not specify the findings of a 'majority of the Commission,' but specifies the 'findings made by the Civil Service Commission,' which included the minority findings of Commissioner Albert."

[1-5] The weight of authority supports the rule that on appeal findings of fact must be read together and so construed as to uphold rather than to defeat the judgment. Ambiguities or uncertainties in findings must, if reasonably possible, be construed to support the judgment. Woodbine v. Van Horn, 29 Cal.2d 95, 109, 173 P.2d 17; City of Signal Hill v. Wyse, 9 Cal.App.2d 641, 642, 50 P.2d 1076; Ensele v. Jolley, 188 Cal. 297, 302, 204 P. 1085. In the case at bar, although the findings might well be improved, the claimed inconsistency appears to be one of words rather than ideas. Having in mind the prevailing rule of liberal interpretation of findings and reading them in their entirety, we are persuaded that the claimed conflict is not material and certainly could not result in a miscarriage of justice, Calif.Const. art. VI, sec. 4½; Civ.Code Proc. sec. 475. Manifestly, no prejudice occurred to appellant and unless injury or prejudice to appellant ensued from the claimed error a reversal is not warranted. Tupman v. Haberkern, 208 Cal. 256, 263, 280 P. 970. Paragraph XII of appellant's petition alleged that Commissioner Harry Albert made certain statements which are quoted from the conclusions arrived at by respondent commission and the court merely found that it was "true" that he made such statements. The court found "That there was substantial evidence to support each and every one of the findings made by the Civil Service Commission, and the findings support the Commission's conclusion that Petitioner's discharge was justified." The findings of a "majority of the Commission" constitute the findings of the commission, while the dissent of Commissioner Albert does not. The sole question before the trial court was a determination of whether there was substantial evidence in the record to support the findings of respondent commission, Civ.Code Proc. sec. 1094.5. The court made its findings on that issue. Therefore, the truth or falsity of Paragraph XII of appellant's petition for writ of mandate and the finding thereon is neither material nor prejudicial.

Appellant next contends there is no substantial evidence in the record to support the decision of respondent commission in that the facts do not justify his discharge.

Count 1 charges that appellant was instructed to collect the young leaves from the previous year's growth from four types of vegetation for the purpose of performing fluoride analyses. Instead he substituted a method of his own not acceptable to the district, and although asked several times to follow his supervisor's instructions, he failed to do so. He took numerous samples from trees other than the ones specified. The commission found these facts to be true. That determination is supported by the testimony of Gordon P. Larson, Director of the Air Pollution Control District, and other testimony adduced at the hearing.

Count 2, charging a violation of office procedure for submitting papers for typing, was found true by the commission. Some of the evidence on this question showed: That petitioner violated instructions and procedures by submitting material for typing without the prior approval of his supervisors, as required by district rule.

Count 5, charging appellant with criticisms of his supervisors and fellow employees, was found true by the commission. Some of the evidence supporting the charge is as follows: That on February 6, 1953, petitioner referred to his supervisor as completely unqualified and a "daisy picker". On December 16, 1953, petitioner referred to the Plant Section of the Air Pollution Control District and its vegetation program as "ridiculous".

Count 12 alleging ridicule of his supervisors after being ordered to standardize certain solutions, was found true by the commission, but the commission found the allegation that appellant attempted to discourage other employees from following the supervisors' instructions not true. Some of the evidence supporting the first part of the charge is as follows: When another employee was told to standardize silver nitrate, one-tenth normal, petitioner said, "Whoever heard of standardizing a silver nitrate solution? It doesn't deteriorate. It is the same thing as labeled on the bottle. It is ridiculous."

Count 13, alleges deliberate and disturbing loud talking, which the commission found to be true. Some of the evidence supporting it is as follows: That petitioner engaged in loud conversations concerning matters of no importance to his assignment, preventing another employee from working.

Count 14, alleges the withholding of certain data sheets from the supervisor and waiting until he had "run around awhile" looking for them before putting them on his desk. The commission referred to this as a practical joke but found the statement to be true. Some of the evidence supporting it is as follows: That on March 8, 1954, petitioner's immediate supervisor asked for information concerning a report petitioner had turned in. Petitioner told him the report might be in a number of places and after the supervisor had searched for a considerable period of time, petitioner told him it was on his desk, he just wanted the supervisor to "run around a little while".

Count 15 alleges the refusal to do an analysis. The commission found the charge to be true. Some of the evidence in support thereof is as follows: That on June 29, 1953, petitioner was ordered to do a zinc analysis on a soil sample. Petitioner in a loud voice objected to doing so, insulted his supervisor, and said "he could see no reason to do it and would not do it unless he was very strongly ordered to do it."

The commission also found the allegations of the answer to the amended charges filed by appellant before the Civil Service Commission, and particularly the allegations of Paragraphs 15 and 18 thereof, were not true.

Appellant introduced before the commission five employee efficiency reports covering the period from January 1, 1949 to December 31, 1953, inclusive. These reports show that appellant's rating for 1952 and 1953 was only "fairly satisfactory" and the 1953 report shows certain improvement was necessary in connection with: amount of work performed; completion of work promptly on schedule; attentiveness or application to duties; co-operation with others; courtesy toward others; meeting and handling the public, and getting along with fellow employees. This report also states that he was definitely below requirements with respect to courtesy towards others.

[6-10] The Civil Service Commission of Los Angeles County is a local administrative tribunal exercising quasi judicial powers and its actions may be reviewed by mandamus. However, on such a review the chief issues are whether the person affected has been accorded a fair hearing, and if so, whether there is any substantial evidence to support the determination of the administrative board. In the review proceedings the court must confine itself to the showing made before the administrative tribunal with regard to the sufficiency of the evidence. The power to make the determination of whether or not there is a basis for the discharge in the instant case is vested in respondent commission. In the absence of a claim that the commission proceeded without or in excess of jurisdiction, or that the trial was not full or fair, or that there was a prejudicial abuse of discretion in some other respects, the courts are confined to the question of determining whether the decision of the commission is supported by the findings and the findings are supported by substantial evidence in the light of the entire record. Dierssen v. Civil Service Comm., 43 Cal.App.2d 53, 62, 63, 110 P.2d 513; Greif v. Dullea, 66 Cal.App.2d 986, 1009, 153 P.2d 581; La Prade v. Department of Water and Power, 27 Cal.2d 47, 53, 162 P.2d 13; Keeley v. City of Modesto, 36 Cal.App. 2d 254, 258, 97 P.2d 468; Vaughn v. Board of Police Comm., 59 Cal.App.2d 771, 780, 140 P.2d 130; Pratt v. Los Angeles County Civil Service Comm., 108 Cal.App.2d 114, 119-120, 238 P.2d 3. In a proceeding such as the one now engaging our attention, the ruling of the commission comes before the court attended by a strong presumption that official duty has been regularly performed. Drummey v. State Bd. of Funeral Directors, 13 Cal.2d 75, 85, 87 P.2d 848; Sipper v. Urban, 22 Cal.2d 138, 144, 137 P.2d 425, concurring opinion; DeLuca v. Board of Supervisors, 134 Cal. App.2d 606, 286 P.2d 395.

[11] Although some of the charges might be characterized as minor or even trivial, yet when considered in their entirety and viewed in the light of the whole record, we cannot say that respondent commission abused the discretion vested in it by determining that appellant "was guilty of actions making his continued employment in the District a detriment to the District”.

[12, 13] Cogently applicable to the situation presented in the case at bar is the language used by Mr. Justice Shenk in his dissenting opinion in the case of La Prade v. Department of Water and Power, supra, 27 Cal.2d at page 59, 162 P.2d at page 20, as follows:

“The question of fitness for the position does not contemplate merely qualifications of skill in performing the duties of the office. Under civil service, fitness and suitability have a broader significance, and must be deemed to include a disposition to refrain from creating disorder or inciting dissension, and the commendable qualities of self-discipline and cooperation in maintaining standards of public service. A tendency to foment strife and discontent is a proper ground of unsuitability, and only if there is no room for difference of opinion and the charge appears clearly unsupported may it be held that the board acted arbitrarily or capriciously in discharging the employee. McNatt v. Lawther, Tex.Civ. App., 223 S.W. 503.”

[14] Finally, appellant urges that the penalty imposed was too severe and quotes from the dissenting opinion of Commissioner Albert wherein it is said, “I believe a thirty day suspension is sufficient punishment for the acts alleged, many of them being trivial * * *”. But, the court having found that the findings of a “majority of the Commission”, which constitute the findings of the commission, were supported by substantial evidence, the determination of the penalty to be imposed by the commission was vested in the commission and not in the court. King v. Board of Medical Examiners, 65 Cal.App.2d 644, 652, 151 P.2d 282; Fuller v. Board of Medical Examiners, 14 Cal.App.2d 734, 737, 59 P.2d 171. The instant case is not one wherein the court found one or more of the charges unsupported by the evidence and was accordingly authorized to remand the matter to the administrative agency for the purpose of reconsidering the penalty imposed.

Cal.Rep. 289-290 P.2d—43

Cooper v. State Board of Medical Examiners, 35 Cal.2d 242, 252, 217 P.2d 630, 18 A.L.R.2d 593; Nelson v. Department of Corrections, 110 Cal.App.2d 331, 335, 242 P.2d 906.

For the foregoing reasons, the judgment is affirmed.

DORAN, J., concurs.

137 Cal.App.2d 187

Arthur W. FLEHARTY, Plaintiff and Appellant,

v.

Henry Leroy BOLTZEN, Louis Stagl, and Guido Stagl, Defendants and Respondents.

No. 16486.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

Nov. 22, 1955.

Action by motorist against truck driver for injuries and automobile damage sustained in collision which occurred as truck driver was passing motorist who was attempting left turn. The Superior Court, Contra Costa County, Wakefield Taylor, J., entered judgment for truck driver and motorist appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Fred B. Wood, J., held that evidence whether truck driver had knowledge or should have known that plaintiff was in dangerous position was insufficient to raise any question for jury as to last clear chance doctrine.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Negligence $\S$ 83.4

Doctrine of last clear chance presupposes that plaintiff as result of his negligence is in a dangerous position, that defendant knows or should have known of plaintiff's dangerous position and that defendant has the last clear chance to avoid the accident and that his failure to do so is proximate cause of plaintiff's injury.

2. Negligence ⇨138(4)

In determining whether there is substantial evidence to meet the essential elements necessary to invoke doctrine of last clear chance, evidence must be viewed in light most favorable to contention that doctrine is applicable, and if the evidence when so viewed establishes these elements, plaintiff is entitled to an instruction thereon.

3. Negligence ⇨138(4)

If it cannot be said, as a matter of law that evidence is insufficient to justify application of last clear chance doctrine, jury should be instructed concerning the doctrine.

4. Automobiles ⇨244(59)

In action for personal injuries and property damages arising out of automobile-truck collision it was necessary in order to determine whether doctrine of last clear chance applied in the case, that plaintiff show by substantial evidence that truck driver had actual knowledge of plaintiff's dangerous position in time to have had a clear chance to avoid the collision.

5. Negligence ⇨83.7

The knowledge which defendant must have of plaintiff's danger in order for last clear chance doctrine to be applicable is actual knowledge, although in a given case the evidence may warrant inference that defendant had such knowledge despite his testimony to contrary.

6. Negligence ⇨83.7

Defendant's knowledge of plaintiff's dangerous position, as a necessary element to invoke doctrine of last clear chance, is imputed where circumstances are such as to convey plaintiff's peril to mind of reasonable man.

1. Defendants are not questioning the accuracy of the text of the proposed instructions (merely that the evidence did not present a case for instructing the jury on that subject.

7. Negligence ⇨83.8

The doctrine of last clear chance should not be applied to ordinary case in which the act creating the peril occurs practically simultaneously with happening of accident, and in which it can be fairly said that neither party had last clear chance thereafter to avoid the consequences.

8. Automobiles ⇨245(91)

In action by motorist against truck driver for injuries and automobile damage sustained in collision which occurred as truck driver was passing motorist who was attempting left turn, evidence whether truck driver knew or should have known that plaintiff was in dangerous position was insufficient to raise any question for jury as to the last clear chance doctrine

Benjamin F. Marlowe, Oakland, for appellant.

Alexander, Bacon & Mundhenk, San Francisco, Herbert Chamberlin, San Francisco, for respondents.

FRED B. WOOD, Justice.

Plaintiff sustained personal injuries and property damage when his automobile collided with a truck owned by defendants Louis and Guido Stagi and driven by defendant Boltzen, on Highway 4 at or near Fourth Street in Oakley, California, about 1:30 p. m. on June 23, 1952. Verdict and judgment were for the defendants and plaintiff has appealed.

Plaintiff requested and the court refused instructions on last clear chance. The only questions upon this appeal are whether or not it was error not to give appropriate instructions on that subject¹ and, if error, was it prejudicial?

[1-6] The first question narrows down to the issue whether there is substantial evidence of the existence of the second and third of the three elements necessary to bring the doctrine into play.² As stated by the defendants, it was necessary for the plaintiff "to show by substantial evidence that the truck driver had actual knowledge that plaintiff was in a position of danger and that the truck driver had such knowledge in time to have had a clear chance to avoid the collision." They claim that under any view of the evidence plaintiff's own act put him in the dangerous position practically simultaneously with the collision, rendering it impossible for the truck driver to become aware of plaintiff's danger in time to act. Plaintiff erroneously claims it is sufficient to show that defendant by the use of reasonable care should have known of plaintiff's dangerous position. The requirement of actual knowledge still obtains although in a given case the evidence may warrant an inference that defendant had such knowledge despite his testimony to the contrary. Selinsky v. Olsen, 38 Cal.2d 102, 105, 237 P.2d 645; Jobe v. Harold Livestock Com. Co., 113 Cal.App.2d 269, 273, 274, 247 P.2d 951. Knowledge of danger is "imputed where the circumstances are such as to convey to the mind of a reasonable man that the plaintiff is in a position of peril." Sills v. Los Angeles Transit Lines, 40 Cal.2d 630, 637, 255 P.2d 795, 799. Plaintiff further claims there is substantial evidence that defendant had such actual knowledge and acquired it in time to avoid the collision.

Accordingly, we are not considering or deciding whether those instructions correctly state the law on the subject of last clear chance.

Highway 4 runs north and south. Third and Fourth Streets enter it from the west and end in it, do not extend beyond it to the east. Fourth Street lies 318 feet to the south of Third Street. The paved portion of Highway 4, which lies some distance (perhaps 10 to 15 feet) to the east of the west curb, is 26 feet wide and is divided into north and southbound lanes by a broken white center line.

2. "Whether or not the doctrine of last clear chance applies in a particular case depends wholly upon the existence or non-existence of the elements necessary to bring it into play. The doctrine presupposes: "(1) That plaintiff has been negligent and, as a result thereof, is in a position of danger from which he cannot escape by the exercise of ordinary care; and this includes not only where it is physically impossible for him to escape, but also in cases where he is totally unaware of his danger and for that reason unable to escape; (2) that defendant has knowledge that the plaintiff is in such a situation, and knows, or in the exercise of ordinary care should know, that plaintiff cannot escape from such situation, and (3) has the last clear chance to avoid the accident by exercising ordinary care, and fails to exercise the same, and the accident results thereby, and plaintiff is injured as the proximate result of such failure.'" Daniels v. City & County of San Francisco, supra, 40 Cal.2d 614, 619, 225 P.2d 785, 788. If any one of these elements is absent, the doctrine does not apply and the case is governed by the ordinary rules of negligence and contributory negligence. Palmer v. Tschudy, 191 Cal. 696, 700, 218 P. 36." Doran v. City & County of San Francisco, 44 Cal.2d 477, 483, 283 P.2d 1, 5.

The "question to be determined here is whether there is substantial evidence to meet the essential requirements for invocation of that doctrine." Sills v. Los Angeles Transit Lines, 40 Cal.2d 630, 635, 255 P.2d 795, 798. The evidence must be viewed "in the light 'most favorable to the contention that the (last clear chance) doctrine is applicable * * since plaintiff is entitled to an instruction thereon if the evidence so viewed could establish the elements of the doctrine.' * * *" Id., 40 Cal.2d at page 633, 255 P.2d at page 797.

If "it cannot be said as a matter of law that the evidence was insufficient to justify the application of the last clear chance doctrine", the jury should be instructed concerning that doctrine. Daniels v. City & County of San Francisco, 40 Cal.2d 614, 623, 255 P.2d 785, 791.

"The question of whether there is any substantial evidence, conflicting or otherwise, which could justify the application of the last clear chance doctrine in a given case, is a question of law; and in the absence of such evidence, it is error for the trial court to instruct the jury concerning that doctrine. [Citations.] On the other hand, if there is such substantial evidence, conflicting or otherwise, the question of whether the defendant should be held to have had a last clear chance to avoid the accident is a question of fact to be determined by the jury under appropriate instructions. [Citations.]" Doran v. City & County of San Francisco, supra, 44 Cal.2d 487, 283 P.2d 7.

Plaintiff testified that he had parked his car along the west curb of Highway 4 about 60 feet south of Third Street. He then had lunch and upon his return, before pulling away from the curb, he looked for traffic and let one car pass. Seeing no other cars approaching from the rear, he put out his hand and proceeded into the southbound traffic lane; when he reached it, he took his hand in and then traveled parallel to the center line for about 200 feet. When 50 feet from Fourth Street, traveling three to five miles an hour, he gave a hand signal for a left turn and held his hand out until he reached Fourth; when in the intersection, again looking in his rear view mirror and seeing no car coming, he gave a left turn hand signal, turned left and when his front wheels were one to one and a half feet over the center line the collision occurred. He did not see the truck until the impact.

Defendant Boltzen testified that he was traveling south on Highway 4 at 18 to 20 miles per hour. When he had just passed Third Street he saw plaintiff's car when the latter was moving away from the curb, about the middle of the block; it was three or four feet from the curb. Thereupon, Boltzen honked his horn. Plaintiff's car continued to travel in a diagonal line to the point of impact. When he saw plaintiff's car move over toward the center of the street Boltzen moved over into the left lane to go around plaintiff. He got his truck all the way around and then felt the impact, when the truck was about one to one and a half feet to the left of and parallel to the center line; about two-thirds down the block or about 50 feet from Fourth Street. Boltzen at no time saw plaintiff make a hand signal.

A traffic officer who investigated the accident testified that the point of impact was about 100 feet north of Fourth Street, basing his opinion upon debris on the highway and tire abrasions on the pavement.

The right hand side of the truck was hit. The left front fender, door and windwing of plaintiff's car were damaged.

It is quite apparent that plaintiff was not in a position of danger until he crossed the center line. When he did cross it he only had a foot or a foot and a half to go when he hit defendant's truck. There was no time then for defendant to do anything to avoid the accident. The fact that plaintiff approached the center line along a straight course, diagonally from the curb, to the knowledge of defendant, was no notice or warning to defendant that plaintiff was approaching a position of danger from which he would be unable to extricate himself. His leftward diagonal movement toward the center was quite natural, necessary in getting from the curb (an appreciable distance from the pavement) over onto the paved southbound lane. That was no warning or notice to defendant that plaintiff would continue in that direction across the center line and into the northbound lane. Defendant was entitled to assume that plaintiff would observe traffic regulations, straighten out and run parallel to the center line and to the right of it when he reached it.

If we take plaintiff's version that he made a left turn in the Fourth Street intersection the situation is the same. The moment he crossed the center line he collided with defendant's truck. Until he made the turn he was not in a position of danger and until then defendant had no knowledge of approaching danger for he says he saw no signal and there is no evidence which requires an inference that he must have seen a timely left turn signal.

[7] The doctrine of last clear chance "should not be applied to the ordinary case in which the act creating the peril occurs practically simultaneously with the happening of the accident and in which neither party can fairly be said to have had a last clear chance thereafter to avoid the consequences." Rodabaugh v. Tekus, 39 Cal.2d 290, 295, 246 P.2d 663, 666. In the Rodabaugh case the defendant, traveling 40 miles an hour on a through highway, observed the decedent approaching on a cross road at about the same rate of speed when the latter was 500 feet away and defendant about the same distance from the intersection. When defendant was only 75-100 feet from the intersection he observed that the decedent was not slowing down and thereupon commenced to apply his brakes but there was not sufficient time left to avoid the collision. The evidence was held "insufficient to support a finding that after defendant discovered decedent's peril, he had a last clear chance to avoid the collision. The fact that defendant saw that decedent was looking straight ahead while decedent was traveling approximately 500 feet in approaching the intersection does not establish that decedent was in a position of danger this entire distance. Decedent was not in a position of danger until he arrived at a point at which he could no longer stop or slow down in time to avoid a collision. Dalley v. Williams, supra, 73 Cal. App.2d 427, 435, 166 P.2d 595; also, Young v. Southern Pacific Co., 182 Cal. 369, 380-381, 190 P. 36. Defendant had the right to assume that decedent possessed normal faculties, and that he saw the stop warnings which were directly within the range of his vision. Folger v. Richfield Oil Corp., 80 Cal.App.2d 655, 660-661, 182 P.2d 337." 39 Cal.2d at page 294, 246 P.2d at page 665.

Similarly, of pedestrians who crossed a street in the middle of a block in the path of an oncoming bus, the Supreme Court has said: "Therefore plaintiffs' act of negligence in leaving a place of safety and stepping directly into the path of the oncoming bus necessarily occurred almost simultaneously with the happening of the accident. Under these circumstances, such negligence cannot be deemed 'remote in causation,' and it cannot be said that defendants thereafter had a last clear chance to avoid the accident." Doran v. City & County of San Francisco, supra, 44 Cal.2d 490, 283 P.2d 9.

In Mahnkey v. Bolger, 98 Cal.App.2d 628, 220 P.2d 824, it appeared that plaintiff was driving north in his inner lane and according to his testimony when a little less than 25 feet from the intersection he signaled a left turn, pulling it in when he reached the intersection. At the center of the intersection he made a sharp left turn athwart defendant's oncoming car. Defendant testified he saw plaintiff's car only a few seconds before the accident when plaintiff was about to cross over in front of him. He said he was 20 feet from the intersection when he first saw plaintiff's car, start to turn, whereupon he applied his brakes. His car started to skid, so he then tried to go around plaintiff into the intersecting street but could not make it, so he again applied his brakes. Concerning the applicability of the last clear chance doctrine in such a case, this court said: "There is no evidence that defendant saw plaintiff's car sooner, but even if it could be inferred from the evidence that he did see plaintiff's car sooner it is difficult to see how defendant could realize that plaintiff was in a position of danger until plaintiff made the left-hand turn; and it is difficult also to see how defendant could have a last clear chance to avoid the collision after plaintiff made the left-hand turn. In order to make the doctrine of last clear chance applicable, we must assume that plaintiff was, as a result of his negligence, in a position of danger, which would mean that he negligently made a left-hand turn into the path of defendant's oncoming automobile. Defendant's car must have been close to the intersection or there would have been no collision. Defendant could not know that plaintiff was in a position of danger until plaintiff turned into his path, and then it was too late for defendant to have a last clear chance to avoid the collision. We believe that the instant case was one in which the questions of negligence and of contributory negligence should have been left to the jury, but we are convinced that it was prejudicial error to submit the issue of last clear chance to the jury." 98 Cal.App.2d at page 634, 220 P.2d at page 828.

These are not isolated holdings. Similar rulings were made in Johnson v. Southwestern Eng. Co., 41 Cal.App.2d 623, 626-628, 107 P.2d 417; Jones v. Heinrich, 49 Cal.App.2d 702, 706-707, 122 P.2d 304; Dalley v. Williams, 73 Cal.App.2d 427, 431-437, 166 P.2d 595; Jobe v. Harold Livestock Com. Co., 113 Cal.App.2d 269, 273-276, 247 P.2d 951; Hazelett v. Miller, 115 Cal.App.2d 801, 805-807, 252 P.2d 997; Mehling v. Zigman, 116 Cal.App.2d 729, 732-734, 254 P.2d 141; Schouten v. Crawford, 118 Cal. App.2d 59, 63-65, 257 P.2d 88; and Story v. Cox, 130 Cal.App.2d 231, 232-234, 278 P.2d 720.

[8] Accordingly, we find no error in the court's refusal to instruct upon the doctrine of last clear chance. In view of this conclusion it is unnecessary to consider whether the refusal, if erroneous, would have been prejudicial.

The judgment is affirmed.

PETERS, P. J., and BRAY, J., concur.

137 Cal.App.2d 481

Vinton H. DUTCHER and Edna M. Dutcher, Husband and Wife, Plaintiffs and Appellants,

v.

CITY OF SANTA ROSA HIGH SCHOOL
DISTRICT, Board of Education of the City of Santa Rosa, Kenneth Brown, Helen M. Lehman, Hirschel Niles, Harvey Sullivan, John H. Moskowitz and Rollo Norris,
Defendants and Respondents.

Dennis REHE, a Minor, by his Guardian ad
Litem, Lee Rehe, and Lee Rehe, Individually, Plaintiffs and Appellants,

v.

CITY OF SANTA ROSA HIGH SCHOOL
DISTRICT, Board of Education of the City of Santa Rosa, Kenneth Brown, Helen M. Lehman, Hirschel Niles, Harvey Sullivan, John H. Moskowitz and Rollo Norris,
Defendants and Respondents.

Civ. 8681.

District Court of Appeal, Third District,
California.

Dec. 2, 1955.

Hearing Denied Jan. 25, 1956.

Actions were brought against high school district and automobile mechanics teacher for death of first student and injuries of second student as result of explosion which occurred at high school when third student attempted to burn hole in automobile, which had an open gasoline tank, with an acetylene torch. The Superior Court of Sonoma County, Hilliard Comstock, J., entered judgments adverse to the plaintiffs, and they appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Van Dyke, P. J., held that question of negligence of teacher was for jury, and that Superior Court gave an erroneous instruction on assumption of risk, and that Superior Court erred in submitting to jury question of contributory negligence, and that where District Court of Appeal could not say from record whether jury found teacher not negligent, or found teacher negligent but found that the deceased student and injured student assumed risk of injury, or found teacher negligent and found that deceased student and injured student guilty of contributory negligence, the errors were reversible.

Judgments reversed.

1. Schools and School Districts — 122, 147

In action against high school district and teacher of automobile mechanics for death of first student and for injuries of second student as result of explosion which occurred at school when third student used acetylene torch to burn hole in automobile on which there was an open gasoline tank, issue of negligence of teacher was a question of fact for jury.

2. Schools and School Districts — 122, 147

In action against high school district and teacher of automobile mechanics for death of first student and for injuries of second student as result of explosion which occurred at school when third student used acetylene torch to burn hole in automobile on which there was an open gasoline tank, instruction that one who, for purposes of his own, voluntarily places himself in position of danger, assumes risks ordinarily incident to such a position and must use a quantum of care commensurate with the danger, was erroneous because of failure to inform jury that before defense of assumed risk can succeed the evidence must disclose either actual or implied knowledge of the risk and an appreciation of the magnitude thereof.

3. Schools and School Districts — 122, 147

In action against high school district and teacher of automobile mechanics for death of first student and for injuries of second student as result of explosion which occurred at school when third student used acetylene torch to burn hole in automobile on which there was an open gasoline tank, evidence was insufficient to justify submission to jury of question of contributory negligence of deceased and injured students.

4. Appeal and Error $\Rightarrow$ 1062(1), 1064(1)

Where, in action against high school district and teacher for death of first student and for injuries of second student as result of explosion, jury returned verdict for teacher and district, and question of teacher's negligence was for jury, but trial court gave an erroneous instruction on assumption of risk, and improperly submitted issue of contributory negligence, and District Court of Appeal on appeal could not say from record whether jury found teacher negligent, or found teacher negligent and that deceased and injured students assumed risk of injury, or found teacher negligent and the deceased and injured students guilty of contributory negligence, errors were reversible.

C. D. Dorn, San Francisco, for appellants Dutcher.

Lewis H. DeCastle, Santa Rosa, for appellants Rehe.

Lounibos & Lounibos, Petaluma, for respondents.

VAN DYKE, Presiding Justice.

Vinton H. Dutcher and his wife, parents of Paul Dutcher, deceased, brought action against the City of Santa Rosa High School District and Rollo Norris, an instructor employed by the school, to recover damages for the death of their son. In another action Dennis Rehe, a minor, by his guardian ad litem brought action the school district and Norris for damages for personal injuries suffered by him in the same accident. His father sued for expenses incurred. Both boys were members of a class in automobile mechanics which the respondent Norris was teaching. Each complaint charges negligence on the part of Norris. The respondents pleaded the general issue and also contributory negligence.

The evidence showed the following: Respondent Norris had been regularly employed as a teacher of automobile mechanics at the high school for eight years. The course was designed so as to give the students practical experience and was, therefore, conducted as supervised shop work. There were 14 or 15 students in the class and under the supervision and instruction of Norris they worked on automobiles, some of which belonged to members of the class. They disassembled and reassembled, and learned the technique necessary to such work. The class members worked in various areas of the shop and freely moved about the area while in class for the purpose of getting and replacing tools and equipment, for consultation with the instructor, and such like related purposes. Norris gave general instructions on various phases of automobile mechanics and repairs and the students were encouraged to bring their own cars upon which to work, with his help and supervision. Two or three weeks prior to the accident, one of the high school students, Donald Saunders, who was a member of another class, brought in a stripped down automobile which he apparently wished to convert into a racing car by welding thereon so-called "roll over" bars made of iron pipe. He removed the top, windows, seat and gasoline tank and stood the tank against the wall at a distance of from six to eight feet from his car. This position of the tank was observed by Norris on the afternoon before the accident and on the following morning he told Donald to place it on the frame of his car so the janitor would be able to sweep the area where it was resting. However, it does not appear that Donald obeyed this order. Donald was a member of another class in automobile mechanics and it appears was more advanced in that study than were the members of the class which included plaintiff Rehe and the deceased Paul Dutcher. These two boys were in a class which was conducted in the fifth class period between 12:40 and 1:40 P.M. of a school day. Donald's class met between 9 and 10 o'clock in the morning. On the day of the accident Norris gave Donald some instructions during his class period on the technique of burning a hole in the floor of his car so as to be able to weld a plate to the frame to anchor the "roll over" bars. The operation necessitated the use of a lighted arc torch. Donald did not complete the work that morning. Between 12:40 and 1:40 P.M. he had a class in gymnastics. He answered roll call, then left the class without permission and went to the automobile mechanics shop. He obtained an arc torch from the tool room, which was in charge of one of the students, and with it entered the shop. Several boys in the class, including Paul Dutcher and Dennis Rehe, were standing by a bench where Norris was explaining how to remove valves from an engine. He joined the group for a few minutes, then went over and attached the torch to the hose leading from the oxygen and acetylene tanks which were standing on a movable hand truck. He lit the torch, proceeded to his car, entered it, crouched down in it and began burning a hole in the floor. The explosion of the gas tank from his car occurred a few minutes thereafter. Just before the explosion Paul Dutcher and Dennis Rehe, moving about the shop area, had gathered with several other class members around Donald's car to see what Donald was doing. They had stopped while on their way to a grinder with some valves. As they turned away to continue to the grinder the explosion occurred and they were encircled with burning gasoline and flames from the exploded tank. Paul Dutcher died from his injuries and Dennis Rehe was seriously injured. The two actions herein were consolidated for trial and have been consolidated for appeal. The jury returned verdicts in favor of defendants and from the judgments entered thereon these appeals are taken.

[1] It is contended by respondents in answer to claims of error that the record shows as a matter of law that Norris was not negligent. With this we cannot agree and hold that the issue of Norris' negligence was a question of fact for the jury to determine. The trial court committed no error in submitting that issue to the jury. Although Norris testified that he did not know Donald Saunders had come into the shop, nevertheless he was moving about the area and there was evidence that on at least two occasions Donald was in close proximity to him after he had obtained the torch; also that while the torch was operating and giving off strong and fluctuating light typical with such instruments Norris was quite close by and the jury could have held, notwithstanding his testimony, that he in fact did know Donald was there and did know that he was operating the torch. He knew the tank had been taken off of Donald's car and left in the shop area and the jury could infer that he knew also that there was unconsumed gasoline in the tank since the tank had been used to propel the car into the shop. The jury could have inferred from the fact of the explosion that, in removing the tank, the opening had not been closed and that fumes from the gasoline would be permeating the air near the tank which, in turn, was in proximity to the point where Donald was operating the torch. It does not appear clearly from the record just where the tank was when it exploded, but it is a fair inference that it was in fact close enough to the torch so that the fumes therefrom were ignited. The jury could have inferred that Norris, with his extensive training and practical knowledge of the danger of having an open tank exuding gas vapor in an area where torches were used, was negligent, and particularly so when that use was made by partially trained members of a class such as Norris was in charge of. It at least appears that the explosion was caused by the contents of the tank being fired by the torch and the jury could have inferred that a failure to prevent such dangerous proximity was negligence on the part of the instructor in charge. Without going further, we think the foregoing sufficient to justify a conclusion that the negligence of Norris was a matter for the jury to determine.

[2] The court instructed the jury as follows: "One, who for purposes of his own, voluntarily places himself in a position of danger, assumes the risks ordinarily incident to such a position and must use a quantum of care commensurate with the danger." This instruction failed to inform the jury that before the defense of assumed risk can succeed the evidence must disclose either actual or implied knowledge of the risk and an appreciation of the magnitude thereof. As applied to the two boys who stopped by Donald's car and for a short interval watched him operating the torch it is questionable whether from the evidence the jury could even have found support for a holding that they knew and appreciated the extent of the risk involved. To be sure, they knew that Donald was operating a torch, but there is no showing that they knew either how close the tank that exploded was to the flames and sparks being emitted by the torch or that they appreciated the danger of explosion if flames or sparks from the torch ignited gases issuing from the tank. Assuming, however, that such an assumption of risk might have been predicated upon the facts in evidence, nevertheless the court failed to inform the jury of the vital element of knowledge which must exist before a risk can be assumed and the assumption constitute a defense to a charge of negligence from the existence of the risk. Prescott v. Ralphs Grocery Co., 42 Cal.2d 158, 161-162, 265 P.2d 904; Hayes v. Richfield Oil Corp., 38 Cal.2d 375, 385, 240 P.2d 580; Prosser on Torts (1941), page 386. While it might be argued that the use of the word "voluntary" in defining assumption of risk inferentially includes the element of knowledge, nevertheless we think that if the defense is to be submitted to a jury the jury must be told clearly that the doctrine has no application unless there was knowledge, express or implied, of the existence of the risk, together with an appreciation of the extent of the danger.

[3] The trial court with appropriate instructions and at the request of respondents instructed the jury upon the defense of contributory negligence. Appellants claim that there was no evidence here of any negligence upon the part of the two boys which could qualify as negligence proximately contributing to their injuries. In the present state of the record this contention must be sustained. Of course, the presence of the boys near the automobile of Donald where he was working with the torch was no part of the cause of the explosion, and in order for it to be negligence for them to have approached the area of danger there would have to be some evidence from which it could be inferred that they violated their duty of care for their own concerns. As has been said, it appears that they were prompted either by a legitimate interest in the work of Donald or mere youthful curiosity and there is nothing to show that they knew anything about the dangerous proximity of the gas tank to the torch. We are unable to find in this situation that these boys could have been negligent. They were properly in the shop in pursuit of their regular studies, they went from the point where they had been instructed in the technique of removing valves from an engine to the place where they could grind those valves, and stopped for a moment to observe Donald's work. We hold it was error to submit the question of their contributory negligence to the jury.

[4] The foregoing leaves the record in condition that as a reviewing court we cannot say whether the jury found Norris not to have been negligent, or found Norris to have been negligent but found further that the two boys had assumed the risk of injury, or found Norris to have been negligent but also found the boys to have been guilty of contributory negligence. Therefore the errors pointed out are reversible. Plotts v. Albert, 120 Cal.App.2d 105, 108, 260 P.2d 621; Hoyt v. Southern Pacific Co., 6 Cal. App.2d 49, 53, 44 P.2d 363.

Both the judgments appealed from are reversed.

SCHOTTKY and PEEK, JJ., concur.

137 Cal.App.2d 237

In the Matter of the Estate and GUARD-IANSHIP of Rebecca Rae LEVY, A Minor,

Lula P. STOGSDILL, William B. Stogsdill, Petitioners and Appellants,

v.

Marian ARNOLD, Petitioner and
Respondent.
Civ. 21191.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 2, California.

Nov. 25, 1955.

Proceeding wherein the Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Otto J. Emme, J., revoked appointment of a child's great aunt as the child's guardian, granted an aunt's petition for appointment as the child's guardian, and denied petitions by the great aunt and the latter's son for appointment as guardian. The great aunt and her son appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Fox, J., held that the vacation of the great aunt's appointment was warranted equally on the ground of misrepresentation and concealment and on the ground of inadvertence and excusable neglect, and that the trial court did not abuse its discretion in appointing a nonresident aunt as guardian.

Affirmed.

1. Guardian and Ward ⇨2

Court appointing guardian retains continuing jurisdiction of the guardianship by virtue of solicitude of the state, as parens patriae, for welfare of the ward.

2. Guardian and Ward ⇨13(1,3)

Aunt of minor child was privileged to file petition for her own appointment as guardian though the court had, within four months previously, already appointed a guardian for the child, and the aunt thereby became a party to the proceedings. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 473.

3. Guardian and Ward ⇨18

Where great aunt of minor child was appointed guardian of the child, and an aunt later filed petition in same court for her own appointment as guardian and then moved to vacate order appointing great aunt, the motion being based in part on allegations that order was procured by misrepresentation and concealment, aunt was party against whom order was taken within statute authorizing relief from order. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 473.

4. Guardian and Ward ⇨18

Statute authorizing relief from judgment or order applies to guardianship proceedings. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 473.

5. Guardian and Ward ⇨18

Where aunt of minor child alleged, in moving seasonably to vacate order appointing great aunt as guardian of the child, that the great aunt in procuring the appointment had misrepresented her relationship to the child and had concealed from the court that the child had an aunt living in the state, court had power to grant the motion and properly did so. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 473; Probate Code, § 1441.

6. Guardian and Ward ⇨18

Granting of aunt's motion to vacate order appointing great aunt as guardian of child was equivalent of an order making the aunt a party to the guardianship proceeding. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 473.

7. Judgment ⇨443(1)

Intrinsic fraud perpetrated upon court is well recognized as ground for relief under statute authorizing relief from judgment or order taken by mistake, etc., where motion is made within period of time prescribed. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 473.

8. Judgment ⇨443(1)

In determining applications for relief under statute authorizing relief from judgment or order taken by mistake, etc., no distinction is to be made between extrinsic or other fraud; and fraud, or its equivalent, whether upon court, or a party, or one so situated as to be held in law an adversary, is sufficient to warrant relief. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 473.

9. Guardian and Ward ⇨18

Where letters written on behalf of one who had filed petition for her own appointment as guardian gave impression that guardianship was primarily for purpose of administering estate of child's mother and to minimize expense, and that guardianship could be terminated after mother's estate was closed, and that court could revoke appointment at any time, vacation of order of appointment was warranted on ground of inadvertence and excusable neglect, and court did not abuse its discretion in vacating. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 473.

10. Guardian and Ward ⇨13(1)

Cardinal consideration governing court in its appointment of a guardian for person and estate of a minor is how to serve most effectively the best interests and temporal, moral and mental welfare of the child. Probate Code, § 1407.

11. Guardian and Ward ⇨13(1)

Wide latitude must be allowed trial judge in exercise of his discretion in appointing guardian, so that he may perform his statutory duty in manner most conducive to permanent well-being of the child. Probate Code, § 1407.

12. Guardian and Ward ⇨10

While place of residence of prospective guardian is not to be ignored, mere fact that he is a nonresident cannot inhibit court from appointing him when circumstances are such as, in court's discretion, make it appear for the best interests of the minor to do so. Probate Code, §§ 420, 1407, 1500, 1580(6), 1606.

13. Guardian and Ward ⇨18

Removal of guardian for any of the reasons specified in applicable statute rests within broad discretion of the court. Probate Code, § 1580.

14. Guardian and Ward ⇨10

Statute providing that guardian of person of a ward may fix residence of ward at any place in state, but not elsewhere without permission of court, inferentially recognizes possibility that nonresident or one proposing to leave state may be appointed guardian, and authorizes probate court to fix residence of minor in place outside the state to which guardian wishes to remove himself. Probate Code, §§ 420, 1500, 1580(6), 1606.

15. Guardian and Ward ⇨13(4)

Under circumstances shown by record on appeal, trial court did not abuse its discretion in appointing nonresident aunt of minor child as the child's guardian. Probate Code, §§ 420, 1407, 1500, 1580(6), 1606.

16. Guardian and Ward ⇨13(8)

Ultimate selection of guardian by trial court, guided by solar star of what is for best interest of the child cannot be disturbed in absence of showing of abuse of discretion. Probate Code, § 1407.

17. Guardian and Ward ⇨13(4)

Such testimony as contents of letters written by child's mother to mother's sister in which mother, later deceased, expressed her wishes concerning placement of her child, was admissible in guardianship proceeding, wherein much latitude was to be allowed in clarifying facts relevant to the child's best interests and welfare.

18. Evidence ⇨183(1), 187

To make admissible oral testimony of contents of a writing, preliminary proof of loss or destruction of the writing is required, and it is committed to trial court's discretion to determine whether evidence so offered is sufficient. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1855, 1937.

19. Appeal and Error ⇨970(2)

Determination of trial judge that substantial evidence has been introduced to show loss or destruction of a writing as prerequisite to reception of testimony as to its contents will not be disturbed on appeal where no clear abuse of discretion appears.

20. Evidence ⇨183(14)

Where witness testified that, before leaving the Philippine Islands, she had destroyed, because of baggage limitations, all letters she had there received, trial judge in a guardianship proceeding did not abuse his discretion in permitting oral testimony of contents of certain of the letters. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1855, 1937.

21. Appeal and Error ⇨1058(3)

Where independent evidence from other witnesses to substantially same effect as excluded evidence is placed before trier of facts, erroneous exclusion of such cumulative or repetitious evidence is ordinarily nonprejudicial.

Hooper, Miller & Astor, Los Angeles, and James B. Ogg, Alhambra, for appellants.

Krag & Sweet, William L. Mock, Donald O. Krag and David T. Sweet, Alhambra, for respondent.

FOX, Justice.

The appellants herein are Mrs. Lula P. Stogsdill and William S. Stogsdill, her son. They appeal from: (1) an order revoking the appointment of Mrs. Stogsdill as guardian of Rebecca Rae Levy, a minor; (2) a judgment granting Marian Arnold's petition for appointment as Rebecca's guardian, and (3) judgments denying their individual petitions for appointment as guardian.

The principal questions for determination are: (1) the propriety of the order vacating Mrs. Stogsdill's appointment as guardian; (2) whether the appointment of Marian Arnold, a nonresident, as guardian was contrary to law and an abuse of discretion, and (3) whether the court erred in rulings on the admissibility of evidence.

Rebecca was born to Raymond and Helen Levy on September 10, 1951. Raymond died on October 6, 1953. Helen Levy died on July 8, 1954, in Alhambra, California. When Helen died, her mother, Mrs. Bertie Miller, and her sister, Mrs. Marian Arnold, were residing in Lafayette, Indiana. Mrs. Arnold, the wife of Lt. Col. Carl Arnold, was in the process of moving to Baltimore, Maryland, where her husband was being transferred on a military assignment. Helen's other sister, Mrs. Edna Gonzales, was living in Los Angeles County. When Helen entered the hospital during her fatal illness, Rebecca was left with Mrs. Stogsdill, Helen's aunt, who also resided in Alhambra. Mrs. Stogsdill's son, William, and his wife, Marlou, helped look after Rebecca in the weeks after Helen's death.

On the day of Helen's death, Mrs. Stogsdill consulted an attorney, James Ogg, with reference to the probate of Helen's estate and the matter of establishing a guardianship for Rebecca. Mr. Ogg thereupon prepared a petition for the appointment of Mrs. Stogsdill as guardian and had it filed the following day, July 9, 1954, the hearing being set for July 27, 1954. Also, on July 9, 1954, Mr. Ogg wrote to Rebecca's grandmother, Mrs. Miller. His letter reads in part:

"Whenever a minor has any estate or property, it is necessary that a guardian be appointed to take care of his person and estate. If Mrs. Stogsdill is appointed Rebecca's guardian, she has prior right to be appointed administratrix of Helen's estate. If she is not appointed Rebecca's guardian, a California public administrator will take over the administration of the estate and two fees will have to be paid, one to the public administrator and one to the county counsel * * *

"It is necessary that your sister [Mrs. Stogsdill] be appointed Rebecca's guardian in order for her to handle the administration of Helen's estate, and she will have to post a surety bond equal to the amount of the estate. If you decide that you want to be Rebecca's guardian and adopt her, the California guardianship proceedings can be terminated after Helen's estate is closed, and the money on hand forwarded to you upon receipt of a certified copy of Letters of Guardianship from the Clerk of the Court that appoints you guardian. If you should be appointed Rebecca's guardian, you would handle her estate under the jurisdiction and control of the Court that appointed you guardian, and you would have to post a bond for the faithful performance of your duty, as Mrs. Stogsdill will have to post in California." (Emphasis added.)

The letter contained no reference to the fact that Mrs. Stogsdill's guardianship petition had already been drawn and was being filed the same day as the letter was written.

On July 14, 1954, George E. Weigle, an Indiana attorney, replied to Mr. Ogg's letter in behalf of Mrs. Miller. The pertinent part of his letter reads:

"In reply to your questions, Mrs. Miller wishes to advise that it meets with her approval to have Mrs. Lula Stogsdill appointed as administratrix of the estate of Helen Levy, and also temporary guardian for Rebecca Rae Levy * * *

"In regard to the possibility of Mrs. Miller adopting Rebecca, we want to report that Helen Levy requested in writing that her sister, Mrs. Carl Arnold, adopt and raise the child in case of her death, and she and her husband are willing to do this, if this is to the best interests of the child. * * *

"Lt. Col. Arnold is being relocated in Baltimore, Maryland, and they feel it would be best for them to find housing accommodations in Baltimore before they come to California to get the child which will be approximately September 15 by the time they get moved and settled. * * *" (Emphasis added.)

On July 19, 1954, Mr. Ogg wrote to Mr. Weigle, stating in part:

"We are presenting a petition to the Court to have Mrs. Stogsdill appointed Rebecca's guardian, and as soon as Letters of Guardianship are issued she will apply for Letters of Administration on Rebecca's mother's estate.

"There is no authority in California to appoint a temporary guardian or a guardian for a limited period of time. However, Letters of Guardianship may be revoked by an order of Court at any time."

1. This misstatement enabled Mrs. Stogsdill to procure her appointment without the investigation called for pursuant to section 721 of the Los Angeles County Probate Policy Memoranda, which reads: "A guardian of the person of a minor will not be appointed until a written report has been filed by the probation officer pursuant to Section 1443 of the Probate Code, unless the proposed guardian is a parent, grandparent, brother, sister, aunt, or uncle by blood, of the minor. However, pending the filing of the report, the Court, on a proper showing, will make an order for temporary cus-

Mr. Ogg testified that when he wrote this letter he was aware that a guardian could be removed only for cause.

On July 27, 1954, Mrs. Stogsdill's petition for appointment was granted. Two significant factors should be pointed out in connection with the petition: First, Mrs. Stogsdill described herself therein as Rebecca's aunt, when her true relationship was that of great aunt;¹ second, she declared herself to be Rebecca's only relative residing in California when the fact was that Rebecca's aunt, Mrs. Edna Gonzales, was then resident in Los Angeles County, and, according to Mrs. Gonzales, Mrs. Stogsdill had talked to her just a few days before Helen died.² At the brief ex parte guardianship hearing, Mrs. Stogsdill reaffirmed the truth of the facts erroneously set forth in her petition.

On August 3, 1954, Mr. Weigle wrote Mr. Ogg inquiring when the Arnolds should come and get Rebecca, since they were moving to Baltimore and felt that the sooner they got her the fewer adjustments she would have to experience. Having received no reply, he dispatched another letter on September 8 asking for a response to his letter. Mr. Ogg testified he was absent from his office frequently during the summer of 1954 and fell behind in his correspondence. Mrs. Arnold, disturbed by this silence, wrote Mr. Ogg on September 13 with reference to when she might come for Rebecca and how guardianship might be transferred to her. On September 14, Mr. Ogg's secretary wrote Mr. Weigle, advising him of Mrs. Stogsdill's appointment as guardian. On October 5, 1954, Mr. Ogg tody of the minor as is authorized by Section 1442 of the Probate Code."

2. This concealment foreclosed any possibility that the court might require notice of the proceedings be given to Mrs. Gonzales under section 1441 of the Probate Code, which reads in part: "Before making the appointment, such notice as the court or a judge thereof deems reasonable must be given to the person having the care of the minor and to such relatives of the minor residing in the state as the court or judge deems proper."

wrote to Mrs. Arnold at her Baltimore residence informing her that Mrs. Stogsdill had been appointed guardian on July 27 and that a court order would be required to have Mrs. Stogsdill removed and Rebecca taken to Maryland. On October 15, 1954, Mr. Ogg wrote to Mrs. Arnold's Maryland counsel that William and Marlou Stogsdill were anxious to adopt Rebecca. Although not disclosed in the letter, William and Marlou had already filed an adoption petition on October 14, 1954.

On November 17, 1954, Mrs. Arnold (hereinafter referred to as respondent) entered the proceedings by filing a petition for appointment of herself as guardian of Rebecca's person and estate. On November 26, 1954, respondent filed a notice of motion to vacate the order appointing Mrs. Stogsdill as guardian upon the grounds, among others, that (1) the appointment was obtained without notice to Edna Gonzales; (2) there were misrepresentations in the petition for appointment; (3) that Mrs. Stogsdill's appointment was contrary to Helen Levy's wishes; (4) that respondent was induced not to seek the guardianship by false representations; (5) that respondent was led to believe no guardianship had been petitioned for by Mrs. Stogsdill, and (6) respondent was led to believe that if a guardianship was sought by and granted to Mrs. Stogsdill it would be of temporary status for the purpose of administering the estate of Helen Levy.

The hearing on respondent's petition for appointment as guardian, and upon the motion to vacate the order appointing Mrs. Stogsdill, was held on January 12, 1955. In the proceedings which followed, the court set aside the appointment of Mrs. Stogsdill on January 14, 1955, "for the purpose of hearing the Petitions for appointment of Guardians [being the petition of Marian and the petition of Lula under which she had previously been appointed]." On January 17, 1955, in the course of the hearings on the respective petitions of respondent and Mrs. Stogsdill, the latter's son, William, filed his own petition for appointment as Rebecca's guardian. On January 19, the petitions of Mrs. Stogsdill and William (hereinafter sometimes denominated appellants) were denied, while respondent's petition was granted and letters of guardianship were issued to her. On the following day, the court amended its order of January 19, 1955, by ordering appellants to deliver Rebecca forthwith to respondent. On the same day, Mrs. Stogsdill filed a notice of appeal from the order of January 19 revoking her letters of guardianship and appointing respondent and ordering custody of Rebecca to be given to respondent.

On January 24, 1955, upon application by respondent, a writ of habeas corpus was issued commanding appellants and Marlou Stogsdill to bring Rebecca before the court. In view of the pendency of the appeal, the District Court of Appeal issued a writ of prohibition restraining the court from proceeding under the writ of habeas corpus to enforce its order directing the delivery of the child to its new guardian. Stogsdill v. Superior Court, 131 Cal.App.2d 78, 280 P.2d 148. On February 4, 1955, the trial judge signed and filed findings of fact, conclusions of law and a judgment in the matters of the three petitions for letters of guardianship and in the matter of the motion to vacate the order of July 27, 1954, appointing Mrs. Stogsdill as guardian. The judgments were in conformity with the minute orders previously described relative to these matters.

On February 28, 1955, appellants filed a supplemental notice of appeal to cover these additional judgments and order.

[1-4] Appellants contend that respondent was not a party against whom any judgment or order was taken within the meaning of section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure. There is no merit in this contention. As she was privileged to do in a guardianship proceeding, wherein the appointing court retains continuing jurisdiction of the guardianship by virtue of the solicitude of the state, as parens patriae, for the welfare of the ward, In re Guardianship of Reynolds, 60 Cal.App.2d 669, 673, 141 P.2d 498; 24 Cal.Jur.2d p. 376, sec. 195, respondent filed her own petition for appointment as guardian within four months after Mrs. Stogsdill's appointment and thereby became a party to the proceedings.

A week later, and within the six-months' period prescribed by section 473, she filed her notice of motion to vacate the order appointing Mrs. Stogsdill. Respondent relied not only upon the grounds of her mistake, inadvertence and excusable neglect but also alleged the said order of appointment was procured by affirmative falsification and the concealment of information from the court. Having on file her own petition for appointment as one asserting a superior right to be appointed guardian and one who was consequently injuriously affected by the prior order, respondent was clearly a party against whom the order was taken within the meaning and intent of section 473 as it applies to guardianship proceedings. In re Pozzo's Guardianship, 120 Cal.App. 721, 8 P.2d 217. In the Pozzo case, one Frank Pozzo was appointed guardian of two incompetents on August 17, 1928. On September 18, 1928, Carmen Pozzo (the respondent) filed a petition for appointment as guardian and a notice of motion supported by affidavits to set aside the order appointing Frank. In re Pozzo's Guardianship, 104 Cal.App. 11, 12, 285 P. 330. On January 22, 1929, she filed a new notice of motion under section 473 to set aside the order appointing Frank. Out of this basic situation, which corresponds to the procedure in the case at bar, various proceedings were had in connection with orders made by the trial court setting aside Frank's appointment. At all times, respondent's original petition seeking her appointment remained on file. As in the case at bar, Frank contended that respondent "was not a party to the proceeding in which he was appointed guardian so as to be entitled to move under Code of Civil Procedure, § 473, to have the order appointing him set aside." In answering this contention, the court stated " * * * we do not hesitate to decide that one who opposes the appointment of another as a guardian and seeks the appointment for herself, as respondent did in this case, is an adverse party entitled to seek relief under Code of Civil Procedure § 473." 120 Cal.App. at page 726, 8 P.2d at page 219. That declares the rule here applicable.

[5-8] But exploring the subject somewhat further, it is pertinent to point out that respondent's motion was made on much broader grounds than those stated in section 473. Her notice specified not only inadvertence and excusable neglect, but that the judgment was fraudulent in that Mrs. Stogsdill misrepresented her relationship to the minor and failed to reveal that the minor's aunt, Edna Gonzales, resided in California. Under such circumstances, the court properly entertained respondent's motion, "and the granting thereof was the equivalent of an order making * * * [her] a party to said action." Nuckolls v. Bank of California, 10 Cal.2d 266, 273, 74 P.2d 264, 268, 114 A.L.R. 708. Intrinsic fraud perpetrated upon the court is well recognized as a ground for relief under section 473 where, as here, the motion is made within the period of time prescribed by that section. Rice v. Rice, 93 Cal.App.2d 646, 651, 209 P.2d 662; Security-First Nat. Bank of Los Angeles v. Hauer, 47 Cal.App. 2d 302, 307, 117 P.2d 952; Tomb v. Tomb, 120 Cal.App. 438, 441, 7 P.2d 1104; In re Johnson, 7 Cal.App. 436, 439, 94 P. 592, 594. As remarked in the case last cited: "In applications for relief under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure, made within a reasonable time, no distinction is to be made between extrinsic or other fraud. Fraud, or its equivalent, whether upon the court, or a party, or one so situated as to be held in law an adversary, is sufficient to warrant relief." (Emphasis added.) In the case sub judice, the court was clearly imposed upon by Mrs. Stogsdill both in her petition and in her testimony at the ex parte application. Good faith on her part required that she inform the court that she was not, as she represented, Rebecca's aunt, but her great aunt. Fairness to the court also required that she set out that Mrs. Gonzales, an aunt of the minor, resided in Los Angeles County so that the court might decide whether notice to her of the proceedings was desirable, Prob.Code, sec. 1441. When respondent's motion suggested to the court that the proceeding resulting in its prior order was tainted with this type of irregularity, and when its investigation into the integrity of its records revealed that it had been imposed upon, it had the power under the circumstances to grant respondent's motion and set aside the order appointing Mrs. Stogsdill as guardian. Such control by the court over its proceedings is especially vital in a guardianship proceeding, since the guardian acts as an arm or officer of the court. In re Guardianship of Reynolds, 60 Cal.App.2d 669, 674, 141 P.2d 498; 24 Cal.Jur.2d sec. 11, p. 206, and it would be especially unfortunate if it could not strike down such an appointment procured through misrepresentation and concealment of material facts. From the foregoing, it is clear that the court properly invoked its power under section 473 to set aside the order appointing Mrs. Stogsdill as one procured under circumstances equivalent to a fraud upon the court.

[9] There was equal reason to set it aside upon respondent's motion made on the grounds that it was taken as a result of her inadvertence and excusable neglect. In the correspondence passing between the parties the impression was created that Mrs. Stogsdill's guardianship was primarily for the purpose of administering the estate of Helen Levy and keeping the expense thereof at a minimum, and that it could be "terminated after Helen's estate is closed;" that the appointment could be revoked by the court "at any time." The letters written on behalf of Mrs. Stogsdill were equivocal and failed to reveal the fact that even while permission was being sought by Mrs. Stogsdill to become guardian she had in fact already filed her petition and a hearing date had been set. Her counsel also assured Mr. Weigle that letters of guardianship could be revoked by the court at any time, but he failed to mention that a guardian could only be removed for statutory cause. The trial court could reasonably draw the inference that the whole tenor of the correspondence showed a design to throw the eastern relatives off guard as to Mrs. Stogsdill's underlying purpose in procuring a permanent guardianship over Rebecca and to present them with a fait accompli which would defeat respondent's avowed intention either to adopt Rebecca or become her guardian.

There was thus also substantial reason, based on respondent's inadvertence and excusable neglect, for setting aside the ex parte order and proceeding with a hearing on the merits. In view of the multifarious authorities stressing the remedial nature of section 473 and that the power under that section should be liberally invoked to dispose of cases on their merits, we cannot say the court abused the dictates of sound discretion in setting aside Mrs. Stogsdill's appointment. Proulx v. De Moti, 106 Cal. App.2d 265, 269, 234 P.2d 1009; Nuckolls v. Bank of California, 10 Cal.2d 266, 273, 74 P.2d 264, 114 A.L.R. 708.

Appellants contend that the appointment of a nonresident as guardian of the person and estate of a minor is contrary to California law. This argument is clearly untenable. Appellants concede that there is no statutory requirement that the guardian be a resident of this state but argue that "there are other pertinent provisions of the Probate Code which appear to show what the law of this state would be were the question presented, as is the case in this instance." They rely on section 420 of the Probate Code which requires that administrators of estates be bona fide residents of this state and section 1606 of the Probate Code which states: "When not otherwise specially prescribed in this division, practice and procedure and the making and entry of orders under this division shall be governed by the provisions of Division III of this code, so far as they are applicable." (Emphasis added.) An attempt upon the same grounds to defeat the appointment of a nonresident guardian of the estate of an incompetent person by applying the substantive statutory law relating to administrators was made in the case of In re Guardianship of Boutz' Estate, 24 Cal.App.2d 644, 646, at page 648, 76 P.2d 154, at page 157, where the court states: "By virtue of section 1606 of the Probate Code appellant also attempts to read into the provisions of the Probate Code, referring to the guardianship of insane persons, the provisions of the Code relative to the appointment of * * * administrators, but such section cannot be applied here, as that section applies to matters of procedure only."

[10-12] The Boutz case rests upon wholesome principles. Had the Legislature decided to exclude nonresidents from securing appointments as guardians of a minor, it would have specifically so stated as was done in the case of administrators. But it did not do so for very cogent and compelling reasons, because of the crucial distinction between the duties and functions of an administrator and a guardian. An administrator is interested primarily in winding up the estate of an intestate. The cardinal consideration governing the court in its appointment of a guardian for the person and estate of a minor is how to serve most effectively the best interests and temporal, moral, and mental welfare of the child. In re Guardianship of Aviles, Cal.App., 284 P.2d 176; In re Guardianship of Walsh's Estate, 100 Cal.App.2d 194, 196, 223 P.2d 322, 22 A.L.R.2d 689. A wide latitude must be allowed the trial judge in the exercise of the discretion vested in him, so that he may perform his statutory duty in a manner most conducive to the permanent well-being of the child. It may sometimes be for the best interests of the child that a nonresident should be appointed, either as one most closely related to it, or as one highly qualified to act and nominated by the deceased parents, or as one best able to educate and support the child, or for any other significant advantage that might accrue to the child. For such reasons the Legislature has seen fit not to interpose any statutory abridgment of the court's power to designate a nonresident as guardian if such appointment would promote the welfare and best interests of the child. In re Guardianship of Boutz' Estate, supra, 24 Cal.App.2d at page 647, 76 P.2d at page 157, in summarizing the authorities, the court pointed out that while in many instances a resident guardian might be preferred as a matter of policy, yet "in the absence of a specific statutory bar, the courts of this state have the power to appoint a nonresident guardian * * *." This is a salutary rule. While the place of residence of the prospective guardian is not to be ignored, the mere fact that he is a nonresident cannot inhibit the court from appointing him when the circumstances are such as, in the court's discretion, make it appear for the best interests of the minor to do so.

[13, 14] Appellants also argue that since section 1580(6) of the Probate Code enables the court to remove a guardian "for removal from the state", there is the suggestion of a statutory intent that only a resident should be appointed. The removal of a guardian for any of the reasons specified in Probate Code section 1580 rests within the broad discretion of the court. In re Estate of Howard, Cal.App., 284 P.2d 966; In re Guardianship of Riley, 72 Cal.App.2d 742, 747, 165 P.2d 555; In re Guardianship of Boutz, supra, the court observed that the mere fact that a guardian might be subject to removal if he departed from the state did not militate against the appointment of a nonresident guardian. The reason, of course, is clear since the court itself is authorized to allow the guardian and his ward to take up residence outside the state. Prob.Code, sec. 1500; Ricci v. Superior Court, 107 Cal. App. 395, 290 P. 517. The last sentence of section 1500 reads: "The guardian of the person of a ward may fix the residence of the ward at any place in the state, but not elsewhere without the permission of the court." This section not only inferentially recognizes the possibility that a nonresident or one proposing to leave the state may be appointed guardian, but authorizes the probate court to make an order fixing the residence of the minor in the place outside the state to which the guardian wishes to remove himself. Ricci v. Superior Court, supra, 107 Cal.App. at page 398, 290 P. 517.

[15, 16] Appellants contend that it was an abuse of discretion to appoint a nonresident in the absence of any clear and strong reason therefor. We do not agree. Respondent was Rebecca's maternal aunt, while Mrs. Stogsdill was a great aunt and William Stogsdill a cousin. While the evidence was conflicting as to whom the deceased mother preferred, Mrs. Gonzales testified that Helen Levy told her in December, 1953, that "If anything happens to me I want Marian and Carl to have my baby." About a month before her death, Mrs. Gonzales testified her sister again said: "Marian and Carl will take my baby if anything happens to me, Edna." Respondent testified her sister had written to her to the same effect. Probate Code section 1407 provides: "Of persons equally entitled in other respects to the guardianship of a minor, preference is to be given as follows: (1) To a parent; (2) To one who was indicated by the wishes of a deceased parent; * * * (4) To a relative * * *." Respondent being more closely related by consanguinity, there being evidence that her deceased sister expressed a desire that she have the child, and other evidence showing that respondent was a fit and responsible person, maintained a good home, and had a daughter about three years older than Rebecca, we cannot say that there were no compelling reasons for the appointment of respondent in preference to appellants or that it was an abuse of discretion to do so. While appellants are unquestionably also estimable people, the ultimate selection of the trial court, guided by the polar star of what is for the best interest of the child, cannot be disturbed in the absence of a showing of abuse of discretion. In re Guardianship of Walsh's Estate, 100 Cal.App.2d 194, 196, 223 P.2d 322, 22 A.L.R.2d 689; In re Guardianship of Sharp, 41 Cal.App.2d 79, 84-85, 106 P.2d 244. To fetter the court's discretion by virtue of geography alone would frequently doom rather than advance the welfare of the child.

[17-20] Appellants complain that over their objections the court permitted the introduction of oral testimony regarding the contents of letters written by Helen Levy to respondent in which the deceased mother expressed her wishes concerning the placement of her child. Such testimony is admissible in a guardianship proceeding wherein much latitude must be allowed in clarifying facts relevant to the child's best interests and welfare. Appellants contend there was no proper foundation to permit oral evidence of the contents of the letters. Sections 1855 and 1937 of the Code of Civil Procedure permit such evidence of the contents of a writing when the original has been lost or destroyed. Preliminary proof of the loss or destruction is required and it is committed to the trial court's discretion to determine whether the evidence so offered is or is not sufficient. Kenniff v. Caulfield, 140 Cal. 34, 41, 73 P. 803; White v. White, 39 Cal.App.2d 57, 60, 102 P.2d 432. Respondent testified that the letters in question were received by her while she was in the Philippine Islands, where her husband was on military duty. She destroyed all letters she had received, including those from her sister, preparatory to returning to the United States because of baggage limitations. The court stated it was satisfied with her explanation of the destruction of the letters. The rule is well established that the determination of the trial judge that substantial evidence has been introduced to show the loss or destruction of a writing as a prelude to the reception of testimony as to its contents will not be disturbed on appeal where no clear abuse of discretion appears. Hausen v. Goldman, 124 Cal.App.2d 25, 30, 267 P.2d 852; White v. White, supra; Kenniff v. Caulfield, supra; Cotton v. Hudson, 42 Cal.App.2d 812, 814, 815, 110 P.2d 70. The record fails to show an abuse of discretion.

[21] Appellants contend it was error to exclude evidence concerning the character of derogatory remarks allegedly made by Bertie Miller concerning Raymond Levy, Rebecca's father, since Mrs. Miller was living in respondent's home. It is asserted Mrs. Miller was biased against Mr. Levy because of his religion. The complaint is also made that certain evidence of friction between Mrs. Miller and Mr. Levy was excluded. However, Mrs. Miller was not a party to this proceeding and her attitude toward the child's deceased father did not bear significantly on the issues in the case. It is not contended that respondent entertained religious prejudice that would adversely affect her capacity to serve as guardian. Furthermore, the court did receive evidence from both Mrs. Stogsdill and her husband bearing on Mrs. Miller's purported bias and also that there was friction between Mrs. Miller and Mr. Levy. Other witnesses, such as Mrs. Phelan, Catherine Ryan and Emma Miller also testified to friction between the Levys and Mrs. Miller and respondent. It is thus clear that the evidence excluded was merely cumulative. Where independent evidence from other witnesses to substantially the same effect as the excluded evidence is placed before the trier of facts, the erroneous exclusion of such cumulative or repetitious evidence is ordinarily nonprejudicial. Ash v. Soo Sing Lung, 177 Cal. 356, 360, 170 P. 843; Battle v. Niece, 43 Cal.App.2d 655, 659, 111 P.2d 455; Fuller v. Vista Del Arroyo Hotel, 42 Cal.App.2d 400, 405, 108 P.2d 920; Vuilleumier v. Kelley, 117 Cal. App. 723, 731, 4 P.2d 557. This is such a case.

The judgments and order are affirmed.

McCOMB, Acting P. J., concurs.

ASHBURN, Justice pro tem., concurs in the judgment.

137 Cal.App.2d 486

Harriet JONES, Administratrix of the Estate of Herbert Paul Jones, Deceased, Plaintiff and Appellant,
v.

Grace Mae GILLAND, and Osnia O. Gilland,
Defendants and Respondents.
Civ. Nos. 5203, 5209.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District,
California.

Dec. 2, 1955.

Hearing Denied Jan. 25, 1956.

Action by pedestrian's widow, who was appointed administratrix and substituted as plaintiff in personal injury action, for injuries sustained by pedestrian when struck by defendants' automobile while crossing street and for pedestrian's wrongful death allegedly caused by such injuries. The Superior Court, San Bernardino County, Carl B. Hilliard, J., entered judgment upon verdict for defendants, and widow appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Barnard, P. J., held that evidence was sufficient to require giving of instruction on last clear chance doctrine.

Judgment reversed.

1. Negligence ⇨83.1

Applicability of doctrine of last clear chance must usually depend upon facts of each particular case.

2. Appeal and Error ⇨928(1)

In determining whether last clear chance doctrine was applicable, reviewing court must view evidence in light most favorable to its application and indulge in every reasonable inference in support thereof.

3. Negligence ⇨138(4)

Instruction on last clear chance doctrine should be given where there is any evidence which would reasonably support recovery on such theory.

4. Negligence ⇨83.8

Where act creating peril and accident occurred practically simultaneously, neither party can be fairly said to have had a last clear chance to avoid the accident

5. Automobiles ⇨227(3)

Where motorist collides with pedestrian or stalled automobile, question whether motorist had last clear chance to avoid accident does not depend entirely upon whether, in exercise of reasonable care, he should have been able to stop in time but may involve the opportunity to give warning or possibility of turning or swerving his automobile in time.

6. Automobiles ⇨246(58)

In action by pedestrian's widow, who was substituted as plaintiff in personal injury action, for injuries sustained when pedestrian was struck while crossing street in evening and for pedestrian's wrongful death on ground that injuries were proximate cause of pedestrian's death more than a year later, evidence was sufficient to require giving of instruction on last clear chance doctrine.

7. Automobiles ⇨243(17)

Trial ⇨127

In action by pedestrian's widow, who was substituted as plaintiff in personal injury action, for injuries sustained when pedestrian was struck by defendant's automobile and for pedestrian's wrongful death allegedly due to the accident, ends of justice would best be served by refusing to allow jury to hear or see evidence pertaining to pedestrian's use of alcohol and insurance.

Robert V. Fullerton, Robert S. Morris, San Bernardino, for appellant.

Wilson & Wilson, San Bernardino, for respondent.

BARNARD, Presiding Justice.

On August 1, 1952, while crossing a street in San Bernardino, the deceased was struck by an automobile owned by the defendants and driven by the defendant wife. He filed an action for damages on July 16, 1953, and died on October 22, 1953. His widow was appointed administratrix of his estate and substituted as plaintiff. She filed an amended complaint and also filed a wrongful death action, asserting that the injuries sustained in the accident were a proximate cause of Jones' death. The two actions were consolidated for trial and on this appeal. A jury returned a verdict in favor of the defendants as to each cause of action, and the plaintiff has appealed from the judgment.

The accident happened near the intersection of Mt. Vernon Avenue with Thirteenth Street. Mt. Vernon Avenue runs north and south and has four marked traffic lanes with a double white center line. Thirteenth Street, running east and west, comes into Mt. Vernon Avenue at two points 60 feet apart. One part of Thirteenth Street runs east from Mt. Vernon Avenue, and 60 feet south of there the other part runs west. There was no marked cross-walk at either place. The accident happened about 9:00 p. m. when the deceased was attempting to cross Mt. Vernon Avenue at a point about midway between where Thirteenth Street comes in from the east and where it goes on to the west. The deceased was struck while he was in the westerly of the north-bound traffic lanes, and about five feet east of the double white line.

A traffic officer testified that the point of impact was 30 feet south of the south curb of Thirteenth Street as it came in from the east; that the defendants' car came to rest with its front end 24 feet south of that curb line; that the car was four feet east of the center line of Mt. Vernon Avenue; that the car had gone six feet beyond the point of impact; that the car left "tire marks" running 51 feet back of its front wheels; that these tire marks ran in a straight line; that the deceased lay nine feet ahead of the car and across the center line; that this was a 25-mile zone; and that the traffic on Mt. Vernon was very heavy.

A witness, who lived on the west side of Mt. Vernon and just south of where Thirteenth Street leads to the west, testified that from her front porch she saw Jones walk south on the east sidewalk of Mt. Vernon Avenue, across the northerly portion of Thirteenth Street, and to a point about 30 feet south of that portion of Thirteenth Street; that he then walked westerly across the easterly half of Mt. Vernon Avenue to a point near the white center line of that street; that he stopped there and waited for the steadily flowing south-bound traffic to clear; that she saw him standing at that position for about 20 to 30 seconds watching the south-bound traffic; and that she then saw him being struck by the defendant's north-bound car.

Mrs. Gilland testified that she was traveling north on Mt. Vernon Avenue in the lane next to the center line, at a speed of about 25 miles per hour; that she had her eyes on the road and could see ahead for a couple hundred feet or so, but the lights on the south-bound cars bothered her; that there were cars on her right going north, but she could not remember just where they were; that as she proceeded she saw a pedestrian in front of her car; that "It seemed like he fell out of the sky"; that "He was very close because I hit him almost instantaneously"; that as soon as she saw him she took her foot off the accelerator and slammed on the brakes; and that she did not turn her car in either direction or honk her horn. There was also evidence that Jones was struck by defendant's car at a point just inside the left front fender; that he was wearing a white T-shirt; and that there were some artificial lights around this area.

Appellant's main contention is that the court erred in that it refused to give a requested instruction on the last clear chance theory, on the ground that it was "not applicable." It is argued that it could be inferred from the evidence that Jones stood in a position of danger near the white center line for some 30 seconds before he was struck; that he was watching traffic approaching from the north and was oblivious to his peril; that he was standing in an artificially lighted intersection wearing a white T-shirt against a background of dark pavement; that Mrs. Gilland had actual knowledge of his perilous situation while the car traveled 45 feet, plus the time it would take her to act in removing her foot from the gas pedal and applying her brake; that swerving her car a foot or two to the right would have avoided the accident; and that she had a last clear chance to avoid the collision by swerving her car, or by sounding a warning with her horn and thus giving Jones an opportunity to step forward toward the center line. The respondents argue that in order to make the last clear chance doctrine applicable there must be substantial evidence of all of its elements, including actual knowledge of the perilous situation of the other party and his inability to escape, a clear opportunity after acquiring such knowledge to avoid the accident by exercising ordinary care, and a failure to make use of that opportunity; that none of these elements may be established by mere conjecture or speculation; that a mere possibility of avoiding an accident is not enough; that it must affirmatively appear that a defendant not only had a last chance but a clear chance to avoid the accident by the exercise of ordinary care; that one suddenly confronted with a perilous situation is not required to use the same judgment or skill which is required of him in calmer moments; that there was no substantial evidence here which would have justified the giving of a last clear chance instruction; and that to have given such an instruction would only have had the effect of inviting the jury to use speculation and conjecture.

[1-5] The requisite elements of the last clear chance doctrine are well settled and are not here questioned. The applicability of the doctrine must usually depend upon the facts of each particular case. In determining whether or not the doctrine is applicable, a reviewing court must view the evidence in the light most favorable to its application and indulge every reasonable inference in support thereof. Daniels v. City and County of San Francisco, 40 Cal.2d 614, 255 P.2d 785. An instruction on last clear chance should be given where there is any evidence which would reasonably support a recovery on that theory. Bonebrake v. McCormick, 35 Cal.2d 16, 215 P.2d 728. Where the act creating the peril and the accident occurred practically simultaneously, neither party can be fairly said to have had a last clear chance to avoid the accident. Poncino v. Reid-Murdock & Co., 136 Cal.App. 223, 28 P.2d 932. It has been held that the doctrine should not be applied in the ordinary case involving a collision between two automobiles, in the absence of exceptional circumstances. Rodabaugh v. Tekus, 39 Cal.2d 290, 246 P.2d 663. Even in such a case the existence of facts indicating that the defendant, after seeing the danger, had sufficient time to swerve his vehicle in time to avoid the accident were held sufficient to justify the application of the doctrine. Girdner v. Union Oil Co., 216 Cal. 197, 13 P.2d 915. A number of cases recognize that a somewhat different situation may well exist where an automobile collides with a pedestrian or a stalled car. In such a case, while the time and space elements are also limited, the exercise of ordinary care may afford the driver a clear chance to avert the collision. Whether a driver had such a chance does not depend entirely on whether, in the exercise of reasonable care, he should have been able to stop in time, but it may involve the opportunity to give a warning or the possibility of turning or swerving the car in time. Whether the evidence was sufficient to justify an inference that such a driver, by exercising ordinary care, had a clear chance to avoid the accident by turning or swerving his car to one side has in a number of cases been held to be a question for the jury, under facts and circumstances which were somewhat similar in effect to those disclosed by the record here. Center v. Yellow Cab Co., 216 Cal. 205, 13 P.2d 918; Selinsky v. Olsen, 38 Cal.2d 102, 237 P.2d 645; Lebkicher v. Crosby, 123 Cal.App.2d 631, 267 P.2d 361; Bailey v. Wilson, 16 Cal.App.2d 645, 61 P.2d 68.

[6] There was ample evidence that Jones was negligent, and some evidence that he was looking the other way and was unaware of the approach of the respondents' car. There was evidence that after Mrs. Gilland saw him, and before he was struck, her car traveled 45 feet plus the distance it traveled before she changed her foot from one pedal to another and applied the brake; and that she neither sounded her horn nor swerved her car to the right. The evidence indicates that a swerve of only a couple of feet would have been sufficient. It could be inferred from the evidence that after seeing him in this dangerous situation she had a clear chance, in the exercise of ordinary care, to avoid hitting him by swerving her car slightly, or perhaps by sounding her horn to warn him of his danger. Under the evidence and the inferences which could reasonably be drawn therefrom, a factual question was presented on which the jury could have decided either way. It follows that it was prejudicial error to refuse to instruct the jury with respect to that doctrine.

[7] It is unnecessary to consider at length the appellant's further contention that the court erred in denying her motion to strike or "mask" certain hearsay statements, attributed to the decedent's wife, which appeared in a hospital record which was admitted in evidence. The statements in question were to the effect that the deceased's use of alcohol was "moderate to excess", and that at the time of the accident he "was walking home having had several drinks in tavern." The court denied appellant's motion to prevent these statements being shown to the jury, but granted a similar motion made by the respondents to eliminate another statement in the hospital record relating to the matter of insurance. There was other evidence relating to the deceased's condition, with respect to liquor, at the time of the accident. While it would seem that the statements in question would not have any great bearing on the ultimate result, the ends of justice would be best served by not allowing the jury to hear or see them.

The judgment is reversed.

GRIFFIN and MUSSELL, JJ., concur.

137 Cal.App.2d 361

Stamateo KAZANTENO, also known as Sam Kazanteno, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

CALIFORNIA-WESTERN STATES LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY, a corporation, Defendant and Appellant.

Civ. 20897.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California.

Nov. 30, 1955.

Action by insured against insurer to establish insured's right, under accident policy, to $300 per month disability payments. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Alfred L. Bartlett, J., entered judgment in favor of insured, and insurer appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Ashburn, J. pro tem., held that evidence was sufficient to establish that agent had ostensible authority to assert that signing of form, which provided that changed or added insurance should not be in effect unless new policy or supplemental agreement was received by insured during his lifetime and good health, was mere formality.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Appeal and Error ⇨931(1)

Where appellant challenges sufficiency of the evidence, the District Court of Appeal must accept as established all facts and inferences which are favorable to respondent and which find substantial support in the evidence.

2. Appeal and Error ⇨1010(1)

Where appellant urges insufficiency of evidence to sustain findings, such contention requires demonstration that there is no substantial evidence to support the challenged findings.

3. Insurance ⇨131(1)

Oral contracts for insurance are valid.

4. Appeal and Error ⇨1010(1)

Rule that proof of oral agreements for insurance must be clear and convincing is one for governance of the trial court, not appellate tribunals.

5. Insurance ⇨665(2)

In action by insured against insurer to establish insured's right, under accident policy, to $300 per month disability payments, evidence was sufficient to establish making of oral agreement for insurance.

6. Insurance ⇨175

Where valid parol contract of insurance has been entered into, policy to be issued thereon is simply the memorial of the prior parol contract, and, even though the policy be not delivered until after the loss occurs, the insurance is deemed effective from the time agreed upon in the parol agreement, irrespective of any delivery of the policy.

7. Insurance ⇨131(3), 175

If agent, who is authorized to accept risks, accepts a risk by parol and promises to deliver the policy, insurance begins with the acceptance, and the contract in parol continues until the policy is delivered, and such contract in parol is then superseded by the policy.

8. Insurance ⇨138(1)

Ordinarily, it is presumed that persons are familiar with terms of written contracts to which they are parties, and, in absence of fraud, they are justly bound by provisions therein, but such rule should not be strictly applied to insurance policies.

9. Principal and Agent ⇨101(1)

Rule, which is applicable to waivers attempted at time of making of contract, does not apply to subsequent waivers made by agents who have actual or ostensible authority.

10. Insurance ⇨92

In action by insured against insurer to establish insured's right, under accident policy, to $300 per month disability payments agreed upon in oral agreement with insurer's agent, evidence was not sufficient to establish that insured was charged with knowledge of policy terms in such manner that he was precluded from relying upon ostensible authority of agent to make the oral contract. Civ.Code, §§ 2300, 2317.

11. Insurance ⇨175

Provision in application for change in policy, that changed or added insurance requested should not be in effect unless and until new policy or supplemental agreement was delivered to and received by insured during his lifetime and good health related to change in an existing policy; not necessary to issuance of a new one.

12. Insurance ⇨92

In action by insured against insurer to establish insured's right, under accident policy, to $300 per month disability payments in accordance with oral agreement between insured and insurer's agent, evidence was sufficient to establish that agent had ostensible authority to assert that signing of form, which provided that changed or added insurance should not be in effect unless new policy or supplemental agreement was received by insured during his lifetime and good health, was mere formality.

13. Actions ⇨65

Court of Equity will make final disposition which is governed by circumstances shown to exist at time decree is made, rather than at time of inception of the litigation, and a supplemental pleading is not necessary to such end.

14. Judgment ⇨13

In law action it is proper to render judgment for all installments of debt which have matured at time of judgment if there is not any plea in abatement based on prematurity of the action as to unaccrued installments.

15. Insurance ⇨666

Where, in action by insured against insurer to establish insured's right to certain monthly payments under accident policy, accident occurred on August 25, 1952, action was filed on October 6, 1953, trial ended July 20, 1954, and judgment was filed on October 5, 1954, inclusion in judgment of installments due at time of rendition of judgment was proper, even though insured, who had filed an amended complaint on June 23, 1954, had not filed a supplemental complaint.

Frank M. Benedict, Los Angeles, and J. S. Heston, for appellant.

Sydney Tannen, Beverly Hills, and Wright, Wright, Green & Wright, Loyd Wright, Dudley K. Wright, Edgar R. Carver, Jr., Los Angeles, for respondent.

ASHBURN, Justice pro tem.

[1,2] Plaintiff Stamateo Kazanteno sued herein to establish his right to receive from defendant California-Western States Life Insurance Company, disability payments at the rate of $300 a month under certain accident insurance. He relied upon an oral agreement which the court found to be established, rendering judgment in his favor. Defendant appeals, urging two major propositions: (1) That the agent, William Economidis, who was found to have made the oral agreement, had no actual or ostensible authority so to do, and (2) that the evidence is insufficient to support the finding that such agreement was made. As each of these contentions is a challenge to the sufficiency of the evidence, this court must accept as established all facts and all inferences favorable to respondent which find substantial support in the evidence. "And where appellant urges the insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the findings * * * the rule is that, 'Such contention requires defendants to demonstrate that there is no substantial evidence to support the challenged findings.' Nichols v. Mitchell, 32 Cal.2d 598, 600, 197 P.2d 550, 552. (Emphasis added.) It is said in Crawford v. Southern Pacific Co., 3 Cal.2d 427, 429, 45 P.2d 183, 184, that: 'It is an elementary, but often overlooked, principle of law, that when a verdict is attacked as being unsupported, the power of the appellate court begins and ends with a determination as to whether there is any substantial evidence, contradicted or uncontradicted, which will support the conclusion reached by the jury. When two or more inferences can be reasonably deduced from the facts, the reviewing court is without power to substitute its deductions for those of the trial court.'" Hartzell v. Myall, 115 Cal.App.2d 670, 673, 252 P.2d 676, 677. The following statement of facts is molded accordingly.

On July 18, 1946, defendant insurance company issued to plaintiff a $10,000 life insurance policy (No. 564765) and two "Good Will Builder" policies, one an accident monthly income policy, and the other a health income policy. Each bore the same number as the life policy, 564765. Counsel refer to them as "rider" policies. The monthly payments were to be $200 under each income policy. In 1949 the company demanded return of the accident policy for the purpose of reducing the agreed payments to $100 a month and reclassifying plaintiff as a C risk, rather than A. These things were done. In August, 1951, plaintiff permitted the life policy to lapse and conversations began shortly looking to reinstatement of the policy and increase of the accident benefits from $100 to $300 per month. The immediate participants were the plaintiff and William Economidis, who concededly was a company agent. The conversations also included a proposal for plaintiff to take out a policy upon his son's life, with himself as beneficiary. Plaintiff refused to reinstate the existing policy or to buy one on his son's life unless the benefits on the two "Good Will Builder" policies were increased to $300 a month. Of course, the agent was interested. He testified: "I always keep after him." The home office of the company (which was in Sacramento) had expressed its approval of the increase in August, 1951. The vice president had written the Hawaiian agent (plaintiff was a resident of Honolulu) on August 21, 1951, that: "Subject to evidence of insurability satisfactory to the Company, we will now be prepared to consider increasing the Accident Income for Life and Health Income Benefits to $300.00 each. We will need the enclosed Form 10 and Non-Medical properly completed and returned to the Home Office together with the old Good Will Builder Policies * * *." A copy was sent to Economidis, who in turn forwarded a copy to plaintiff, saying, with reference to the proposed increase of payments under the accident and health policies, "I would be more than glad to take care of this matter for you from here when you come back to Los Angeles again. I think I can give you something better." On September 24, 1951, the vice president of the company sent a memorandum to the Hawaiian agency referring to the lapse of the life policy and saying: "We will, however, be prepared to consider reinstatement and increasing the Accident Income for Life and Health Income Policies to $300.00 a month each provided we receive a completed reinstatement Form 75 and a payment of $751.54 by October 18, 1951. For your convenience in discussing this case with Mr. Kazanteno, we have prepared the following figures: * * *." Copy of this communication was likewise sent to Mr. Economidis and its text shows that the letter was intended for discussion with plaintiff. The matter finally crystallized on June 25, 1952, after plaintiff had returned to Los Angeles from Hawaii. He told Economidis that he was ready to effect the $200 increase in the accident and health benefits and the agent said it would be necessary to reinstate the life policy No. 564765 and pass a physical examination. Plaintiff said that unless he got the $200 a month increase he would not buy a policy on his son's life or reinstate his own life policy No. 564765, but would look elsewhere for his insurance. Economidis assured him that "if you have it in writing you will get it" and also that "I did have it in writing, he did write to me that he was going to get it for me, the company approved." Plaintiff understood this language to refer to the letters of August 21 and September 24, 1951 from the home office, and Economidis himself testified to the same effect; also, that he told Kazanteno that the letter was sufficient to be binding when he paid the premiums (amounting to $620.70). The letter of August 21, 1951, said that the company would require "the enclosed Form 10 and Non-Medical properly completed." Form 10 is a request for change in policy, but Economidis told plaintiff that Form 10 was no good because he had to pass a medical examination, being over 49 years of age; so on June 25, 1952 he had plaintiff sign an application for reinstatement of life policy No. 564765, using for that purpose company's Form 75. Plaintiff also had in force another life policy, No. 564934, and a policy loan agreement was executed by him in order to effect a loan upon that policy in the sum of $1,281.33 to provide the funds for the pending deal. At the same time he made an application for a policy upon his son's life, which carried a premium of $372.50. Economidis, of his own volition, required the medical examination; it was had, probably on June 24th; it must have been successful or the policy on the son would not have been written as it was on July 16, 1952. Economidis said he would have plaintiff sign a Form 10, to keep it in case the company should inquire for it. He told plaintiff he wanted his check for $120 to cover additional premium for changing his classification, and that plaintiff should have it in before August 18; also, that he had plenty of reserve and his policy would automatically cover the $200 increase. The signing of Form 10 occurred a day or two after June 25. Kazanteno was leaving hurriedly for Honolulu because of a strike in Hawaii and Economidis sent the form to his hotel for signature. Plaintiff there signed it in blank and the agent later picked it up at the hotel, dated and signed it and held it until October 6, when he forwarded it to the home office.¹

Before signing the various documents plaintiff said to the agent that if he did not get his increase in accident and health benefits he would not want the insurance, and Economidis said that the minute the 65 (meaning life policy No. 564765) was reinstated, the increase would go with it. Plaintiff was leaving for Honolulu and testified: "He told me as soon as they know the doctor's findings that he would notify me, that is all I had to do." Also, "I said, 'Is there anything else you want with me?' He said, 'No, everything is all right, as soon as we hear from the doctor, he is the main thing, if he passes you everything is all right, and if the doctor don't pass you there is nothing I can do.'" Economidis testified that he told plaintiff the increase would be effective at the time he paid the premium for the basic policy. Plaintiff believed these statements and relied upon them. On July 31, 1952, Economidis sent plaintiff a copy of a letter of July 30 from the manager of the premium collection department to himself, saying: "Our records show that Policy No. 564765 was reinstated July 10, 1952, and premiums and loan interest paid to July 18, 1952." Having made a package deal whereby reinstatement of the life policy was conditioned upon increase in the benefits of the accident and health policies, plaintiff was justified in believing that the increase had likewise been effectuated. At that time he had received no new policy, his old ones were in the hands of the company.

On August 25, 1952, while supervising the harvesting of pineapples, plaintiff suffered an accident which caused hospitalization for 60 days or more, and caused total disability which continued to the time of trial.

Economidis, the agent, had advised the company, through the Los Angeles office, of Kazanteno's desire for the $200 increase, and on June 25th he forwarded the life policy to the home office for reinstatement, which was actually effected on July 2nd. On July 7th the company sent plaintiff notice of reinstatement with premiums paid to July 18, 1952; also, notice of premium due on July 18, 1952. The premium thus billed on the reinstated life policy, No. 564765, $620.70, included the two Good Will policies for the period of July, 1951 to July, 1952. The $120 was to cover increase in benefits on the Good Will policies. Under date of August 14, 1952, plaintiff forwarded four checks in the amounts of $620.70, $535.70, $372.50 and $120. The two first mentioned were received in the Los Angeles office by August 15th and were cashed by the company on August 25, 1952. They covered the premiums on the two life policies, Nos. 564765 and 564934. The check for $372.50 represented the premium on the son's policy; it was payable to Economidis and appears to have been cashed by the company on September 22, 1952. The $120 check, payable also to Economidis, was cashed by the company on September 22, 1952. (These two checks had been sent to one Chumas in Los Angeles, a friend of both plaintiff and the agent, and he had delayed delivery, and for some reason they had to be put through the bank twice, once on September 10th and again on September 22nd.) The policy on the son's life was

1. The instrument bears date August 14, 1952, in typewriting. Also, under the caption "Additions or Amendments (For Home Office use only)" the following typewritten matter: "AIL and HI increased from $100 monthly to $300 monthly as of 10-18-52. Classification of AIL & HI is 'A'." There was evidence to the effect that the date was placed in the document by plaintiff after his return to Honolulu, but the testimony did not cover the quoted insertion concerning the AIL and HI increases. Kazanteno denied that he dated the document or returned it from Honolulu. This conflict bears only upon the credibility of plaintiff as a witness and was undoubtedly resolved in his favor by the trial judge, who was perhaps assisted to that end by a letter from the manager of the Los Angeles agency to the superintendent of the policy payment department, dated March 18, 1953, which says that Mr. Kazanteno "is a very high-class business man, not the type that is trying to take advantage of an insurance company or to distort the picture in any way."

issued on July 16, 1952. On September 4, 1952, defendant company sent to plaintiff a notice that "Your request for change has been put into effect" and the notice refers to policies Nos. 564765 and 564934.

Economidis and the Honolulu agent both learned promptly of plaintiff's accident. Though the company denied liability for increased benefits, it retained the moneys, issued the son's policy, and reinstated the life policy, No. 564765, regardless of delay in payment of premium. On October 17, 1952, after knowledge of plaintiff's accident, it issued new "Good Will Builder" accident and health policies, carrying benefits of $300 a month, dated July 18, 1953 but effective October 18, 1952. On November 11, 1952, Economidis wrote plaintiff that there was no company liability in excess of $100 a month and explained the reason as it had been stated to him by the company: "As you will recall, when you were here last July we decided to increase the benefits on this portion of your policy from $100.00 a month to $300.00 a month. The effective date of the policy was to have been July 18, 1952. Our trouble started when your check was missent to the Choumas Produce Company. We, of course, in turn, were then late in forwarding the money on to the company. Our next problem arose when we failed to get the yellow Form 10 signed, which was sent to you for your signature. The end result was that the company did not have all of the facts before them that they requested until early in October, and final approval was given for the increase, effective October 18, 1952." Economidis had explained on or before June 25th, that if necessary the reserve on the existing policy would take care of an automatic loan in the event the $120 premium was not paid. Concerning the alleged failure to get Form 10 signed, he testified that he sent two of them to plaintiff in Honolulu for signature but they were never received by plaintiff; that this was done because the one which had been signed in June had expired; that that one was in his own possession until October 6, 1952, when he transmitted it to the home office.

The letter of November 11th also said: "There is one bit of good news: The company, when approving your request for increased benefits, also reclassified you from Class 'C' to Class 'A', which will materially reduce your premium in the future. I am enclosing the refunded portion of your premium." This seems to refer to company's check of October 21, 1952, for $63.75, which plaintiff cashed in March, 1953, believing it to be a refund because of change in his classification. Actually, it was a refund due to issuance of the policy as of October 18, 1952, instead of July 18, 1952, as agreed; but the attached voucher meant nothing to plaintiff, especially in the face of Economidis' explanation of a different reason for the check.

So the company retained all of the premiums except the $63.75—a net amount of $1,049.45 (exclusive of the premium on No. 564934), issued the policies per application and undertook to make the new "Good Will" policies effective after the date of the accident instead of the date which its agent had represented and agreed upon, July 18, 1952.

The trial judge found, in paragraph IV: "It is true that on or about the first day of July, 1952 plaintiff and defendant entered into an oral agreement whereby defendant agreed to extend the Good Will Builder Accident Monthly Income for Life and the Good Will Builder Health Monthly Income for Life policy * * * for a period of one year commencing July 18, 1952 and ending July 18, 1953, and that the monthly benefits payable to plaintiff pursuant to the terms and conditions of said policies would be the sum of $300.00 per month, and that defendant, in consideration for plaintiff reinstating the Life Insurance policy * * * agreed to issue its written policies containing the terms and conditions set forth in Exhibits L and M providing for $300 per month monthly benefits and providing for a term beginning July 18, 1952 and ending July 18, 1953 evidencing the oral agreement entered into by the parties on July 1, 1952." Also, that the new accident and health policies "were issued with an effective date of October 18, 1952 without the knowledge and consent of plaintiff and without the payment of consideration by defendant, and contrary to the agreement of defendant to issue said policies with an effective date of July 18, 1952 pursuant to the agreement mentioned in Paragraph IV above." Paragraph XVII: "It is true that defendant by its duly authorized agent on or about the first day of July 1952, represented and warranted to plaintiff that plaintiff had done everything necessary in order to extend the terms and provisions of said Good Will Builder Accident Monthly Income for Life policy for a period of one year commencing July 18, 1952 and ending July 18, 1953, and increasing the monthly benefits payable thereunder in the event of accident as therein defined from $100 per month to $300 per month and double that amount in the event of hospitalization during said period due to accident." Paragraph XVI: "It is true that defendant accepted the benefits of the contract between the parties set forth in Paragraph IV above with knowledge of the terms and conditions of the oral contract made by its agent, William Economidis." Paragraph XIX: "It is true that plaintiff relied on said representations and warranties by defendant's agent and refrained from procuring other accident monthly income for life insurance and traveled to the Territory of Hawaii in reliance thereon." Paragraph XX: "It is true that defendant's agent failed and neglected to forward the necessary forms to effectuate the increased benefits under the Good Will Builder Accident Monthly Income for Life policy to defendant's home office within a reasonable period of time." The court rendered judgment reforming the accident and health policies to make the effective dates thereof July 18, 1952 instead of October 17, 1952, awarding $8,100, with interest, as total of amounts due from August 25, 1952 to September 25, 1954, and declaring plaintiff's right to receive $300 a month "for so long as plaintiff shall be wholly and continuously disabled as a result of the injuries incurred on August 25, 1952."

[3, 4] First, as to the sufficiency of the evidence of the making of the oral agreement. Both sides assert that California recognizes as valid oral agreements for insurance. Toth v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 123 Cal.App. 185, 188, 11 P.2d 94. And it appears that the rule is equally applicable to all phases of insurance contracts. "Insurance contracts may be made by parol. A parol contract of insurance, or agreement to issue, renew, or make an indorsement upon a policy, or to waive a provision or condition thereof, is valid and enforceable." (14 Cal.Jur., § 14, p. 428.) See also, Gold v. Sun Insurance Co., 73 Cal. 216, 14 P. 786; Farnum v. Phoenix Insurance Co., 83 Cal. 246, 260-261, 23 P. 869; Mackintosh v. Agricultural Fire Ins. Co., 150 Cal. 440, 449, 89 P. 102. But the rule stated in the Toth case that the proof thereof must be clear and convincing is one for governance of the trial court, not the appellate tribunals. Edmonds v. H. W. Wilcox, 178 Cal. 222, 224, 172 P. 1101; Ward v. Waterman, 85 Cal. 488, 503, 24 P. 930; Penney v. Simmons, 99 Cal. 380, 382, 33 P. 1121; Couts v. Winston, 153 Cal. 686, 688-689, 96 P. 357; Estate of Pepper, 158 Cal. 619, 622, 112 P. 62, 31 L.R. A., N.S., 1092; Wilcox v. Salomone, 118 Cal.App.2d 704, 711, 258 P.2d 845; 19 Cal. Jur.2d § 468, p. 233.

[5-7] The facts above recited clearly constitute substantial support for the court's finding of the making of the oral agreement. "Where a valid parol contract of insurance has been entered into, the policy to be issued thereon is simply the memorial of the prior parol contract, and, even though the policy be not delivered until after the loss occurs, the insurance is deemed effective from the time agreed upon in the parol agreement, irrespective of any delivery of the policy. Crawford v. [Trans-Atlantic Fire] Ins. Co., 125 Cal. 609, 58 P. 177. 'If an agent, authorized to accept risks, accepts a risk by parol, promising to deliver the policy, the insurance begins with the acceptance, and the contract in parol continues until the policy is delivered, when it is superseded by the policy.' Ferrar v. Western Assur. Co., 30 Cal.App. [489] 491, 159 P. 609, 611." Marderosian v. National Casualty Co., 96 Cal.App. 295, 303, 273 P. 1093, 1096.

Next arises the question of whether Economidis had actual or ostensible authority to make such an agreement. If ostensible agency be found that is enough to support the judgment. Section 2300 Civil Code provides: "An agency is ostensible when the principal intentionally, or by want of ordinary care, causes a third person to believe another to be his agent who is not really employed by him." Section 2317: "Ostensible authority is such as a principal, intentionally or by want of ordinary care, causes or allows a third person to believe the agent to possess." Economidis had a written agency contract which, standing alone, restricted his activities considerably, but plaintiff never saw it or knew its contents, and so it becomes immaterial to the consideration of the question of the existence of ostensible authority. Economidis had no connection with any other insurance company, for years he had handled Kazanteno's insurance with defendant and conducted the company correspondence with him, using company stationery for that purpose. Letters were actually written by Miss Hubbard, who was secretary and cashier of the Los Angeles agency, but she was told by Economidis the substance of what should be said; he signed the letters; following his signature were the typed words "Los Angeles Agency." He had had a desk in the company office, then moved into his son's office which was on the same floor as the company, but, speaking of June and July, 1952, he said: "I always get any desk there when I go in there." He had the run of the office. When the home office became interested in having Kazanteno reinstate his policy No. 564765 after its lapse in 1951, the information was sent to Economidis with the expectation that he would follow the matter with plaintiff and that he did do. Kazanteno had no contacts with the home office and practically none with other persons in the Los Angeles office. He would leave his policies with Economidis for safekeeping and they would repose in the company safe and were there when he left Los Angeles in June, 1952. In 1951 plaintiff was late in forwarding his premium and Economidis advanced his own funds to cover the same; this was done with the assistance of Miss Hubbard and was known to the company, which later made a refund to him. Economidis undertook to overrule the home office on the need of a Form 10 and insisted on a medical examination in connection with reinstatement. He undertook to make a package deal with plaintiff, reported it to the Los Angeles office and the home office, and the company took full advantage of it, received and kept the premiums, issued the son's policy promptly on July 16, 1952, reinstated No. 564765 on July 2, 1952, and gave notice of the fact to plaintiff. It accepted the $120 extra premium for increase of benefits on the Good Will policies and Economidis testified that he did not know of plaintiff's accident when those checks were received. It developed that the company did insist upon a Form 10, that Economidis had it in his possession but did not forward it until after the accident. This doubtless was primarily responsible for delay in formal action on increase of benefits under the accident policy. In letter of March 10, 1953, from the manager of the Los Angeles agency to the superintendent of the policy payment department it is said: "At that time he requested Bill Economidis, the agent in this case, to increase the Health and Accident Income benefits from $100 a month to $300 a month. Bill neglected to have a Form 10 signed, but did notify the Company of the intended change. By the time Bill had been informed that a Form 10 was required, Mr. Kazanteno had gone to Hawaii for what was intended to be a short business trip to look after his interests there. By the time Bill Economidis was able to communicate with Mr. Kazanteno and inform him that a Form 10 was required, Mr. Kazanteno had been injured, which was the injury for which the present claim has been made." Never, until after the accident, did the company do or say anything which smacked of rejecting any part of the package deal which Economidis had made for them. Plaintiff had every reason, after years of dealing with Economidis as the representative of the company, to believe and he did believe that that agent had authority to make the agreement which they reached on or about June 25, 1952. Cogent proof of this lies in the fact that plaintiff returned to Honolulu without trying to get the desired insurance elsewhere as he had threatened to do if the transaction was not consummated.

In attacking the finding of ostensible agency appellant quotes standard provision

No. 2 of the outstanding accident policy, viz.: "No statement made by the applicant for insurance not included herein shall avoid the policy or be used in any legal proceeding hereunder. No agent has authority to change this policy or to waive any of its provisions. No change in this policy shall be valid unless approved by an executive officer of the Company and such approval be endorsed hereon." Counsel argue that plaintiff was thus charged with notice of limitation upon the authority of Economidis which precludes any finding of ostensible authority. In support of this contention counsel cite Sharman v. Continental Ins. Co., 167 Cal. 117, 138 P. 708, 52 L.R.A.,N.S., 670; Fidelity & Casualty Co. v. Fresno Flume etc. Co., 161 Cal. 466, 119 P. 646, 37 L.R.A.,N.S., 322; Linnastruth v. Mutual Benefit etc. Ass'n, 22 Cal.2d 216, 137 P.2d 833; Toth v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 123 Cal.App. 185, 11 P.2d 94; and Lucas v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 14 Cal.App.2d 676, 58 P.2d 934. Examination of those cases discloses that, with the exception of the Lucas case which is not in point, each case deals with an alleged waiver of a term of the policy or of the application which occurred at the time of entering into the contract, a waiver of one of its specific terms; this, as presently shown, is substantially different in legal concept from a waiver made subsequent to the issuance and acceptance of the policy. Moreover, the absence of an ostensible authority is carefully noted in each case. For instance, the Sharman opinion says, 167 Cal. at page 125, 138 P. at page 711: "The contention solely is that, because Wade was agent of the company—the ostensible agent at least—his knowledge bound the defendant. But Wade was merely a soliciting agent of the defendant. He had no authority, actual or ostensible, to waive conditions in the policy." In the Linnastruth case the court said, 22 Cal.2d at page 218, 137 P.2d at page 834, that the application itself "gave notice that he [agent] had no such apparent authority" and in 22 Cal.2d at page 220, 137 P.2d at page 835 distinguished two cases upon the ground that they dealt with existing apparent authority. The Toth case, 123 Cal.

App. at pages 193 and 194, 11 P.2d 94, commented upon the absence of any ostensible authority and distinguished an Oklahoma case upon that ground. The Fidelity case, 161 Cal. at page 471, 119 P. at page 647 says: "It may be conceded that this was sufficient to clothe the agents with ostensible authority coextensive with the business intrusted to them, in the absence of any notice of a limitation thereon. But the policies accepted and retained by defendant contained the provision that "no condition or provision of this policy shall be varied or altered by any one unless by written consent of the president or secretary of the company." This was a limitation upon the authority of agents of which defendant had notice." The language just quoted from the Fidelity decision relates to an application which was before the plaintiff and signed by it as part of the issuance of the policy. The situation at bar is somewhat different. The policy had been issued in 1946, it was in the possession of the insurance company at the time of the transaction in question, nothing occurred to point plaintiff's attention to that particular provision, and past dealings had instilled in him a confidence in Economidis and a belief that the company would do what he said it would.

[8] But if the matter were to be tested by reference to the terms of said standard provision No. 2, it would not follow that plaintiff was charged with notice of its terms when dealing with the agent in 1952. "It must be presumed, ordinarily, that persons are familiar with the terms of written contracts to which they are parties, and in the absence of fraud they are justly bound by the provisions therein, but the rule should not be strictly applied to insurance policies. It is a matter almost of common knowledge that a very small percentage of policy holders are actually cognizant of the provisions of their policies and many of them are ignorant of the names of the companies issuing the said policies. The policies are prepared by the experts of the companies, they are highly technical in their phraseology, they are complicated and voluminous—the one before us covering thirteen pages of the transcript—and in their numerous conditions and stipulations furnishing what sometimes may be veritable traps for the unwary. The insured usually confides implicitly in the agent securing the insurance, and it is only just and equitable that the company should be required to call specifically to the attention of the policy holder such provisions as the one before us. The courts, while zealous to uphold legal contracts, should not sacrifice the spirit to the letter nor should they be slow to aid the confiding and innocent." Raulet v. Northwestern etc. Ins. Co., 157 Cal. 213, 230, 107 P. 292, 298. This language was quoted in Golden Gate Motor T. Co. v. Great American Indem. Co., 6 Cal.2d 439, 444, 58 P.2d 374 and in Valdez v. Taylor Automobile Co., 129 Cal.App.2d 810, 816, 278 P.2d 91.

[9] That the rule applicable to waivers attempted at the time of making the contract does not apply to subsequent waivers made by agents having actual or ostensible authority is well established.

[10] Farnum v. Phenix Insurance Co., supra, 83 Cal. 246, at page 257, 23 P. 869, at page 872, says: "A local insurance agent is presumed to have power co-extensive with the business intrusted to his care, and his powers will not be narrowed by limitations not communicated to the person with whom he deals. * * * A local agent having ostensible general authority to solicit applications and make contracts for insurance, and to receive first premiums, binds his principal by any acts or contracts within the general scope of his apparent authority, notwithstanding an actual excess of authority." At page 261 of 83 Cal., at page 873 of 23 P., speaking of a policy requirement that waivers of conditions expressed in the policy shall be in writing and endorsed on the policy, the court said: "It is also well settled that an insurance company cannot so limit its capacity to contract by general stipulations against waiver of conditions, or that its contracts or waivers must be in writing, that it cannot, by its agents, make an oral contract or an oral waiver not forbidden by the statute of frauds." Though the cases naturally fall into recognition of a general agent as having the necessary authority and a mere soliciting agent as having none, that distinction is not an inflexible one. The Farnum case, 83 Cal. at page 261, 23 P. at page 874, says: "Whether or not any particular agent has the general power of the company to make an oral contract, or an oral waiver of a condition, notwithstanding the provision in the policy requiring a writing, is a question of fact." As shown by the earlier quotation this language refers to ostensible as well as actual authority. To the same effect as the Farnum decision are Mackintosh v. Agricultural Fire Ins. Co., supra, 150 Cal. 440, 447-449, 89 P. 102; Raulet v. Northwestern etc. Ins. Co., supra, 157 Cal. 213, 233-234, 107 P. 292; Guipre v. Kurt Hitke & Co., 109 Cal.App.2d 7, 16, 240 P.2d 312. See also, Chase v. National Indemnity Co., 129 Cal.App.2d 853, 859, 278 P.2d 68, and Golden Gate Motor T. Co. v. Great American Indem. Co., supra, 6 Cal.2d 439, 447, 58 P.2d 374, where waivers by general agents were involved. There is no merit in the contention that plaintiff was charged with knowledge of the terms of the existing accident policy in such manner as to preclude his relying upon the ostensible authority of Economidis to make the oral contract in question.

[11, 12] Appellant's counsel also argue that plaintiff's signing of Form 10, the application for change in his policy, precludes his relying on Economidis' assurances. Reliance is placed on this language: "That the changed or added insurance hereby requested shall not be in effect unless and until the new policy or policies and/or supplemental agreement or supplemental agreements are delivered to and received by the Insured during his lifetime and good health * * *." However, this provision falls within the rationale of the Farnum and other cases just cited. It relates to a change in an existing policy, not necessarily the issuance of a new one. In 1949 the change had been made on the face of the existing policy. Moreover, Economidis asserted to plaintiff that Form 10 would not enter into the new deal, that a medical examination was necessary and Form 75 required; also that plaintiff's signing of Form 10 was but a formality, the document to be held for use only in the event that the company persisted in its error as to the applicability of Form 10. Economidis' ostensible authority covered this phase of the transaction as well as the others. We again quote the Farnum opinion, 83 Cal. 246, at page 257, 23 P. 869, at page 872: "A local insurance agent is presumed to have power co-extensive with the business intrusted to his care, and his powers will not be narrowed by limitations not communicated to the person with whom he deals." The finding that Economidis had such ostensible authority is supported by substantial evidence and that ends the problem on appeal.

The accident occurred on August 25, 1952, and the action was filed on October 6, 1953. The trial ended July 20, 1954, and the judgment was filed on October 5, 1954. The court awarded plaintiff $8,100, plus interest, as the aggregate of payments due at the rate of $300 a month from August 25, 1952 to September 25, 1954. Plaintiff filed an amended complaint on June 23, 1954, but no supplemental complaint. Appellant argues that in the absence of a supplemental pleading plaintiff was entitled to recover only the amounts which had accrued at the date of filing the complaint. The amended complaint at bar has five causes of action, two of which sound at law, and three in equity, the first being an action for declaratory relief. In the prayer addressed to each of the five counts the plaintiff seeks relief for "such period of time as plaintiff is permanently disabled due to said injuries sustained by plaintiff on or about August 25, 1952, and double such amount for such period of hospitalization of plaintiff due to such injuries."

[13-15] Respondent correctly asserts that a court of equity will make a final disposition of the litigation governed by the circumstances as shown to exist at the time the decree is made rather than at the inception of the litigation, and a supplemental pleading is not necessary to that end. In Del Riccio v. Photochart, 124 Cal.App.2d 301, 316, 268 P.2d 814, 823, an action which was partially in equity, the court said: "Under the pleadings herein and without the necessity of filing supplemental pleadings it was the duty of the trial court, under the circumstances here presented, to adjust the rights of the parties up to the time of the entry of judgment and to leave nothing open to further litigation. One of the attributes of equity is its power to do complete justice. [Citing cases.] We find no error in the scope of the accounting." Union Oil Co. v. Reconstruction Oil Co., 20 Cal.App.2d 170, at page 183, 66 P.2d 1215, at page 1221: "With respect to the contention that the award of damages included in the decree is outside any of the issues presented by the pleadings and that therefore the court lacked the power to make the award, it may be observed that a supplemental pleading might have been filed after the evidence produced during the trial of the action had disclosed what amount of damage respondent had suffered. McCarthy v. Gaston Ridge Mill, etc., Co., supra. However, it must be borne in mind that we are here considering an action in equity where the relief administered is such as the nature of the case and the facts as they exist at the termination of the suit demand. In such a situation a supplemental complaint is not required to apprise the court of those facts which have occurred since the filing of the original complaint and which have an evidentiary bearing upon the facts in issue in the action as originally instituted. The allegation of such subsequent facts would be surplusage and not consistent with the familiar equitable maxim which declares that equity will not require the performance of an idle act. Collins v. Sargent, 89 Cal.App. 107, 264 P. 776. We conclude therefore that, under the circumstances here presented, the trial court was not without power to make an award of damages that were purely incidental to the equitable relief originally sought and that no reversible error was committed in making such award in the absence of a supplemental complaint alleging the existence of facts which occurred subsequent to the filing of the original complaint." To the same effect see Kohn v. Kohn, 95 Cal.App.2d 708, 716, 214 P.2d 71; Rosicrucian Fellowship v.

Rosicrucian etc., Church, 39 Cal.2d 121, 135, 245 P.2d 481. Likewise, in a law action it is proper to render judgment for all installments of the debt which have matured at the time of judgment where no plea in abatement based on prematurity of the action as to unaccrued installments has been filed. Kelley v. Upshaw, 39 Cal. 2d 179, 186-189, 246 P.2d 23. There was no such plea here. There was no error in granting judgment for installments due at the time of its rendition.

Having considered all the arguments presented by appellant, we find no error in the judgment.

The judgment is affirmed.

WHITE, P. J., and DORAN, J., concur.

137 Cal.App.2d 393

HOWARD PACKING CO., Inc., a corporation, and Gianni Packing Co., Inc., a corporation, Plaintiffs and Respondents,

v.

MEAT CUTTERS AND BUTCHERS WORKMEN OF AMERICA, an unincorporated voluntary association, Meat Cutters and Butchers Workmen, Local No. 563, an unincorporated voluntary association, J. J. Rodriguez, Chubby Cornwell, et al., Defendants.

Meat Cutters and Butchers Workmen of America, Local No. 563, J. J. Rodriguez and Chubby Cornwell, and J. J. Rodriguez, Individually and as President of and on behalf of Amalgamated Meat Cutters and Butchers Workmen of America, Local No. 563, an unincorporated voluntary association, Appellants.

Gilbert R. GARCIA, Edward Montez, Roberto Nava, Miguel Sandoval, Cecello Rodriguez and Ramon Garcia, Plaintiffs and Appellants,

v.

HOWARD PACKING CO., Inc., a corporation, Gianni Packing Co., Inc., a corporation, Association of Food Handlers, an un-

Cal.Rep. 289-290 P.2d-45

Incorporated association, Walter J. Schmidt, Individually and as secretary of the Association of Food Handlers, Defendants and Respondents.

Civ. Nos. 20887, 20888.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Nov. 30, 1955.

Rehearing Denied Dec. 20, 1955.

Hearing Denied Jan. 25, 1956.

Action to enjoin picketing by labor union and action by former employees to compel their reinstatement and both actions were consolidated for trial. In the first action, the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, A. Curtis Smith, J., entered judgment enjoining union picketing and in second action judgment was entered adversely to former employees and there were consolidated appeals by labor union and former employees. The District Court of Appeal, McComb, J., held that evidence sustained finding that employees were not discharged because of joining another union but merely temporarily laid off because of employer's oversupply of products, and California Jurisdictional Strike Act does not violate the federal or California Constitutions.

Judgments affirmed.

1. Labor Relations ⚡940

In former employees' action to compel their reinstatement, evidence sustained finding that former employees were not discharged because of the fact they had joined a union but were temporarily laid off because of employer's oversupply of products on hand.

2. Labor Relations ⚡946

In action to enjoin picketing under California Jurisdictional Strike Act, evidence sustained finding that labor association to which employees belonged was not a company dominated union. West's Ann. Labor Code, §§ 1115-1120.

3. Labor Relations ⚡217

Where National Labor Relations Board certified association as bargaining representative for employees, and determined that association was not a company dominated union, such determination was binding in an action in state court between litigants who were parties to hearing before such Board. West's Ann.Labor Code, § 923.

4. Labor Relations Ⓒ946

In employer's action to enjoin union picketing under Jurisdictional Strike Act, evidence sustained finding that employee who had aided two employees in procuring membership in rival union was not a supervisory employee. West's Ann.Labor Code, §§ 1115-1120.

5. Labor Relations Ⓒ394

Under Labor Management Relations Act, a lead man is not a part of management, especially in a small plant having a few employees. Labor Management Relations Act of 1947, 29 U.S.C.A. § 141 et seq.

6. Labor Relations Ⓒ939

In employer's action under Jurisdictional Strike Act to enjoin union picketing, trial court properly rejected testimony that original formation of rival union was aided by a company not involved in action. West's Ann.Labor Code, §§ 1115-1120.

7. Constitutional Law Ⓒ90, 91, 275(2)

Labor Relations Ⓒ284

Jurisdictional Strike Act is not in violation of the First and Fourteenth Amendments to the United States Constitution or provisions of California Constitution guaranteeing personal rights. West's Ann. Labor Code, §§ 1115-1120; U.S.C.A. Const. Amends. 1, 14; West's Ann.Const. art. 1, §§ 9, 10.

David Sokol, Los Angeles, for appellants.

William C. Stein and McLaughlin & Casey, Los Angeles, for respondents.

McCOMB, Justice.

On December 7, 1953, plaintiffs Howard Packing Co. and Gianni Packing Co., filed a complaint in the superior court, Los Angeles County, No. 622038, for an injunction against defendant Meat Cutters and Butchers Workmen of America, Local No. 563, and defendants J. J. Rodriguez and Chubby Cornwell, union officers, to restrain picketing activities on the ground that such activities violated the California Jurisdictional Disputes Act. (Lab.Code, secs. 1115-1120).

Thereafter, an action was filed in the same court, No. 622387, against Howard Packing Co. and Gianni Packing Co., and a labor union known as Association of Food Handlers and its executive secretary, Walter J. Schmidt, by six employees who claimed to have been discharged because they had joined the Meat Cutters and Butchers Union of America, Local No. 563. In such action the employees sought to be reinstated to their jobs with back pay, and to have all defendants restrained from interfering with their employment.

Both the above actions were by stipulation consolidated for trial. After trial, before the court without a jury, judgment was rendered in the first action in favor of plaintiffs, enjoining defendants' picketing activities. In the second action the court gave judgment in favor of defendants, denying plaintiffs any relief.

The appeals by defendants in the first action and plaintiffs in the second action have, by stipulation, been consolidated for determination by this court.

Viewing the evidence pursuant to the rules set forth in Re Estate of Isenberg, 63 Cal.App.2d 214, 216 [2], et seq., 146 P. 2d 424 (See also cases in 6 West's Calif. Dig. (1951) Appeal and Error, Ⓒ931(1), p. 423 et seq., and Ⓒ1001(1), p. 679, et seq.) the record discloses these facts:

Howard Packing Co., Inc., has been canning dog food at its premises at 3328 East 45th Street in Los Angeles, California, since April 1953, and Gianni Packing Co., Inc., at the same time was operating a slaughter house for the production of horse meat on adjoining premises at 3224 East 45th Street up to October 9, 1953, at which time it terminated all its operations and leased its premises to Mayfair Packing Company.

About the 9th of September, 1953, Arthur Eaton, a business representative of the Meat Cutters and Butchers Workmen of America, called upon Albert Gianni, president and general manager of each of the foregoing companies, and requested him to sign a contract with the Meat Cutters and Butchers Workmen of America. At this time Mr. Gianni told Mr. Eaton that it was not his business to go to the employees; that he had no right to sign a contract until the employees decided what they wanted to do. Subsequently, Mr. Eaton brought a contract to Mr. Gianni, and Mr. Gianni told him to leave it on his desk and he would look it over.

After visiting with the employees two or three times, and with the plant foreman, Mr. Huerta, Mr. Eaton arranged to meet with Edward Montez, Roberto Nava, Miguel Sandoval, Cecelio Rodriguez and Ramon Garcia (plaintiffs in the second action, set forth above) on September 28, 1953. At that time Mr. Huerta told Mr. Eaton the employees desired to join the union, whereupon Mr. Eaton obtained their signatures on application cards.

On September 30, 1953, Mr. Gianni instructed his foreman to lay off the employees of the Howard Packing Company because they had a surplus of canned dog food on hand. Accordingly the employees were laid off and told to come back to work in a few days. At a subsequent date these employees were asked to resume their employment but refused to go back to work. After the employees' refusal to return to their work the Howard Packing Company sought and obtained new employees who thereafter joined the Association of Food Handlers.

Contentions

The appealing parties contend:

First: That there is not any substantial evidence to sustain the trial court's findings:

(a) That the appealing plaintiffs in action No. 622387, have not been discharged because they joined the union; and

(b) That the Association of Food Handlers was not a company-dominated union. Also, that there was no finding:

(c) That Mr. Loza was a supervisory employee, and therefore his aid to Mr. Schmidt in getting the new employees signed up in the Association of Food Handlers tainted their membership to the extent that plaintiff Howard, in action No. 622088, was not entitled to invoke the Jurisdictional Disputes Act.

These contentions are devoid of merit for these reasons:

[1] (1) Witnesses gave direct testimony that the plaintiffs in action No. 622387 were not discharged because of the fact they had joined the union, but they were laid off because the company had an oversupply of canned dog food on hand. This evidence, believed by the trier of fact, sustains the first questioned finding.

[2, 3] (2) There is no evidence that the Association of Food Handlers was a company union. In addition, the National Labor Relations Board, by certifying the Association as the bargaining representative for the employees, determined this question adversely to the appealing parties' contention, and since they were parties to the hearing before such board, such determination is binding upon them. There is no evidence that the employer companies financed in whole or in part, or interfered with, dominated or controlled the Association of Food Handlers. The record discloses that the employers fully complied with the requirements of section 923 of the Labor Code, which reads as follows:

"Therefore it is necessary that the individual workman have full freedom of association, self-organization, and designation of representatives of his own choosing, to negotiate the terms and conditions of his employment, and that he shall be free from the interference, restraint, or coercion of employers of labor, or their agents, in the designation of such representatives or in self-organization or in other concerted activities for the purpose of collective bargaining or other mutual aid or protection."

Since the foregoing evidence sustains the questioned findings, no useful purpose would be served by setting forth in extenso a plethora of other evidence, all tending to support the trial court's findings.

[4, 5] (3) There was an implied finding that Mr. Loza was not a supervisory employee, which was supported by the evidence. There was direct evidence that Mr. Loza was not a foreman but was merely a lead man; that Mr. Gianni supervised the plant himself, therefore Mr. Loza did not have the right to hire or fire. In addition, the uncontroverted evidence discloses that the defendant union signed all of its members with the aid of Mr. Huerta who was, in fact, the foreman. Under the Labor Management Relations Act, 29 U.S.C.A. § 141 et seq., a lead man is not a part of management, especially in a small plant having a few employees. The applicable rule is well stated in Wayside Press, Inc., v. N. L. R. B., 9 Cir., 206 F.2d 862, 866, as follows:

"Most of the evidence by which the Board seeks to tie Wayside to the formation and administration of the Independent Union is based upon the acts of foremen. It must be borne in mind that acts of such minor supervisory employees must be considered in their setting. N. L. R. B. v. Link-Belt Co., 311 U.S. 584, 599, 61 S.Ct. 358, 85 L. Ed. 368 (7 LRRM 2971). Here the foremen were union members who spent no more than 20 to 25% of their time in a supervisory capacity. Wayside is a small plant, employing some sixty persons. To attempt, as the Board has done, to apply the same standards to such a plant as are applied to plants employing hundreds of persons with full-time supervisory employees is to ignore reality."

Second: The trial court erred in excluding evidence that the Association of Food Handlers was originally formed under the sponsorship of Lewis Food Company, a company which was wholly independent of the Howard Packing Company and the Gianni Packing Company.

The trial court's ruling was correct.

The appealing parties sought to elicit testimony from a former plant manager, Wendell Stratton, of Lewis Food Company that such company had paid certain costs in connection with the original formation of the Association of Food Handlers in January, 1951. The trial court rejected this testimony.

[6] The evidence was entirely immaterial to any issue pending before the trial court. Neither of the employers was involved or in any way connected with the Lewis Food Company, and the fact that the Lewis Food Company at some time in the past might have dominated the Association would in no way prove or tend to prove, or give rise to the slightest inference, that the Howard Packing Company or Gianni Packing Company dominated such Association.

Third: The Jurisdictional Strike Act is in violation of the First and Fourteenth Amendments to the Constitution of the United States, and Article I, Sections 9 and 10 of the Constitution of the State of California.

[7] This contention is devoid of merit, as the appealing parties concede in their brief that the Supreme Court of the State of California has upheld this legislation. (See Seven Up Bottling Co. of Los Angeles v. Grocery Drivers, 40 Cal.2d 368, 380 [9], 254 P.2d 544, 33 A.L.R.2d 327; Voeltz v. Bakery and Confectionery Workers, 40 Cal.2d 382, 254 P.2d 553; Sommer v. Metal Trades Council, 40 Cal.2d 392, 254 P.2d 559; In re Kelleher, 40 Cal.2d 424, 254 P.2d 572.)

The judgments are, and each is, affirmed.

MOORE, P. J., and FOX, J., concur.

Hearing denied; McCOMB, J., not participating.

137 Cal.App.2d 337

Woody GIBSON, Plaintiff and Appellant,

v.

SOUTHERN PACIFIC COMPANY, a corporation, Defendant and Respondent.

Civ. 16295.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 1, California.

Nov. 30, 1955.

Hearing Denied Jan. 25, 1956.

Action for injuries sustained by plaintiff when struck by defendant's train while he was walking along platform adjacent to tracks. The Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, Daniel R. Shoemaker, J., granted defendant's motion for judgment notwithstanding verdict and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Bray, J., held that plaintiff as user of platform constructed by railroad close to its tracks was not relieved from necessity of watching for approaching trains, and where he walked close enough to tracks to be struck by overhanging of train without looking, he was contributorily negligent.

Judgment affirmed.

Peters, P. J., dissented.

Opinion, 285 P.2d 277, vacated.

1. Judgment ⇨199(1)

A motion for directed verdict is a prerequisite to a later motion for judgment notwithstanding verdict. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 629.

2. Appeal and Error ⇨1061(4)

Although ordinarily a motion for directed verdict cannot be heard in chambers, such hearing of motion would be merely a nonprejudicial irregularity and not jurisdictional. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 166.

3. Appeal and Error ⇨212

Where plaintiff failed to object to defendant's making a motion for a directed verdict in chambers rather than open court, any error was not jurisdictional and plaintiff could not complain of error on appeal. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 166.

4. Appeal and Error ⇨659(1)

Party to an appeal could augment record by certificate of trial judge and courtroom clerk concerning the circumstances under which a motion for directed verdict was made. West's Ann.Rules on Appeal, rule 12(a, b, c).

5. Trial ⇨173

Although a motion for directed verdict should be made at completion of taking of evidence, it is within discretion of court to permit it to be made at any time before case is submitted to jury. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 629.

6. Appeal and Error ⇨212

Where defendant made a motion for directed verdict after commencement of oral arguments, and plaintiff did not object, on appeal plaintiff could not complain that the motion was made too late. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 629.

7. Railroads ⇨385

Where railroad constructs a platform close to its tracks, railroad does not impliedly represent to the users thereof that all portions of the platform are safe, and thereby relieve user from necessity of watching for approaching trains while walking close enough to the tracks to be struck by the overhanging of the train, or to be drawn into the train by suction.

8. Railroads ⇨385

Fact that railroad customarily painted lines on platform constructed near tracks to mark danger points, did not change rule that parties using platform may not assume that all portions thereof are safe.

9. Railroads ⇨355(1)

Construction of platform alongside railroad tracks by railroad, constituted an invitation from railroad for people to use it, but it was an invitation to use it with ordinary care.

10. Evidence ⇨5(2)

It is a matter of common knowledge that it is dangerous to stand close to a fast moving train, both because of overhanging and suction.

11. Negligence ⇨136(9, 26)

Usually, questions of contributory negligence are for the jury and it is only where no fact is left in doubt, and no deduction or inference other than negligence can be drawn from the evidence, that court can say, as a matter of law, that contributory negligence is established.

12. Railroads ⇨398(4)

In action for injuries sustained by plaintiff when struck by defendant's train while he was walking along platform adjacent to tracks, evidence sustained no other possible inference other than that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence.

13. Railroads ⇨397(1)

In action for injuries sustained by plaintiff when struck by defendant's train while walking along platform adjacent to tracks, evidence of suction power of train when passing plaintiff was properly excluded where such evidence was offered not to prove that plaintiff was pulled into train, but to relate only to what occurred after plaintiff was first struck.

14. New Trial ⇨164

In action for injuries sustained by plaintiff when struck by defendant's train while walking along railroad's platform adjacent to tracks, action of court in denying defendant's motion for new trial but granting its motion for judgment notwithstanding verdict was not inconsistent where effect of action was a finding that if court was wrong in determining that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law, then it saw no reason for disturbing jury's verdict and the judgment on that verdict would stand as judgment in the case. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 629.

Fitz-Gerald Ames, San Francisco, for appellant.

1. The witnesses variously referred to it as walk, pathway and platform. We have accepted the designation preferred by both counsel, "platform," although in so doing we do not consider that the difference in nomenclature makes any differ-

R. Mitchell S. Boyd, Dunne, Dunne & Phelps, San Francisco, for respondent.

BRAY, Justice.

Action for damages for personal injuries sustained by plaintiff when struck by defendant's train. Motions for nonsuit and directed verdict were denied. The jury awarded plaintiff $75,000. Defendant moved for judgment notwithstanding the verdict and for a new trial. The court granted the former and denied the latter. Plaintiff appeals from the judgment notwithstanding the verdict.

Questions Presented.

1. (Raised for the first time on petition for rehearing.) (a) May a motion for directed verdict be made in chambers? (b) May the record on appeal be augmented by the certificates of the trial judge and courtroom clerk? (c) May a motion for directed verdict be made after argument has begun?

2. Was plaintiff contributorily negligent in assuming that all portions of the railroad platform were safe from overhang of passing trains?

3. Should evidence of suction power of the train have been admitted?

4. Was the court inconsistent in denying defendant's motion for new trial but granting its motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict?

Facts.

Except as to just when the train's whistle was blown there appears little, if any, conflict in the evidence. Westerly, opposite Bay Meadows race track, defendant's railway tracks run north and south. On the west side of the west rail and distant 1 foot 9 inches therefrom defendant maintains an asphalt pathway or platform¹ 8 feet wide, about at the level of the ties except at the Hillsdale station and Bay Meadows crossing platforms, where the asphalt ence in the respective duties of the parties. We might add that in our previous decision we referred to it as "pathway" and were taken to task for so doing by plaintiff in his petition for rehearing.

is level with the tracks. This platform connected the much wider platform at the Hillsdale station with that at the Bay Meadows crossing. It was used both for walking between those platforms, and for boarding trains which stopped there on occasion to pick up race track patrons. The engine which struck plaintiff had an overhang which extended 1 foot 2½ inches over the platform. The edge of the platform was 1 foot 9 inches from the nearest rail. The platform extends southerly from the Bay Meadows crossing (an infrequently used commuter stop) some 1,200 feet to the Hillsdale station. The tracks here and for a considerable distance southerly are straight. The platform is used by passengers and other pedestrians. This fact was well known to defendant. (Defendant concedes it owed a duty of due care to persons using the platform.) Near the station for a distance of 380 feet and near the crossing for a distance of 230 feet a white line extends along the platform sufficiently far from the rails to clear the engine's overhang. The railroad's maintenance official testified that such lines are painted on some of the "passenger loading platforms to indicate the extremities of the loading zones * * *". In the intervening distance of approximately 600 feet there is no white line. Near sundown, with the weather clear and light, a slight breeze blowing about 5:50 p. m., plaintiff had walked across the crossing intending to go to Bay Meadows track. As he got to the gate of the track, the crowd started coming out. He noticed a train standing to the north. He assumed it was headed north. Assuming that the races were over, he retraced his steps to the west side of the tracks. While on the crossing he seemed to hear a couple of train whistles. He made no assumption as to their source. He walked south on the platform. He heard a train whistle, probably a little deeper in tone than the whistle or whistles he heard at the crossing. (This was 10 to 15 seconds before he was struck.) He continued walking forward and "took probably a half step to the right" (away from the track). He heard no sound of grinding such as would be caused by the application of locomotive brakes. The half step to the right placed his left foot about 22 inches away from the track edge of the asphalt. He has a faint recollection of being "spun," feeling heat in his face and seeing a wheel of the engine. The next thing he remembered he was talking to a San Mateo policeman after the accident. He was then lying to the west of the platform at a point about half way between the crossing and the station. This was plaintiff's first time on the platform. He did not know that a locomotive would overhang the platform. Plaintiff suffered serious injuries to his shoulder, arm, elbow and his leg was "mashed."

The engineer died prior to trial so his story is unknown. The fireman, whose view was obstructed by the engine for the last 300 feet before the impact, at that point observed a group of people walking southerly along the platform, their backs towards the train. He could not tell how close they were to the edge. People "too often" walk alongside the track there, fairly close. The usual speed at this point is 50 miles per hour. No stop at either Hillsdale station or Bay Meadows crossing was intended. Immediately north of the crossing there is a whistle post. Admittedly the whistle was blown there. There was evidence that the whistle was not sounded after the engine reached the crossing. One Harland, walking north on the platform, passed plaintiff walking south. He heard a whistle, turned around and started walking south. At that time the train was about 600 yards away. When he was about 10 to 20 feet behind plaintiff he heard the whistle again. The train was then possibly 300 yards away. He did not have too much of an idea on that. Harland turned over to the right and stopped. When the train passed him he saw some part of the front part of the engine strike plaintiff. Plaintiff was then about 2½ feet from the edge of the platform nearest the rail. It looked to Harland as though plaintiff, who was walking straight, was in the clear. Harland had the impression that plaintiff was sucked into the train. Harland then stated that the whistle was going continuously until the time of the accident.

A railway "red cap" walking on the platform saw plaintiff about 350 feet ahead of him. Plaintiff was walking close to the track edge of the asphalt. The whistle was blowing continuously when it passed the witness. The train hit plaintiff and spun him to the right.

Defendant's maintenance official testified that prior to May, 1946, there had been a gravel path which was 3 feet 6 inches in from the point where the track edge of the asphalt now is. The old path was completely clear of the engine overhang.

1. Motion for Directed Verdict.

[1] We granted a rehearing in this case because the record failed to show that a motion for directed verdict had been made, such motion being a prerequisite to a later motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict. Code Civil Procedure § 629; In re Estate of Caldwell, 216 Cal. 694, 697, 16 P.2d 139. Defendant moved, and we granted permission, to augment the record to show that such motion was made. Certificates of the trial judge and courtroom clerk were filed. These show that after both sides had rested their case, and at the opening of court at the end of a recess during defendant's argument, defendant's counsel approached the bench and stated that he desired to make a motion outside the presence of the jury. The judge, because "there were no available facilities for the jurors except for the courtroom," directed counsel for both parties, the clerk and the reporter, to proceed to the judge's chambers adjoining the courtroom so that the motion could be heard and argued outside the hearing of the jurors. In the presence of the persons above mentioned and without any objection by plaintiff, defendant moved for a directed verdict. The motion was argued by counsel for both parties. The motion was submitted. The court outside of the hearing of the jury made its order denying the motion and the clerk entered such order in the minutes. The court and the other participants then proceeded to the courtroom where the jury was seated and defense counsel then continued with his argument to the jury. On the motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict no contention was made by plaintiff of any irregularity in the making of the motion for directed verdict nor was it contended that the court had no power to grant such motion.

(a) Motion Made in Chambers.

[2] Plaintiff contends that a judge has no jurisdiction to hear or determine motions in chambers other than those expressly included in section 166, Code of Civil Procedure. Assuming that ordinarily a motion for directed verdict cannot be heard in chambers, the hearing of such a motion there would be merely a nonprejudicial irregularity and not jurisdictional. See Hamblin v. Superior Court, 195 Cal. 364, 233 P. 337, 43 A.L.R. 1509, where the court tried a default action for divorce in Long Beach, pursuant to a statute held to be unconstitutional. The court held that "proof which the law requires to be 'taken before the court' was in fact taken before the judge", 195 Cal. at page 371, 233 P. at page 340, that the "result is that the evidence so heard by it was in effect heard by the judge 'in chambers'", 195 Cal. at page 373, 233 P. at page 341, and that this was a mere irregularity, was not jurisdictional and did not render the judgment entered thereon void. See also Holland v. Superior Court, 121 Cal.App. 523, 9 P.2d 531, where the trial judge wrote out in the county clerk's office an order denying a motion for new trial and modified the findings and judgment. This order was lost after entry into the minutes. One of the grounds upon which the petitioner sought to prohibit any further proceedings under the order was that the judge had no jurisdiction to sign the order at the clerk's office as that would not be a session of the court. In denying prohibition the court stated, 121 Cal.App. at page 528, 9 P.2d at page 533: "The weight of authority in California which receives support in other jurisdictions seems to support the conclusion that, if it be assumed that it is error for a court to hold its session at a place other than in its courtroom, the error, if any, is one of law to be reached only on direct attack and not one resulting from a lack of jurisdiction or an act in excess of jurisdiction * * *."

[3] As the proceeding here, if error, could not be jurisdictional, plaintiff may not complain of error because of his failure to object in the proceedings in the court below. In Hersom v. Hersom, 60 Cal.App. 383, 385, 212 P. 717, it was held that the appellant could not complain of the receiving of evidence in chambers in the presence of counsel for both parties, because of her failure to object to the holding of court there.

However, the record here discloses that although taking place in chambers it was a full court session. To save inconveniencing the jurors, the court transferred its session to its chambers, all of the attachés of the court and all counsel were present. It was a situation similar to that in People v. Pompa, 192 Cal. 412, 221 P. 198, where considerable testimony was taken and evidence received by the jury at the scene of the alleged crime. Concerning the claim that this was a jurisdictional error the court said, 192 Cal. at page 422, 221 P. at page 203: "But the record expressly discloses that during the entire proceedings attending and embracing the view of the premises the court in its completeness, including the judge, the clerk, the bailiff, the reporter, the interpreter, the jury, the defendant, and the respective counsel was at all times present; the only element absent being the walls and fittings of the courtroom wherein the court is usually convened. There is no special sacredness in the atmosphere of a courthouse or the walls or furnishings of a courtroom which requires that sessions of the court shall be held there and not elsewhere, if otherwise the forms of law governing the trial of causes are observed, which appears to have been done, though with some absence of formality, in the instant case (Block v. Kearney, 6 Cal.Unrep. 660, 64 P. 267); but aside from this we think that the defendant is precluded from objecting to any of the alleged informalities in the procedure of the trial court during its view of the premises in question by the fact of the entire acquiescence of himself and the acquiescence and even active participation of his counsel in the taking of testimony and receiving of evidence by the jury during the inspection of the scene of the homicide."

Thus, the proceedings in chambers, including the making of the order denying the motion, are properly a part of the record on appeal. The contention that because defendant opened his motion by stating "I want to move now for a directed verdict," he actually made no motion, is quite amusing in view of the length of time plaintiff then spent in arguing against the granting of the motion. There is no merit to the contention. The same is true of the contention that the motion did not contain the grounds of the motion. There is no similarity in the facts of our case and those in Hallinan v. Prindle, 220 Cal. 46, at page 52, 29 P.2d 202, at page 204, where the plaintiff stated, "I had a motion. I think that would be in order" for a directed verdict and the court said "I would rather that comes up later * * * not now." The motion was not made later. Here it was made, grounds given, argued and passed upon.

(b) Augmentation.

[4] Plaintiff contends that Rule 12(a), Rules on Appeal, does not permit augmentation by a certificate of the trial judge or courtroom clerk. He contends that the language "or that portions of the oral proceedings be transcribed, certified and transmitted" applies only to oral proceedings reported below but not transcribed. This would be a most peculiar rule if it were interpreted to mean that this court in passing on the action of a trial court could not have before it the proceedings upon which that court based its action, merely because, for any reason, the whole of the proceeding was not reported. Here, the court reporter did report portions of the hearing and they are included in the judge's certificate to which the reporter attached his certificate. Rule 12(b) provides "If any material part of the record is incorrect in any respect * * * the reviewing court * * * may direct that it be corrected or certified." Here the record was incorrect in not showing the proceedings on motion for directed verdict. Rule 12 (c) provides that this court may submit to the superior court for settlement any differences of the parties with respect to alleged errors or omissions in the record, and then states, what unquestionably is the reason behind all the rules on augmentation, to "make the record conform to the truth." Plaintiff has cited no case which holds that certificates of the type here may not be used to augment. Biaggi v. Ramont, 189 Cal. 675, 209 P. 892, is not in point. There the trial judge denied a motion for new trial without giving insufficiency of the evidence as a ground. After appeal, he tried by certificate filed in the reviewing court, to get the transcript returned so as to permit a nunc pro tunc order to be made to change the order denying new trial to include that ground, claiming that the clerk failed to include it in the original order, although the judge had instructed him to do so. The reviewing court refused to consider the certificate. In our case the certificates are not for the purpose of changing any part of the record, but merely to add to it the matters which occurred but which were not placed in the original transcript.

(c) Timeliness.

[5,6] While a motion for directed verdict should be made at the completion of the taking of evidence, as the main purpose of requiring such a motion to be made as a condition precedent to the court power to consider a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, is to give the other party an opportunity to introduce evidence he may have to overcome the grounds of the motion, In re Estate of Caldwell, supra, 216 Cal. 694, 697, 16 P.2d 139, it is within the discretion of the court to permit it to be made at any time before the case is submitted to the jury. That in effect is the holding in Red Boiling Water Co. v. McEwen, 3 Tenn.Civ.App. 687, cited by plaintiff, although, under the circumstances there, it was held that the action of the trial court in refusing to entertain the motion as being too late, coming after argument had started, could not be upset by the appellate court. Here, again, plaintiff in the trial court made no objection to the timeliness of the motion, nor to the court's hearing the same. It is too late to do so now.

2. Contributory Negligence.

The judgment notwithstanding the verdict was granted on the theory that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law. The evidence shows without conflict that plaintiff walked some 600 feet down the platform close to the railside edge of the platform. Although he admittedly heard a train whistle when he was at the crossing before starting down the platform he made no effort to locate it or to learn if there was any train approaching from his rear. At no time during his movement down the platform did he glance behind to observe if there were any trains approaching. About 10 to 15 seconds prior to the accident he heard another whistle which "probably sounded a little deeper in tone" than the previous one. He then continued walking forward and took a half step away from the rails "to be safe." This placed his foot nearest the track approximately 22 inches from the edge of the asphalt and approximately 3 feet 7 inches from the nearest rail. He continued on in this location until hit. Although he heard a whistle and felt it necessary to do something "to be safe," he did not look around to determine where the whistle came from or to see if he were in a safe position.

If defendant owed plaintiff the duty of maintaining the entire platform free from danger from overhang of trains and suction, then plaintiff could not have been guilty of contributory negligence² for if plaintiff had the right to assume that all

2. Defendant, although not conceding its correctness, is not attacking (except as it relates to the maintenance of the platform) the jury's implied finding of negligence. Defendant's negligence was not in building the platform in the manner it did, nor in operating an engine with the overhang of the one here, but in operating its train at 50 miles per hour in an area where many persons were congregating, and in failing to operate cautiously when the engine crew must have seen persons walking close to the tracks, as the testimony shows, in ample time to have slowed down.

portions of the platform were safe, then under the facts of this case he was under no duty to look for approaching trains.

[7] The question here is, by the constructing of a platform close to its tracks, does a railroad impliedly represent to users thereof that all portions of the platform are safe, thereby relieving the user from the necessity of watching for approaching trains when walking close enough to the tracks to be struck by the overhang of the train, or to be drawn into the train by suction? In McKeown v. Northwestern Pac. R. Co., 20 Cal.App.2d 324, at pages 326-327, 66 P.2d 1250, at page 1251, the court said: “* * * it is the uniform rule that where a passenger places himself so near the edge of a railroad platform as to be within the line of the ordinary overhang of a train, he contributes to the injury, and other things being equal, cannot recover. [Citations.]”

While the facts in our case are distinguishable from those in the McKeown case, that difference would not change the apparent universalness of the rule, see cases cited in the McKeown case, 20 Cal. App.2d at page 327, 66 P.2d 1250, and the cases hereafter discussed), nor the application of the principle to the facts of our case. In the McKeown case, the plaintiff was familiar with the station platform and with the normal overhang of engines, while here plaintiff was using the platform for the first time and knew nothing of engine overhang. In the McKeown case, although denied by the plaintiff, there was testimony that as the train approached she deviated from her course to approach nearer the edge of the platform. In our case, after hearing a whistle, plaintiff took a half step away from the track. In the McKeown case the engine overhang was either flush with the edge of the concrete platform, or overhung it an inch; thus the plaintiff's arm must have extended either beyond the platform or within an inch of its edge. In our case the engine overhung the platform 14½ inches. Plaintiff's feet were probably 2½ feet from the platform's edge. Only his elbow could have extended into the space occupied by the engine's overhang. The other differences between the two cases bear on defendant's negligence rather than on plaintiff's duty.

In Holmes v. South Pac. Coast Ry. Co., 97 Cal. 161, 31 P. 834, the railroad tracks were in the street. There was a space of 3 feet between the sidewalk at the station and the nearest rail. The plaintiff was walking in this space. When the whistle sounded the plaintiff stepped partly upon the track and was hit. Again, here, the facts are not similar to ours but the court pointed out that there are many cases supporting the principle, 97 Cal. at page 167, 31 P. at page 835: “A railroad track upon which trains are constantly run is itself a warning to any person who has reached years of discretion, and who is possessed of ordinary intelligence, that it is not safe to walk upon it, or near enough to be struck by a passing train, without the exercise of constant vigilance, in order to be made aware of the approach of a locomotive, and thus be enabled to avoid receiving injury; and the failure of such a person, so situated with reference to the railroad track, to exercise such care and watchfulness, and to make use of all his senses in order to avoid the danger incident to such situation, is negligence per se.”

In Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Hawkes, 102 Va. 452, 46 S.E. 471, because of a curve in the track, the projection from the train overhung the platform varying from 1¼ to 10 inches and at the point where the train was struck it was 6½ inches. The plaintiff knew that the train was approaching. Of a person's duty at a railroad platform the court said, 46 S.E. at page 472: “It is manifest that this duty requires the railroad company to construct its platform sufficiently near to the rails that it will afford to passengers, including the aged and infirm, a safe exit to and from the trains. And it is a matter of common knowledge that in performing this duty the platforms along the best-regulated railroads are built so near the rails that the projections from the engines and cars will overlap, to some extent, the edge of the platform. While the extreme edge of the platform is perfectly safe for passengers when occupying it for the purpose to which it is manifestly adapted, it is a matter of common knowledge that it is a place of danger when occupied while trains are passing or are likely to pass."

In Higgins v. Erie R. Co., 1916, 89 N.J.L. 629, 99 A. 98, the plaintiff was familiar with the platform and the coming and going of trains there. He was drawing a hand truck on the platform and either drew it so near the platform's edge that it was struck by the engine tender's overhang or in turning he brought the truck against the tender. "The law is well settled in this state that where a person places himself so near the edge of a railroad platform as to be within the line of the ordinary overhang of a properly constructed platform and engine he contributes to the injury, and the company is not liable for the injuries he may suffer from such negligent exposure to danger." 99 A. at page 99.

In Long v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co., 1941, 127 N.J.L. 207, 21 A.2d 824, the court quoted the above statement in holding negligent a plaintiff who was struck by a handrail of a passing car, while standing on a platform 19 feet 2 inches wide between two sets of tracks.

In Ratliff v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co., 6 Cir., 1940, 116 F.2d 155, the plaintiff standing on the station platform was trying to flag the approaching train so that she could board it. She was struck by a cross-beam on the front of the engine which overhung the platform $1\frac{1}{2}$ or 2 feet. It was claimed, as here, that the platform as constructed was an implied assurance that any portion of it was safe from passing trains. The court said, at pages 156-157: "None of the cases cited by appellant holds that such a facility as is here involved,—entirely adequate and safe when used as ordinary persons would use it,—is unsafe merely because it does not prevent careless persons from putting themselves in positions of danger."

In Ferran v. Southern Pac. Co., 3 Cal. 2d 350, 44 P.2d 533, the court referred to the general rule quoted above in Holmes v. Southern Pac. Coast Ry. Co., 97 Cal. 161, 31 P. 834, but held it did not apply to persons required to cross intervening tracks to board cars who are injured while doing so.

As contra to the principle enunciated in the foregoing cases, plaintiff cites the following: Chunn v. City & Suburban Ry., 207 U.S. 302, 303, 28 S.Ct. 63, 52 L.Ed. 219. There the platform which was customarily used by passengers intending to use the Washington car was one between two sets of tracks and was 7 feet 10 inches wide. The steps of defendant's cars projected 2 feet 2 inches over the platform, so that when two cars passed each other at this point (which was the situation when the plaintiff was hurt) the clear space left for the passenger to stand in was only 3 feet 6 inches. The court held that "the margin of safety was narrow and left little allowance for the infirmities of mankind. In the confusion of two cars approaching from opposite directions it is too much to expect nice calculations of distances. It is not to be wondered at that in the attempt to escape the one the plaintiff fell foul of the other." 207 U.S. at page 308, 28 S.Ct. at page 65. "Nor was the plaintiff necessarily wanting in due care by taking her place between the tracks. It was the usual place from which entrance to the Washington car was made. It was safe enough under ordinary circumstances. It was made unsafe only by reason of the defendant's negligent act in running another car rapidly by. The plaintiff had the right to assume * * * that, when it [the defendant] stopped one car and thereby invited her to enter it, it would not run another rapidly by the place of her entrance and put her in peril." 207 U.S. at pages 308, 309, 28 S.Ct. at page 65. The court did not discuss the general rule of passengers on station platforms, nor even the exception stated in Ferran v. Southern Pac. Co., supra, 3 Cal.2d 350, 44 P.2d 533 (passengers crossing tracks) but rested its decision primarily on the narrowness of the platform provided for its patrons. In many details the facts in Lagomarsino v. Market Street R. Co., 69 Cal.App.2d 388, 158 P.2d 982, were similar to those in the Chunn case, and the ruling was the same. A somewhat similar case to the Chunn case is Edwards v. Union Pac. R. Co., 1913, 90 Kan. 183, 133 P. 728, Ann.Cas.1916A, 137. There the court's decision was based principally upon the fact that the station platform where the plaintiff was required to go because of the crowded condition of the rest of the platform, and where she was struck by a locomotive overhang of about 27 inches, was less than 5 feet wide between the rails and a depot bow window. The trial court had given an instruction on contributory negligence embodying the general rule. In holding that the instruction was improper under the circumstances of the case, the court said, 133 P. at page 729: "Had the evidence shown that the platform space about the window had been comparatively free and unobstructed, and that plaintiff, with ample opportunity to choose a safe place to walk, had put herself or remained in a position of obvious danger from incoming trains, the instruction would have stated the law correctly. Her testimony, however, is that she was endeavoring to get past the narrow space in front of the window, and because of the crowd of persons about her she was prevented from realizing her danger * * *." Thus, the decision cannot be construed as applying to the facts of our case.

Nor is Jaques v. Southern Pac. Co., 8 Cal.App.2d 738, 48 P.2d 63, in point here. There two sets of railroad tracks were maintained in the street, each set operated by a different company. Between the tracks there was a safety zone 3 feet 10 inches wide. However, the defendant's cars overhung this zone so that there was less than 22 inches left for a person to stand in. While the plaintiff was standing in the safety zone awaiting an approaching car of the other company, defendant's train passed by. Its great speed drew the coat which she was wearing into contact with the train so that she lost her balance and was thrown or fell under the wheels. The court in upholding a judgment in the plaintiff's favor did not discuss the law of contributory negligence involved other than to say, 8 Cal.App.2d at page 740, 48 P.2d at page 64: "It is then argued that the respondent should have anticipated the danger from suction to a person standing near a railway track and that she was therefore guilty of contributory negligence. Manifestly, if the engineer, who had operated trains for more than thirty years, was not chargeable with knowledge of this particular danger, it cannot be said as a matter of law that an eighteen year old school girl should be deemed to have anticipated the same danger." It then stated that the question of contributory negligence was one of fact properly left to the jury—an entirely different situation from the one in our case, where on a sufficiently wide platform plaintiff by walking dangerously near to the track, and without any effort to determine whether he was safe from train overhang or suction, chose to violate the rule which the cases hold is well settled, namely, that a person on a station platform must look out for a train's overhang.

In Becker v. City and County of San Francisco, 121 Cal.App.2d 723, 264 P.2d 133, while standing on a street curb at a regular bus stop the plaintiff leaned forward and his head came in contact with the side of a moving bus. Judgment for the defendant was affirmed. Apparently the case is cited by plaintiff here because the court approved an instruction to the effect that it would be negligence for the bus to be operated in such manner that any portion of it extended over the curb. Such a ruling, however, in no way minimizes the railroad platform rule heretofore mentioned.

In Campbell v. Yazoo & M. V. R. Co., 1909, 95 Miss. 309, 48 So. 618, 21 Ann.Cas. 1179, the plaintiff stood on the concrete platform between the waiting room and tracks, his back to the tracks. He was struck by the engine bumper which overhung the platform 2 inches. It was held that " * * * being in a place where he is invited to be by the company, he has a right to suppose that he will be safe from collision with a train running on the track so long as he occupies a place on the platform, and the mere fact that plaintiff, while on the platform, did not look behind him for an approaching train, cannot be held evidence of contributory negligence * * *. Negligence is not imputable to a person for failing to look out for danger, when, under the surrounding circumstances, the person sought to be charged with it had no reason to suspect that danger was to be apprehended.” 48 So. at page 619. This case does not refer to the before-mentioned “uniform rule.” McKeown v. Northwestern Pac. R. Co., supra, 20 Cal.App.2d 324, 66 P.2d 1250.

In Archer v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co., 1887, 106 N.Y. 589, 13 N.E. 318, the plaintiff while on the station platform was struck by a car which overhung the platform 2 or 3 inches. It was held that the plaintiff could not be chargeable with negligence as a matter of law in “assuming there was nothing to make his position dangerous.” 13 N.E. at page 321. No reference is made to the uniform rule. Moreover, it appears that the platform in the Archer case was one between railroad tracks and there was evidence that the plaintiff did not know and because of the peculiar situation was justified in not knowing that there existed the track upon which the train which injured him came.

Except as to situations of platforms between tracks where the rule is different than the one applicable here, plaintiff has cited and we have found no case holding that a person has the right to assume that a platform or pathway is safe from overhang of passing trains, except Edwards v. Union Pac. R. Co., supra, 133 P. 728, where it was held that the plaintiff forced by the crowd upon the platform to place herself in a position of danger would have been negligent had she not been forced to do so; and Campbell v. Yazoo & M. V. R. Co., supra, 48 So. 618, which does not refer to the platform rule. Moreover, these cases were decided many years before the court in the McKeown case, supra, stated that the rule was “uniform.”

[8] Defendant’s engineer of maintenance of way and structures testified that it is a general policy of defendant to paint lines on a platform to mark danger points. This fact, however, does not change the rule regarding the fact that parties using such platform may not assume that all portions are safe. While in this case there were white lines on the Hillsdale station and Bay Meadows crossing platforms, plaintiff at no time testified that he was misled by the absence of white lines between. Prior to the construction of the present platform there had been a gravel pathway, all portions of which were clear of the engine overhang. There is no evidence that plaintiff knew of the white lines where they existed nor of the previous pathway. We can see no practical difference between a station platform and a platform between station platforms, so far as the duty of a railroad company to its users is concerned. Actually, it would appear that its duty at a station platform would be at least as high, if not higher, than on a platform of the type here. On occasion it was used as a loading platform for race track trains. Station platforms are places where many people gather, where there can be confusion and milling around. A platform between station platforms ordinarily has no such congestion.

[9, 10] Of course, the platform constituted an invitation from defendant for people to use it, just as any railroad platform does, but it is an invitation to use it with ordinary care. It is a matter of common knowledge that it is dangerous to stand close to a fast moving train, both because of overhang and suction. To hold that it is a question of fact whether a person is using ordinary care in walking in any portion of the danger zone which every one knows exists, without making any effort to determine whether he is without the overhang and suction area, means that the liability of a railroad to a person on its platforms or pathways is absolute. The case of Cameron v. City of Gilroy, 104 Cal.App.2d 76, 230 P.2d 838, is not applicable. A city ramp does not carry with it the warning of danger that railroad tracks, platforms and pathways do. With this warning of danger, no person may assume without looking (particularly when warned by the whistle of an approaching train) that he knows the overhang and suction distance of a train. The distance which a person reasonably must walk from train tracks is that distance which will clear him of overhang and suction. That distance is not determined by a blind guess, but by observation, particularly when he knows a train is approaching.

[11, 12] Usually, of course, the question of contributory negligence is one for the jury and it is only where no fact is left in doubt, and no deduction or inference other than negligence can be drawn by the jury from the evidence, that the court can say, as a matter of law, that contributory negligence is established. Zibbell v. Southern Pac. Co., 160 Cal. 237, 240, 116 P. 513. In view of the well settled rule as to station platforms, plaintiff's conduct under the circumstances leaves no possible inference other than that he was guilty of contributory negligence.

3. Train Suction.

Plaintiff offered a qualified expert who would have testified to the "suction pounds pressure" developed by a train traveling at 50 miles per hour (the speed maintained by the train which struck plaintiff) and which would have been exerted upon plaintiff, "taking into consideration the fact that * * * [plaintiff] was first hit and then spun facing back with his back to the train and then the amount of pressure that was exerted upon him to throw him into the train, together with his off-balance condition and together with his spinning motion would have been sufficient to pull him into the train." The court refused to admit the testimony. It is not clear to what issue this testimony would have related. Were it to the effect that suction initially might have pulled him into the train, it would be relevant on the question of defendant's negligence in driving a train at great speed alongside a platform on which there were a number of people. But the evidence was offered not to prove this, for it was proposed to relate only to what occurred after plaintiff was first struck. There could be no error in excluding it for this purpose, as there was no contention that plaintiff's injuries were not caused by the accident, so that just what occurred after he was first struck is not too important on the question of the negligence of either party.

[13] While plaintiff could have offered it to tie into Harland's testimony that it appeared to him that plaintiff was sucked into the train, plaintiff expressly stated it was for the other purpose. If offered for the purpose of corroborating Harland, it should have been admitted. However, its exclusion was not prejudicial, because the negligence of defendant was equally true whether the accident was caused by plaintiff's arm being extended into the path of the overhang of the engine or by his being caught by the suction of the train. Likewise, plaintiff was equally negligent whether he allowed his arm to extend into the path of the engine's overhang or walked so close as to be sucked in by an approaching train.

4. Inconsistency of Rulings.

[14] Plaintiff contends that in denying defendant's motion for new trial but granting its motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, the court acted inconsistently, in effect, holding on the motion for new trial that the evidence was sufficient to support the jury's verdict, and on the motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict that it was not, because as a matter of law the jury's finding that plaintiff was not contributorily negligent was not supported.

Section 629, Code of Civil Procedure, dealing with both of these motions, does not appear to meet the situation here. It provides what happens if the court (a) grants a new trial and denies judgment notwithstanding the verdict, (b) where both motions are denied. It appears to us that the effect of the trial court's action is a finding that if it was wrong in determining that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law, then it sees no reason for disturbing the jury's verdict and the judgment on that verdict would stand as the judgment in the case. We see no inconsistency in the court's action.

The judgment is affirmed.

FRED B. WOOD, J., concurs.

PETERS, Presiding Justice.

I dissent from that portion of the majority opinion that holds that the trial court properly entered a judgment notwithstanding the verdict on the theory that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law. That issue, in my opinion, was clearly one of fact and not of law. I agree with all other portions of the majority opinion.

The basic fallacy in the majority opinion is that it discusses the facts and law relating to the issue of contributory negligence of the plaintiff as if they were unrelated to the facts and law relating to the duty owed by defendant to plaintiff. The two are, of course, integral parts of the same problem.

The jury here found that defendant was negligent. While the majority do not discuss at any length the nature of the duty violated by defendant, they do assume the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the finding, and defendant does not challenge this assumption. The jury also found that plaintiff was not contributively negligent. The majority hold that this finding is unsupported, and that the jury, as a matter of law, should have found to the contrary.

It does not require citation of authority to establish the proposition that the issue of contributory negligence is normally one of fact. On this issue, the trial court has no legal right to grant motions for a nonsuit or directed verdict or to enter a judgment notwithstanding the verdict (nor has the appellate court the legal right to affirm orders granting such motions or to reverse a verdict) except in those rare cases where there is no evidence, or no reasonable inference from the evidence, that would support a verdict for the plaintiff. In reviewing the propriety of orders granting such motions, only the evidence most favorable to the plaintiff need be considered, and all conflicts in the evidence must be resolved in favor of the plaintiff. The appellate power begins and ends with the determination as to whether there is any evidence, or any reasonable inference from the evidence, that would support a verdict for the plaintiff. These rules are elementary. The majority give lip service to them, but, in my opinion, simply disregard them.

1. There is considerable discussion in the briefs as to whether this construction was a "pathway," a "walkway," or a "platform." The witnesses used all three terms. If any different legal results follow from the use of one term or another, then that term most favorable to

The majority assume that whatever duty was owed by the defendant to plaintiff was violated. There is little discussion as to the precise nature of that duty. It is self-evident that, before it can be determined if plaintiff, as a matter of law, was contributively negligent, we must know and discuss the duty owed by defendant to plaintiff. The jury could have found, and on this appeal we must presume it did find, that defendant was negligent not only in operating its train at 50 miles per hour under the circumstances, not only in failing to apply the brakes before they were applied, and not only in failing to give adequate warning, but could and we must presume did find, that defendant was negligent in building the pathway¹ between the crossing and station platforms in the manner it did when it knew that its trains would overhang the rails 3 feet, and the pathway 14½ inches. If it was negligence for defendant to run a train as it did that had a 3-foot overhang beyond the rails and a 14½ inch overhang over the pathway, then the plaintiff was not guilty of contributory negligence simply because he walked on the pathway with his feet over 3 feet from the rails.

Negligence and contributory negligence are not abstract concepts, but must be determined by the facts of the particular case. What are the pertinent facts? Here the railroad knew that the pathway involved was to be used by a large number of people. The pathway was designed and constructed by the defendant for the use of these people. The railroad invited the public to use it. At the Bay Meadows crossing, and at the Hillsdale station, at the two ends of the pathway, there were large paved platforms constructed flush with the rails with a white line carefully painted on them that indicated the danger zone near the rails. This raises the reasonable inference that the railroad was actually aware of the danger of plaintiff must be adopted, this being an appeal from a judgment notwithstanding. I have decided to use the term "pathway" because I believe that term most accurately describes the actual condition.

the overhang and conceived its duty to be to warn the public of the danger on these portions of the area involved. Then between these two extremities, for a distance of about 600 feet, the railroad designed and constructed a connecting asphalt pathway. This was constructed below the level of the rails at the level of the ties. It was 8 feet wide. The closest edge of the pathway was 1 foot 9 inches from the rails. There was no physical reason why the pathway had to be constructed close to the rails, the right-of-way in the area being quite wide and level. These facts raise the natural inquiry as to why, if the defendant believed the two terminals were places of danger requiring a white line to show the areas of danger, a white line was not also necessary on the 600-foot pathway? The engine involved overlapped the rails for 35½ inches, and overlapped the pathway 14½ inches. The plaintiff's feet, when he was hit, were not only over 3 feet from the rails, but were on, and well within, the very pathway designed and constructed by the railroad for the use of persons having the status of plaintiff. Under these circumstances, could the jury not find that the railroad by constructing the pathway as it did, impliedly represented to persons rightfully using it that it was a safe place on which to walk? Could the jury not find that plaintiff in using the pathway as it was intended to be used was not contributively negligent? The answer to these questions seems so clear that further discussion should be unnecessary. Plaintiff saw the pathway constructed as described. He used it for the very purpose that defendant intended that it be used. Certainly, the mere presence of the pathway constituted an invitation to walk on it. Constructed as it was, the jury could have found, and we must presume it did so find, that included within the invitation was the representation that the entire paved area was safe. Thus, so far as the duty of the defendant is concerned, the jury could have found, and we must presume it did find, that defendant invited plaintiff to use the pathway, owed a duty to him and others to maintain all of it in a safe condition, and represented that all of it was a safe place on which to walk.

If these conclusions are sound, they necessarily dispose of the question as to whether plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law. Of course he was not. The defendant is forced into the position of asserting, and the majority opinion impliedly approves the assertion, that every pedestrian who accepts defendant's invitation to use the pathway, which it designed and constructed, by that very use, as a matter of law, is guilty of contributory negligence by using the pathway, in that he cannot assume that the pathway is safe but must assume that it is unsafe. That this is not the law seems clear. Mr. Justice Dooling in discussing the law applicable to a factual situation not different in principle to the one here involved, stated the applicable law as follows in Cameron v. City of Gilroy, 104 Cal.App.2d 76, 80, 230 P.2d 838, 841: "The ramp [constructed by the city for the use of pedestrians] was patently designed for pedestrian traffic and for that purpose alone, and the casual pedestrian would be readily persuaded, without giving the matter further thought, that he might safely use a facility obviously supplied by public authorities for his convenience as a member of the public. The appellant city is in the position of asserting [as does defendant in our case] that every pedestrian who accepted its invitation to use this ramp which it designed and constructed for that very use must be held as a matter of law to have assumed the risk of injury. The conduct of a person of ordinary prudence is the legal standard in such cases and the court was well within the bounds of its fact finding power in determining that a person of ordinary prudence would have used this facility under the circumstances."

The majority say that plaintiff was contributively negligent because, although well within the limits of the path, he walked so close to the rails that the court must say that, as a matter of law he was guilty of contributory negligence. A reasonable man, say the majority, should have known that the area where he was walking was dangerous. This is an unwarranted conclusion. Of course, the mere existence of railroad tracks is a warning of danger and a person walking on the tracks must anticipate, at his peril, the presence of trains. It is equally true that a reasonable man knows or should know that a train or engine overhangs the rails to some extent. Within that distance from the rails a reasonable man knows or should know that he is in a position of danger. He is required to exercise the same care of self-protection that is required of a person on the tracks. But what is the distance from the rails that a reasonable man should know is a position of danger? Certainly, there is some distance so close to the rails that any reasonable man would say is a position of danger. Within that undefined distance we can safely say that a pedestrian has voluntarily placed himself in a position of danger, and, if hurt, is guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law. This conclusion was properly reached in those cases cited by the majority holding that a person walking within 6 inches or a foot of the rails is guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law. But the other extreme also exists. There is some undefined distance from the rails that to any reasonable man is a position of safety. In that area we can say that a person just by walking there, is not, as a matter of law, guilty of contributory negligence. We do not know whether that distance is 4, 5, 6, or more, feet from the rails, but whatever it is, once determined, persons in that area are free from contributory negligence as a matter of law. But in between those two extremes there exists an area where the question as to whether plaintiff was or was not negligent becomes a question of fact for the jury. That is this case. The test is whether a reasonable man, under the circumstances here present, should know that an engine overhangs the rails for a distance of 3 feet. Certainly, until I read this record, and I have ridden trains as much as most, I did not know that fact. Until I read this record I would have assumed that I was in a safe position if I stood or walked 3 feet from the rails. This would be true whether there was or was not a pathway constructed by the railroad for me to walk upon. The pathway, constructed as it was, constituted an invitation. Its existence aggravates the situation. But the majority broadly imply that the pathway, instead of being an invitation to pedestrians to use it, and instead of constituting an implied representation that it was a safe place on which to walk, constituted, by its very presence, a warning that it was a place of danger, and that any one walking on it was, as a matter of law, contributively negligent. The majority come to this startling conclusion on the theory that they are bound to do so because of the holding in McKeown v. Northwestern Pac. R. Co., 20 Cal.App.2d 324, 66 P.2d 1250. That case dealt with an accident on a loading platform. Here we are dealing not with a loading platform, in the literal sense, but with a pathway built and designed by the railroad for pedestrians to walk upon. This means walking in either direction, some pedestrians facing oncoming trains and some with their backs to them. It may be that a reasonable man knows or should know that a loading platform has to be constructed close to the rails and within the danger zone of overhanging equipment, for the convenience of passengers in getting on or off trains and in loading or unloading baggage. In that sense a loading platform may, per se, be a warning of danger. Perhaps users of such a platform should be required to face the rails and anticipate injury. On this issue I express no opinion, because it is not here involved. There are other facts that serve to distinguish our case from the McKeown case. These distinctions are fully and fairly set forth in the majority opinion, and need not be repeated here.

For these reasons, I believe that, under the facts here existing, the issue of whether plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence was a factual one, that the finding of the jury that he was not is supported, and that the trial court erred in entering a judgment notwithstanding the verdict. Therefore, that judgment should be reversed.

Hearing denied; SCHAUER and McCOMB, JJ., dissenting.

137 Cal.App.2d 308

Norman B. GRIFFIN, Plaintiff and Appellant,

v.

Victor L. WILLIAMSON, et al.,
Defendants,

Victor L. Williamson and Gratia Williamson, his wife, Respondents.

No. 15960.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 1, California.

Nov. 29, 1955.

Rehearing Denied Dec. 29, 1955.

Hearing Denied Jan. 25, 1956.

Action for deficiency judgment against chattel mortgagors and their partners. In Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, Arthur Coats, J., a jury returned a verdict in favor of the nonmortgagor partners and against the chattel mortgagor, and the latter appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Fred B. Wood, J., held that where no relationship of principal and agent existed between the chattel mortgagors and the other defendants who formed a partnership with them to use the mortgaged property in a business, there could be no ratification of the mortgage which would give rise to liability on the part of the nonmortgagors.

Affirmed.

1. Partnership ⇨173

True test whether defendants were liable upon a note given by makers as part payment for purchase of business was whether formation of partnership between defendants and the makers for operation of the business antedated, not the time of delivery of signed note placed in escrow, but time when obligation to buy business and to pay agreed purchase price was incurred.

2. Appeal and Error ⇨928(4)

Where record on appeal failed to indicate whether certain instructions given had been requested by plaintiff or by defendant or had been given on court's own motion, such instructions would be presumed to have been requested by the appealing party and would not be subject to challenge by such party upon appeal.

3. Husband and Wife ⇨42

In action against members of partnership, on promissory note signed by certain of the members, evidence sustained finding that no partnership by oral agreement existed between two husband-and-wife teams prior to signing of first written articles of partnership.

4. Evidence ⇨424

In action against partners, plaintiff could not complain of admission of parol evidence concerning occasion, purpose and intent of parties in preparing and executing partnership agreement to which plaintiff was a stranger. West's Ann.Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1856, 1962, sub. 2.

5. Evidence ⇨265(7)

In an action wherein plaintiff sought to obtain deficiency judgment against two defendants as partners of chattel mortgagors and the two defendants testified that there was no partnership created by oral agreement and no partnership agreement prior to written agreement dated May 3, the two defendants were not conclusively bound by declarations in another action or actions wherein one such defendant had claimed certain moneys by partnership agreement and had asserted that property covered by chattel mortgage in question had been sold to such defendant on April 24, and such prior declarations were merely evidence in case.

6. Trial ⇨194(9)

In action wherein plaintiff sought deficiency judgment against partners of chattel mortgagors, wherein court curtailed plaintiff's examination of such a partner as to prior inconsistent statement allegedly made by such partner in another action, and plaintiff offered to show that witness was "estopped" to deny partnership from beginning by reason of his claim of title to assets acquired at beginning of partnership, court's telling jury that witness was not estopped was not error.

7. Partnership ⇨157(3)

Where two defendants formed a partnership with two chattel mortgagors, the former did not, merely on theory of ratification and acceptance of benefits, or by statute, become liable on chattel mortgage covering business property in which they accepted an undivided interest by virtue of its transfer to the newly formed partnership from the mortgagors. West's Ann. Civ.Code, §§ 1589, 3521.

8. Appeal and Error ⇨172(1)

Where, in action for deficiency judgment against chattel mortgagors and other defendants as partners of the mortgagors, plaintiff requested instruction, as to liability under partnership statute, as to two of the other defendants only, his theory at trial was thus limited and could not be extended on appeal to establish liability of the other two under the statute. West's Ann.Corp.Code, § 15017.

9. Partnership ⇨218(2)

In action for deficiency judgment against chattel mortgagors and other defendants as partners of the mortgagors, instruction under statute, that person admitted as partner into existing partnership is liable for all obligations of partnership arising before his admission as though he had been a partner when the obligations were incurred was defective for omission of limitation "except that this liability shall be satisfied only out of partnership property". West's Ann.Corp.Code, § 15017.

10. Appeal and Error ⇨1052(5), 1062(2)

Where jury found in appellant's favor concerning effective agreement, any error in admission of evidence of conversation between parties before preparation of agreement, or in alleged failure to submit to jury the interpretation of the agreement, was harmless.

11. Partnership ⇨157(3)

Where no relationship of principal and agent existed between chattel mortgagors and persons who formed partnership with them to use the mortgaged property in a business, there could be no ratification of the mortgage which would give rise to liability on part of the nonmortgagors.

12. Contracts ⇨187(2)

Where persons forming partnership with chattel mortgagors agreed to assume share of indebtedness, mortgagee was third party beneficiary and as such could enforce contract of assumption at any time before parties thereto rescinded it. West's Ann. Civ.Code, § 1559.

13. Contracts ⇨249

Until creditor-beneficiary has accepted benefit of contract for assumption of indebtedness or has detrimentally acted in reliance thereon, the assuming party may rescind, but as long as assuming promisor continues to retain consideration from original promisee, contract for benefit of the third party cannot be rescinded or revoked. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1559.

14. Contracts ⇨266(1)

To rescind contract for assumption of indebtedness, promisors must return to promisees the consideration which promisees gave promisors for promise to assume obligation. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1559.

15. Contracts ⇨266(1)

Where partners who had agreed to assume share of indebtedness secured by chattel mortgage in consideration of an interest in the property, returned the property to the mortgagors, they met requirement, as prerequisite of rescission, of returning consideration received for promise of assumption. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1559.

16. Appeal and Error ⇨1050(1)

In action for deficiency judgment against chattel mortgagors and their partners, admission of oral evidence of conversation prior to drafting of contract was harmless, if error, where conversation concerned occasion for the contract and where the contract was clearly one for rescission. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1559.

17. Appeal and Error ⇨1062(1)

Any error in submitting to jury, in action for deficiency judgment against chattel mortgagors and their partners, interpretation of written agreement, was harmless where jury correctly interpreted the agreement as one of rescission. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1559.

18. Contracts ⇨272

Express rescission of agreement as a whole was adequate and effective without specifically listing and separately rescinding each and every clause it contained. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1559.

19. Contracts ⇨249

Where chattel mortgagee at time he sued mortgagors and their partners for deficiency judgment had no knowledge of agreement between mortgagors and their partners for assumption of part of indebtedness by the partners, mortgagee was not thereby accepting or enforcing the assumption agreement and parties to the agreement were not thereby barred from rescinding it. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1559.

20. Appeal and Error ⇨216(1)

Even if appellant had been entitled to certain instructions in trial court, he could not complain upon appeal where he had failed to present such instructions in appropriate form to the trial court.

21. Trial ⇨256(6)

In action for deficiency judgment against chattel mortgagors and their partners, if mortgagee desired that jury be particularly instructed in respect to theories of the partners' assumption of debt by way of, inter alia, estoppel, ratification, and acceptance of benefits, he should have requested that instructions which court gave be more specific or he should have asked for qualifying instructions.

A. Don Duncan, San Francisco, for appellant.

George W. Hippeli, San Francisco, for respondents.

FRED B. WOOD, Justice.

Plaintiff Norman B. Griffin brought this action against Edwina W. and William Compere and Victor L. and Gratia Williamson for the remainder due upon a promissory note of the Comperes after foreclosure of the chattel mortgage which the Comperes had given to secure the note.

The note, made in the principal sum of $27,500, evidenced the balance due to plaintiff for the purchase of his cleaning business. There is no question as to the liability of the Comperes. They raised no issue of fact at the trial. Plaintiff sought to hold the Williamsons liable as partners of the Comperes; i. e., as persons who were partners at the time of the transaction in suit or who, subsequently becoming partners, became obligated to pay.

The jury's verdict was in favor of the Williamsons and against the plaintiff. In response to special interrogatories, the jury also found: (1) the first written articles of partnership between the Williamsons and the Comperes were signed and executed "July 31st, retroactive to May 3, 1947"; (2) before these first written articles of partnership were signed and executed no partnership by oral agreement existed between the Williamsons and the Comperes; (3) after the partnership was entered into the Williamsons assumed the obligation evidenced by the note sued upon, "qualified to the extent the obligation was rescinded"; (4) the Williamsons are not now liable to the plaintiff for the indebtedness so assumed.

Plaintiff has appealed from that portion of the judgment which was in favor of the Williamsons; also, from an order which denied his motion for an order vacating the judgment as to the Williamsons and directing judgment in his favor against the Williamsons. In support of his appeal, plaintiff presents some 40 specific points under not less than 20 independent headings. We have considered each of these points and find they do not present a basis for reversal of the judgment. To discuss them one by one in detail would draw this opinion out beyond all bounds and fail to serve the most useful purpose. Instead, we will narrate what of significance happened at the trial, indicate our approval or disapproval, and state our reasons why. An outline of the sequence of events will aid the discussion.

Plaintiff was the owner of the "Norman Cleaners," a business having as its assets two leases, fixtures, equipment and good will.

Not later than April 24, 1947, Mrs. Compere became obligated by contract to purchase this business upon certain terms including the making of a down payment of $10,000 and the execution by herself and husband of a $27,500 note in plaintiff's favor. On that day the Comperes executed the note and put it in escrow. In ordinary course the escrow probably would have been consummated by May 5th (Mrs. Compere took possession May 5th) but was not in fact consummated until May 21, 1947.¹

On July 31, 1947, the Comperes and the Williamsons signed an agreement in writing to become and be partners in the conduct of this cleaning business, for a term "commencing with the date hereof and continuing until dissolved by mutual consent * * * or by operation of law," each of the Williamsons to have a 12½% interest and each of the Comperes 37½%, and designating Mrs. Compere as manager of the business. At the same time, Mrs. Compere executed and delivered to the partnership all of her right, title and interest in and to the business. Each of these two instruments was dated "this 3rd day of May, 1947."

Later, by an agreement in writing dated October 13, 1947, the Comperes and the Williamsons effected certain changes in their partnership contract. Among other things, this agreement increased from 25% to 50% the interest of the Williamsons in the partnership and decreased that of the Comperes from 75% to 50%, provided for additional cash contributions by the Comperes and the Williamsons, respectively, recited that the Comperes had borrowed $27,500 from Norman B. Griffin evidenced by a promissory note of April 24, 1947, in the principal sum of $27,500 bearing interest at 5½% per annum and declared that "for the purpose of equalizing the contributions to the capital of said partnership by all of the partners hereto, the said Victor L. Williamson and Gratia Williamson hereby agree with the said William Compere and Edwina W. Compere that the said promissory note and the indebtedness thereby evidenced shall be considered as a partnership indebtedness and that the payment of all amounts due thereunder shall be a business expense, and the said Victor L. Williamson and Gratia Williamson hereby agree to pay to the said William Compere and Edwina W. Compere 50% of the amount of any judgment which may be recovered against them in any suit brought upon said promissory note."

By a writing dated March 3, 1948, executed by the Comperes and the Williamsons, they in terms expressly rescinded their agreement of October 13, 1947. After de-

1. A few days before April 24, 1947, through E. W. Taylor, plaintiff, orally agreed to sell the business to Mrs. Compere. The transaction, because Taylor had no broker's license, was handled as a sale from plaintiff to Taylor and from Taylor to Mrs. Compere.

Not later than April 24, 1947, Taylor as seller and Mrs. Compere as purchaser signed an agreement in writing (dated April 21, 1947) whereby he promised to sell the business and she promised to buy it upon certain terms and conditions which included a promise by the purchaser to make a $10,000 down payment and to give a promissory note in the sum of $27,500 payable at the rate of $500 per month with interest at 5½%. This agreement also recited the payment of $500 by William George Compere and Edwina Compere and designated them as the purchaser.

On April 24, 1947, Taylor, Mrs. Compere and Griffin met at the office of the Bay Cities Escrow Company and opened two escrows, one relating to the sale from Griffin to Taylor, the other relating to the sale from Taylor to Compere. The Taylor-Compere escrow agreement, signed by Taylor and both Comperes, designated Taylor as vendor and Edwina Compere as vendee, incorporated the provisions of the April 21 agreement by declaring that "the herein escrow instructions are subject to the terms and conditions of a Uniform Agreement of Sale and Deposit Receipt executed by the parties hereto" (emphasis added) and stated that the note and a chattel mortgage securing its payment would be executed by William George Compere and Edwina Compere, his wife, in favor of Norman B. Griffin.

On the same day the Comperes signed the note and the chattel mortgage and placed them in escrow. Taylor put in escrow a bill of sale conveying the business to "Edwina Compere," a notice of intended sale, under the Bulk Sales Act, designating "Edwina Compere" as the vendee, and an assignment of lease to "Edwina Compere" which assignment was in writing accepted by her and approved by the lessors.

claring the mutual desire of the parties that the October agreement be rescinded and the parties be restored to the position in the partnership which they held prior to the October agreement, the agreement of March 3, 1948, expressly declared the October agreement "is hereby cancelled and nullified"; that the Williamsons "hereby assign and transfer" to the Comperes "one-half of their 50% interest in said business, and that in consideration thereof" the Comperes "release" the Williamsons "from the obligation to pay one-half or any part of any judgment which may be obtained against them in connection with that certain note and chattel mortgage executed by said Comperes to Norman B. Griffin."

[1,2] In connection with instructions to the effect that a partner is liable for all the obligations of the partnership arising after he becomes a member, the court told the jury that the Williamsons did not become liable on that basis if a partnership between them and the Comperes did not exist at the time of the execution of the note, which the court declared was April 24, 1947, the day the note was signed. (Instructions 11, 13, 14 and 19.)² Plaintiff complains of the date the court gave the jury, claiming that the consummation of the escrow (not earlier than May 5th) instead of its commencement (April 24th) was the critical date because delivery of the note, not its mere signing, marked the commencement of the obligation on the note and, assertedly, this is not a case for relation back to the commencement of the escrow. The trial court apparently viewed this as a case for relation back. Whether this is such a case, we need not decide. The true test here is the date when the obligation to buy the business and to pay the agreed purchase price was incurred, which, as we have seen, was April 24, 1947, the very date which the court gave the jury. The fact that the court described it as the time of the signing of the note instead of the effective date of the contract of purchase, is immaterial. Furthermore, the plaintiff requested and the court gave, with modifications, an instruction quite in harmony with the instructions which he now criticizes; "If you find that Victor L. Williamson and Gratia Williamson were copartners with William Compere and Edwina Compere when the promissory note obligation to plaintiff Norman B. Griffin for the purchase of the business and its assets was incurred was executed, you will render a verdict in favor of plaintiff against them for the balance due plaintiff." (No. 19 as given by the court, a modification of plaintiff's No. 29. Words deleted by the court are in strikeout; words added, in italics. Plaintiff says that by other instructions the court gave the jury clearly to understand that by "execution" of the note he meant its "signing," not its signing and delivery; hence, April 24th, not May 5th or May 21st.) This instruction as prepared and submitted by plaintiff, pointed to the very date which the court gave, April 24th, the date when the "obligation * * * for the purchase price of the business * * * was incurred."

[3-6] The finding that no partnership by oral agreement existed between the Williamsons and the Comperes prior to the signing (July 31, 1947) of their first written articles of partnership, is amply supported by the evidence. That fact and the fact that the partners made their first articles effective retroactively only to May 3, 1947,³ means there was no partnership in preparing and executing the partnership agreement dated May 3, 1947.

We find no error in that, plaintiff being a stranger to that agreement. The parol evidence rule applies as "between the parties and their representatives, or successors in interest", § 1856, Code of Civil Procedure or "between the parties thereto, or their successors in interest by a subsequent title", § 1962, subd. 2, Code Civ.Proc. Moreover, plaintiff can

2. We observe that the record fails to indicate the source of instructions 11 and 13 (whether requested by plaintiff or defendant or given on the court's own motion); hence, presumably requested by plaintiff-appellant and not subject to challenge by him upon appeal.

3. Plaintiff complains of parol evidence that was admitted concerning the occasion, purpose and intent of the parties in existence when (April 24th) Mrs. Compere incurred the obligation to pay the purchase price, the remaining $27,500 portion of which was evidenced by the note in suit.

[7] Plaintiff contends that by participating in the formation of this partnership and in the acceptance of Mrs. Compere's transfer to the partnership of her "right, title and interest in and to the business * * * and * * * assets of said business," the Williamsons assumed the obligation evidenced by the $27,500 note. He argues that this is like the case of a principal who, if he accepts the benefits of a contract his agent has made, must accept it with its burdens. There is no analogy. All that the Williamsons did was to form a partnership with the Compere. In so doing and receiving and accepting certain properties the partners did not assume the personal obligations of the assignor.

Plaintiff invokes also the provisions of sections 1589 and 3521 of the Civil Code. Here, too, the asserted analogy is lacking. There was no assignment or assumption of obligations. "The general rule is that the mere assignment of rights under an executory contract does not cast upon the assignee any of the personal liabilities imposed by the contract upon the assignor.

show no prejudice to his case, because the jury found in his favor when it found the agreement was effective retroactively as of May 3, 1947.

Plaintiff contends that because in a certain other action Williamson assertedly made a claim to certain moneys "by reason of the partnership agreement * * * dated May 3, 1947" and because in another action he asserted through his attorneys that the property covered by the chattel mortgage was sold to Williamson "on April 24, 1947," he was conclusively bound by such declarations and they tended to prove the commencement of the partnership as of April 24th, or at least by May 3, 1947. It would appear that such statements were, at most, evidence in the case and merely conflicted with Williamson's testimony that there was no partnership created by oral agreement and no partnership agreement prior to the written agreement which was dated May 3, 1947.

Plaintiff complains that the court erro-

3 Cal.Jur. 281, § 33: Lisenby v. Newton, 120 Cal. 571, 52 P. 813, 65 Am.St.Rep. 203; Wilson v. Beazley, 186 Cal. 437, 199 P. 772. But the rule is, of course, otherwise in a case where the assignee obligates himself to perform the covenants binding upon his assignor." Barberich v. Pooshichian, 59 Cal.App. 507, 510, 211 P. 236, 237. See also Armstrong Co. v. Shell Co. of Cal., 98 Cal.App. 769, 775-776, 277 P. 887. "A person becoming a member of an existing firm, or forming a partnership with another in the latter's existing business, does not thereby become liable for the debts already incurred, nor does the new firm become liable for them. An agreement, express or implied, is necessary to create such liability, not only between the creditors and the new firm but also as between the partners; that is to say, the presumption is against the assumption of such liability, and the burden to prove it is upon the one who asserts it * * *". Wine Packing Corp. of California v. Voss, 37 Cal.App.2d 528, 533-534, 100 P.2d 325, 328. In our case, at most, the partnership acquired the property subject to the lien of the chattel mortgage, there being nothing in the partnership agreement or in the assignment from Mrs. Compere indicative of an intent to assume an obligation of any kind.

neously curtailed his examination of Williamson concerning a statement made by the latter upon deposition in another action wherein Williamson assertedly claimed that his title to and in to the property of the business dated back as early as sometime in April. Asked what he wished to prove, plaintiff's counsel said he wished to show that the witness was "estopped" to deny his partnership from the beginning, "by reason of the fact that he claims title to these assets of the partnership which were acquired at the beginning of partnership in this suit." The court ruled that Williamson would not thereby be estopped to deny that he became a partner before he in fact did become a partner, and so informed the jury at the time. We see no error in that. Plaintiff's offer of proof set forth no element of estoppel, at most an out of court statement by Williamson inconsistent with his testimony in court. If plaintiff had the latter in mind he should have so informed the court.

[8,9] Plaintiff advances still another theory for assumption of liability by the Williamsons, this time limited to partnership property. He directs attention to section 2411 of the Civil Code (section 17 of the Uniform Partnership Act; now section 15017 of our Corporations Code) which in 1947 provided that a person admitted as a partner "into an existing partnership" is liable for all the "obligations of the partnership arising before his admission" as though he had been a partner when such obligations were incurred "except that this liability shall be satisfied only out of partnership property." There are authorities which indicate that these provisions are actually as well as literally limited to the case of a person who becomes a member of an existing partnership. See Wine Packing Corp. of California v. Voss, supra, 37 Cal.App.2d 528, 100 P.2d 325, and Hargis v. Hargis, 221 Ark. 654, 255 S.W.2d 663. If that be the law, then section 2411 does not here apply for lack of evidence that the Comperes operated as partners prior to the time they and the Williamsons became partners. In any case, the urge to apply section 2411 comes too late because the possible application of section 2411 to the Williamsons was no part of plaintiff's theory during the trial. The lack of such a theory is clearly indicated by the fact that plaintiff presented and requested one instruction based upon section 2411 in relation solely to other parties, not to the Williamsons. These other parties were defendants Carl Semonian and Harry Tarpinian, who entered this partnership in March, 1948, taking over the Compere's 75% with the consent of the Williamsons.⁴ This instruction concerning Semonian and Tarpinian concluded with the statement that "a person admitted as a partner into an existing partnership is liable for all the obligations of the partnership arising before his admission as though he had been a partner when such obligations were incurred," section 2411 being cited in its support. We note that even as a section 2411 instruction it was defective in omitting the very important limitation "except that this liability shall be satisfied only out of partnership property." In view of these circumstances, plaintiff is not now in a position to urge section 2411 as a basis for imposing liability upon the Williamsons.

[10] Plaintiff correctly states that it was the October 13, 1947, agreement which the jurors had in mind when they found that after the partnership was entered into the Williamsons assumed the obligation evidenced by the note sued upon.⁵ He advances certain theories as to the legal effect of that agreement, theories that are of significance chiefly in connection with the question whether the parties could and did rescind the October agreement.

[11] One of these theories is that this agreement functioned as a ratification by the principal (the partnership and its members) of the act of its agent (Mrs. Compere) in acquiring the property and incurring the purchase price obligation. There inheres in this the same fallacy that we have mentioned in relation to the same theory in connection with the original articles of copartnership, the absence of the essential elements of principal and agent.

[12-15] Another theory advanced by plaintiff is that the October, 1947, agreement had the effect of making the Williamsons the principal obligors and the Comperes mere sureties, to the extent at least of 50% of the obligation, upon the asserted analogy of the situation which obtains when a new partnership succeeds an old one and assumes the obligations of the old, citing Eastin v. Roberts, Carpenter & Co., 19 Cal. App.2d 567, 571, 66 P.2d 224. Whether

4. The trial court directed a verdict in favor of Semonian and Tarpinian and plaintiff did not appeal from the portion of the judgment which was in their favor.

5. Plaintiff claims it was error for the court to admit evidence of a conversation the parties had just before they prepared and executed the October 13th agreement and also error to submit to the jury the interpretation of the agreement. We are not convinced it was error, but even if it were the plaintiff has not been prejudiced because the jury found in his favor concerning the effect of the agreement, and the Williamsons have not appealed.

that doctrine applies here or not, we need not decide. Plaintiff's connection with the October agreement is that of third party beneficiary. In that capacity, he may enforce the contract of assumption "at any time before the parties thereto rescind it." Civ.Code, § 1559. Until the "creditor-beneficiary has accepted the benefit or has detrimentally acted in reliance thereon, the assuming party may rescind. But as long as the assuming promisor continues to retain the consideration from the original promisee, the contract for the benefit of the third party cannot be rescinded or revoked. Pitzer v. Wedel, 73 Cal.App.2d 86, 165 P.2d 971; Pearsall v. Townsend, 7 Cal.App.2d 162, 45 P.2d 824." Dick v. Woolson, 106 Cal.App.2d 415, 419-420, 235 P.2d 119, 122. "Rescission," of course, denotes the return by the promissors (here, the Williamsons) to the promisees (the Comperes) of the consideration which the latter had given the former for the promise to assume the obligation. Here, that requirement was met. The Williamsons relinquished the additional 25% interest in the partnership which they acquired by their assumption contract and transferred it back to the Comperes from whom they had received it.

[16-18] Concerning the rescission contract⁶ of March 3, 1948, plaintiff contends that its failure expressly to mention that clause of the October agreement which declared that payment of the note would be a partnership expense, operated as a failure to rescind that clause. We do not so view it. The express rescission of the October agreement as a whole was adequate and effective without specifically listing and separately rescinding each and every clause it contained.

[19] Plaintiff claims that the rescission came too late, that it came after plaintiff had accepted as a third party beneficiary. He predicates this claim upon the fact that on March 1, 1948, he filed an action against the Comperes and the Williamsons individually to collect the deficiency on the note. In so doing he was not accepting or enforcing the agreement of October 13th because he had not yet learned of its existence.

[20, 21] Plaintiff's principal remaining complaint is that the instructions which the court gave the jury concerning assumption by the Williamsons of obligations that had been created prior to the effective date of the partnership did not place before the jury plaintiff's various theories of liability. Irrespective of the question whether the evidence entitled him to instructions upon any of those theories, he is not in a position now to complain, for he failed to present them in appropriate form to the court. For example, plaintiff criticizes instructions 11 and 13 (which were to the effect that a partner is liable for all obligations incurred by a partnership after he becomes a partner and for such previously incurred obligations of the business as he assumes and agrees to pay) not on the ground that they were erroneous (they were correct as far as they went) but because they did not expound plaintiff's theories of assumption of the debt by way of estoppel, ratification of an agent's act by his principal, acceptance of the benefits of Mrs. Compere's assignment to the partnership, and Williamson's out of court claims to ownership

6. Plaintiff assigns as error, in violation of the parol evidence rule, Williamson's testimony concerning a conversation he and Mrs. Compere had prior to the drafting and execution of this contract. That testimony merely showed the occasion for changing the partnership arrangement, including the fact that Mrs. Compere felt she should not continue to carry on with the management of the business and the fact that she and her husband were leaving California. That testimony did not purport to interpret the contract or vary its terms. The writing was so clearly a contract of rescission, the admission of the testimony could have done no possible harm.

Upon the ground that a written instrument presents questions of law for determination by the court only, plaintiff claims it was reversible error to submit to the jury the question whether or not the October agreement was rescinded. If there were only legal questions involved, no harm was done because the jury correctly viewed the 1948 agreement as one of rescission.

of the assets of the business. Those theories obviously had to do with the means, manner and method of assuming or incurring indebtedness. If plaintiff desired that the jury be particularly instructed in respect thereto he should have requested that the instructions which the court gave be made more specific or he should have asked for qualifying instructions. See Ornales v. Wigger, 35 Cal.2d 474, 478-479, 218 P.2d 531; Kuehn v. Lowthian, 124 Cal.App.2d 867, 871-873, 269 P.2d 666. Plaintiff says his instruction No. 10,⁷ which the court denied, was on these subjects but he is mistaken. His No. 10 would have informed the jury concerning the power of a partner to act for his partnership but said nothing about estoppel, ratification, or any of the other theories mentioned. Plaintiff's requested instructions Nos. 8, 28, and 31 did touch upon those theories but each went too far and in effect would have, if given, directed a verdict in favor of the plaintiff. No. 8 declared that the Williamsons received as partners all the assets of the business and cannot be heard to deny that they must assume the balance of the purchase price. No. 28 stated "as a matter of law" that the Williamsons were partners when the obligation to pay the purchase price was incurred. No. 31 declared that the Williamsons could not rescind their agreement or assumption of liability because they had retained the consideration for their promise to pay the obligation to plaintiff, which consideration consisted of "the assets of plaintiff's business, which he had sold to the partnership." Plaintiff's No. 9 dealt with the character of proof required when a stranger asserts the existence of a partnership, but we are unable to consider and determine the propriety of this requested instruction because it appears from the record that "this instruction also contained other material" than that which is set forth in the record upon this appeal. Moreover, as noted earlier in this opinion, plaintiff is not in a position to challenge instructions numbered 11 and 13. They are chargeable to him as appellant because the record is silent as to their source, whether requested by the plaintiff or the defendants or given by the court upon its own motion.

The court gave two instructions (Nos. 15 and 16) which dealt with rescission of contract. Plaintiff takes exception to them not upon the ground that they incorrectly expressed the law but that the court in effect committed to the jury the interpretation of the written contracts of October, 1947, and March, 1948. Whether or not that was error seems immaterial in view of the fact that the jury arrived at correct interpretations.

It was not error to deny plaintiff's instructions 19-22, inclusive. They would, erroneously, have given the jury May 5th instead of April 24, 1947, as the date when the obligation for the payment of the purchase price was incurred.

Plaintiff's instructions Nos. 7 and 24-27, inclusive, were offered by him in support of his claim that the first written articles of partnership were effective as of May 3, 1947. The court's refusal to give them, whether proper or improper, could not have been prejudicial in view of the fact that the jury found with plaintiff on that point.

We find no abuse of discretion in the denial of plaintiff's motion to amend his complaint. The amendments, designed to conform to proof, did not present any issues concerning which the proof, as we view it, furnished a predicate for a different judgment than was rendered.

We find no merit in plaintiff's claim that it was error to deny his motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict and his motion to vacate the judgment as to the Williamsons and enter judgment in his favor against them.

The portion of the judgment appealed from and the order denying the motion to vacate a portion of the judgment and render judgment in plaintiff's favor are affirmed.

PETERS, P. J., and BRAY, J., concur.

7. Plaintiff's requested instructions bear one series of numbers; those actually given by the court, another series of numbers.

290 P.2d—24

137 Cal.App.2d 268

C. F. WATERS et al., Plaintiffs and Respondents,

v.

Thomas LANIGAN et al., Defendants and Appellants.

Civ. 16437.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 2, California,
Nov. 28, 1955.

Action for damages for trespassing cattle. The Superior Court, San Benito County, Thomas P. O'Donnell, J., rendered judgment for plaintiffs and defendants appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Kaufman, J., held that evidence warranted finding that defendants wrongfully assumed use and occupancy of pasture land by grazing their cattle thereon.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Animals ⇨100(4)

In action for damages for trespassing cattle, evidence disclosing that there was no binding contract for grazing privileges warranted finding that defendants wrongfully assumed use and occupancy of pasture land by grazing their cattle thereon.

2. Animals ⇨100(9)

In action for damages for trespassing cattle, evidence raised question for trier of fact as to whether plaintiffs, by their silence for 12 days, accepted defendants' offer of joint use of pasture.

3. Landlord and Tenant ⇨118(1)

Where no grazing contract was entered into, and plaintiffs and defendants did not believe that they had entered into contract which for some reason was invalid, the entry of defendants' cattle on pasture land in possession of plaintiffs was without consent and there was no tenancy at will.

4. Appeal and Error ⇨971(2)

Evidence ⇨498½

Whether or not a witness is qualified to express his opinion rests within the discretion of the trial court, and such ruling will be disturbed only where there has been an abuse of discretion.

5. Evidence ⇨546

In action for damages for trespassing cattle, record disclosed that there was no abuse of discretion in ruling that insufficient foundation had been laid to permit one of the defendants to qualify as a real estate expert and express his opinion as to rental value of pasture land.

6. Evidence ⇨545

To qualify a witness to testify as an expert to value of land, it is necessary to show that he has peculiar means of forming an intelligent and correct judgment as to value of the property in question because of his familiarity with property in the neighborhood, his business experience, and his familiarity with the market and sale of similar property in the vicinity.

7. Appeal and Error ⇨1048(2)

Any error in ruling that one of defendants was not such an expert as could express his opinion on rental value was not prejudicial where defendants had an independent expert testify as to rental value and such defendant would not have testified to a lower rental value.

James A. Walker, Salinas, R. B. McMillan, San Francisco, for appellants.

Wyckoff, Parker, Boyle & Pope, Hollister, for respondents.

KAUFMAN, Justice.

This is an appeal from a judgment for damages in the sum of $1,078 in favor of respondents C. F. Waters, et al., and against defendants and appellants Thomas Lanigan, et al., and the granting of an injunction prohibiting appellants from allowing livestock owned or controlled by them to trespass upon respondents' real property described therein.

Respondents C. F. Waters and Edna M. Waters, filed a complaint alleging that Thomas and Margarita Lanigan wilfully and maliciously allowed their cattle to trespass upon the real property in possession of respondents during the years 1952 and 1953. The case was tried by the court without a jury. The trial court found that (1) respondents at all times pertinent herein, were in possession of certain real property containing about 1,053 acres; (2) appellants wrongfully assumed the exclusive use and occupancy of said property for 1952 in allowing their livestock to trespass upon said property, to respondents' damage in the sum of $1,053, said property having a pasturage value of $1 per acre during that year; (3) appellants permitted occasional trespasses during 1953, and the grass consumed being of an indeterminate amount, nominal damage in the sum of $25 was suffered in that year; (4) respondents repeatedly returned said livestock to appellants during the years 1952 and 1953, and gave them notice to keep said livestock off the aforesaid property, but appellants continued to permit the trespasses.

Appellants contend that they did not wrongfully assume the use and occupancy of this property, known as the Stewart Ranch, for the year 1952, since they had entered into a binding contract with respondents for grazing privileges on the Stewart Ranch that year in exchange for respondents having similar rights on the Lanigan Ranch. If the alleged contract is found to be invalid, they say, still appellants' cattle were allowed to enter upon that property with the consent of respondents, hence a tenancy at will was created which was never properly terminated. Error is charged further in the refusal of the court to allow opinion testimony on rental value by appellant Thomas Lanigan, as he clearly possessed the necessary qualifications.

[1] Respondents leased approximately 1,053 acres of pasture land in San Benito County from third parties, and used it for grazing cattle. This land, known as the Stewart Ranch, was contiguous to other pasture land owned by appellants. Consisting of parcels irregular in shape, they were joined together in several places. Between 1,150 and 1,160 acres of appellants' land were situated in the same field as the Stewart Ranch, and together they formed one big pasture. Not until August 1953, was the boundary fenced. This was done by appellants at their own expense. Prior to that cattle could roam freely from one property to the other.

For approximately five years prior to 1952 respondents had used the entire field for grazing purposes. For the first two years no payment was made, while for the next three years respondents paid rent to appellants under a verbal lease. Appellants then kept their cattle on other land.

Appellants in November 1951, notified respondents that when the lease expired on January 1, 1952, it would not be renewed, and respondents would have to remove their cattle to their own property. Respondents continued to seek a renewal of the lease, and on January 17, 1952, asked Richard Stevens, District Attorney of San Benito County, to arbitrate the difficulties between the parties. Respondents' cattle in the interim remained in the unfenced field. A meeting was held in Mr. Stevens' office on January 24, 1952. It is out of the conversations that occurred on that day in Mr. Stevens' office that appellants contend a contract was negotiated which, even if not valid, gave rise to a tenancy at will on the part of the appellants.

The conversations disclose that the parties at the time were anything but congenial. Appellant Mrs. Lanigan demanded that Waters remove his cattle from her land, but he refused, requesting a renewal of the lease which she refused because of the low rental he had been paying. Mr. Stevens suggested that they use the unfenced pasture land together, but Waters said he did not care to do anything like that. Mrs. Lanigan said she ought to be able to put 100 head of cattle upon the property to compensate for the feed which respondents' cattle had eaten since the lease expired on January 1, 1952, and that if respondents did not remove their livestock, appellants would turn theirs into the area. Appellants cite portions of the record to prove that an agreement was reached that appellants could run 40 head of cattle in the pasture. This testimony was given by Mrs. Lanigan, and it is claimed that it is uncontradicted and must be accepted as true.

However, Mr. Waters testified that Mrs. Lanigan said she would turn 100 head of cattle into the pasture, but he objected. Mrs. Lanigan stated at one point that Waters had said that appellants could put 15 cattle in the pasture, but she had said she would put in 100 until she found out how many he had and until they were even. She said "That was about all the conversation, and he would just sit there. He didn't say anything."

Mr. Stevens testified that Waters offered to allow appellants to run 15 head of cattle, but Mrs. Lanigan felt she was entitled to more, and threatened to put her cattle in unless Waters took his out. When asked if he recalled an agreement on that he said: "A meeting of the minds, no. It is my recollection that Mr. Waters finally upped the amount of livestock that he would be willing to have Lanigans put into the area but I don't believe he ever arrived at the same number of head that Mrs. Lanigan felt she was entitled to put in, but she did tell him that in the event he didn't get his stock off she would put so many head of stock in there." There is no dispute as to the fact that respondents removed their cattle not long after the January 24th meeting, respondents stating the date as February 5, 1952, and appellants agreeing that it was in the month of February. Shortly after the meeting, appellants put their cattle into the unfenced field where they admit that they remained until November 1, 1952. Appellant Thomas Lanigan stated that 70 head were on the property in February and that the number decreased to around 50 in June, and to 35 in September and October. Waters testified that the number was in the 70's at all times, and sometimes higher. Appellants admit that respondents in February 1952, and at other times during that year demanded that appellants remove their cattle, but they refused.

The statement of the testimony of the parties as reviewed above, is sufficient to answer appellants' first contention, that the trial court was in error in finding that appellants wrongfully assumed the use and occupancy of the Stewart Ranch during 1952. Appellants cite numerous authorities to the effect that uncontradicted evidence of a witness which is not inherently improbable may not be disregarded by the trier of fact, Dickenson v. Samples, 104 Cal.App.2d 311, 314, 231 P.2d 530; Mantonya v. Bratlie, 33 Cal.2d 120, 127, 199 P.2d 677; Wirz v. Wirz, 96 Cal.App.2d 171, 176, 214 P.2d 839, 15 A.L.R.2d 1129; Dobson v. Dobson, 86 Cal.App.2d 13, 14, 193 P.2d 794, but these cases are clearly distinguishable. It is difficult to understand how appellants can claim that the testimony of Mr. Lanigan and Mr. Stevens is uncontradicted to the effect that an agreement was reached whereby appellants could put their cattle into the unfenced field in consideration for appellants allowing respondents already present cattle to remain there, when Stevens definitely testified that there was no meeting of the minds, that the parties never arrived at the same number of cattle, that on the day of the meeting or a subsequent date he advised Waters to take his stock out of the pasture, since it was apparent that he could not keep them off the Lanigan place because of the condition of the fence. They point to testimony that Stevens said Waters agreed to 40 head being allowed into the pasture, but appellants' own testimony is that they ran 70 head in the pasture in February 1952. If they contend that an agreement had been reached as to 40, it is clear that they were not attempting to act under such contract when they immediately ran 70 head of cattle into the pasture. There is, of course, support in the evidence for the conclusion that no agreement was reached as to 40, since, although Stevens used the word "agreed" when referring to Stevens' offer to allow 40, he had stated that the parties never arrived at the same number. Since there was no meeting of the minds, there was no contract.

[2] It is argued that respondents by their conduct in not at once removing their cattle from the pasture, by their conduct accepted appellants' offer to use the pasture jointly. Twelve days after the meeting respondents removed their cattle. Lanigan admitted that Waters asked him to take his cattle out of there in February 1952. Appellants' so-called offer was in the nature of a threat to put 100 cattle in the pasture. They show that there was a counter-offer on the part of Waters to permit 40, and that this is as high as he went, having started with 15. Because it took him 12 days in which to take action when appellants placed 70 head of cattle in the pasture, it cannot be said that the trial court was bound as a matter of law to conclude that this conduct was subject only to the inference that silence for that length of time was acceptance of an offer of joint use of the pasture. The trial court may well have concluded that that was a reasonable length of time for the making of a determination by respondents that the offer of 40 head had not been accepted, and that a counter-offer of 70 head would be rejected.

Appellant says that California cases have established that silence or inaction on the part of an offeree will be regarded as acceptance of an offer where the offeree is under a duty to speak, citing Wood v. Gunther, 89 Cal.App.2d 718, 731, 201 P.2d 874, but that case was concerned with relations between partners. The case pointed out that it was not a case of strangers, and to such persons she would have owed no duty to speak, but the offeree was one of three fiduciary partners who had a contract with one another under which they owed duties, one to the other; consequently, silence constituted acceptance. Meherin v. Meherin, 93 Cal.App.2d 459, 209 P.2d 36, is also a partnership case. The remaining cases cited are clearly distinguishable from the case now before the court.

[3] Since no contract was entered into, and since we do not have a situation where the parties believed they had entered into a contract which for some reason was invalid, the entry of appellants' cattle was without consent, and therefore no tenancy at will arose. Blum v. Robertson, 24 Cal. 127; Norton v. Overholtzer, 63 Cal.App. 388, 218 P. 637.

[4,5] It is contended that the trial court committed prejudicial error in ruling that Thomas Lanigan could not give his opinion as to the rental value of the Stewart Ranch in 1952. Respondents' objection that insufficient foundation had been laid was sustained. Appellants admit that whether or not a witness is qualified to express his opinion rests within the discretion of the trial court, and such ruling will be disturbed only where there has been an abuse of discretion. People v. Willis, 30 Cal.App. 2d 419, 423, 86 P.2d 670; Eubanks v. Milton G. Cooper & Son, Inc., 68 Cal.App.2d 366, 375, 156 P.2d 775. They maintain that such an abuse of discretion was committed in this instance, for Thomas Lanigan had owned the ranch immediately adjacent to the Stewart Ranch since 1945, and 1150 acres of the Lanigan Ranch were located in the same big field as the Stewart Ranch; he had been engaged in the cattle business since World War I; he had more than once rented land for grazing purposes; that although he had not rented property "in the vicinity" of the Stewart Ranch, he had rented property by the Jungle Inn which was "out in the valley more", and one of respondents' witnesses had previously testified that the Stewart Ranch was within hiking distance of the Jungle Inn. Thomas Lanigan also testified that in the spring of 1951 he had paid rent for pasturage on the Stewart Ranch itself.

The record shows that after stating that he had owned the ranch adjoining the Stewart Ranch since 1945, he testified he had had occasion to rent property for grazing purposes, but he was not asked when he had done so. He was then asked if he had ever rented property in the vicinity of the Stewart Ranch. He said "No I haven't. I have rented a small place by the Jungle Inn, but that's out in the valley more." Although appellant cites testimony given by another witness much earlier in the record that the Jungle Inn was in hiking distance of the Stewart Ranch, this was not called to the court's attention. A reading of the record clearly indicates that there was no abuse of discretion in holding that appellant was not sufficiently qualified as a rental expert.

[6] In People v. La Macchia, 41 Cal.2d 738, 746, 264 P.2d 15, 21, it is said that to qualify a witness to testify as to value of land it is only necessary to show "“that he has some peculiar means of forming an intelligent and correct judgment as to the value of the property in question * * * beyond what is presumed to be possessed by men generally.”' * * * The usual expert is qualified by showing his familiarity with the property and with other property in the neighborhood, his experience in the business, his familiarity with the state of the market and of sales of similar property in the vicinity." Since Lanigan was not an owner, he had to qualify as an expert on rental values, according to the standards set forth in the above quotation. Counsel for appellants should have brought out that Lanigan was generally familiar with fair rental values in the vicinity for pasture land of similar quality during the period of time in question.

Appellants say that the ruling was clearly unreasonable when the witness's qualifications are compared with those of Gerald Garner who testified as to rental value for respondents. However, the transcript reveals that the witness Garner was questioned in detail as to his fairly extensive operations on leased land in San Benito County for the past several years. The judge stated that he thought the witness had had enough practical experience in renting property but asked that he be questioned further as to the extent of his experience in renting "in this particular county and this area." After further questions by counsel, the court interrogated the witness at some length as to his experience in the general vicinity of the Stewart Ranch before allowing him to express an opinion on rental value. He then stated the value to be $1 per acre.

Appellants had an expert witness, a real estate broker, testify that the rental value of the Stewart Ranch was 50 cents per acre. In rebuttal, respondent Waters testified that the rental value was 1.50 per acre. The trial court found the value to be $1 per acre.

[7] Even if it be assumed that appellant should have been permitted to express his opinion on rental value, in view of the fact that appellants had an independent expert testify on their behalf that the rental value was 50 cents per acre, and since they do not contend that appellant, an interested party, would have testified to a lower rental value, there appears to be no showing of prejudice. Therefore, as was said in Vallejo & N. R. Co. v. Reed Orchard Co., 169 Cal. 545, 576, 147 P. 238, 252, in a situation where other experts had testified on the subject on which one witness had been excluded, and where it did not appear that qualified witnesses were difficult to obtain, "even if the ruling had been clearly erroneous, we cannot say that it was sufficiently prejudicial to warrant a reversal."

We conclude that no prejudicial error appears in the record before us and that the judgment finds ample support in the record.

Judgment affirmed.

NOURSE, P. J., and DOOLING, J., concur.

137 Cal.App.2d 508

Martine G. ETCHEPARE, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Edwin C. EHMKE and Janet Ehmke, Defendants and Appellants.

Civ. 21217.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California.

Dec. 5, 1955.

The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, A. Curtis Smith, J., entered an order denying motion to set aside default judgment, and defendants appealed. The District Court of Appeal held that where defendants' attorney signed stipulation for trial on September 22nd, and sent it to plaintiffs' attorney for filing, and on September 17th, defendants' attorney telephoned Calendar Clerk and was erroneously informed that earliest date for trial would be December 22nd, and then, without checking file or docket in clerk's office, and without telephoning plaintiff's attorney regarding the filing of the stipulation, or the chances of going to trial, and without any arrangement for trial on September 22nd, or for a continuance, defendants' attorney left town for two weeks, and default judgment was entered on September 28th, Superior Court did not abuse its discretion in holding that defendants were not entitled to have judgment set aside on ground that it was entered through "excusable neglect".

Order affirmed.

1. Trial Ⓒ9(2)

Where defendants' attorney signed stipulation for trial on certain date and had it sent to plaintiff's attorney for filing, he thereby waived his right to notice of trial under statute. West's Ann.Code Civ. Proc. § 594.

2. Judgment Ⓒ392

Burden of proving excusable neglect under statute providing that court may, on such terms as may be just, relieve a party from a judgment taken against him through his mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect, is on defendant, who must establish his thesis by the preponderance of the evidence. West's Ann.Code Civ. Proc. § 473.

3. Appeal and Error Ⓒ982(1, 2)

Determination whether burden of defendant to prove excusable neglect within meaning of statute providing that court may, on such terms as may be just, relieve a party from a judgment taken against him through his mistake, inadvertence, surprise or excusable neglect, is the duty of the trial court, and an order granting or denying motion to vacate judgment will not be reversed on appeal unless abuse of discretion is clearly shown. West's Ann. Code Civ.Proc. § 473.

4. Action Ⓒ66

Defendants and their attorneys must be guided by rules of legal procedure in the conduct of a law suit.

Cal.Rep. 289-290 P.2d—47

5. Judgment Ⓒ143(5)

Where defendants' attorney signed stipulation for trial on September 22nd, and sent it to plaintiffs' attorney for filing, and on September 17th, defendants' attorney telephoned Calendar Clerk and was erroneously informed that earliest date for trial would be December 22nd, and then, without checking and without any arrangement for trial on September 22nd, or for continuance, defendants' attorney left town for two weeks, and default judgment was entered on September 28th, trial court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to set aside judgment on ground that it was entered through "excusable neglect". West's Ann.Code Civ. Proc. § 473.

J. Howard Sullivan, Matthew L. Hatfield, Los Angeles, for appellants.

A. F. Weltner, Hollywood, for respondent.

PER CURIAM.

On June 7, 1954, pursuant to a telephone conversation with defendants' counsel, plaintiff's attorney phoned the Clerk for a trial date, prepared a stipulation "that the above entitled matter now off calendar subject to being reset 30 days from March 31, 1954, be set for trial September 22, 1954, at 9:15 a. m. in Department 1 of the above entitled court, without prejudice to either party", and forwarded it to defendants' attorney for his signature. On June 11th, the signed stipulation was received by plaintiff's attorney with a covering letter from defendants' counsel. The stipulation was filed June 18, 1954, and on the same day, pursuant thereto, the cause was so set for trial.

September 22, 1954, there being no appearance on behalf of defendants, plaintiff's attorney phoned the office of defendants' attorney and "spoke to one who represented herself to be a secretary and also to another person who stated he was an associate of" defendants' attorney; and said persons told him that defendants' attorney "was out of town and that his secretary was away on vacation". He informed the presiding judge of said conversations and the action was then transferred to Department 15 for trial. Plaintiff was sworn and testified and judgment was rendered in favor of Martine G. Etchepare as plaintiff and cross-defendant. September 28, 1954, judgment was filed providing "that plaintiff do have and recover from defendants the sum of $5,250".

September 27th, the day before it was signed and filed, plaintiff's attorney mailed to defendants' attorney a copy of the judgment prepared by him. The judgment was entered on October 5, 1954, and notice of entry of judgment was mailed to defendants' attorney on October 6, 1954.

March 31, 1955, Notice of Motion to Set Aside Judgment Under § 473 Code of Civil Procedure was served and filed. The motion specifies that the judgment was entered through the mistake, inadvertence, surprise, and excusable neglect of defendants and cross-complainants' counsel, and is based upon the answer and cross-complaint and "the affidavit of J. Howard Sullivan" filed therewith, and upon all the records and files in the above entitled action.

The affidavit of defendants' said attorney filed with said notice of motion is the only basis in the record on the instant appeal upon which relief under Section 473 could have been granted. The relevant portions thereof are as follows: "* * * that on the 17th day of September, 1954, your affiant called the Calendar Clerk of Department 1 for the purpose of determining whether the trial of the above entitled matter was on the Master Calendar of Department 1 on September 22, 1954 at which time he was informed that there was no Stipulation there and that the earliest date for trial would be December 22, 1954, which date had been reserved for this matter * * * that because of the information given to him by the Calendar Clerk, which evidently was erroneous, your affiant did leave town for a period of two weeks.

* * * * *

"That plaintiff and cross-defendant did not serve a Notice of Trial pursuant to C.C.P. § 594 on defendants and cross-complainants."

"The court may, upon such terms as may be just, relieve a party * * * from a judgment * * * taken against him through his mistake, inadvertence, surprise or excusable neglect." Code Civ.Proc. sec. 473.

[1] In the instant action, defendants' attorney had signed a stipulation for trial on September 22nd, and had sent it to plaintiff's attorney for filing. He had thereby waived his right to notice of trial under C.C.P. § 594. He knew the date of the trial.

According to his affidavit, on the 17th of September, five days before the stipulated trial date, he telephoned the Calendar Clerk and was misinformed. Then, without checking the file or docket in the Clerk's office, without telephoning plaintiff's attorney regarding the filing of the stipulation or the chances of going to trial, and without any arrangement for trial on the 22nd or for a continuance, he "left town for two weeks".

[2, 3] The burden of proving excusable neglect is upon the defendant who must establish his thesis by a preponderance of the evidence. Bruskey v. Bruskey, 4 Cal. App.2d 472, 479, 41 P.2d 203; Caton v. Caton, 131 Cal.App.2d 451, 458, 280 P.2d 876. To decide whether the burden has been met in this respect is the duty of the trial court and an order granting or denying a motion to vacate a judgment will not be reversed on appeal unless an abuse of discretion is clearly shown.

[4] In Shearman v. Jorgensen, 106 Cal. 483, at page 485, 39 P. 863, at page 864, where defendant's attorney prepared an answer and then, through inadvertence, filed it in his own office instead of filing it in court, the order vacating the default judgment was reversed and it was said: "Inadvertence in the abstract is no plea upon which to set aside a default * * * if the inadvertence is wholly inexcusable, as if it arises from gross negligence, the court will not look upon it kindly, and will have none of it." Benjamin v. Dalmo

Mfg. Co., 31 Cal.2d 523, 528, 190 P.2d 593. Defendants and their attorneys must be guided by the rules of legal procedure in the conduct of a lawsuit. Caton v. Caton, 131 Cal.App.2d 451, 458, 280 P.2d 876.

[5] The record on the instant appeal fails to show any abuse of discretion in denying appellants' motion to vacate the judgment.

The portion of the affidavit of defendants' attorney not quoted above expresses his excuses for his delay of five and a half months before seeking relief under Section 473. Since his failure to appear at the trial was held not to have been the result of "mistake, inadvertence, surprise or excusable neglect", the reason for the subsequent delay is immaterial.

The order is affirmed.

137 Cal.App.2d 516

Artle DE LA TOVA, Petitioner,

v.

INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION of the State of California, Oscar Mayer & Company, Inc., a corporation, and American Motorists Insurance Company, a corporation, Respondents.

Civ. 21197.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 3, California.

Dec. 5, 1955.

Hearing Denied Feb. 1, 1956.

Workmen's compensation case. The Industrial Accident Commission made an award, and petitioner sought review. The District Court of Appeal, Parker Wood, J., held, inter alia, that finding that claimant's disability was attributable in part to head and neck injury and in part to normal progress of a pre-existing posture condition for which claimant was not entitled to compensation was supported by substantial evidence.

Award affirmed.

290 P.2d—24½

1. Workmen's Compensation ⇨1939

In reviewing findings of Industrial Accident Commission, courts are without power to disturb them unless there is a lack of substantial evidence.

2. Workmen's Compensation ⇨1652

In workmen's compensation case, findings that claimant's head and neck injuries had resulted in a temporary partial disability for certain periods, and a permanent partial disability thereafter, were supported by substantial evidence.

3. Workmen's Compensation ⇨998

Finding in workmen's compensation case that claimant was in need of no further medical treatment as result of injury was supported by substantial evidence.

4. Workmen's Compensation ⇨556

Compensation is recoverable for disability which results from aggravation or lighting up of a pre-existing disease if aggravation or lighting up is reasonably attributable to accident, but compensation is not recoverable for disability which results, irrespective of accident, from normal progress or development of pre-existing disease. West's Ann.Labor Code, § 4663.

5. Workmen's Compensation ⇨1630

Finding in workmen's compensation case that claimant's disability was attributable in part to head and neck injury and in part to normal progress of a pre-existing posture condition for which claimant was not entitled to compensation was supported by substantial evidence. West's Ann.Labor Code, § 4663.

6. Workmen's Compensation ⇨1630

Finding in workmen's compensation case that only 15 per cent of claimant's disability was attributable to industrial injury was supported by substantial evidence. West's Ann.Labor Code, § 4663.

Louis R. Stein, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Everett A. Corten and Edward A. Sarkisian, San Francisco, for respondents.

PARKER WOOD, Justice.

Review of proceedings of the Industrial Accident Commission.

On January 25, 1952, the petitioner, while employed as a meat packer, sustained injuries to her head and neck when she fell and struck her head on a cement floor. The referee found, among other things, that said injuries caused temporary total disability from January 26, to February 24, 1952, entitling applicant (petitioner herein) to \$35 a week during that time; that said injuries caused temporary partial disability beginning February 25, 1952, entitling applicant to \$17.50 a week based upon 50 per cent loss of earning power; and that applicant was in need of further medical treatment. An award was made in accordance with said findings. On March 25, 1953, the insurance carrier filed a request to terminate liability. Applicant did not object thereto. On May 15, 1953, an order was made terminating liability as of March 25, 1953. On September 25, 1953, applicant filed a petition to reopen, alleging therein that she had been unable to work, except sporadically, since said order was entered; and that she was in need of further medical treatment. At a hearing on March 12, 1954, the referee ordered that petitioner be re-examined by an independent medical examiner (Dr. Dueker, who had previously examined petitioner), and that his report of the examination be received in evidence; and the referee stated that thereafter the "file" might be referred to the rating bureau. Dr. Dueker made the examination and filed a report thereof in May, 1954. He stated therein that about 85 per cent of petitioner's complaints were due to a habitual static postural deviation; and that 15 per cent of her disability was a sufficient allocation to ascribe to the injury. In January, 1955, petitioner cross-examined Dr. Dueker relative to said report. Thereafter the referee instructed the rating bureau to make a permanent disability rating, and to base it on Dr. Dueker's report of May, 1954, "apportioning in accordance with the doctor's opinion." The rating bureau apportioned 15 per cent of the petitioner's disability to the injury and recommended a permanent disability rating of $7\frac{1}{4}$ per cent.

On April 4, 1955, an order was made granting the petition to reopen, and the referee made findings in part as follows: that further temporary partial disability began on August 10, 1953 and continued to March 12, 1954, entitling applicant to \$17.50 a week during that time, based upon a 50 per cent loss of earning power; and that the injuries resulted in permanent disability which was rated at $7\frac{1}{4}$ per cent, entitling applicant to \$30 a week for 29 weeks. An award was made in accordance with the findings. Applicant's petition for reconsideration was denied.

Petitioner contends that there was no substantial evidence that: (1) her condition became permanent on March 12, 1954; (2) temporary disability terminated as of that date; (3) she was not in need of further medical treatment; (4) her permanent disability required apportionment because of a pre-existing physical condition; (5) apportionment of the disability should be 15 per cent to the injury and 85 per cent to the pre-existing condition.

In September, 1952 (about 8 months after the injury, and prior to the first award), Dr. Dueker, the independent medical examiner who was appointed by the referee, examined petitioner and made a written report which was received in evidence. He stated therein, in part, that: petitioner complained of dull aching sensations in the right temple, and of a dull, heavy sensation in the posterior cervical area; she stated that she had not returned to work "for fear that her neck and head pain will recur"; she stated that medication prescribed by her doctor more or less controlled the headache; she denied previous injury or similar complaints; she seemed to be logical in her conversation and did not seem to exaggerate complaints. Dr. Dueker stated further in his report that strong cervical compression elicited mild complaint of local pain in upper posterior cervical area; he reviewed X-rays of her skull and cervical spine; he believed that her principal trouble is the residual of cervical muscle and fascial strain; petitioner had a posture marked by increased lumbar lordosis and forward carrying of the head which in itself tends to put a more or less continuous postural strain on the supporting structures of the spine; treatment consisting of heat, massage and traction, "with an honest effort" by her to rehabilitate the postural deviation, should be effective within a few weeks; her complaint "is perhaps 85% due to the static postural deviation underlying and prolonging the effects of the cervical strain due to the injury."

In the second report of Dr. Dueker, made in May, 1954, he stated that petitioner complained of heavy feeling and dull ache in the posterior neck, a feeling of tiredness in her arms, and "blackouts" which she said occurred every two or three months and sometimes caused her to fall. He stated further therein that there was moderate tenderness over the upper cervical muscles, that pressure there caused subjective complaint of pain; there is chronic cervical strain, pre-existent with habitual postural alteration contributing; gentle traction or the mere correction of the cervical posture will relieve her complaint; after a careful reconsideration of her case he could not materially alter his diagnosis and comment as stated in his first report; he would reiterate that perhaps 85 per cent of her present complaints are on the basis of the habitual static postural deviation, allowing no more than a small portion of the total picture to the effect of the injury at this time; the effects of the injury, to be termed temporary aggravation, should have cleared up in a few weeks under proper treatment; he believed that the patient had settled down to a degree of comfort acceptable to her, and the avoidance of responsibility for support of herself and son; he would allow her two months of the suggested physical therapy regime, with co-operation on her part, as a generous allowance of time for her recovery from the residual effect attributable to the accident; he believed that the 15 per cent of disability which he ascribed to the injury at the time of his first examination was a sufficient allocation.

At the hearing on January 20, 1955, for the purpose of permitting petitioner to cross-examine Dr. Dueker, he testified that petitioner had a pre-existing habitual postural deviation to which he attributed 85 per cent of her present condition, and that he attributed 15 per cent of her condition to the injury; that the cervical strain should not "of itself" have created symptoms for more than two months after the injury, and that the remainder of her trouble and the prolongation if it were due to the fact that she did not correct her posture; he had no explanation for the blackouts which she referred to during his second examination in May, 1954; he was "so strongly of the opinion that all she needs to do is to cooperate with very simple treatment to get over this," that he believed a very large part of her complaints were due to the fact that she would not co-operate; he thought it probable that, without any injury, the petitioner might have had similar trouble later in life following a longer period of poor posture.

Dr. Meade, who gave petitioner medical treatment on behalf of the insurance carrier, made a report on January 28, 1952 in which he stated that the "period of disability will probably continue for another one to three weeks, depending on whether she develops post-traumatic headaches." In another report, on February 22, 1952, he stated that X-rays taken of petitioner's neck on that date were negative for fracture dislocation; her symptoms were subjective, and he informed her that she should be able to assume her occupation on February 25, 1952; she stated that she did not want to go back to the same place because another employee said things that had embarrassed her.

Dr. Dickerson, who examined petitioner on behalf of the insurance carrier, stated in a report of February 6, 1952 that petitioner's complaints were consistent with a mild cerebral concussion syndrome; she should not return to her employment for four to six weeks; and he could not see any indication of permanent disability from the injury. In a supplemental report, on May 13, 1952, Dr. Dickerson stated that at that time petitioner was fully able to do some gainful work, and he saw no reason for further treatment; she had made a good clinical recovery from the effects of the injury, and there would be no permanent disability. In a further report, on June 14, 1952, he stated that X-rays of the cervical spine were negative; in his opinion there were no objective findings in the examinations which would support the claim of continued headaches; and it was apparent that she had recovered from any ill effects of the accident.

Dr. Morgan, who examined petitioner on February 18, 1954, on behalf of the insurance carrier, made a report that petitioner had subjective complaints, and he did not believe there was any disability as a result of the injury.

A report of Dr. Shear, which was made on September 14, 1953, was attached to the petition to reopen; he stated therein that in his opinion she has a chronic cervical muscle spring; he believed that she should be reevaluated—such reevaluation to consist of electromyogram studies, rechecking X-rays and subsequent treatment by a psychiatrist if necessary.

[1,2] As above stated, petitioner contends that there was no substantial evidence that her condition became permanent on March 12, 1954, or that temporary disability terminated as of that date. This contention is not sustainable. "In reviewing the findings of the commission, the courts are without power to disturb them unless there is a lack of substantial evidence. The courts are not concerned with conflicts. * * * Where there is substantial evidence to support the findings and order of the commission, the reviewing court may not substitute its views for those of the commission and annul the award. * * * If the findings of the Industrial Accident Commission are supported by inferences which may fairly be drawn from evidence, even though the evidence is susceptible of opposing inferences, the reviewing court will not disturb the award. * * *"

Pacific Lumber Co v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 22 Cal.2d 410, 422-423, 139 P.2d 892, 899; Pacific Elec. Ry. Co. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 96 Cal.App.2d 651, 660, 216 P.2d 135. Dr. Dueker stated that treatment, with an honest effort by petitioner to rehabilitate the postural deviation, should be effective within a few weeks; about 85 per cent of her complaints were "on the basis of the habitual static postural deviation"; he believed that she had settled down to a degree of comfort acceptable to her; the cervical strain should not of itself have created symptoms for more than two months after the injury; the remainder of her trouble was due to her poor posture and her failure to co-operate in treatments to correct posture. Dr. Dickerson stated that in his opinion there were no objective findings which would support her claim of continued headaches, and that she had recovered from any ill effects of the accident. Dr. Morgan stated that he did not believe there was any disability as a result of the injury. The referee found that the injury caused temporary partial disability from February 25, 1952 to March 25, 1953, and from August 10, 1953 to March 12, 1954; and that it resulted in a permanent disability of petitioner. Those findings are supported by substantial evidence.

[3] As above shown, petitioner contends further that there was no substantial evidence that she was not in need of further medical treatment. She refers to Dr. Dueker's report of May, 1954, wherein he suggested a physical therapy regime for two months, including the co-operation of petitioner. At the hearing in January, 1955 (about eight months later), he testified that the cervical strain should not "of itself" have created symptoms for more than two months after the injury; and that the remainder of petitioner's trouble was due to the fact that she did not correct her posture. Also, Dr. Dickerson stated in his report of May, 1952, that he saw no reason for further treatment; and in his report of June, 1952, that it was apparent that petitioner had recovered from any ill effects of the accident. The finding that petitioner was not in need of further medical treatment (as a result of the injury) was supported by substantial evidence.

[4, 5] Petitioner contends further, as above shown, that there was no substantial evidence that her permanent disability required apportionment by reason of a pre-existing postural defect. She argues that there was no evidence that her postural defect, which had existed prior to the accident, had caused her any discomfort prior to the injury, or that it was progressing to a point which could with reasonable certainty produce disability without an injury. She argues further that an employer takes an employee in the physical condition in which he finds the employee and that the fact that petitioner's posture contributed to prolonging the effects of the injury does not justify an apportionment. Section 4663 of the Labor Code provides: "In case of aggravation of any disease existing prior to a compensable injury, compensation shall be allowed only for the proportion of the disability due to the aggravation of such prior disease which is reasonably attributed to the injury." Compensation is recoverable for "disability which results from the aggravation or 'lighting up' of a pre-existing disease if the aggravation or 'lighting up' is reasonably attributable to the accident; but compensation is not recoverable for disability which results, irrespective of the accident, from the normal progress or development of a pre-existing disease. [Citations.] It was a question of fact for the determination of the Commission as to whether applicant's permanent disability resulted from the effects of the accident, including the aggravating effect of the accident upon a pre-existing disease, or whether the disability or a part thereof resulted from the normal progress of a pre-existing disease. If a part of the disability resulted from the normal progress of a pre-existing disease then a portion of the permanent disability rating herein should have been attributed to the pre-existing disease." Industrial Indem. Co. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 95 Cal.App.2d 443, 449-450, 213 P.2d 11, 15. The opinion of Dr. Dueker, specifically referred to above, was a sufficient basis for a determination that a part of petitioner's disability resulted from the normal progress of her pre-existing condition. There was substantial evidence in support of apportionment of the disability.

[6] Petitioner contends further that there is no substantial evidence to justify the apportionment of 15 per cent of her disability to the injury. She argues that Dr. Dueker was unable to give any basis for his opinion that 15 per cent of her disability was due to the injury. At the hearing in January, 1955, counsel for petitioner asked Dr. Dueker to explain how he arrived at the percentage of apportionment, and Dr. Dueker replied that he believed "by far the greater proportion" of her disability was due to her poor posture and failure to correct it "as against a minor portion due to the injury and that comes up with a figure for 85 and 15 respectively"; and that there was no objective rule whereby his opinion could be tested—that it was "a matter of trying to evaluate the whole picture and striking a fair arbitrary apportionment." Prior to said hearing, as above shown, Dr. Dueker made two physical examinations of petitioner—one about eight months after the injury and the other about two years and four months after the injury. He reviewed her history, and examined X-rays of her skull and cervical spine. In his opinion, as above stated, the cervical strain should not have created symptoms for more than two months; she had settled down to a degree of comfort acceptable to her; and a large part of her complaints were due to the fact that she did not co-operate. In Liberty Mut. Ins. Co. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 33 Cal.2d 89, at pages 93, 94, 199 P.2d 302, at page 306, it was said: "Arriving at a decision on the exact degree of disability is a difficult task under the most favorable circumstances. It necessarily involves some measure of conjecture and compromise by the finder of fact as certainly would occur in the mental processes of a so-called expert witness. When the commission is confronted with widely divergent views as to the extent of the loss of function of the body, further complicated by the possibility of lack of cooperation or faking in various degrees by the injured person, it may make a determination within the range of the evidence as to the degree of disability. * * *

The trier of fact may accept the evidence of any one expert or choose a figure between them based on all of the evidence." In Tanenbaum v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 4 Cal.2d 615 at page 618, 52 P.2d 215, 216, it was said: "[T]he determination of the percentage of disability is a matter left to the sound discretion of the commission." In the present case, it cannot be said that the commission abused its discretion in apportioning 15 per cent of the disability to the injury.

The award is affirmed.

SHINN, P. J., and VALLÉE, J., concur.

137 Cal.App.2d 289

C. SLOAN, Plaintiff and Respondent,
v.

Frederick W. STEARNS, Fairway Construction Co., Inc., Defendants and Appellants.

Civ. 20642, 20935.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 2, California.

Nov. 28, 1955.

Rehearing Denied Dec. 21, 1955.

Hearing Denied Jan. 25, 1956.

Action by attorney's assignee to recover attorney fees. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, LeRoy Dawson, J., rendered judgment for plaintiff and denied defendants' motion for judgment n. o. v. and defendants appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Ashburn, J. pro tem., held, inter alia, that evidence was sufficient to support verdict for assignee in quantum meruit irrespective of whether contingency contract between attorney and client were deemed breached by client or unenforceable.

Judgment and order affirmed.

Fox, J., dissented.

See also 128 Cal.App.2d 717, 275 P.2d 913.

1. Appeal and Error ⇨903

Reviewing court was bound to assume that enough appeared in record to enable it to decide whether reversible error was committed, and was bound to make ruling upon basis of what affirmatively appeared. West's Ann.Rules on Appeal, rule 52

2. Appeal and Error ⇨930(1)

On appeal from judgment on verdict, evidence was viewed favorably to respondent.

3. Novation ⇨4

Where attorney had contract to render services in obtaining a loan, and also was engaged to render legal services, and attorney and client subsequently entered into purported contract for compensation for all services, the purported contract constituted a novation. West's Ann.Civ.Code §§ 1530-1532.

4. Work and Labor ⇨14(2)

Where a contract calls for one party to render services, and other party prevents occurrence of condition which would perfect right to compensation, aggrieved party may treat contract as repudiated and proceed in quantum meruit.

5. Contracts ⇨303(4)

A party to a contract cannot take advantage of his own act or omission to escape liability thereon.

6. Contracts ⇨303(4)

Where a party to a contract prevents fulfillment of a condition precedent or its performance by adverse party, he cannot rely on such condition to defeat his liability

7. Contracts ⇨57

Where parties assume to make a contract in which one's promise is consideration for promises by other, promises must be mutual, and one who promises to do a thing only if it pleases him is not bound to perform.

8. Contracts ⇨10(1)

Where a contract imposes no definite obligation on one party to perform, it lacks mutuality of obligation, and no enforceable obligation exists.

9. Contracts ⚭10(2)

Where contract between attorney and client required attorney to obtain a loan for client and to render legal services, provided the payment was contingent upon client's acceptance of loan, contract was unenforcible for lack of mutuality.

10. Attorney and Client ⚭158

Where contract between attorney and client was unenforcible for lack of mutuality in that client was not obliged to perform, and attorney had explained this fact at time contract was executed, attorney, upon client's refusal to perform, was not estopped to rely upon lack of mutuality and seek recovery in quantum meruit.

11. Attorney and Client ⚭166(1)

In action by attorney's assignee to recover attorney fees, evidence was sufficient to support verdict for assignee in quantum meruit irrespective of whether contingency contract between attorney and client were deemed breached by client or unenforcible.

12. Judgment ⚭199(1)

Motion for judgment n. o. v. did not lie where there was no previous motion for a directed verdict.

13. Pleading ⚭177

Where defendant in action to recover attorney fees pleaded written agreement, plaintiff's failure to deny agreements admitted nothing except genuineness and due execution, and did not preclude plaintiff from asserting matters in confession and avoidance. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 448.

14. Attorney and Client ⚭167(3)

In action for attorney fees, wherein it appeared that contingency contract under which attorney was to be paid only upon client's acceptance of a loan to be obtained by attorney was unenforcible for lack of mutuality, defendants were not entitled to instruction that such a contract is not rendered invalid by a provision that no fee is to be paid unless first person accepts loan.

15. Appeal and Error ⚭1078(4)

Error in rejecting proffered instructions which were not discussed in appellant's brief was waived.

16. Attorney and Client ⚭135

An attorney under a general employment which does not specifically call for his entire time is not precluded from assuming relation which would prevent him from devoting his entire energy to his client's interests.

17. Trial ⚭241

Taking excerpts from opinions of courts of last resort and indiscriminately changing them into instructions to juries is not an approved practice.

18. Trial ⚭261

Trial judge had no duty to modify requested instructions and give them as modified, and performed his full duty in denying them where improper.

19. Attorney and Client ⚭167(3)

In action for attorney's fees, instruction on attorney's duty not to buy an interest in thing in controversy adverse to client was faulty for lack of qualification that this is true only if client does not have full knowledge and give free consent.

20. Trial ⚭228(4)

Requested instruction which consisted of a series of generalities, which unexplained were inappropriate to a jury instruction, was properly refused.

21. Trial ⚭228(4)

In action for attorney's fee, defendant's requested instruction quoting a rule of professional conduct was a generality which was not appropriate to jury instruction.

22. Attorney and Client ⚭167(3)

In action for attorney fees, wherein defendant pleaded an unambiguous contract between attorney and client, defendant's requested instruction concerning attorney's duty to state agreement in unambiguous terms was properly refused.

23. Trial ⚭184

Where an ambiguity exists in a document upon which action is brought, trial judge should instruct as to specific point to be decided by jurors, the respect in which instrument was ambiguous, and exact question which they should determine.

24. Trial ⇨228(4)

In action for attorney's fees, defendant's requested instruction defining phrase "practice of law" was too general in its terms.

25. Attorney and Client ⇨167(3)

In action for attorney fees, wherein defendant pleaded an agreement which, if enforceable, was a novation of previous agreements between parties, trial court properly refused defendant's requested instruction that an attorney's contract for additional compensation cannot be upheld unless additional compensation is based upon services not contemplated in original contract.

26. Trial ⇨242, 250

Requested instruction which was inapplicable and in its terms calculated to be confusing to jury was properly refused.

27. Attorney and Client ⇨167(3)

In action for attorney's fees, wherein defendant pleaded an agreement whereunder attorney was to be paid only if defendant accepted a loan to be procured by attorney, and wherein it appeared that defendant had refused to accept loan, defendant's requested instruction that an attorney may not arbitrarily repudiate a contingency agreement and claim a reasonable fee instead was properly refused.

28. Trial ⇨237(3)

In action for attorney's fees, defendant's requested instruction which left to jurors question of whether proof was clearest and most satisfactory evidence was properly refused.

29. Attorney and Client ⇨167(3)

In action for attorney fees, wherein circumstances were such that plaintiff was entitled to recover irrespective of whether agreement between attorney and defendant had been breached by defendant or whether agreement was unenforceable, instruction relating to presumption against an attorney who makes a new contract with client during relationship of attorney and client was properly refused.

30. Trial ⇨191(3)

In action for attorney's fees, wherein defendant pleaded a contingency contract which superseded previous agreements between parties, and wherein it did not appear that there had been a dispute prior to execution of the later agreement, instruction presupposing a compromise of an existing controversy was properly refused.

31. Trial ⇨352(12)

In action for attorney fees, special interrogatory asking whether a certain document was sole instrument under which plaintiff would be entitled to recover propounded a question of law for jurors and was improper.

32. Trial ⇨349(2)

The giving of special interrogatories lies in discretion of trial court.

33. Trial ⇨260(1)

Where subject was adequately covered by instructions given, refusal of requested instruction was not error.

34. Attorney and Client ⇨133

In absence of a special agreement as to compensation, an attorney is entitled to recover reasonable value of his services rendered.

35. Appeal and Error ⇨1064(1)
Attorney and Client ⇨167(3)

In assignee's action for attorney's fees, instruction which left to jury question whether plaintiff could recover under certain written agreements between attorney and client was improper, but was not prejudicial where plaintiff was not required to stand upon the agreements and verdict could not be said to have been computed upon basis stated in the agreements.

36. Appeal and Error ⇨1062(4)

Trial ⇨352(12)

In action for attorney's fees, interrogatory asking whether attorney had rendered legal services to defendant was erroneous in that it left to jurors determination of question of what constituted legal services, but was not prejudicial where verdict showed that question was answered in affirmative and evidence warranted no other inference.

37. Appeal and Error ⇨1066

Trial ⇨250

In action for attorney's fees, instruction enumerating factors to be taken into consideration in determining what constitutes reasonable compensation was erroneous for inclusion of reference to nature of litigation, where no litigation was involved, but was not misleading or prejudicial under the circumstances.

38. Evidence ⇨208(1)

A defendant may rely upon inconsistent defenses, and they may not be used against him by way of admission.

39. Evidence ⇨155(1)

Where defendants did not object to plaintiff's introduction of allegedly inadmissible evidence, the way was not open for defendants to introduce additional incompetent matter on same line.

40. Witnesses ⇨270(1)

Failure to object to improper questions on direct may not be taken advantage of on cross-examination to elicit immaterial or irrelevant testimony.

Gene L. Rubin and Irwin Gostin, Los Angeles, for appellants.

Lawrence L. Light and Joseph Friedman, Los Angeles, for respondent.

ASHBURN, Justice pro tem.

Defendants appeal from a judgment in favor of plaintiff and an order denying their motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict. The appeals were initially separate but they have been consolidated and the transcripts, which supplement each other, are to be treated as one. Plaintiff C. Sloan, as assignee of attorney Lawrence L. Light, sued defendants Frederick W. Stearns and Fairway Construction Co., Inc., for recovery of attorney fees for services rendered them by Light. The complaint was in three counts but nonsuit was granted as to the first and third causes of action, and the judgment rests upon the second which is a common count for the reasonable value of legal services rendered. Mr. Light testified that the value of the same was $5,000 and the jury appraised them at $3,500.

[1] The appeals are presented upon settled statements which are so brief as to make it difficult to determine the theories upon which the respective parties tried the case. But we are bound to assume that enough appears to enable us to decide whether reversible error was committed and we must make our ruling upon the basis of what affirmatively appears in the record. Rule 52 of Rules on Appeal; In re Estate of Pierce, 32 Cal.2d 265, 274, 196 P.2d 1; Utz v. Aureguy, 109 Cal.App.2d 803, 806-807, 241 P.2d 639.

In response to plaintiff's claim for the reasonable value of legal services rendered, the defendants seem to have relied upon (1) a denial that plaintiff rendered any such services, (2) a claim that services of any nature rendered by him are governed by two written contracts providing for payment upon a contingent basis and that the event giving rise to the right to compensation never occurred, and (3) that, assuming that plaintiff was their attorney, he forfeited any right to compensation by acquiring a secret adverse interest in the subject matter of his employment and also secretly represented the other parties in negotiations conducted on behalf of defendants.

[2] Viewing the merits upon the basis of evidence favorable to plaintiff-respondent,¹ it appears that initially Mr. Light was employed to assist in raising finances for defendants to enable them to carry out a Federal Housing Administration building project in San Diego. The original employment is covered by agreement of April 8, 1952. It is signed by defendant Stearns, addressed to Mr. Light and reads as follows: "This will serve to confirm our oral understanding that you are to receive from me for services rendered the sum of $5,000.00, provided that you are successful in obtaining for me a sum of approximately $50,000.00 to be used in connection with a certain F.H.A. Building Project in San Diego, California.

1. In re Estate of Isenberg, 63 Cal.App.2d 214, 216, 146 P.2d 424.

"A contract for the aforesaid building project has been awarded to me and consists of approximately 300—1, 2 and 3 bedroom units to be built on a 25 acre site in San Diego.

"If you are successful in obtaining the aforesaid sum of money for me, and it is accepted by me, the sum of $5,000.00, which will be due and payable to you by me, shall be paid to you out of profits realized by me on this said building contract, and shall be paid at such time as the buildings are completed."

Later, defendants employed Light to represent them generally as their attorney, and it was then specifically agreed that this was to be a separate employment and the compensation not to be contingent or conditional in any respect. Considerable services were performed under this employment and, as above stated, were valued by Mr. Light as a witness in the sum of $5,000. The relationship of attorney and client was terminated on or about August 1, 1952, when defendant Stearns sought a modified agreement providing a new formula for computing Light's compensation for services in the matter of financing. At Stearns request Mr. Light, who was then attorney for both Stearns and his codefendant Fairway Construction Co., Inc.,² drew an agreement which bears date, August 8, 1952, and contains the following: "We Fairway Construction Company, Inc., a corporation, do hereby acknowledge that Lawrence L. Light, Attorney-at-Law, has heretofore rendered certain legal services for us, and has further devoted time and energy to obtain certain parties who have evidenced their interest in advancing certain monies by way of loan and/or joint venture to the extent of approximately Fifty Thousand ($50,000.00) Dollars. The said monies, it is contemplated, will be made available to us by way of loan as to part, and investment in a joint venture with us as to part. All of said monies to be used by us in connection with the performance of a contemplated contract with Ocean Heights Development Company, a corporation, (now in the process of being formed and organized) for the construction by us of a building project consisting of approximately Three Hundred (300) Units in the Linda Vista District, in San Diego, California.

"In the event that the aforesaid financing is made available to us, and accepted we shall pay the said Lawrence L. Light for services he has rendered as aforesaid, remuneration on the following basis." Here follows a formula for computation of compensation which concludes with this language: "It being the intention of the parties hereto that the said Lawrence L. Light is in no event to receive a sum in excess of the sum of Ten Thousand ($10,000.00) Dollars for his said services rendered." Next appears a formula for determining what shall be considered monies realized by defendants upon their construction contract, and "That it is contemplated that this construction contract will be entered into by Fairway Construction Company, Inc. with Ocean Heights Development Company, a corporation now being organized. However, in the event that said contract is entered into with Frederick W. Stearns as an individual, this agreement shall nevertheless be enforceable as applicable to the said Frederick W. Stearns, and is therefore to be executed by the said Frederick W. Stearns individually, as well as the said corporation.

"It is further specifically understood that our said attorney has no further obligation to represent us as a legal representative, or otherwise, other than to do whatever may be necessary to secure the availability of approximately Fifty Thousand ($50,000.00) Dollars as a joint venture and/or loan, and which said monies are accepted by us."

[3-6] There is no ambiguity about this document. It plainly covers compensation for Mr. Light's legal services as well as his financing efforts, and places all services

2. No differentiation is drawn by counsel for either side between defendant upon a contingent basis. To that extent it constituted a novation, Civ.Code, secs. 1530-1532. The event calling for payment never occurred, and that fact is the ultimate basis of defendants' insistence upon the two writings as the sole contracts of employment. But defendants' own conduct prevented the occurrence of the condition which would perfect the right to compensation under the terms of the agreement because they later refused to enter into the construction contract which was the source from which monies to pay Light were to be derived. Mr. Light so testified, and there is no denial of the fact. This refusal entitled him to treat his contract as repudiated and to proceed in quantum meruit, as he did. "A party to a contract cannot take advantage of his own act or omission to escape liability thereon. 17 C.J.S., Contracts, § 468, p. 966; 12 Am.Jur. sec. 381, p. 957. Where a party to a contract prevents the fulfillment of a condition precedent or its performance by the adverse party, he cannot rely on such condition to defeat his liability. [Citing cases.]" Overton v. Vita-Food Corp., 94 Cal.App.2d 367, 371, 210 P.2d 757, 759. See, also, 12 Cal.Jur. sec. 229, p. 452.

Stearns and his company. They are treated as one.

The foregoing discussion proceeds upon the assumption that the contracts of April 8th and August 8th are binding agreements. But there was in fact no mutuality in either of them. The phrase "and it is accepted by me" was inserted in the April 8th contract at the request of Stearns who was told by Light at the time that "the interlineation rendered Defendants' obligations under the instrument illusory and the instrument thus of no legal effect"; but Stearns insisted, Light yielded, and viewing the matter in retrospect testified that he "was a fool as a lawyer," he guessed, to allow such interlineation." The August 8th agreement has the words "and accepted" interlined in the second paragraph, making it read as follows: "In the event that the aforesaid financing is made available to us, and accepted we shall pay the said Lawrence L. Light for services he has rendered as aforesaid, remuneration on the following basis: * * *" In the last paragraph Light is relieved of obligation to render further legal or other services except "to do whatever may be necessary to secure the availability of approximately Fifty Thousand ($50,000.00) Dollars as a joint venture and/or loan, and which said monies are accepted by us." The latter phrase being interlined and initialed. The settled statement summarizes the Light testimony as follows: "That at the time this said instrument of August 8, 1952, was signed by the parties, the defendant, Stearns, insisted that the interlineation 'and the monies are accepted by us' be inserted therein. Mr. Light testified that at that time he pointed out to the defendant, Stearns, that this insertion was nullifying the entire effect of the instrument as constituting a binding agreement upon the defendant, Stearns, in that he could arbitrarily refuse to accept the monies which had been secured for him by Mr. Light."

[7, 8] It will be observed that in neither writing is the exact amount of the loan specified, and that no terms or conditions whatever are outlined; that the language inserted at Stearns insistence does not say in substance or effect that the amount or terms of the loan shall be satisfactory to him, that there is no basis for construing this as a "satisfaction" contract, and that it lacks mutuality because it leaves Stearns in position to determine at his own volition whether he will pay for services rendered by Light; it leaves him in position to do just what he did do, namely, refuse to proceed with the construction project and thus render it impossible for Light to perform his part of the contract. "Where the parties assume to make a contract in which one's promise is the consideration for the promise by the other, the promises must be mutual. To be obligatory on either party, the contract must be mutual and reciprocal in its obligations. One who promises to do a thing only if it pleases him, is not bound to perform. Central Oil Co. of Los Angeles v. Southern Refining Co., 154 Cal. 165, 97 P. 177; 12 Cal.Jur.2d 317, sec. 114. Where a contract imposes no definite obligation on one party to perform, it lacks mutuality of obligation. It is elementary that where performance is optional with one of the parties no enforceable obligation exists. [Citing cases.] This type of promise is illusory and does not result in a binding agreement even if unconditionally accepted." Lawrence Block Co. v. Palston, 123 Cal.App.2d 300, 308, 266 P.2d 856, 861. To the same effect see Shortell v. Evans-Ferguson Corp., 98 Cal.App. 650, 660, 277 P. 519; Charles Brown & Sons v. White Lunch Co., 92 Cal.App. 457, 461, 268 P. 490; 1 Williston on Contracts (rev. ed.) pp. 123-128, 349; 17 C.J.S., Contracts, § 100, p. 445. In 12 Am.Jur. sec. 66, p. 558, it is said: "A reservation to either party to a contract, of an unlimited right to determine the nature and extent of his performance, renders his obligation too indefinite for legal enforcement." Authorities cited by appellant³ are not to the contrary. In the main they are instances in which the contract was construed to require performance to the satisfaction of one of the parties.

[9, 10] In signing these agreements Light elected to rely upon defendants' good faith, knowing and stating that he had no legally enforceable agreement, and when defendants refused to make the basic contract there was no estoppel of Light to rely upon such want of mutuality and fall back on a claim for the reasonable value of his services, for he had explained to Stearns that his own insistence upon the interlineations in the contracts rendered the same legally unenforceable.

[11-13] It thus appears that the evidence warranted a verdict in plaintiff's favor upon either one of two theories. Appellants do not claim insufficiency of the evidence except indirectly. Relying upon their view that Light was entitled to no compensation because the condition of the written instruments had not been fulfilled, they made a motion for judgment non obstante veredicto, which was denied, and they now assert error in that ruling. That motion will not lie where, as here, there was no previous motion for a directed verdict. In re Estate of Caldwell, 216 Cal. 694, 695, 16 P.2d 139; Fortier Trans. Co.

v. Union Packing Co., 96 Cal.App.2d 748, 751, 216 P.2d 470; 7 Cal.Jur. 10-Yr.Supp. (1945 Rev.) sec. 30.7, p. 282. The case of Bolar v. Maxwell Hardware Co., 205 Cal. 396, 271 P. 97, 60 A.L.R. 429, cited by appellant is not to the contrary. Moreover, appellants' reliance upon respondent's failure to deny, pursuant to section 448, Code of Civil Procedure, the agreements, both of which were attached to their answer, avails them nothing because the absence of such an affidavit admits nothing except genuineness and due execution. All matters in confession and avoidance are available to the plaintiff under the implied replication to new matter in the answer. Sunset Milling & Grain Co. v. Anderson, 39 Cal.2d 773, 777, 249 P.2d 24; Baird v. Pacific Electric Ry. Co., 39 Cal.App. 512, 179 P. 449; 21 Cal.Jur. sec. 114, p. 168. Specifically, plaintiff's failure to file such an affidavit does not preclude him from relying upon defendants' refusal to enter into the construction contract.

The major contentions advanced by appellants herein concern the giving and refusal of certain specific instructions.

[14] There was no error in refusal to give defendants' Request No. 54, which reads as follows: "You are instructed that a contract whereby one person employs another to obtain a loan of moneys for the first person, is not rendered invalid by a provision that no fee is to be paid unless the first person accepts the loan." This instruction assumes the existence of mutuality which, as above shown, did not exist in the written contracts.

In response to plaintiff's claim that Light's legal services were not controlled by the written contracts, defendants undertook to defeat recovery upon the ground of dual relationship which the attorney was claimed to have occupied and which was not disclosed to, consented to, or known by the defendants. There is evidence in the record to the effect that although Light's employment originally was not that of an attorney, it soon became such; that Light procured and produced Sam Mitchell and Victor Brooks as prospective lenders; that he, himself, was to participate in the making of the loan and that fact was not disclosed to defendants; that his activities as attorney included many conferences with Mitchell; that he was then attorney for Mitchell and Brooks, as well as defendants, and did not disclose the fact to defendants; that he became interested with Mitchell and Brooks in purchasing the land upon which the project was to be built, and this fact was not disclosed to defendants until August 1st; that he was to receive a fee of $5,000 from Mitchell and Brooks and never disclosed that fact until August 2nd or 3rd.

3. 9 Cal.Jur.2d 256, 268, 269, 272; Smith v. Schiele, 93 Cal. 144, 28 P. 857; Ball v. California Conserving Co., 189 Cal. 326, 207 P. 1011; Lindley v. Fay, 119 Cal.

239, 51 P. 333; Bruner v. Hegyi, 42 Cal. App. 97, 183 P. 369; Middleton v. Findla, 25 Cal. 76; Leventritt v. Cowell, 21 Cal.App. 597, 132 P. 627.

The only pertinent instruction given was No. 23: "An attorney at law is not prohibited from entering into any business transaction with a client, touching or not touching the subject matter professionally entrusted to him by his client. Such transactions are, however, subject to close scrutiny, and they must be shown to be fair in all respects."

[15] If proper requests had been made defendants would have been entitled to further instructions upon the subject. Appellant's counsel specifies proposed instructions Nos. 43, 45, 47 and 55 as requests which were improperly refused. Of course, any error in rejecting other proffered instructions which are not discussed in appellant's brief is waived. Kritzer v. Citron, 101 Cal.App.2d 33, 39, 224 P.2d 808. Those discussed by counsel, bearing the above numbers, were all faulty for one reason or another and hence were properly denied.

[16-18] No. 43 reads as follows: "It is an attorney's duty to protect his client in every possible way, and it is a violation of that duty for him to assume a position adverse or antagonistic to his client without the latter's free and intelligent consent given after full knowledge of all the facts and circumstances. By virtue of this rule, an attorney is precluded from assuming any relation which would prevent him from devoting his entire energies to his client's interests. Nor does it matter that the intention and motive of the attorney are honest." (Emphasis added.) This instruction would require an attorney to devote his entire energies to the particular client's interests to the exclusion of all others. He owes no such obligation under a general employment which does not specifically call for his entire time. And the attorney had no such exclusive employment here. True, the proffered instruction was copied from Anderson v. Eaton, 211 Cal. 113, at page 116, 293 P. 788. But that fact does not qualify it as a proper instruction to a jury. The court was not considering a jury instruction in that case. "In concluding this subject we call attention again that it is a dangerous practice, and one not to be followed, to take excerpts from opinions of the courts of last resort and indiscriminately change them into instructions to juries. The reasons are too obvious to require further comment." Rosander v. Market Street Ry. Co., 89 Cal.App. 710, 718, 265 P. 536, 540. "It has often been decided by the supreme court that the language used by the court in writing an opinion should not be used as an instruction. Assuming, without deciding, that the proposed instruction was a correct statement of the law, it is patent that it was but a mere abstract principle of law which is embodied in and forms a part of the basis for the broader instructions which were given by the court." People v. Russell, 80 Cal.App. 243, 245, 251 P. 699, 700. Accord: Jones v. Bayley, 49 Cal.App. 2d 647, 654, 122 P.2d 293; Reagh v. San Francisco Unified School District, 119 Cal. App.2d 65, 73, 259 P.2d 43; McGeorge v. Charles Nelson Co., 107 Cal.App. 148, 152, 290 P. 75.

One of the reasons for care in adopting a court opinion verbatim as a jury instruction is that its abstract or argumentative nature may have a confusing effect upon the jury. In the Anderson case, and in Hammett v. McIntyre, 114 Cal.App.2d 148, 155, 249 P.2d 885 (which uses substantially the same language), the court was speaking of the attorney's obligation with respect to the conduct of a single piece of litigation. The attorney's services in the case at bar did not involve litigation and the statement that "an attorney is precluded from assuming any relation which would prevent him from devoting his entire energies to his client's interests" would be accepted by the jurors as applicable to the facts at bar and would thereby direct their attention to a non-existent issue, for there was no controversy over the amount of time or energy which Mr. Light had devoted to his client's affairs—it was a question of whether he had breached his obligation of loyalty by assuming inconsistent duties. There was no duty resting upon the judge to modify the defendant's request and then give it as modified. If requested instructions are objectionable in any respect a judge in a civil case has performed his full duty in denying them. Tossman v. Newman, 37 Cal. 2d 522, 525, 233 P.2d 1; Bertolozzi v. Progressive Concrete Co., 95 Cal.App.2d 332, 337, 212 P.2d 910.

[19] Request No. 47⁴ states that an attorney must not buy an interest in the thing in controversy adverse to his client, but it omits the important qualification that this is true only if the client does not have full knowledge and give free consent.

[20] Request No. 44⁵ consists of a series of generalities which unexplained are inappropriate to a jury instruction.

[21] Request No. 55 quotes one of the rules of professional conduct prescribed by the State Bar. Sound though it be, it is a generality which is not appropriate to a jury instruction.

[22, 23] Requests Nos. 32, 38 and 39, constitute a series of proposed instructions concerning Light's duty as an attorney to state the August 8th agreement in unambiguous terms. As heretofore indicated, the contract is not ambiguous and hence these instructions are inappropriate. Moreover, if there were any ambiguity in the instrument the judge should not have left it to the jury to determine at large what the ambiguity was and then to place upon it the proper construction. If such ambiguity existed, the trial judge should instruct as to the specific point to be decided by the jurors, the respect in which the instrument was ambiguous, and the exact question which they should determine. See O'Connor v. West Sacramento Co., 189 Cal. 7, 18, 207 P. 527.

[24] Refusal of instruction No. 56, which undertakes to define the phrase "practice of law" was not improper. The instruction is too general in its terms to serve as a guide to jurors. Moreover, the request was directed at the April 8th agreement, according to appellants' opening brief, but that instrument is not ambiguous, it did not call for any legal services and its construction did not present a jury question. Appellants cite Brydonjack v. Rieck, 5 Cal.App.2d 219, 223, 42 P.2d 336, and Carlson v. Lantz, 208 Cal. 134, 137, 280 P. 531, but they do not sustain their position.

[25] Refusal of Request No. 37 was not error. It says in substance that an attorney's contract for additional compensation cannot be upheld unless the additional compensation is based upon services not contemplated in the original contract. The instruction was not appropriate. The new agreement (August 8) was a novation, covering both legal and financing services, and was made at the specific request of defendant Stearns.

[26] Request No. 35 was inapplicable and its terms calculated to be confusing to the jury.

[27] Request No. 33 says that an attorney may not arbitrarily repudiate a contingency agreement and claim a reasonable fee instead. This could apply only to the agreement of August 8th, because that of April 8th did not call for legal services. Nor do appellants raise any question of the repudiation of the August 8th agreement except in the sense that plaintiff is bound by it regardless of other considerations, a position already shown to be erroneous. Defendant Stearns did not deny the Light testimony that he, Stearns, in

4. It would add nothing to the body of the law or the clarity of the decision to set forth the text of each of the instructions with which we are required to deal in this case, and we therefore content ourselves with observations which will be understandable to counsel.

5. Counsel specified No. 45 as one of those improperly refused, but discuss No. 44.

late August refused to make the construction agreement upon which the August 8th contract rested.

[28, 29] Requests Nos. 48, 49, 50, 51, 52 and 53 relate to the presumption against an attorney who makes a new contract with his client during the relationship of attorney and client. No. 53 is not good law, for it leaves to the jurors the question of whether the proof is "the clearest and most satisfactory evidence." See Edmonds v. Wilcox, 178 Cal. 222, 224, 172 P. 1101. The other instructions above mentioned seem to be abstractly correct, but they are directed toward striking down the contract of August 8th upon the ground of want of consideration, fraud or its equivalent. Such instructions are pertinent only upon the assumption that the relationship of attorney and client actually existed; if that be so, then the destruction of the agreement of August 8th leaves plaintiff in position to claim the reasonable value of his services (subject to defenses of fraud and the like), and so the refusal of these instructions could not be prejudicial.

[30-32] Requested instructions 40, 41, and special interrogatory 42. No. 40 presupposes a compromise of an existing controversy. It is inapplicable. No. 41 is but a continuation of 40 and also assumes a nonexistent dispute and compromise thereof. The giving of the proposed special interrogatory as to whether the agreement of August 8th became the sole instrument under which Mr. Light would be entitled to recover any fee from defendants improperly propounds a question of law for the jurors. The giving of special interrogatories lies in the discretion of the trial court. 24 Cal.Jur. sec. 155, p. 904; House Grain Co. v. Finerman & Sons, 116 Cal.App.2d 485, 253 P.2d 1034. It does not appear that there was error in rejecting the proposed interrogatory.

[33] The complaint of refusal to give proposed instruction 34 can avail appellants nothing. That instruction is BAJI 31-A, concerning the effect of testimony given upon deposition. The opening brief argues that it should have been given because of conflicts between evidence given by Mr. Light upon deposition and at the trial. The subject was adequately covered by instructions actually given, namely, Nos. 15, 16, 17, 19 and 20.

[34, 35] Appellants next complain of the giving of instructions 28, 29 and 31, which in substance state that in the absence of a special agreement as to compensation an attorney is entitled to recover the reasonable value of his services rendered. There was no error in 28 or 29. No. 31 should not have been given because it left it to the jury to say whether or not plaintiff could recover under the writings of April 8th and August 8th, but as we have shown he was not required to stand upon those writings, indeed could not recover thereon, and the verdict for the sum of $3,500 cannot, upon the record before us, be said to have been computed upon the contingent basis stated in either of the written instruments. The instruction was not prejudicial.

[36] Interrogatory No. 30 was as follows: "Did plaintiff's assignor render legal services to defendants? If your answer is yes, what is their reasonable value?" This left to the jurors the determination of the question of what constitutes legal services, and should not have been given, but their verdict shows that they undoubtedly answered it in the affirmative. The evidence warrants no other inference, and it cannot be said that any prejudice ensued from the propounding of this interrogatory.

[37] The next complaint is made of the giving of instruction No. 27, which enumerates factors to be taken into consideration in determining what constitutes reasonable compensation for an attorney's services. It contains an inappropriate reference to "the nature of the litigation" but it was not misleading or under all the circumstances prejudicial.

[38-40] Appellants complain because plaintiff was permitted to have defendant Stearns read to the jury paragraph IV of the Fourth Affirmative Defense, upon the theory that it constituted an admission that Mr. Light did represent defendants as their attorney until about August 8, 1952, and the court refused to permit defendants' counsel to have the witness read that portion of the Second Affirmative Defense alleging that the writings of April 8th and August 8th constituted the only agreements under which Mr. Light was retained or rendered legal services for defendants. There was no objection to the reading of said paragraph IV in evidence. If there had been the court presumably would have excluded same because the law which permits a defendant to rely upon inconsistent defenses precludes their being used against him by way of admission. Oppenheimer v. Deutchman, 119 Cal.App.2d 450, 453, 259 P.2d 457; Jones v. Tierney-Sinclair, 71 Cal. App.2d 366, 373, 162 P.2d 669. Counsel's silence and implied assent to the introduction of this improper evidence did not open the way for additional incompetent matter, for, as said in Laursen v. Tidewater Associated Oil Co., 123 Cal.App.2d 813, 816, 268 P.2d 104, 105: "Failure to object to improper questions on direct may not be taken advantage of on cross-examination to elicit immaterial or irrelevant testimony. The so-called 'open the gates' argument is a popular fallacy." Of course, the same considerations apply to improper questions on cross-examination followed by attempted eliciting of like improper matter on redirect.

Appellant also advances claims of error in rulings upon evidence. We have examined each of them and find no prejudicial error in any of the instances to which counsel refer. Likewise, there was no error in denying the motion for new trial or in denying a motion for judgment on the pleadings, or in denying the motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict.

The judgment and the order denying motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict are affirmed.

McCOMB, Acting P. J., concurs.

FOX, Justice.

I dissent.

The gravamen of plaintiff's case was the performance of legal services by his assignor for which recovery of a reasonable attorney's fee was sought. Defendants contested the right to any fees, asserting in their affirmative defense that the claimed services were performed at a time when plaintiff's assignor had an interest in the transaction for which he was employed adverse to their own and also secretly represented the other parties thereto. If this was so, the right to recover attorney's fees would be forfeited. Anderson v. Eaton, 211 Cal. 113, 116, 293 P. 788.

The majority opinion concedes there was evidence to support defendants' theory of the case. Defendants proffered some ten instructions relating to the duty of an attorney to refrain from assuming a position in any transaction in which he is employed which places him either in conflict with his clients or divides his loyalties. The single instruction given is No. 23, which reads:

"An attorney at law is not prohibited from entering into any business transaction with a client, touching or not touching the subject matter professionally entrusted to him by his client. Such transactions are, however, subject to close scrutiny, and they must be shown to be fair in all respects." This does not touch the essence of the case, which was embodied in defendants' instruction No. 43, which the judge declined to give. The majority opinion concedes that defendants were "entitled to further instructions upon the subject" but maintains that the tendered requests "were all faulty for one reason or another and hence were properly denied." I cannot agree.

Instruction No. 43 reads: "43. It is an attorney's duty to protect his client in every possible way, and it is a violation of that duty for him to assume a position adverse or antagonistic to his client without the latter's free and intelligent consent given after full knowledge of all the facts and circumstances. By virtue of this rule, an attorney is precluded from assuming any relation which would prevent him from devoting his entire energies to his client's interests. No[r] does it matter that the intention and motive of the attorney are honest." The majority opinion states, in justifying the refusal, that "this instruction would require an attorney to devote his entire energies to the particular client's interests to the exclusion of all others. He owes no such obligation under a general employment which does not specifically call for his entire time." But this criticism of No. 43 is completely at variance with any proper construction or interpretation of the instruction. The majority opinion makes the mistake of interpreting the second sentence of the proposed instruction out of context and without regard to its plain meaning, thus distorting its import into a requirement that an attorney must devote all his energies "to the particular client's interests to the exclusion of all others." But that is clearly not the sense of the instruction. It does not purport to limit an attorney's activities to one particular client's affairs. The instruction unequivocally asserts (1) that it is a violation of an attorney's duty for him to place himself in a relationship antagonistic to his client's interests without the latter's assent based upon full knowledge of the facts; (2) that this is so regardless of the honesty of the attorney's motives; and (3) by virtue of this rule, an attorney is precluded from assuming a position which would interfere with his duty to devote his entire energies to his client's interests. It defines the duty of an attorney to his client, and the circumstances and conditions under which he may represent interests that are antagonistic to or in conflict with those of his client. Anderson v. Eaton, 211 Cal. 113, 116, 293 P. 788; Hammett v. McIntyre, 114 Cal.App.2d 148, 155, 249 P.2d 885.

It is thus patent that not only is instruction No. 43 an accurate and impeccable statement of the law but an examination of Anderson v. Eaton, supra, discloses that the instruction is taken virtually verbatim from the language of the opinion. The Anderson case affirms the basic principle that it is an attorney's duty to protect his client's interest in every possible way and that he violates that duty if he assumes a position adverse to his client without the latter's free and intelligent consent given after full knowledge of the circumstances. While it is true that language from judicial opinions divorced from their context may not always be safely given as an instruction to the jury, and as an indiscriminate practice is not countenanced, see Duff v. Schaefer Ambulance Service, Inc., 132 Cal.App.2d 655, 679, 283 P.2d 91, nevertheless its use in an instruction is unobjectionable when it is lucidly formulated in a simple proposition of law which fully covers the issues and is applicable to the evidence. Such was the nature of instruction No. 43. It would be unfortunate to hold that a clearly worded special instruction could not be given simply because it derives from the language used by a reviewing court although it is otherwise unobjectionable and no other instruction on the subject is given.

The majority purports to distinguish the Anderson case by suggesting that there "the court was speaking of the attorney's obligation with respect to the conduct of a single piece of litigation." It continues: "The attorney's services in the case at bar did not involve litigation * * *." This is a distinction without a difference. The language of the Anderson case cannot be reduced to such narrow compass. The plaintiff is here suing for legal services, and during the entire period in which such services were rendered the attorney owed the obligations of a fiduciary committed to the exacting standards of utmost good faith toward his clients. Kornbau v. Evans, 66 Cal.App.2d 677, 685, 152 P.2d 651; Sanguinetti v. Rossen, 12 Cal.App. 623, 630, 107 P. 560. The fiduciary concept applies regardless of whether litigation is the object or in contemplation when the attorney is engaged and suffuses all his professional relations with his clients. In view of the broad scope of the activities encompassed in the term "practice of law," to attenuate the attorney's fiduciary duty or ethical standards and relax their application in a situation where litigation is not involved would be promotive of mischief in the attorney-client relationship. As pointed out in People v. Merchants' Protective Corp., 189 Cal. 531, 535, 209 P.

363, 365: "But in a larger sense it [the practice of law] includes legal advice and counsel, and the preparation of legal instruments and contracts by which legal rights are secured although such matter may or may not be depending in a court. * * * It is common knowledge * * * that a large, if not the greater, part of the work of the bar today is out of court or office work. Counsel and advice, the drawing of agreements, the organization of corporations and preparing papers connected therewith, the drafting of legal documents of all kinds * * * are activities which have been long classed as law practice. * * * " In all of these professional activities, no less than in his advocacy in court, unalloyed loyalty of counsel to his client must be ever present and prevail against the beckoning of personal advantage.

Defendants were clearly "entitled to have this instruction, embodying their theory of the case with substantial support, in the evidence, presented to the jury."

Stout v. Southern P. R. Co., 127 Cal.App. 2d 491, 503, 274 P.2d 194, 201; Bickford v. Pacific Electric R. Co., 120 Cal.App. 542, 548, 8 P.2d 186. Not a single instruction was given to enlighten the jury on the subject of an attorney's obligation to abstain from compromising his duty to his client by the avoidance of a situation which would bring his interests into conflict with theirs. Left without guidance or a criterion on this vital point, the jury might find the attorney had or represented interests that were adverse to his client and yet not perceive that his right to be paid for services rendered in the transaction could thereby be foreclosed. For these reasons, I am of the opinion that the effect of the erroneous refusal of this instruction was so prejudicial as to remove the case from the purview of section 4½ of Article VI of the California Constitution and compels a reversal of the judgment.

Hearing denied; McCOMB, J., not participating.

45 Cal.2d 634

MEMORIAL HOSPITAL ASSOCIATION OF STANISLAUS COUNTY, a nonprofit corporation, Plaintiff and Respondent,
v.

PACIFIC GRAPE PRODUCTS COMPANY, a corporation and S. F. Triplett,
Defendants,

Pacific Grape Products Company,
Appellant.
Sac. 6538.

Supreme Court of California.
In Bank.

Nov. 29, 1955.

Action by hospital association against corporation and its president to recover on written subscription price allegedly executed by president on behalf of corporation. The Superior Court, Stanislaus County, Gregory P. Maushart, J., rendered judgment against corporation but in favor of president individually, and corporation appealed. The Supreme Court, Spence, J., held that evidence sustained finding that at time president signed pledge agreement, he had full power and authority to bind corporation, and that subscription agreement was valid obligation of corporation.

Judgment affirmed.

Opinion, 277 P.2d 878, vacated.

1. Appeal and Error ⇨931(1), 989

In passing on sufficiency of evidence to sustain judgment, power of appellate court is limited to determination of whether there is any evidence, contradicted or uncontradicted, which will support judgment rendered, and all reasonable inferences must be indulged to uphold it, if possible.

2. Corporations ⇨406(1), 425(5)

To properly prove contract claimed to be binding on corporation, it should be shown that it was made on its behalf by some one who had authority to act for it, and in case of contract executed by officer, it must be shown that officer was expressly authorized, or that act was fairly within implied powers incidental to his office, or that corporation is estopped to deny his authority by reason of having accepted benefit of contract or otherwise.

3. Corporations ⇨406(2)

Where president of corporation is also its general manager, having power to superintend and conduct its business, he has implied authority to make any contract or do any other act appropriate to ordinary course of business, and in such case, his powers are greater than he would have as president alone.

4. Evidence ⇨22(2)

It is matter of common knowledge that trend on part of prosperous business concerns is steadily in direction of making substantial charitable contributions in community in which it is located and does business.

5. Corporations ⇨404(2)

As with execution of any act purportedly within implied power of corporation's president and general manager, there is reasonable limit to his authority to make presents to charitable enterprises, and whether or not he has exceeded such limit will depend upon particular facts and circumstances in each case.

6. Corporations ⇨432(12)

In action by hospital association against corporation and its president to recover upon written subscription pledge allegedly executed by president on behalf of corporation, evidence sustained finding that at time president signed pledge agreement, he had full power and authority to bind corporation, and that subscription agreement was valid obligation of corporation.

Nathan B. McVay and C. O. Thrasher, Jr., Modesto, for appellant.

Vernon F. Gant and Leo J. Biegenzahn, Modesto, for respondent.

SPENCE, Justice.

[1] Defendant company appeals from a judgment holding it liable on a subscription pledge for the building of a hospital. As ground for reversal, it contends that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the judgment. In deciding this question, the power of the appellate court is limited to the determination of whether there is any evidence, contradicted or uncontradicted, which will support the judgment rendered, and all reasonable inferences must be indulged to uphold it, if possible. 4 Cal.Jur.2d § 606, p. 485; In re Estate of Bristol, 23 Cal.2d 221, 223, 143 P.2d 689; Holmberg v. Marsden, 39 Cal.2d 592, 596, 248 P.2d 417. In the light of this time-honored rule, we have concluded that appellant's contention cannot be sustained.

Respondent, a non-profit hospital association, was engaged for some time prior to November 12, 1947, in the solicitation of pledges of funds for the construction of a general hospital near Modesto, California. Considerable publicity was given to the campaign. Solicitors on respondent's behalf called three times upon appellant, an industrial corporation located in that area. On the first visit, respondent's solicitors were informed by S. F. Triplett, appellant's president and general manager, that he would have to take up the matter with the board of directors. On the second visit, Triplett told them that he had not had an opportunity to discuss it with the board and they would have to return. Their third and final visit was made on November 12, 1947, when they received a written pledge for $5,000, bearing the name of Pacific Grape Products Company as donor and signed by Triplett. At the trial one of respondent's solicitors related the circumstances of the third visit. He stated that they did not see Triplett at that time but that one of appellant's employees simply delivered the pledge card to them signed as above indicated.

Appellant is a canning company which buys, processes and sells canned goods. Triplett was its president and general manager since its inception in 1926; he owned 73 per cent of its outstanding shares of stock; and the general conduct of the business, including "general supervision of the departments, the operation of the factory, in the field and in the sales," was placed in his hands. The board of directors met at infrequent intervals, and ordinarily only at his call. For many years Triplett, without specific authorization from the board, had made contributions on behalf of appellant to the Red Cross and Community Chest. Triplett testified that the donations were made on a "history basis," each year being "about the same amount," and that probably when the practice of making the donations first started, he approved and authorized such procedure.

While it appears that appellant's assistant secretary and one or two others of the directors had some knowledge of the solicited pledge, it is not clear that the matter was ever discussed at a board meeting. It is argued that such discussion might be inferred, with resulting approval, in view of the testimony by respondent's solicitors that Triplett on their first two visits had stated that he would have to take up the matter with the board and then on the third visit, the pledge card was delivered to them without further comment. Wigmore on Evidence, Third Ed. 1940, Vol. VI, § 1725, p. 79; 19 Cal.L.Rev. 231, 367; see also Jeppi v. Brockman Holding Co., 34 Cal.2d 11, 15, 206 P.2d 847, 9 A.L.R.2d 1297. It is conceded, however, that Triplett had no specific authority, by virtue of any formal board resolution, to enter into this particular subscription agreement.

The trial court found that Triplett signed the subscription agreement as appellant's "president and general manager and not in his individual capacity"; that at that time he "owned approximately 73%" of the stock and "had and exercised almost complete control" over appellant's affairs; that as "president and general manager," he had "full power and authority to bind" the corporation and the "subscription agreement was and is a valid, binding and sustaining obligation" upon it. Accordingly, respondent recovered judgment on the pledge against appellant corporation, but Triplett was exonerated from liability. The reasonableness of the pledge is not questioned, but only Triplett's authority to bind appellant.

[2] The general rule is well stated in Magnavox Co. v. Jones, 105 Cal.App. 98, at page 103, 286 P. 1084, at page 1086, as follows: "To properly prove a contract claimed to be binding on a corporation, it should be shown that it was made on its behalf by someone who had authority to act for it. It must be shown that the officer was expressly authorized, or that the act was fairly within the implied powers incidental to his office, or that the corporation is estopped to deny his authority by reason of having accepted the benefit of the contract or otherwise.”

[3] While, as above-indicated, there was no showing that Triplett was specifically authorized to bind appellant on this particular pledge agreement, respondent properly contends that the evidence was sufficient to show that the agreement was executed by Triplett pursuant to his implied authority. Where the president of a corporation is also its general manager, having the power to superintend and conduct its business, he has implied authority to make any contract or do any other act appropriate in the ordinary course of its business. In such case his powers are greater than he would have as president alone. 19 C.J.S. Corporations, § 1001, p. 466; Fletcher Cyc. Corps. [Perm.Ed. 1931], vol. 2, §§ 553, 594.

The case of Freeman v. River Farms Co., 5 Cal.2d 431, 55 P.2d 199, is closely in point. There the defendant corporation was held liable on an agreement, made by its president on its behalf, to cash certain warrants issued by a levee district. Contractors had relied upon this method of financing when doing repair work on land adjoining defendant corporation's property. The end sought to be accomplished by the president was the protection of the corporation's farming property from damage by flood waters. His act in agreeing that the corporation would cash the warrants issued by the levee district was unquestionably beneficial to the corporation. It was an undertaking coming within reasonable limits of his general authority in the active management of the corporation's business, and it was therefore held to be an act binding on the corporation though it was not “absolutely necessary” nor the “usual” type of procedure followed by the corporation. Freeman v. River Farms Co., supra, 5 Cal.2d 431, 435-436, 55 P.2d 199.

[4] Stronger reasons appear here for holding appellant liable on the subscription pledge signed by Triplett, who was not only appellant's president and general manager, but also the owner of 73 per cent of its stock and the person exercising complete control in the conduct of its business. It is a matter of common knowledge that the trend on the part of the prosperous business concern is steadily in the direction of making substantial charitable contributions in the community in which it is located and does business. Such donations are generally considered for its benefit as a means of increasing good will and promoting patronage. Accordingly, appellant's president on its behalf had for many years, without specific authority, contributed to Red Cross and Community Chest campaigns, consistent with the purpose of demonstrating the corporation's interest in helping worthy community endeavors. The same basic consideration operates in the present case, where respondent, a non-profit hospital association, was seeking funds to construct a large general hospital in the community and was relying on the combined assistance of the residents and business concerns in that area to finance the project. Furthermore, appellant, operating its industrial plant in the community, would be directly benefited by having such a hospital capable of furnishing needed hospital services to its employees, and it was to its advantage to promote such project. This added factor has a bearing on the determination of the reasonableness of the particular subscription pledge and, therefore, of Triplett's implied authority to make it. While the pledge was considerably more than perhaps the few hundred dollars which Triplett had ordinarily subscribed each year in appellant's behalf to the Red Cross and Community Chest campaigns, such campaigns were annual and regular events. On the other hand, respondent's solicitation was for one large building project, a non-profit general hospital; and a $5,000 pledge in aid of such an undertaking does not appear unreasonable in view of the benefits, direct and indirect, to appellant.

Appellant analogizes this pledge agreement to a contract for life employment made by the president and superintendent of a corporation. Such an "unusual and uncommon" transaction was condemned in Bene v. La Grande Laundry Co., 22 Cal. App.2d 512, at page 515, 71 P.2d 351, at page 353, as being "unreasonable and unauthorized." But the present situation appears more closely akin to that of an ordinary contract of employment made by a corporation's president and manager, as the recognized business head of the corporation, entrusted with power to execute contracts and to bind the corporation in furtherance of the corporate interests. Grummet v. Fresno Glazed Cement Pipe Co., 181 Cal. 509, 513, 185 P. 388; see also Fletcher Cyc. Corps. [Perm.Ed. 1931], vol. 2, § 597.

[5,6] Contrary to appellant's suggestion, the conclusion that the pledge agreement is binding on appellant does not undermine the principle of protection afforded to stockholders by the corporate structure, in that a philanthropically inclined president and general manager, without specific authority of the directors, might thereby bankrupt the corporation by making large pledges to worthy charitable enterprises. As with the execution of any act purportedly within the implied power of a corporation's president and general manager, there is a reasonable limit to his authority, and whether or not he has exceeded such limit will depend on the particular facts and circumstances in each case. Triplett, as president and general manager of appellant corporation and holder of almost three-fourths of its stock, was admittedly exercising practically complete control over appellant's corporate affairs. His execution of the pledge agreement to respondent would seem to come within his implied power as the business head of appellant in the conduct of its affairs; and while it may not have been a "usual" or "absolutely necessary" act, it appears to have been executed by Triplett as a reasonable means of benefiting the corporation and promoting its business interests. Under the circumstances, we conclude that there is ample evidence in the record to sustain the trial court's finding that at the time Triplett signed the pledge agreement, he had "full power and authority to bind" appellant, and that the subscription agreement was a valid obligation of appellant.

The judgment is affirmed.

GIBSON, C. J., SHENK, CARTER, TRAYNOR and SCHAUER, JJ., and McCOMB, Justice pro tem., concur.

45 Cal.2d 697

The PEOPLE of the State of California,
Plaintiff and Respondent,
v.

Smith Edward JORDAN and Robert Otis
Pierce, Defendants and Appellants.

Cr. 5698.

Supreme Court of California.
In Bank.
Dec. 2, 1955.

Hearing Denied Dec. 28, 1955.

Defendants were convicted of first degree murder. The Superior Court, Alameda County, Charles Wade Snook, J., entered judgments of conviction and orders denying defendants' motions for new trial, and defendants appealed. The Supreme Court, Shenk, J., held that evidence was sufficient to sustain jury's implied finding that defendants' statements to public officials prior to trial had been freely and voluntarily made.

Judgments and orders affirmed.

1. Criminal Law ⇨414

In murder prosecution, evidence was sufficient to sustain jury's implied finding that defendants' statements to public officials prior to trial had been freely and voluntarily made.

2. Criminal Law ⇨736(2)

In murder prosecution, question whether one defendant was severely beaten by police officials while being interviewed by them was for jury.

3. Criminal Law $\S$ 1169(12)

Where jury, in murder prosecution, had been adequately instructed on the subject of confessions and admissions, and admonished that statements of each defendant were admissible only as against the defendant making them, and there was sufficient substantial evidence to otherwise sustain verdict against one defendant, admission in evidence of such statements did substantially prejudice defense of such defendant.

4. Criminal Law $\S$ 778(11)

In murder prosecution, evidence, which pertained to flight from scene of crime and from city in which crime had been committed, warranted giving of instruction on flight. Pen.Code, $\S$ 1127c.

5. Criminal Law $\S$ 775(3)

In murder prosecution, giving of instruction that defendants introduced evidence tending to prove that they were not present at time and place of commission of the alleged offense, for which they were on trial, and that, if, after consideration of all evidence, jury had reasonable doubt whether either defendant was present at time crime was committed, such defendant would be entitled to an acquittal was proper.

6. Constitutional Law $\S$ 266

Criminal Law $\S$ 393(1)

Where, while defendants were in custody, samples of their blood were taken in a medically approved fashion, without objection from defendants, and defendants' attorneys stated "no objection" upon introduction of such samples into evidence in murder prosecution, such introduction did not violate due process or right against self incrimination.

7. Criminal Law $\S$ 706, 1170½(2)

Where, in prosecution for murder of taxicab driver, one defendant was asked, on cross-examination with regard to his testimony that defendants had robbed a market in another place, whether he had grabbed one person and held knife against his neck while other defendant robbed the store, asking of such question, which was improper, and which was answered by denial, but which was not objected to, did not require a reversal.

8. Homicide $\S$ 170

In murder prosecution, evidence of women who allegedly observed crime through a living room window and of driver of bus which defendants allegedly thereafter boarded concerning identity of defendant was not objectionable on ground that it was impossible, vague, and incredible.

9. Criminal Law $\S$ 627½

Where, in murder prosecution, professor in Criminalistics and Biochemistry testified that, on basis of certain physical evidence, there had been prior contact between clothing of defendants and that of deceased and of interior of cab in which deceased was attacked, request for production of professor's notes was properly denied, in absence of laying of proper foundation therefor.

10. Criminal Law $\S$ 1128(4)

Upon appeal from conviction for homicide, allegations that defendants did not have opportunity to anticipate or prepare to meet testimony of expert witness and that lack of funds was part of such lack of opportunity, would not be allowed to augment record to present "newly-discovered evidence", in view of fact that neither defendant waived jury trial nor requested continuance for court-appointed expert to assist them, and that nature of newly-discovered evidence was not stated.

11. Criminal Law $\S$ 573

Defendants, who, on June 3, 1954, were indicted on charge of murder which had occurred over a year before, and who had been brought to trial on July 28, were not denied a speedy trial. U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 6; West's Ann.Const. art. 1, $\S$ 13; Pen.Code, $\S\S$ 799, 1382.

12. Criminal Law $\S$ 573

Under state and federal constitutional provisions granting an "accused" right to a speedy trial, one does not become an "accused" until filing of a complaint or other charge. West's Ann.Const. art. 1, $\S$ 13; U. S.C.A.Const. Amend. 6.

13. Criminal Law ⚖️1035(1)

Defendants, who had not asserted during the trial that they had been denied a right to a speedy trial, would not be heard to make such assertion for first time on appeal. West's Ann.Const. art. 1, § 13; U.S. C.A.Const. Amend. 6.

14. Indictment and Information ⚖️19

Indictment, which charged defendants with "a felony, to wit, murder, in that on or about the 28th day of March, 1953, in the County of Alameda, State of California, they murdered" deceased, and which followed form and language of Penal Code provision pertaining to form of indictment, was sufficient. Pen.Code, § 951.

15. Indictment and Information ⚖️110(2)

Penal Code provision that indictment "may be" in words of enactment describing the offense does not require that murder be pleaded in language of Penal Code provision defining murder, but legislature has legalized the pleading in an indictment of the conclusion "murdered". Pen.Code, §§ 187, 952.

16. Indictment and Information ⚖️55

Forms of pleading to be used in criminal actions and rules by which sufficiency of pleadings are to be determined are those prescribed by the Penal Code. Pen.Code, § 948.

Vince Monroe Townsend, Jr., Los Angeles, and Enrico Dell'Oso, Oakland, for appellants.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Clarence A. Linn, Asst. Atty. Gen., Raymond M. Momboisse, Deputy Atty. Gen., J. Frank Coakley, Dist. Atty., Los Angeles, Robert S. Anderson and Richard C. Lynch, Deputy Dist. Attys., Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHENK, Justice.

The defendants were convicted of first degree murder and sentenced to suffer the penalty of death. Their motions for a new trial were denied. They appeal from the judgments and from the orders denying their motions for a new trial.

On Saturday evening, March 28, 1953, Charles Rose, a driver for the Yellow Cab Company, was found slumped in a semi-conscious condition behind the wheel of his cab in front of a house located at 3428 Haven Street, Oakland. The left rear door window was broken. There was blood on the front seat. The radio microphone was off of its bracket on the dashboard. The ignition and lights were on, the brake was off, the gear was in high, and the meter flag was still in the "running" position. The driver was bleeding from four wounds on the back of his head, one of which proved to be fatal, and there were abrasions and a laceration on his right hand. He died several hours later.

The cause of death was found to be maceration of the brain and hemorrhage caused by depressed skull fracture. The autopsy surgeon testified that the head wounds were caused by a blunt instrument; that, considering the nature, size and shape of these wounds, he believed that they could have been inflicted by the butt end of a gun similar to a .45 caliber Colt revolver found in the possession of the defendants the following day.

There was evidence that the killing took place during the course of a robbery. The deceased had left home that Saturday night wearing a wrist watch and carrying a wallet with a $5 bill in it. He had some $2 in change in his coat pocket. He checked in at the Yellow Cab garage at 10:51 p.m. He was next seen at the Greyhound Bus depot a short distance away at 11:00 p.m. under circumstances which indicated he had just taken on some passengers. At 11:12 p.m. the police department received a call from Mrs. Julia Greenup of 3417 Haven Street which led officers to the scene of the crime. There was evidence that only one trip had been made that night by the deceased, and that was the trip from the bus station to the Haven Street address. His wallet and wrist watch and the $5 bill were missing when he was found. Just before he died he regained consciousness and asked for his watch and wallet. The inferences from the evidence support the conclusion that the passengers on that trip robbed and killed the cab driver. The identity of the defendants as those passengers and their claimed alibi will next be considered.

On the evening of March 28, 1953, Mrs. Greenup had been sitting by the window of her living room watching television when her attention was attracted by a noise in the street. Looking out she saw a Yellow Cab zigzag slowly down the street "like someone had lost control of it", watched it angle into the curb opposite her house, bounce back and stop. She reached for the telephone to call the police but was unable to complete her call. She continued to watch the cab; saw two men get out; noted that they were dark-skinned; that one was taller and more slender than the other; that one wore a sport coat and the other a light overcoat; that one carried a suitcase; that after leaving the cab they ran back towards 34th Street and as they ran she heard one of them say "Hit it", meaning run. She was unable to positively identify either defendant at the trial.

At 11:16 p.m. that night two men answering the same general description of the defendants boarded a No. 72 Key System bus at 34th and San Pablo Avenue, some four blocks away. The driver, Billy Ray Hall, could not identify Pierce but he positively identified Jordan as being the taller of the two men who boarded his bus that night at that location. He remembered Jordan because in boarding the bus the latter had bumped a lady passenger with the suitcase he was carrying, and under the company rules the driver was required to report this as an "incident" if the passenger made any complaint. He testified that both men were Negroes; that Jordan's companion carried a light colored topcoat, and that both men got off at 13th and Washington Streets.

At the trial the defendants admitted that they were in Oakland the night of March 28, 1953, but denied that they committed the killing, that they were at the Oakland Greyhound Bus depot or in a Yellow Cab at any time during their stay in Oakland, or that they had carried their suitcase with them earlier than midnight that evening. They relied upon their own alibi evidence, namely that they had been at Walker's Tavern, a bar and restaurant located about a block from their hotel at 7th and Union Streets, from 9:30 p.m. until 1:30 or 2:00 a.m. the following morning; that they had thereafter returned to their hotel, gotten the suitcase, and checked out. They admitted having carried a loaded Colt .45 caliber revolver with them that evening for the purpose of obtaining money with it; and that while they were at Walker's Tavern they had planned to steal a car and use the gun to hold up a liquor store later that night. About 1:30 a.m. they stole a 1950 Ford automobile, committed an armed robbery at a liquor store, and fled the city in the stolen car. They took Highway No. 99, intending to return to Los Angeles.

The jury was justified in disbelieving defendants' alibi evidence. The supporting testimony of Eddie May Hardwell, cocktail waitress at Walker's Tavern, was impeached by prior contradictory statements. From all of the evidence the jury could properly conclude that the defendants had left Walker's about 9:30 or 10:00 p.m. with the suitcase, made their way to the Greyhound Bus station and arrived there by 11:00 p.m., entered decedent's cab and directed him to the general neighborhood where the cab was found; that they viciously assaulted and robbed the driver; that they ran from the cab and boarded a No. 72 bus a few blocks away; and that thereafter they returned either to Walker's or to the hotel. The proprietor of the hotel where they were registered testified that they had checked in on Friday night for one night only; that she ordinarily did not know when guests checked out, "you just find the door open and they are gone"; that Pierce rang the desk bell a little after midnight on Saturday and said he was leaving; that he was then carrying the suitcase; and that she had not seen him come in. The owner of the stolen Ford testified that he had left it unattended with the motor running for a few minutes about 1:30 a.m. about a block from Walker's Tavern, and that when he came back it was gone. Defendants testified that it was after they stole the car that they checked out at the hotel.

Defendants drove as far as the city of Bakersfield where they were stopped the next day by police officers for investigation of a minor traffic incident. Pierce was driving and Jordan was sitting next to him.

In the back of the car were a light colored overcoat, a sport coat, a suitcase, and other articles of clothing belonging to the defendants. A loaded Colt .45 caliber revolver was in the glove compartment. Because of the inability of Pierce to answer routine questions as to the ownership of the car, the defendants were taken to the police department for questioning and were subsequently booked for possible car theft and for carrying a concealed weapon. Both men denied ownership of the gun, or knowledge that it was in the car. At the trial they admitted that it was their gun.

Jordan first told the police that he was a hitchhiker and had been picked up by Pierce. Later he stated that Pierce had picked him up the night before at the Greyhound bus station in Oakland, and that Pierce at that time had the 1950 Ford. He also said that he met Pierce at Walker's bar on 7th Street in Oakland, and that they had been teamed up for about a month. These statements were made by Jordan out of the presence of Pierce. The next day Pierce admitted, out of the hearing of Jordan, that he had stolen the 1950 Ford and stated that whatever he did "Jordan was with me." At the trial they admitted having come to Oakland together from Los Angeles via San Francisco, and that they had constantly carried the loaded gun with them for purposes of robbery.

While the defendants were in the Bakersfield jail, hold orders were placed against them by various cities on robbery charges. They were interviewed also by Oakland police officers and by representatives of the district attorney's office of Alameda County as to the car theft, the armed robbery, and the cab murder but no charges were placed against them at that time for these crimes. On April 18, 1953, after the defendants had been removed to the Fresno County jail for trial on other charges, they were present at a line-up. The only outside person present was a plain clothes inspector from Oakland, Inspector Fake. Pierce voluntarily spoke to Fake at the close of the line-up, asked him if he was an Oakland police officer, and Fake answered that he was. Pierce then stated: "Let's lay off all of this crap and go back to Oakland and cop to the murder." There was evidence that "cop" in the vernacular means to plead guilty. Fake then turned to Jordan and asked him what he wanted to say about it. Jordan replied that he had already told his story but admitted that he was "a liar."

A further conversation took place between Fake and Pierce and was admitted solely against Pierce. It occurred about twenty minutes after the conversation above related between Pierce and Fake. Pierce told Fake that he would go back to Oakland and go to court on the murder charge if all of the robberies would be dropped. Fake replied that he didn't have the authority to agree to this but that he would inform his superiors. At the trial Pierce admitted making these statements but attempted to explain them by saying that he thought he could thereby get the robbery charges dropped, and that he always intended to plead "not guilty" if charged with the cab murder. In answer to questions put to him by Fake at the jail on April 18th, Pierce stated that the cab driver was between 40 and 45 years old (actually he was 48); that the driver had tried "to grab the goddam radio for help"; that Pierce then hit him with the butt of his gun two, three or four times; that he had taken from the driver $7,—some dollar bills and change, also a wrist watch; that they threw the watch away because "it was hot". He also stated that Jordan had gotten out of the cab first; that he, Pierce, got out last because he was carrying the suitcase; that they were going to Los Angeles by Greyhound bus; that after the cab robbery they went back to the hotel; and that later that evening they had stolen a car, had done a "stick-up", and had left town.

On April 20, 1953, Lt. Hubert Murray of the Oakland Police Department talked with Pierce at Fresno outside of the presence of Jordan. Pierce asked him about the possibility of dropping the other charges against him if he "went for" the cab job. He said that he wanted to get the thing over with, but would not do so until Jordan was satisfied, as he would not "rat" on him. Pierce then admitted that he did the cab job and that he would tell Murray things "you don't even know about it." Murray then talked to Jordan outside of the presence of Pierce, and told him that Pierce was ready to talk. Jordan asked, "What did he say, did he say I slugged the guy?" When Murray replied "No", Jordan said, "Okay, if he wants to go for the slugging I'll buy that."

[1] An extensive voir dire was conducted to determine whether these statements had been made because of inducements held out to Pierce by public officials that the robbery charges would be dropped, whether any promises or rewards had been offered him, and also as to whether his statements had been induced by force or fear. The court properly left it to the jury to determine any conflict in the evidence in this regard. The record supports the implied finding of the jury that the statements were freely and voluntarily made.

[2] The jury was justified in disbelieving Pierce's testimony as to an alleged incident at the Bakersfield police station on March 29, 1953, when, he claimed, he was severely beaten by uniformed officers. The defendants were at that time being separately interviewed in a public part of the temporary police headquarters when Pierce suddenly threw back his coat and cried, "Shoot me, shoot me, shoot me", and began cursing and sobbing. The desk sergeant suggested that the officers take Pierce into a semi-enclosed section so that he would be out of the public view. Pierce testified that while he was inside this room he was severely beaten. He showed to the jury a scar on his left shin which he claimed was caused by one of the officers kicking him. Jordan stated that he heard Pierce call out, and that when the latter came out of the interview room he showed to Jordan a bleeding gash on his shin. The officers denied that any brutality or beating took place. The jailer who took the clothes of defendants when they undressed at the county jail shortly thereafter, testified that he saw no blood or bruises upon Pierce. This was the only evidence of alleged brutality, and the jury was justified in disbelieving it.

[3] Pierce did not request any instructions. Jordan did not request any on confessions and admissions. The court of its own motion instructed the jury on this subject. On appeal Pierce contends that such instructions were "too general", but he does not indicate what instructions he claims were erroneous nor does he specify what instructions he contends should have been given. The record shows that the jury was adequately instructed on this subject; also, that the jury was admonished that the statements of each defendant were admissible only as against the one making them. There is no merit in Jordan's contention that the admission in evidence of these statements substantially prejudiced his defense. There was sufficient substantial evidence to otherwise sustain the verdict against him.

[4] It is contended that an instruction on flight was unsupported by the evidence and was prejudicial. The evidence showing flight from the scene of the crime and from the city was abundant. The court properly instructed the jury on the subject in accordance with section 1127c of the Penal Code. (Cal.Jury Instr.Crim. No. 36.)

[5] It is argued that the court erred in giving the following instruction: "The defendants in this case have introduced evidence tending to prove that they were not present at the time and place of the commission of the alleged offense, for which they are here on trial. If, after a consideration of all the evidence, you have a reasonable doubt whether or not either defendant was present at the time that the crime was committed, he is entitled to an acquittal." This instruction was proper. People v. McCoy, 25 Cal.2d 177, 184, 153 P.2d 315; People v. Shaw, 115 Cal.App.2d 597, 603, 252 P.2d 670; People v. Lewis, 81 Cal.App.2d 119, 124, 183 P.2d 271.

Pierce urges that the instructions given were suggestive of the defendants' guilt; that they went beyond the scope of the evidence, and invaded the province of the jury. There is no support in the record for this contention.

[6] Defendants allege that the taking of blood samples from them by police officers while they were in custody was a violation of due process of law and of their right against self-incrimination under both the federal and state constitutions, and that these samples should not have been introduced into evidence. The samples of blood were taken in a medically approved fashion, without objection from defendants. When this evidence was introduced at the trial, their attorneys stated "no objection." There was nothing improper in the introduction of this evidence under the circumstances.

[7] Prejudicial error is claimed because of alleged misconduct on the part of the district attorney. In questioning Pierce on cross-examination with regard to his testimony that the defendants had robbed a market in Fresno, the deputy district attorney queried: "And didn't you go in and grab one chap and hold a knife up against his neck while Jordan robbed the store?" No objection to this question was interposed. See People v. Simeone, 26 Cal.2d 795, 806, 161 P.2d 369. When followed, as it was, by a negative answer, the question, although improper, does not require a reversal.

[8] Defendants attack the testimony of witnesses Greenup and Hall regarding the two men they saw on the night of March 28, 1953, contending that their testimony was improbable, vague and incredible. The testimony of these witnesses was not objectionable. While it was shown that Mrs. Greenup had defective vision, she wore glasses for the correction of that vision and was wearing them at the time she witnessed the cab incident. Her observations as to color were not in question, and no error is indicated in the refusal of the court to allow the defense an opportunity at the trial to test her observations as to color. An ability to distinguish color differs from an ability to distinguish dark from light. There was evidence to support her testimony that it was not a dark night; that the men were dark; and that one had a light overcoat.

Evidence of a technical nature was given by an expert witness for the prosecution, Dr. Paul L. Kirk, professor in Criminalistics and Biochemistry at the University of California at Berkeley. Upon the bases of the various tests conducted by him or under his direction as to certain physical evidence, relating principally to blood, hair, fibers, and glass, his conclusions were that there had been a prior contact between the defendants and the deceased, and that the defendants had been inside the latter's cab. His qualifications as an expert were preliminarily objected to and an extensive voir dire was conducted as to his qualifications. The court held that he was properly qualified. Thereafter Dr. Kirk testified in minute detail as to the tests conducted, the manner in which they were carried out, the precautions taken to assure accuracy and to prevent contamination of the substances examined, and as to his conclusions that the probabilities were that there had been a prior contact between the clothing of the defendants and that of the deceased, and between the clothing of the defendants and the interior of the cab. He was cross-examined for several days as to every phase of his tests and as to the bases for his conclusions. The defense offered some counter evidence. It is not necessary to here describe these technical experiments. The jury was free to accept or reject the conclusions drawn from them.

[9,10] On July 30, 1954, two days after the trial commenced, defense counsel obtained service on Dr. Kirk of a subpoena duces tecum commanding him to bring to the trial "all original notes, computations, calculations, papers, documents, experimental data, used by him." The prosecution replied that it was extremely inconvenient to produce this material. No further attempts were made by the defendants to obtain it. Dr. Kirk's testimony began August 11th. The trial ended August 25th. No request was made at the trial by defense counsel for the production of the slides or the sweepings from which the test materials were extracted. A request was made at the trial for the production of Dr. Kirk's notes but the court properly held that no proper foundation had been laid and the request was denied. On appeal defense counsel have sought to augment the record to present "newly-discovered evidence", alleging that they had no opportunity to anticipate or prepare to meet the testimony of Dr. Kirk, and that lack of funds was part of such lack of opportunity. However no request was made by them at the trial for a continuance or for a court-appointed expert to assist them. Neither defendant waived a jury trial. The record may not thus be augmented on appeal. People v. Carmen, 43 Cal.2d 342, 273 P.2d 521. The nature of the newly-discovered evidence is not stated.

The gun of the defendants was properly admitted in evidence. There was evidence that it could have been the murder weapon, and defendants admittedly had it in their possession at the time the cab driver was killed. Additionally, as to Pierce, there was his admission that he used the gun to bludgeon the victim.

[11-13] Defendant Jordan urges that the defendants were deprived of their right to a speedy trial because the prosecution failed to obtain an indictment until over a year after the cab murder took place. There is no statute of limitation as to murder. Penal Code, § 799. Defendants were indicted on June 3, 1954, and were brought to trial on July 28th, within the time prescribed by statute. Penal Code, § 1382. The constitutional guarantees of a speedy trial, U.S.Const., VI Am.; State Const. art. I, § 13, were not violated. One does not become an "accused" until the filing of a complaint or other charge. At no time did either defendant assert during the trial that he had been denied his right to a speedy trial. It cannot be asserted for the first time on appeal. People v. Newell, 192 Cal. 659, 669, 221 P. 622; People v. Tenedor, 107 Cal.App.2d 581, 237 P.2d 679.

[14-16] There is no merit in Jordan's contention that the indictment was defective in that it did not inform the defendants of the charge against them. The indictment charged them with "a felony, to wit, murder, in that on or about the 28th day of March, 1953, in the County of Alameda, State of California, they murdered Charles Rose." This follows the form and language of section 951 of the Penal Code, as am.1927, and is sufficient. People v. Smith, 215 Cal. 749, 751, 12 P.2d 945; People v. Magsaysay, 210 Cal. 301, 302, 291 P. 582; People v. Coen, 205 Cal. 596, 271 P. 1074. The 1929 amendment to section 952 of the Penal Code, providing that the indictment "may be" in the words of the enactment describing the offense, does not require that murder be pleaded in the words of section 187 defining "murder". The legislature has legalized the conclusion "murdered" to be pleaded in an indictment. Penal Code, § 951. All forms of pleading in criminal actions and the rules by which the sufficiency of the pleadings is to be determined, are those prescribed by the Penal Code. Penal Code, § 948.

Without further recounting the details of the record or the contentions of the parties, it sufficiently appears that no prejudicial error occurred and that the evidence was sufficient to support the verdicts.

The judgments and orders are affirmed.

GIBSON, C. J., and EDMONDS, CARTER, TRAYNOR, SCHAUER and SPENCE, JJ., concur.

45 Cal.2d 433

The PEOPLE of the State of California,
Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.
Henry THOMAS, Defendant and Appellant.
Cr. 5770.

Supreme Court of California,
In Bank.

Oct. 28, 1955.

Defendant, who had been convicted of murder and had received the death penalty, moved in Superior Court to vacate the judgment of conviction to withdraw the guilty plea and for a stay of execution. The Superior Court, Siskiyou County, James M. Allen, J., denied the motion. Defendant appealed. The Supreme Court, Carter, J., held that in view of the repeated adjudications of the issues raised by defendant and his erroneous making of the motion in the Superior Court rather than in the Supreme Court, (the motion being in the nature of an application for writ of error coram nobis,) the appeal should be dismissed.

Appeal dismissed; stay of execution terminated and trial court directed to proceed with execution of sentence as provided by law.

1. Criminal Law ☞997(13)

Motion to vacate judgment of conviction, for withdrawal of guilty plea and stay of execution was in nature of petition for writ of error coram nobis and should have been presented to Supreme Court, which had affirmed conviction, rather than to Superior Court. Pen.Code, § 1265; West's Ann.Const. art. 6, § 5.

2. Habeas Corpus ☞120

Petition for habeas corpus based upon same grounds set forth in previous petition which has been denied will be denied where there has been no change in facts or law substantially affecting legal rights of petitioner.

3. Criminal Law ☞997(7)

Where proceeding in nature of application of writ of error coram nobis was based upon same grounds set forth in previous applications for habeas corpus except for omission of one ground asserted on the previous applications, and where there had been no change in fact or law asserted on previous applications, it was appropriate to apply rule that petition for habeas corpus based upon same grounds set forth in previous petition which has been denied will be denied where there has been no change in facts or law substantially affecting legal rights of the petitioner.

4. Criminal Law ☞989

Though requirement that an accused be asked if he has any reason why judgment should not be pronounced is substantial, and a failure to ask it is fatal to judgment if defendant has been deprived of counsel, it is not fatal where defendant is present and represented by counsel and no prejudice appears. Pen.Code, §§ 1200, 1201.

5. Criminal Law ☞1144(17)

In absence of any showing to contrary, Supreme Court would assume that recital in judgment, to effect that defendant had been asked if he had any reason why judgment should not be pronounced, was correct. Pen.Code, §§ 1200, 1201.

6. Criminal Law ☞1131(4)

In view of repeated prior adjudications of issues raised by defendant on his motion to vacate judgment, for withdrawal of guilty plea and for stay of execution, and in view of his erroneous application to the Superior Court rather than to the Supreme Court, the motion being in nature of an application for writ of error coram nobis, defendant's appeal from Superior Court's denial of the motion would be dismissed. Pen.Code, § 1265; West's Ann. Const. art. 6, § 5.

A. J. Zirpoli, San Francisco, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Clarence A. Linn, Chief Asst. Atty. Gen., and Arlo E. Smith, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

CARTER, Justice.

This is an appeal from an order of the superior court denying a motion to vacate a judgment of conviction rendered by that court which imposed the death penalty for murder of the first degree after a plea of guilty; the motion in the court below was also for withdrawal of the plea of guilty, and for a stay of execution. The proceeding in the court below would thus appear to be an application for a writ of coram nobis. This court granted a stay of execution in order that defendant's appeal might be considered. The judgment of conviction was affirmed by this court on automatic appeal. People v. Thomas, 37 Cal.2d 74, 230 P.2d 351.

In support of his motion defendant presented to the court below an affidavit in which he stated: (1) That he is in the custody of the warden of San Quentin Prison under the judgment of conviction; that although the judgment recites that after a hearing on the degree of the offense the court asked defendant whether he had any legal cause to show why judgment should not be pronounced and defendant made no reply, that such was not true and he was not so asked. (2) That defendant was arraigned on December 4, 1950, and counsel for him, Brawman, was appointed. At the time to plead on December 6, after a short appearance in court, Brawman, the district attorney, and judge retired to the latter's chambers where the judge stated that Brawman had told him defendant was ready to plead guilty but hoped he might be saved the death penalty and that the district attorney would not insist on that penalty under those circumstances. The judge had told Brawman he wanted to think it over and suggested the instant conference. At the conference the judge said that he had since gone over the transcript of the preliminary examination and would not bargain since he was inclined to impose the death penalty whether the plea was guilty or not guilty. Brawman, the district attorney and judge then returned to the court room and the judge declared court in session again. Defendant claims that Brawman did not tell him of the conference and that he had no knowledge thereof. (3) That the trial was "fatally infected" because: (a) He was denied effective assistance of counsel because Brawman consulted with him for only a "few minutes" on the day of arraignment; a "few minutes" in the sheriff's office thereafter and for five minutes after the conference heretofore mentioned. (b) There was not a "competent and intelligent" waiver of a jury trial. (c) The court did not advise him of his rights and the consequences of a plea of guilty. (d) The plea was not understandingly entered and the proceedings were too hurried. (4) That he told his counsel that he had a good military record; that he had some whisky before the robbery; that there was a scuffle before he shot and he had not intended to kill Mrs. Ainsworth; that none of these things were brought out at the hearing on the degree of the crime and the punishment to be imposed. Defendant presented points and authorities with his motion. After considering defendant's affidavits and points and authorities the motion was denied.

The attorney general has noticed a motion to dismiss the appeal or to affirm the court's order of denial on the ground that the motion was frivolous and only to delay the execution in that the issues raised on the motion had been adjudicated adversely to defendant by this court in the original automatic appeal, People v. Thomas, supra, 37 Cal.2d 74, 230 P.2d 351, and in the denial of two petitions for habeas corpus, as well as by the United States District Court and Court of Appeals, Thomas v. Teets, 9 Cir., 220 F.2d 232; that since defendant's motion in the trial court was a petition for writ of error coram nobis it should have been addressed to this court under section 1265 of the Penal Code.¹

[1] With reference to the last contention that a petition for a writ of error coram nobis must be made to an appellate court, although this court has not passed on section 1265, supra, the District Court of Appeal has held that it is not a violation of due process nor an encroachment of the jurisdiction of the superior court as stated in our Constitution, Cal.Const. art. VI, § 5; People v. Sica, 116 Cal.App.2d 59, 253 P.2d 75 and that the jurisdiction of the appellate court is exclusive. People v. Dunlop, 102 Cal.App.2d 314, 227 P.2d 281; People v. Schunke, 102 Cal.App.2d 875, 228 P.2d 620; People v. Ponce, 103 Cal.App.2d 271, 229 P.2d 77. The language of section 1265 is clear and defendant has presented no excuse for not applying to this court for coram nobis.

With regard to the prior applications for habeas corpus both in this court and the federal courts mentioned by the attorney general, it appears that applications for habeas corpus were made to this court and denied on August 28, 1951, and July 6, 1955. The United States Supreme Court denied certiorari in each case. Thomas v. Duffy, 343 U.S. 906, 72 S.Ct. 637, 96 L.Ed. 1325. The grounds advanced in those proceed-be brought to procure the vacation of said judgment, except in the court which affirmed the judgment on appeal." Pen. Code, § 1265.

1. " * * * if a judgment has been affirmed on appeal no motion shall be made or proceeding in the nature of a petition for a writ of error coram nobis shall ings are the same, with one omission,² as in the instant one. In the federal courts the district court held a hearing to determine the facts and then denied habeas corpus. That was affirmed by the court of appeals, Thomas v. Teets, supra, 220 F.2d 232, 234, where the court stated the facts as follows: "It is manifest that his attorney conveyed to petitioner the substance of the conversations had with the trial judge." * * * This of course is the testimony of the lawyer which it is apparent the trial court believed. This testimony disclosed that the lawyer fully advised Thomas of the seriousness of the situation; of the difficulty of decision as to whether to plead guilty or not guilty, and that Thomas himself made the decision, against the lawyer's advice, although the lawyer did not overrule it since Thomas appeared to be a very intelligent person and he felt the decision should be made by Thomas." It was there concluded that defendant was not denied the effective assistance of counsel, or deceived by his counsel, or prevented from having a hearing on the degree of the crime and the punishment to be imposed.

[2,3] The denial of habeas corpus by this court and by analogy the denial of a writ by the federal courts makes appropriate the application of the rule that: "There is nothing * * * to exclude this case from application of the established rule that a petition for habeas corpus based upon the same grounds set forth in a previous petition which was denied will be denied where there has been no change in the facts or law substantially affecting the legal rights of the petitioner. In re Miller, 1941, 17 Cal.2d 734, 735, 112 P.2d 10." In re Chessman, 43 Cal.2d 391, 399, 274 P.2d 645, 649, quoting from In re De La Roi, 28 Cal.2d 264, 275, 169 P.2d 363. In the automatic appeal this court said: "At that time, after a brief appearance in court, counsel for defendant and McCain's counsel, and the district attorney retired to the judge's chambers where the judge said that Mr. Brawman had spoken to him in regard to the possibility of defendant avoiding the death penalty by making a 'certain' plea. The judge remarked that he had read the transcript of the preliminary hearing and that he was 'inclined' to give the 'extreme' penalty whether he pleaded guilty or not guilty. On returning to court, defendant pleaded guilty and December 11, 1950, was fixed as the time for 'pronouncing judgment,' later continued to December 14, 1950, when the court announced it would hear evidence on the degree of the offense. The district attorney called decedent's husband, Ainsworth, to the stand and he testified to the facts relating to the killing. Defendant's counsel was asked by the court if he wished to cross-examine and declined. The court then remarked: 'Step down (addressing the witness). I don't think we will need any further.' The district attorney then made the same remark, to which the court replied 'All right.' Defendant's counsel remained silent. The court then stated that it was murder of the first degree. Thereafter when asked by the court whether he had any legal cause to show why sentence should not be pronounced, defendant stood mute. The death penalty was imposed.

"There is no question that the evidence is ample to establish murder of the first degree, for it was committed while attempting to commit robbery. Pen.Code, § 189. Defendant's excuse for not offering any evidence on the question of penalty is that the court's remark heretofore quoted foreclosed such offer. That remark may not necessarily be so construed, and the court, as seen, did not only take the evidence on the subject consisting of Ainsworth's testimony, but also the evidence given at the preliminary hearing which went into the details of the crime from the planning of it to the flight. Moreover, defendant stood mute when asked if he had any legal cause to show why sentence should not be pronounced and it was not until then that the death sentence was

2. Heretofore defendant had, in addition, claimed that the sheriff told him he had better plead guilty because if it got out that he was a negro it would be bad for him. The facts were determined adversely to him on that issue in the federal court proceedings, infra.

'pronounced.'" People v. Thomas, supra, 37 Cal.2d 74, 75-76, 230 P.2d 351, 352.

[4,5] Insofar as the question of the alleged failure of the court to ask defendant if he had any reason why judgment should not be pronounced, we stated, as above seen, on the automatic appeal, People v. Thomas, supra, 37 Cal.2d 74, 76, 230 P.2d 351, that when defendant was asked the question he stood mute. Although it does not appear in the reporter's transcript whether the question was asked it was recited by the court in its judgment that it was. In any event, while the requirement, Pen.Code, §§ 1200, 1201, that the question be asked is substantial and a failure to ask it is fatal to the judgment if defendant has been deprived of counsel, In re Levi, 39 Cal.2d 41, 244 P.2d 403, it is not fatal where defendant is present and represented by counsel and no prejudice appears, People v. Henry, 86 Cal.App.2d 785, 195 P.2d 478; People v. Hawthorne, 63 Cal.App.2d 262, 146 P.2d 517; People v. Swift, 140 Cal.App. 7, 34 P.2d 1041; People v. Wademan, 38 Cal.App. 116, 175 P. 791. In the absence of any showing to the contrary we must assume that the recital in the judgment is correct. People v. Wademan, supra, 38 Cal. App. 116, 137, 175 P. 791. Defendant's counsel was fully advised of all circumstances bearing upon the degree of the crime and punishment to be imposed and had an opportunity to present them at the hearing. Both defendant and his counsel were present when judgment was pronounced and no objection was made.

[6] With respect to that part of defendant's motion which asked to withdraw his plea of guilty it has been said: "The proper procedure for withdrawal of a plea after judgment is a motion to set aside the judgment and to permit a withdrawal of the plea. Such a motion is in the nature of, and is subject to the rules governing, an application for a writ of coram nobis." 14 Cal.Jur.2d, Criminal Law, § 260. And: "An application for withdrawal of a guilty plea after judgment will be granted, however, only where there exists some fact that, had it been known to the court, would have prevented rendition of the judgment, which fact was not known to defendant at that time, and which, without fraud, mistake, or negligence of the defendant, was not presented to the court." 14 Cal.Jur.2d, Criminal Law, § 259. No such after discovered facts appear here.

In view of the repeated adjudications of the issues raised by defendant and the making of his application for the writ of coram nobis to the wrong court in the face of section 1265 of the Penal Code, supra, defendant's appeal should be dismissed. See People v. Adamson, 34 Cal.2d 320, 210 P.2d 13; People v. Shorts, 32 Cal.2d 502, 197 P.2d 330; In re De La Roi, supra, 28 Cal.2d 264, 169 P.2d 363.

The appeal is dismissed, the stay of execution heretofore granted is terminated, and the trial court is directed to proceed with execution of its sentence in the manner provided by law.

GIBSON, C. J., and SHENK, EDMONDS, TRAYNOR, SCHAUER and SPENCE, JJ., concur.

45 Cal.2d 629

Frank C. MOSIER and Nancy M. Mosler, Plaintiffs, Cross-Defendants, and Appellants,

v.

Dewey MEAD, Roy Ustick, Paul Niman, Richard Cooper, and J. Walter Smith, Defendants, Cross-Complainants, and Respondents.

Sac. 6577.

Supreme Court of California.

In Bank.

Nov. 29, 1955.

Action was brought to quiet title, and defendants filed a cross-complaint to establish that they had an easement for construction of a levee on plaintiffs' realty. The Superior Court of Stanislaus County, B. C. Hawkins, J., entered judgment adverse to plaintiffs, and they appealed. The Supreme Court, Spence, J., held that where predecessor of plaintiffs recognized and consented to easement of defendants on predecessor's realty for purpose of constructing and maintaining a levee, and predecessor presented a claim to county for damages for building of levee, Superior Court properly sustained defendants' claim to an easement, based on implied grant, for purpose of constructing and maintaining the levee as provided by law, though at time levee was constructed, no approval had been obtained from State Reclamation Board as required by statute, and construction was illegal.

Judgment affirmed.

Opinion, 283 P.2d 378, vacated.

1. Easements ⇐1

An "easement" is an interest in land, created by grant or agreement, express or implied, which confers a right on owner thereof to some profit, benefit, dominion, or lawful use out of or over the estate of another.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Easement".

2. Easements ⇐15

Question whether easement arises by implication depends on the intent of the parties, and court will consider circumstances attending the transaction, the particular situation of the parties, and the state of the thing granted.

3. Easements ⇐40

The effect of section of Civil Code providing that extent of a servitude is determined by the terms of the grant, or the nature of the enjoyment by which it was acquired, is to establish intent as the criterion for determining the extent of the servitude, in accord with the rationale of rules governing easements by implication. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 806.

4. Waters and Water Courses ⇐156(1)

Where predecessor of plaintiffs recognized and consented to easement of defendants on predecessor's realty for purpose of constructing and maintaining a levee, and predecessor presented a claim to county for damages for building of levee, superior court, in action to quiet title, properly sustained defendants' claim to an easement, based on implied grant, for purpose of constructing and maintaining the levee as provided by law, though at time levee was constructed no approval had been obtained from State Reclamation Board as required by statute, and construction was illegal. Water Code, §§ 8710, 8711, 8719, 8720; West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 806.

Sutter, Elledge & Carter, Modesto, for appellants.

Daniel E. O'Connell, Turlock, and Frank B. Collier, Modesto, for respondents.

SPENCE, Justice.

Plaintiffs and cross-defendants in this quiet title action appeal from a decree adjudging that defendants and cross-complainants are the owners of an easement over plaintiffs' land on which is constructed a flood-control levee, and enjoining plaintiffs from interfering in any manner with defendants' lawful use and enjoyment thereof. The cause was submitted upon an agreed statement of facts.

In 1938 an expensive levee was constructed upon plaintiffs' land to protect a county highway and the property of defendants and other landowners from flood waters of the San Joaquin River. Plaintiffs' predecessor in interest consented to this work, and thereafter filed a claim for $1,500 with the board of supervisors for damages and for compensation for an easement to the 23 acres occupied by the levee. The stipulated facts do not show what disposition was made of this claim.

Construction work was done by the threatened landowners and county employees, the latter working under the direction of a county supervisor, using county equipment and being paid with county funds. The board of supervisors has never approved the project, and the county does not claim any easement or right to maintain the levee. Plaintiffs acquired the property involved in 1947.

The levee lies entirely within the boundaries of the Sacramento and San Joaquin Drainage District. Plans for its construction and maintenance were never approved by the State Reclamation Board. Statutes in force when the work was done, which since have been incorporated without substantial change in the Water Code, required the board's prior approval of every plan of reclamation calling for construction and maintenance of a levee (now Water Code, § 8710) and prohibited the doing of any work pursuant to such a plan without the board's permission. § 8711. It was further provided that "[t]he doing of any act or construction of any work mentioned in this article, or permitting the work to remain after such construction, without the permission of the board and in violation of any of the provisions of this article, is a public nuisance, and the board may commence and maintain suit in the name of the people of the State for the prevention or abatement of the nuisance." § 8719. Moreover, any person violating these provisions was declared guilty of a misdemeanor. § 8720.

The levee was so located upon plaintiffs' property that it separated from their irrigation facilities about 100 acres of tillable farm land, thus requiring the construction of additional facilities. The present dispute arose when plaintiffs sought to remove the levee. Both prior to the filing of this action to quiet title (May 6, 1952) and since, plaintiffs entered upon the levee, removed dirt therefrom and "thereby destroyed substantially all of [the] levee." It was stipulated that if "defendants and cross-complainants own the easement and levee constructed thereon, as alleged in their cross-complaint, they have been damaged" but that "in lieu of damages," the court might issue a "mandatory injunction requiring plaintiffs and cross-defendants" to restore the levee.

The trial court's decree declared defendants to be the owners of an easement in the realty, for purposes of flood control and protection of property in the vicinity, with the right to reconstruct and maintain the levee, as provided by law. As stated by the trial judge in his decision, the exercise of this latter right would require the acquisition of the necessary permit required by law to be obtained from the Reclamation Board. The decree also enjoined plaintiffs from claiming any right, title, or interest in the easement adverse to defendants. The decree particularly described defendants' easement by metes and bounds; but it made no award of damages in their favor nor did it grant a mandatory injunction directing plaintiffs to restore the levee.

In attacking the decree, plaintiffs' argument rests primarily upon the premise that a quiet title action is essentially equitable in nature, Newport v. Hatton, 195 Cal. 132, 153, 231 P. 987; Angus v. Craven, 132 Cal. 691, 696-697, 64 P. 1091 and a "'court of equity will not allow itself to become a handmaid of iniquity of any kind.'" Domenigoni v. Imperial Live Stock etc. Co., 189 Cal. 467, 475, 209 P. 36, 39. As above recited from the statement of facts, it is admitted that neither the plans for the levee nor its maintenance were approved by the Reclamation Board, either before or after its construction. Accordingly, plaintiffs argue that quieting title to defendants' easement constitutes affirmative sanction of a levee admittedly constructed in violation of a penal statute, an act denominated a misdemeanor, and its continued maintenance declared a public nuisance. They further argue that as landowners, they would be liable to suit, and possibly criminal prosecution, for permitting the structure to remain on their property. While plaintiffs cite a number of cases from this and other jurisdictions stating the general salutary principles guiding courts of equity in their proper disposition of controverted issues, they do not apply to the precise situation here.

Plaintiffs misconstrue the effect of the trial court's decree. The court did not determine that defendants were entitled to maintain or repair the levee without sanction or approval of the Reclamation Board. Rather, the decree simply declares that defendants " * * * were during all the times herein mentioned, and now are, the owners of an easement in, on, over and across the hereinafter described real property, on which is constructed a levee * * *." Thus, as stated by the trial judge in his decision, defendants had an easement for the construction of a levee as actually constructed, but since the levee was illegally constructed, they had no standing in a court of equity for damages or injunction.

[1] An easement is generally defined as an "interest in land created by grant or agreement, express or implied, which confers a right upon the owner thereof to some profit, benefit, dominion, or lawful use out of or over the estate of another." Los Angeles Terminal Land Co. v. Muir (Southern Pac. R. R. Co.), 136 Cal. 36, 48, 68 P. 308, 312; see 17 Cal.Jur.2d, § 2, p. 89; Wright v. Best, 19 Cal.2d 368, 381, 121 P.2d 702. There is no reason why defendants could not have acquired by express grant an easement to maintain a levee on plaintiffs' property. The exercise of such express grant of an easement for a use which could be made legal by obtaining the sanction of the specified state agency—that is, construction and maintenance of a levee with permission of the State Reclamation Board—would not be a grant for an illegal purpose. That being true, there could likewise be an implied grant of an easement by plaintiffs' predecessor to defendants for the same purpose; and such seems to be the case here.

[2-4] Whether an easement arises by implication depends on the intent of the parties, and the court will take into consideration the circumstances attending the transaction, the particular situation of the parties, and the state of the thing granted. 28 C.J.S., Easements, § 30, p. 686. The effect of section 806 of the Civil Code is to establish intent as the criterion for determining the "extent of a servitude", and this is in accord with the rationale of the rules governing easements by implication. Fristoe v. Drapeau, 35 Cal.2d 5, 9, 215 P.2d 729. Here it cannot be disputed that plaintiffs' predecessor recognized and consented to defendants' easement on her property for the purpose of constructing and maintaining a levee, for after its construction she presented her claim to the county, reading in part as follows: "For damages for building levee across my ranch and for an easement 200 feet wide running East of Crows Landing Road and 100 feet across North side along highway, being 23 acres, more or less." In view of this evidence of intent and the situation of the parties, the court properly sustained defendants' claim to an easement, upon the basis of an implied grant, for the purpose of constructing and maintaining the levee "as provided by law," including the acquisition of the necessary permit from the Reclamation Board.

Having concluded that the trial court properly determined that defendants had a right to an easement by implied grant, it becomes unnecessary to consider whether defendants could have acquired a similar right by prescription when the construction and maintenance of the levee without the approval of the Reclamation Board amounted to a public nuisance and a misdemeanor.

The judgment is affirmed.

GIBSON, C. J., SHENK, TRAYNOR and SCHAUER, JJ., and McCOMB, J. pro tem., concur.

45 Cal.2d 738

Harold K. BERESFORD, Catherine A. Beresford and Nellie V. Beresford, Plaintiffs and Respondents,

v.

PACIFIC GAS AND ELECTRIC COMPANY, a corporation, Defendant and Appellant.
Sac. 6635.

Supreme Court of California.
In Bank.

Dec. 9, 1955.

Action against electricity supplier for fire loss. The Superior Court, Tehama County, Ben R. Ragain, J., rendered judgment on verdict for plaintiffs, and defendant appealed. The Supreme Court, Schauer, J., held that evidence was sufficient to support jury's implied findings that falling of tree had brought electric power line into contact with telephone lines leading into plaintiffs' lodge, that falling of tree in high wind might have been foreseen, that danger could have been forestalled or alleviated by insulating tap line wires and by reducing voltage therein, that fire had resulted from contact of high voltage, uninsulated wires with telephone wires below, that defendant had been negligent in manner in which it had erected and maintained and operated tap line and wires, and that such negligence on part of defendant had been a proximate cause of fire.

Affirmed.

Opinion 285 P.2d 356, vacated.

1. Electricity ⇨19(5)

In action against electricity supplier for fire loss, evidence was sufficient to support jury's implied findings that falling of tree had brought electric power line into contact with telephone lines leading into plaintiffs' lodge, that falling of tree in high wind might have been foreseen, that danger could have been forestalled or alleviated by insulating tap line wires and by reducing voltage therein, that fire had resulted from contact of high voltage, uninsulated wires with telephone wires below, that defendant had been negligent in manner in which it had erected and maintained and operated tap line and wires, and that such negligence on part of defendant had been a proximate cause of fire.

2. Electricity ⇨19(12)

In action against electric power supplier for fire damage sustained when tree on plaintiffs' land fell across supplier's transmission line, energizing telephone wires, there was insufficient evidence to take contributory negligence issue to jury.

3. Evidence ⇨150

Testimony as to experiments is addressed primarily to discretion of trial court, but it must appear that conditions and circumstances were in general same in illustrative case and case at hand, and determination whether conditions were sufficiently similar to make experiments of any value in aiding jury is matter resting in sound discretion of judge.

4. Evidence ⇨557

In action against electric power supplier for fire damage allegedly sustained when tree fell across transmission line, energizing telephone wires and igniting switchboard in plaintiffs' building, admission of testimony concerning experiments illustrating effect of excessive voltage on installations such as existed in plaintiffs' building was not an abuse of discretion.

5. Appeal and Error ⇨971(2)

Evidence ⇨546

It is for trial court to determine, in exercise of sound discretion, competency and qualification of expert witness to give his opinion in evidence, and its ruling will not be disturbed on appeal unless manifest abuse of discretion is shown.

6. Evidence ⇨536

In action against electric power supplier for fire damage allegedly sustained when tree fell across transmission line, energizing telephone wires and igniting switchboard in plaintiffs' building, it was not error to permit two electrical engineers, qualified as experts in their field, to testify relative to insulating tap line, relocating transformer, and adjusting of circuit breaker, notwithstanding defendant's objection that they had not been qualified as experts on fire.

7. Appeal and Error ⇨1170(7)

In action against electric power supplier for fire damage allegedly sustained when tree fell across transmission line, energizing telephone wires and igniting switchboard in plaintiffs' building, admission of witness' testimony that he had been awakened by sparks flying from switch, that he was sure telephone line had been operating before tree fell, and that it did not operate thereafter until repaired, was, in view of great amount of like testimony by other witnesses, not prejudicial, even if unconnected with case. West's Ann.Const. art. 6, § 4½.

8. Appeal and Error ⇨1170(7)

In action against electric power supplier for fire damage allegedly sustained when tree fell across transmission line, energizing telephone wires and igniting switchboard in plaintiffs' building, admission of photograph of tree, if error, was not so prejudicial as to warrant interference with trial court's determination. West's Ann.Const. art 6, § 4½.

Robert H. Gerdes, John J. Briare, San Francisco, Edmund M. Moor, Red Bluff, and Anthony J. Kennedy, Sacramento, for appellant.

Rawlins Coffman, Red Bluff, and L. C. Smith, Redding, for respondent.

SCHAUER, Justice.

Defendant Pacific Gas and Electric Company appeals from a judgment rendered against it in plaintiffs' action for damages for the destruction of their property by fire, assertedly caused by negligence of defendant. As grounds requiring reversal defendant urges insufficiency of the evidence to support a finding of negligence on its part, as well as various allegedly prejudicial errors on the part of the trial court in the admission and exclusion of evidence and in instructing the jury. For reasons hereinafter stated, we have concluded that defendant's contentions are without merit, and that the judgment should be affirmed.

Plaintiffs owned and operated a resort at Mineral, which is located in the mountains in Tehama County, about 40 miles east of Red Bluff. During the early morning hours of January 10, 1949, the main lodge building at the resort was completely destroyed by fire. Plaintiffs' charge of negligence against defendant is based upon their claim that a tree which admittedly fell across defendant's power line caused that line, from the manner of its construction, maintenance and operation, to come in contact with and energize telephone lines leading to plaintiffs' lodge, thereby causing a fire to break out in the telephone switchboard located in the lodge.¹

The record shows that in 1939 plaintiffs granted to defendant a right of way for the erection of a transmission line, referred to by the parties as a "tap line." Pursuant to the right of way so granted, defendant constructed the tap line from its main power line which was located a short distance south of the highway (California Highway 36) running easterly through Mineral. Along the north side of the highway, parallel to and 30 feet distant from it, were telephone lines, some of which led to a switchboard at the lodge building about one-half mile to the east of the "Hazen Cabin," near which stood the tree that fell. The tap line, which furnished electric power to the Hazen Cabin, as well as to a seismograph station of the University of California, crossed over the highway and the telephone lines at approximately a right angle; it was about 326 feet in length, uninsulated, and carried some 11,000 volts of electricity. Near the north end of the tap line was located a transformer from which defendant took two 110-volt service connections.

On the north side of the highway, 25 feet east of the tap line and 59 feet north of the telephone lines, stood a cedar tree 110 feet tall and between 150 and 200 years of age. It arose some 75 feet above the 35-foot poles that supported the tap line. The telephone lines were supported below the tap line, on a separate pole. At the base of the tree was a fire burn, termed by the witnesses a cat face, which "possibly weakened" the structure of the tree "some." The tree was 32 to 35 inches in diameter at breast height and leaned between 5 and 10 degrees "toward the highway down the slope." After the tree fell the presence of some dry rot was discovered, although the witness, District Forest Ranger Brokenshire, who testified as an expert on trees, stated that "I looked at the cat face and I would have noticed if it was badly dry rotted." Brokenshire examined the tree in August, 1949, some seven months after it had fallen and it "didn't appear to be extremely defective * * * It's a tree that isn't likely

1. Also named as a defendant was Public Utilities California Corporation, which the evidence showed to have installed and controlled the switchboard and the lines leading into it. A judgment of nonsuit was entered in favor of such defendant, and plaintiffs' appeal therefrom was dismissed in 1952. (Beresford v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co., 113 Cal. App.2d 622, 248 P.2d 773.)

to die because of any disease or defect." The tree did, however, stand by itself in a cut-over area where the high winds which were "common to the Mineral area" could exert full force against it. Broken-shire stated that in view of such winds "I wouldn't say that any tree at Mineral was safe."

On the stormy night of January 9 and early morning of January 10, 1949, a so-called "very severe" wind of 25 to 30 miles an hour was blowing from the northeast. Between midnight and 1:30 a. m. the tree fell; although the exact time is unknown the records of the University seismograph station indicate a power failure at 12:35 a. m. Admittedly the tree fell across the tap line, and it is plaintiffs' theory that the tap line was thus forced into contact with the telephone lines, thereby energizing them with the high voltage current and causing the fire. Defendant urges that plaintiffs failed to prove not only such contact, but that if it occurred the fire could have been caused thereby. Defendant's Exhibit I shows the tree lying with its top pointing to the southwest, after falling across the tap line at almost the exact point of its intersection with the telephone lines running beneath it, and thence across the highway, thereby blocking the west-bound lane. Between 1:30 a. m. and 2 a. m. the fallen tree was discovered by a traffic officer, who "could see the wires rather low," although he could not state whether electric or telephone wires. When the tree fell the tap line was not broken and the power remained on until about 3:14 a. m., when a truck which was then being driven past the fallen tree contacted and broke the wires, thereby causing the circuit breaker in defendant's South Power House to operate and bells to ring, awakening the attendant. Prior to that alarm no safety or protective device on defendant's power system interfered with or shut off the escaping power.

No witness produced at the trial saw the origin of the fire, which was observed as early as 1:20 a. m. and lasted until 4 a. m., burning the entire lodge building and its contents. Shortly after 1 a. m., however, an employee of plaintiffs observed a fire in the lodge, which he described as coming from the area of the telephone switchboard. Witnesses living in the neighborhood testified to the continuous or "hot" ringing of their telephones at various times commencing about 1:30 a. m. Also, blue flames and sparks were shooting out from electric switches in their homes, and in some instances fuses were blown in the homes and carbon blocks were burned. One of two U. S. Forest Service communications system repeater coils which were located side by side on a terminal pole near the lodge and through which the escaping power traveled, was burned out; the second, which was in no way connected with the lines on which the power was escaping, was undamaged. It was the opinion of the Forest Service communications officer that the damage "was caused by a high rate of current flow through a repeater coil for some little time—not an instantaneous surge that was discontinued," and that the damage was more severe than that caused by lightning. One of the telephone lines which led into Mineral lodge "did go into this particular repeater coil that was damaged." An electrical engineer who is defendant's retired former employe and who testified for defendant, stated on cross-examination that "if I was informed that the repeater coil burned up very shortly after the time the tree fell into the line, then I would say it had some connection with the falling of the tree. * * * It would indicate the possibility of a contact between the power wires and the telephone wires." In response to the question "Where else in the world could it get that electricity sufficient to burn out that coil except from the tap line?" the witness replied, "I don't know."

The witness Lynch, an electrical engineer and manufacturer of long distance communication equipment, who had inspected the telephone switchboard installation at Mineral lodge before the fire, stated that a protection device known as a Kellogg arrester or protector block had been installed; that such apparatus "may or may not include fuses, but it must always have what they call a gap * * * designed to be open under ordinary telephone usage. It is merely a closely spaced device made of either carbon blocks or metal and mounted close to each other and then designed to flash or break down in the event of * * voltages in general above 600 volts" or of lightning. Its purpose is to protect the switchboard equipment from damage. A Kellogg arrester "normally does not contain both" the gap and a fuse. The witness could not say "with certainty whether there were fuses or whether there weren't fuses," on the lodge installation. Neither could he predict whether, with the arrester present, the result of the induction of more than 600 volts in the telephone lines "would be to ground," as "It has too many variables behind it." As a "rough rule of thumb" and estimate, the gap in an arrester block "has a tolerance of 5,000 volts to each quarter-inch"; i. e., the voltage would arc or jump "a quarter-inch for about 5,000 volts." Without fuses the arrester at Mineral lodge would have had a gap of four inches, but "If there were fuses there that would not be the gap. Now, I don't remember whether fuses were there or not." The probable outcome "of the induction of a greater voltage than will pass through the arrester is, in the absence of fuses, to destroy or burn the * * * outside telephone lines * * * although * * * it plays such funny pranks you can't be certain."

Two expert witnesses, both electrical engineers and at the time of trial employed as instructors at the University of California, testified on behalf of plaintiffs that it was their opinion that a tree falling on the power wires, which then contacted the telephone lines with the protector device, would result in fire to the lodge building; that insulation of the power wires would have reduced the fire hazard; that cable for effective insulation of the tap line where it crossed the telephone wires is commercially available; that if the transformer, which reduced the power to 110 volts from the 11,000 the tap line carried, had been placed south of the highway it would have likewise reduced the fire hazard; and that the circuit breaker at the South Power House could be so adjusted and timed as to cut off power in the event of interference by a tree falling on the wire and coming into contact with the telephone lines.

[1] It is apparent that the evidence above summarized is sufficient to support the jury's implied findings that the falling of the tree brought the defendant's power line into contact with the telephone lines leading into plaintiffs' lodge; that the falling of the tree in a high wind might have been foreseen; that the danger could have been forestalled or alleviated by insulating the tap line wires and by reducing the voltage therein; that the fire resulted from the contact of the high voltage, uninsulated wires with the telephone wires below; that defendant was negligent in the manner in which it erected and maintained and operated the tap line and wires; and that such negligence on the part of defendant was a proximate cause of the fire. It follows that, contrary to defendant's contention, the trial court properly denied defendant's motions for nonsuit and for judgment notwithstanding the verdict.

Principles recently reaffirmed by this court in Dunn v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co. (1954), 43 Cal.2d 265, 273, 272 P.2d 745 (quoting from Polk v. City of Los Angeles (1945), 26 Cal.2d 519, 525, 159 P.2d 931), are that "On the subject of negligence the standard of care is, that one maintaining wires carrying electricity is required to exercise the care that a person of ordinary prudence would exercise under the circumstances. Among the circumstances are the well known dangerous character of electricity and the inherent risk of injury to persons or property if it escapes. Hence, the care used must be commensurate with and proportionate to that danger. [Citations.] Specific application of that standard requires that wires carrying electricity must be carefully and properly insulated by those maintaining them at all places where there is reasonable probability of injury to persons or property therefrom. [Citations.]" Further (quoting from Lozano v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co. (1945), 70 Cal.App.2d 415, 422, 161 P.2d 74), "The duty of due care with which the company was charged consists not only in the proper installation of the dangerous instrumentality but in the maintenance thereof in a safe condition at all times and places and under the changing circumstances of the particular case. Even if at the outset of the installation of equipment the company may have been entirely free from fault, yet, if, under changing circumstances, a hazardous condition arose, nonaction or the failure to remedy such condition would constitute culpable negligence. [Citations.]" (At page 274 of 43 Cal.2d, at page 749 of 272 P.2d.)

In Irelan-Yuba, etc., Mining Co. v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co. (1941), 18 Cal.2d 557, 565-566, 116 P.2d 611, it was held not unreasonable to require the power company to anticipate that during a high wind a tree might fall across high voltage lines and result in a fire; that "If a tree is in such close proximity to a pole line that wind may cause it to fall across the wires, the failure to provide against such eventuality is negligence"; and that "It is not decisive that the tree was not within the limits of the portion of the right of way which had been cleared." Judgment for plaintiffs, whose property was destroyed, was affirmed. And in Rocca v. Tuolumne County Electric, etc., Co. (1926), 76 Cal.App. 569, 579, 245 P. 468, and Smith v. San Joaquin, etc., Power Corp. (1922), 59 Cal.App. 647, 211 P. 843, it was held that the power company is not relieved from liability for failure to protect its wires or take the precautions which the circumstances reasonably demand merely because the tree which endangers the wires stands on private property.

[2] Defendant's next contention concerns its plea of contributory negligence on the part of plaintiffs. In this connection defendant complains of the refusal of the trial court to permit cross-examination of the witness Harvey Brown, a sawmill proprietor, concerning arrangements with plaintiffs to cut down certain trees on their property. Defendant asserts that Brown was plaintiffs' agent and that the cross-examination of Brown as to his knowledge concerning the hazardous tree which fell was material and relevant to the question of plaintiffs' contributory negligence, as such knowledge would be imputed to plaintiffs. Defendant points to no evidence, however, which would support its assertion of agency, and it is undisputed that plaintiffs were aware of the existence of the tree and its location with respect to the power and telephone lines. Neither is there any suggestion that Brown or plaintiffs knew of the location of defendant's transformer or were informed concerning the regulation and maintenance of the circuit breaker in defendant's power house. For these, and other reasons more fully discussed hereinafter, defendant's position on this point is untenable.

Defendant likewise urges that the trial court erred in taking the issue of contributory negligence from the jury.² However, defendant refers to no evidence which would indicate that plaintiffs had knowledge of or could foresee the fire hazard to their property which defendant created by its manner of construction, maintenance and operation of the tap line in proximity to the tree and the telephone wires—a hazard which was shown only through the testimony of expert witnesses at the trial, including that of the electrical engineer who was defendant's former employe—whereas recognition of such hazards may reasonably be held to lie within the expert and specialized knowledge of defendant who constructed the line and upon whom responsibility for its inspection and safe maintenance and operation lies. By contrast, it was shown in Polk v. City of Los Angeles (1945), supra, 26 Cal.2d 519, 524, 529-532, 159 P.2d 931, Benard v. Vorlander (1948), 87 Cal.App.2d 436, 448-449, 197 P.2d 42, and Rojas v. Southern California Edison Co. (1951), 105 Cal.App.2d 258, 259, 233 P.2d 141, relied upon by defendant, that plaintiffs, were aware of the hazards involved. (See also Prescott v. Ralph's Grocery Co. (1954), 42 Cal.2d 158, 162, 265

2. The jury were instructed: "The fact that the defendant Pacific Gas and Electric Company, with Plaintiffs Beresfords' consent, constructed its power line across the Beresfords' property does not impose upon the Beresfords the duty to take precautions to avoid future injuries to Beresfords' own property arising from a tree falling into the defendant's power line."

P.2d 904.) Under the circumstances here present, defendant has shown no error in withholding from the jury the issue of contributory negligence.

[3,4] Defendant's next contention is that the trial court erred in admitting, over defendant's objection, testimony of the witnesses Saunders and Pritchett concerning experiments made by them. These witnesses were the two electrical engineers employed at the University of California. Following extensive questioning as to their knowledge of the case, they were permitted to testify concerning their experiments and as to whether power escaping down telephone lines and into a telephone switchboard in the manner shown by the evidence could break down the protective equipment and cause a fire. Each answered in the affirmative. There were seven experiments; testimony as to certain of them was stricken, while that concerning the remainder stayed in the case. Defendant argues that the testimony which was allowed did not meet the necessary standards as to experiments and that it permitted speculation by the jury.

Although testimony relative to experiments is primarily addressed to the discretion of the trial court "it must appear that the conditions or circumstances were in general the same in the illustrative case and the case in hand * * * [T]he determination whether the conditions were sufficiently similar to make the experiments of any value in aiding the jury is a matter resting in the sound discretion of the judge." (People v. Mondshine (1933), 132 Cal.App. 395, 397-398, 22 P.2d 779, quoting from Guinan v. Famous Players-Lasky Corp. (1929), 267 Mass. 501, 521-522, 167 N.E. 235.) "The conditions surrounding a test or experiment of this nature need not be identical with those existing at the time of the occurrence in question provided there is substantial similarity. (County of Sonoma v. Stofen [1899], 125 Cal. 32 [57 P. 681].) The admission of such evidence is largely a matter of discretion with the trial court, and such a test is merely a circumstance to be considered in connection with other evidence in the case." (Ortega v. Pacific Greyhound Lines, Inc. (1937), 20 Cal.App.2d 596, 597-598, 67 P.2d 702.) In People v. Levine (1890), 85 Cal. 39, 43, 22 P. 969, 24 P. 631, the court commented that "The proof of the result of experiments was equally as open to the defendant as the prosecution; and if other experiments would have shown a different result from that shown by the experiment proved by the prosecution, the defendant had ample opportunity to show the fact. The books are full of authorities sustaining the court in admitting evidence of the result of experiments * * * [The] result [of the experiment in this case] was not conclusive, but a mere circumstance to be considered in connection with the other evidence in the cause. It was both competent and admissible; its weight was for the jury to determine." And in County of Sonoma v. Stofen (1899), 125 Cal. 32, 38, 57 P. 681, it was declared that "Experimental evidence in corroboration or disproof depends for its value upon the fact that the experiment has been made when the conditions affecting the result are as near as may be identical with those existing at the time of and operating to produce the particular effect. An absolute identity is, of course, impossible, but a substantial identity must exist to give the evidence value."

Without reciting in detail the evidence concerning the experiments it may simply be noted that they illustrated the effect of excessive voltage on a Kellogg arrester such as that attached to a pine board which constituted the base of the telephone connections in plaintiffs' lodge. Such evidence was offered as an aid to the court and jury in more clearly understanding the technical testimony presented by both sides, and no showing has been made that the court abused its discretion in permitting its introduction.

[5,6] Defendant's other contentions likewise furnish no ground for reversal. First, no error is shown in admitting the testimony of the two witnesses, Saunders and Pritchett, relative to insulating the tap line, relocating the transformer, and adjustment of the circuit breaker. These two electrical engineers qualified as experts in their field, and defendant's objection that they were not qualified as experts on fire and so should not have been permitted to testify on the subjects mentioned, is without merit. Their testimony concerned the effects of electricity and how it could be more effectively controlled. "It is for the trial court to determine, in the exercise of a sound discretion, the competency and qualification of an expert witness to give his opinion in evidence [citation], and its ruling will not be disturbed upon appeal unless a manifest abuse of that discretion is shown." (Lynch v. Birdwell (1955), 44 Cal. 2d 839, 849, 285 P.2d 919, quoting from Huffman v. Lindquist (1951), 37 Cal.2d 465, 476, 234 P.2d 34, 29 A.L.R.2d 485.) No such abuse is shown here.

[7] Neither is prejudicial error shown in failure to strike the testimony of the witness Eckels, who stated that he was awakened by sparks flying from a switch to which was attached an electric heater, that he was quite sure his telephone line was operating the day before the tree fell, and that it did not operate thereafter until repaired. Even if defendant were correct in its assertion that the testimony was not shown to be connected with this case, there was much other testimony by other witnesses to the same general effect and no prejudice to defendant appears from Eckels' statements.

[8] Finally, defendant complains that a photograph, introduced by plaintiffs for identification only, was permitted by the court to be taken by the jury and viewed during its deliberations and that defendant's motion for a new trial on this ground should have been granted. Defendant particularly objects that the photograph is "of the butt of an uprooted tree showing a large 'cat face' or fire damaged surface," and that in view of certain testimony that a burn will "shut off circulation to some extent * * * where it was burned * * * depending on the amount of heat created," permitting the jury to see the photograph prejudiced defendant. The same witness testified, however, that he had examined the tree after it fell, that it had a "small cat face on one side," that it did not "appear to be extremely defective," and that it was "a tree that isn't likely to die because of any disease or defect," and that because of the high winds "I wouldn't say that any tree at Mineral was safe." He also answered "Yes," when asked whether the photograph in question "depicts the cat face to which you referred, particularly pointing to the base of the tree?" Further, the witness identified from a photograph introduced by defendant the portion of the tree upon which there was a cat face, although stating, as he had done with reference to the photograph produced by plaintiffs, that he didn't think "it's a fair representation" of the fallen tree. It is our view that under such circumstances, and in the light of the entire record, any error in permitting the jury to view the questioned photograph did not so prejudice defendant as to result in a miscarriage of justice. (Cal.Const., art. VI, § 4½.)

The judgment is affirmed.

GIBSON, C. J., SHENK, CARTER, TRAYNOR and SPENCE, JJ., and McCOMB, J. pro tem., concur.

45 Cal.2d 590

The PEOPLE of the State of California,
Plaintiff and Respondent.

v.

James TARANTINO, Defendant and Appellant.

Cr. 5705.

Supreme Court of California.
In Bank.

Nov. 28, 1955.

Rehearing Denied Dec. 28, 1955.

Defendant was convicted of conspiring to commit extortion and of extortion. The Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, Eustace Cullinan, Jr., J., entered judgment of conviction and order denying defendant's motion for new trial, and defendant appealed. The Supreme Court held that, where excerpts of illegally obtained recordings constituted substantial and important part of evidence pertinent to certain counts charging extortion and conspiracy to commit extortion, and it could not be said that verdicts of guilty as to such counts rested upon evidence independent of them, admission in evidence of such recordings deprived defendant of a fair trial and resulted in a miscarriage of justice.

Judgment and order affirmed in part and reversed in part, and cause remanded for new trial.

Traynor and Carter, JJ., and Gibson, C. J., dissented.

Opinion, 279 P.2d 158, vacated.

1. Searches and Seizures ⇨7(1)

Dictograph installations, which are made by police officers and which violate constitutional provisions, cannot be made lawful by authorization of head of police department or of the district attorney. U.S. C.A.Const. Amend. 4; West's Ann.Const. art. 1, § 19; Pen.Code, § 653h.

2. Searches and Seizures ⇨7(1)

In absence of some grave emergency, the Fourth Amendment interposes a magistrate between the citizen and the police so that an objective mind might weigh the need to invade privacy of home in order to enforce the law. U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 4.

3. Searches and Seizures ⇨7(4)

Lawless search and seizure by private person acting in a private capacity does not constitute a violation by a state or federal agency of constitutional guaranties. U.S. C.A.Const. Amend. 4; West's Ann.Const. art. 1, § 19.

4. Criminal Law ⇨394

Searches and Seizures ⇨7(10)

Where secret entry of defendant's room to hide microphone therein was done by engineer, who was a private person, but who was employed by district attorney and police department, installation of microphone and eavesdropping by police violated constitutional provisions against unreasonable search and seizures, and, therefore, evidence so obtained would have to be excluded in subsequent prosecution for extortion and for conspiracy to commit extortion. Pen.Code, §§ 182, 518, 653h; U.S.C.A. Const. Amend. 4; West's Ann.Const. art. 1, § 19.

5. Threats ⇨7

Evidence, which was independent of that illegally obtained, was sufficient to sustain conviction upon one count of extortion. Pen.Code, §§ 182, 518.

6. Criminal Law ⇨394, 1186(4)

Where excerpts of illegally obtained recordings constituted substantial and important part of evidence pertinent to certain counts charging extortion and conspiracy to commit extortion, and it could not be said that verdicts of guilty as to such counts rested upon evidence independent of them, admission in evidence of such recordings deprived defendant of a fair trial and resulted in a miscarriage of justice which would necessitate a new trial as to such counts. Pen.Code, §§ 182, 518; Const. art. 6, § 4½.

7. Criminal Law ⇨1144(15)

Where jury was instructed that each count in indictment charged separate and distinct offense and that they should consider evidence applicable to each alleged offense as though it were only accusation before them, it would be presumed that jury obeyed instruction and was not influenced to return guilty verdict as to Count 2 upon evidence other than that pertinent to such count.

8. Criminal Law ⇨1144(15)

It will be presumed that jury has followed instructions pertaining to evidence offered for impeachment purposes, evidence of offenses not committed by all codefendants, evidence of prior similar offenses, extrajudicial statements of one of the codefendants, and evidence applicable only to one of the codefendants.

9. Criminal Law ⇨1137(1)

Where defendant's counsel were offered but did not avail themselves of opportunities to hear recordings from which transcripts which were admitted in evidence were obtained, defendant would not be heard to complain that he had been denied reasonable opportunities to hear the recordings.

10. Criminal Law $\hookrightarrow$ 627½

Where defendant, whose conversations were subject of the recordings and transcriptions thereof, did not suggest what useful purpose would have been served by his counsel's hearing the recordings or reading transcriptions and did not suggest that transcriptions of portions of recordings not introduced in evidence would have contained anything relevant to his case, he would not be heard to complain of refusal to grant his request for copies of transcriptions of portions of recordings not introduced in evidence.

11. Criminal Law $\hookrightarrow$ 372(1), 1169(2)

Evidence, which tended to show extortions and attempted extortions other than those charged, was relevant to certain extortion charge on ground that it tended to show criminal methods and purposes similar to those shown by testimony of the particular extortion charged, and, therefore, that part of such evidence which was legally obtained was properly admitted, and admission of other part was not reversible error, since it was merely cumulative of proof satisfactorily establishing guilt under such count. Pen.Code, §§ 182, 518

12. Criminal Law $\hookrightarrow$ 432

Whole issues, not just portions, of defendant's magazine were relevant and admissible in extortion prosecution, in view of fact that the magazines were an instrumentality by which defendant carried out his threats to blast his victims and in which the victims, as testified to by one victim, were "told" to advertise. Pen.Code, §§ 182, 518.

13. Witnesses $\hookrightarrow$ 277(4)

Where, on direct examination in extortion prosecution, defendant testified, in effect, that he had not committed the extortions charged; in permitting prosecution, over objection, to cross-examine defendant as to similar offenses to which he had not referred in his testimony in chief was not error, since the cross-examination was directed primarily to matters in defendant's general denial, that is, his purpose and motive and his general plan and scheme. Pen Code, §§ 182, 518, 1323.

14. Witnesses $\hookrightarrow$ 301

Under statute against compelling defendant to be a witness against himself, where defendant's testimony on cross-examination amounts to a general denial of truth of charges against him, permissible scope of cross-examination is very wide. Pen. Code, § 1323.

15. Criminal Law $\hookrightarrow$ 865(2)

Where trial had consumed 44 days, trial judge's requiring jury to deliberate from morning of December 18 until verdicts were returned in evening of December 22 did not constitute an undue prolongation of their deliberations or support defendant's claim that verdicts were coerced.

16. Criminal Law $\hookrightarrow$ 863(2)

Trial judge, who, after he had received note from jurors stating that further argument was likely to result in bodily harm to one or more jurors, instructed jury that, if any juror inflicted bodily harm on any other juror, he would take care of the situation and deal with it in manner which would make offender very sorry that incident had occurred, properly dealt with the situation.

Leo R. Friedman, San Francisco, for appellant.

Charles R. Garry and George Olshausen, San Francisco, amici curiae on behalf of appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Clarence A. Linn, Asst. Atty. Gen., and Victor Griffith, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

Thomas C. Lynch, Dist. Atty., San Francisco, amicus curiae on behalf of respondent.

PER CURIAM.

Defendants Tarantino and Eichenbaum were indicted on one count of conspiracy to commit extortion, Pen.Code, § 182, and three counts of extortion, Pen.Code, § 518. Defendant Tarantino alone appeals from a judgment of conviction entered on a jury verdict of guilty on all four counts and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

Tarantino (herein sometimes called defendant) published a weekly magazine and made weekly radio broadcasts. Nine witnesses testified that they had been "blasted" or threatened with "blasting" by defendant, but that he stopped his attacks and threats after they paid money to Eichenbaum, sponsored advertisements in defendant's magazine, and, in one case, agreed to sell the magazine to the public. Much of the evidence against defendant consisted of recordings of conversations in his hotel room introduced over objection that they had been obtained in violation of the provisions of the United States Constitution, Amend. 4, and the California Constitution, art. 1, § 19, against unreasonable searches and seizures. An inspector in the San Francisco Police Department testified that at the suggestion of the district attorney and the chief of inspectors he employed a sound engineer and had a locksmith make a key to defendant's hotel room. In December, 1951, the engineer, acting under the direction of the inspector and using the key that the locksmith made, entered defendant's room and installed a microphone behind a small hole in the ceiling. Wires from the microphone were strung up the airshaft, across adjacent roofs, and into an apartment that the police and district attorney had rented in a nearby building. The inspector and the engineer testified that they acted without defendant's knowledge or permission. From December, 1951, until February, 1953, the police listened to every sound that was made in defendant's room. They did not consider all of the conversations they overheard relevant to the investigation, but recorded only those they considered "pertinent" and "interesting." The recordings, totalling 198 reels of tape or approximately 500 hours of listening time, were edited by the district attorney and the police, arranged according to subject matter, and rerecorded in part on composite tapes. The district attorney introduced sixty selected excerpts in evidence, and since they related to threats, promises, and demands for money, they constituted corroborative evidence of the testimony of the prosecution's witnesses.

[1, 2] Defendant contends that this evidence was obtained by unconstitutional means. Irvine v. People of State of California, 1954, 347 U.S. 128, 132, 74 S.Ct. 381, 98 L.Ed. 561; Wolf v. People of State of Colorado, 1949, 338 U.S. 25, 27, 69 S.Ct. 1359, 93 L.Ed. 1782, and should therefore have been excluded. People v. Cahan, 1955, 44 Cal.2d 434, 282 P.2d 905; People v. Berger, 1955, 44 Cal.2d 459, 282 P.2d 509. The district attorney contends, however, that section 653h of the Penal Code permits the police to install and use a dictograph as was done in this case and that unless the section is unconstitutional the recordings were not obtained in violation of the constitutions. Section 653h provides that "Any person who, without consent of the * * * occupant, installs or attempts to install or use a dictograph in any house, room, [or] apartment * * * is guilty of a misdemeanor; provided, that nothing herein shall prevent the use and installation of dictographs by a regular salaried peace officer expressly authorized thereto by the head of his office or department or by a district attorney, when such use and installation are necessary in the performance of their duties in detecting crime and in the apprehension of criminals." It was pointed out in People v. Cahan, supra, that this section "does not and could not authorize violations of the Constitution" and that the proviso under which the officers in that case and this case "purported to act at most prevents their conduct from constituting a violation of that section itself." 44 Cal.2d at page 437, 282 P.2d at page 906. Since the statute does not purport to authorize any installations whatever, to interpret the proviso as authorizing conduct that the Constitution prohibits would not only render it subject to attack on that ground, Irvine v. People of State of California, supra, 1954, 347 U.S. 128, 132, 74 S.Ct. 381, but read into it words that are not there. Moreover, installations by police officers that violate the constitutional provisions cannot be made lawful by the authorization of the head of the police department or the district attorney. Those provisions protect the people from unreasonable invasions of their privacy by the police, and the determination of what is reasonable cannot be left to them. "Absent some grave emergency, the Fourth Amendment has interposed a magistrate between the citizen and the police. This was done not to shield criminals nor to make the home a safe haven for illegal activities. It was done so that an objective mind might weigh the need to invade that privacy in order to enforce the law. The right of privacy was deemed too precious to entrust to the discretion of those whose job is the detection of crime and the arrest of criminals." McDonald v. United States, 1948, 335 U.S. 451, 455, 69 S.Ct. 191, 193, 93 L.Ed. 153; see also, United States v. Jeffers, 1951, 342 U.S. 48, 51, 72 S.Ct. 93, 96 L.Ed. 59; Johnson v. United States, 1948, 333 U.S. 10, 14, 68 S.Ct. 367, 92 L.Ed. 436; United States v. Lefkowitz, 1932, 285 U.S. 452, 464, 52 S.Ct. 420, 76 L.Ed. 877; Drayton v. United States, 5 Cir., 1953, 205 F.2d 35, 37.

[3,4] It is true that the secret entry of defendant's room and the hiding of the microphone were done by the engineer, a private person, and that a lawless search and seizure by a private person acting in a private capacity is not a violation by a state or federal agency of constitutional guaranties. Burdeau v. McDowell, 1921, 256 U.S. 465, 475, 41 S.Ct. 574, 65 L.Ed. 1048. The engineer, however, was employed by the district attorney and the police department. He worked under the direct supervision of an inspector of police, and was paid with public funds. Accordingly, his installation of the microphone as an agent of public officials and the clandestine eavesdropping by the police violated the constitutional provisions. Irvine v. People of State of California, supra, 1954, 347 U.S. 128, 132, 74 S.Ct. 381; Wolf v. People of State of Colorado, supra, 1949, 338 U.S. 25, 27, 69 S.Ct. 1359. Evidence so obtained must be excluded. People v. Cahan, supra, 1955, 44 Cal.2d 434, 282 P.2d 905; People v. Berger, supra, 1955, 44 Cal.2d 459, 282 P.2d 509.

[5] The People contend, however, that the admission of the evidence did not result in a miscarriage of justice and that the judgment must therefore be affirmed. Cal. Const., art. VI, § 4½. In support of this contention it is urged that the verdicts were supported by the testimony of twenty-one witnesses, that several of these witnesses testified that defendant committed acts of extortion similar to those with which he was charged, and that one of the acts of extortion for which he was indicted, that charged in Count 2, occurred before the microphone was hidden in his room. As to Count 2 it appears to us that the evidence, entirely independent of that illegally obtained, convincingly, if not overwhelmingly, establishes guilt, and, for the reasons hereinafter more particularly stated, we conclude that the verdict on this count should not be disturbed.

[6] As to Counts 1 (conspiracy of defendants Tarantino and Eichenbaum to commit extortion), 3 (extortion from Rourke), and 4 (extortion from Armstrong) the illegally obtained recordings contain evidence immediately and directly tending to prove the charged offenses. The sixty excerpts of illegally obtained recordings were played repeatedly to the court and jury. They contained the names of the complaining witnesses and defendant's recorded remarks connected these names, insofar as Counts 1, 3 and 4 are concerned, with threats and demands for money. Since the recordings clearly constituted a substantial and important part of the evidence pertinent to the last mentioned counts, it cannot be said that the verdicts as to those counts rested on evidence independent of them. See Stevens v. Snow, 1923, 191 Cal. 58, 67, 214 P. 968. Accordingly their admission in evidence deprived the defendant of a fair trial and resulted in a miscarriage of justice which necessitates a new trial as to such counts.

The circumstances of the commission of the offense against Paul Vlasoff, Count 2, as related in his testimony, are as follows: He had known Tarantino and Eichenbaum since 1950. In 1950 Eichenbaum came into the Club Continental, a bar operated by Vlasoff, and "told" Vlasoff to put an advertisement in Tarantino's magazine, Hollywood Life. Vlasoff said that he did not care to advertise his bar in Tarantino's magazine. Eichenbaum said, "You don't have to do that, just put a blood bank ad in there." Vlasoff agreed to place the advertisement and paid $25.

In 1951 Vlasoff operated both the Club Continental and a card room. Eichenbaum came into the card room in July or August, 1951, and said that Tarantino was "awfully mad" at Vlasoff and was going to "blast" him on his radio program the next day. At Vlasoff's request Eichenbaum placed a telephone call to Tarantino and Vlasoff talked with him. Tarantino told Vlasoff that Vlasoff was "getting away with murder, booking horses, and a crap game," and that Tarantino was going to "blast" him. Vlasoff said, "What can I do to make up? * * I don't want you to blast me on the air tomorrow, otherwise I'll have to close up the place." Tarantino replied that Vlasoff should talk with Eichenbaum. Eichenbaum talked further with Tarantino on the telephone, then told Vlasoff that Tarantino would "forget the incident" for $500. Vlasoff protested against the amount. After further negotiations they agreed upon a figure of $200. Also Eichenbaum told Vlasoff, "you will have to put an ad in there to keep him quiet." Vlasoff agreed to this. He paid the $200 and was billed for but did not pay for an advertisement in Hollywood Life.

As stated, the offense charged in Count 2 occurred, according to the testimony of Vlasoff, in July or August, 1951. The listening and recording device by which evidence was illegally obtained was not installed until December, 1951. There is no mention in the evidence obtained by the device of the alleged offense against Vlasoff. There is brief mention by Tarantino in one of his recorded conversations of "Paul" and "the Continental" but it is not in connection with any extortion.

Independently of the recordings, the effect of Vlasoff's testimony describing the commission of the offense against him is impressively strengthened by the testimony of other witnesses, the victims of Counts 3 and 4 and the victims of extortions not charged against the defendants, showing the pattern of defendant's criminal operations.

This admissible evidence of other offenses is of such probative, corroborative effect that the record as a whole, notwithstanding its further content of illegally obtained evidence, falls short of leading us to the opinion that as to this count of the indictment (Count 2), defendant's conviction can be said to constitute a miscarriage of justice. Cal.Const., art. VI, § 4½.

[7,8] In this connection it is to be noted that the jury were instructed that "Each count set forth in the Indictment charges a separate and distinct offense. You must consider the evidence applicable to each alleged offense as though it were the only accusation before you for consideration, and you must state your finding as to each count in a separate verdict, uninfluenced by the mere fact that your verdict as to any other count or counts is in favor of, or against, the defendants. They may be convicted or acquitted upon any or all of the offenses charged, depending upon the evidence and the weight you give to it, under the Court's instructions." It is to be presumed that the jury obeyed this instruction and was not influenced to return a guilty verdict as to Count 2 upon evidence other than that pertinent to this count. People v. Dabb, 1948, 32 Cal.2d 491, 499, 197 P.2d 1 (it must be assumed that the jury followed instructions that evidence as to offenses of co-defendants which was not connected with defendant could not be considered against him); People v. Lamendola, 1953, 119 Cal.App.2d 570, 572, 259 P.2d 982 (it must be presumed that the jury followed instructions that they were to consider certain evidence solely for the purpose of impeachment); People v. Grimes, 1952, 113 Cal.App.2d 365, 371, 248 P.2d 130, 134 ("It will be presumed that the jurors were true to their oaths and followed the various admonitions and instructions of the court", particularly with reference to evidence of prior similar offenses); People v. Martinez, 1937, 19 Cal.App.2d 599, 604, 66 P.2d 161 (it may be assumed that the jury followed the instruction that the extrajudicial statement of each defendant could be considered only as to him and not as to his co-defendants); People v. Griffin, 1935, 9 Cal.App.2d 246, 249, 49 P.2d 321

(it must be assumed that jury heeded the instruction that evidence applicable to one defendant can be considered only as against that defendant).

[9,10] In addition to the claim that the recordings were inadmissible because they were illegally obtained, defendant presents other contentions. He urges that he was denied a reasonable opportunity to hear and decipher the illegally obtained recordings before or after excerpts therefrom were received in evidence. The record shows that defense counsel were offered and did not avail themselves of opportunities to hear the recordings. Defendant urges, further, that the court should have granted his requests for copies of transcriptions, prepared by the prosecution, of those portions of the recordings which were not introduced in evidence. Defendant, whose conversations were the subject of the recordings and transcriptions, does not suggest what useful purpose would have been served by his counsel's hearing the recordings or reading the transcriptions; he does not suggest that they contained anything relevant to this case.

[11] Defendant complains of the admission of evidence, some properly and some illegally obtained, which tends to show extortions and attempted extortions other than those charged. Such evidence is relevant to the Vlasoff extortion for it tends to show criminal methods and purposes similar to those shown by the testimony of Vlasoff. See People v. Costa, 1953, 40 Cal. 2d 160, 167, 252 P.2d 1 and cases there cited. Accordingly, such of it as was legally obtained was properly admitted; the portions of it which were unlawfully obtained were merely cumulative of the proof, which as hereinabove discussed, satisfactorily establishes guilt on Count 2 independently of the evidence improperly admitted.

[12] Defendant complains of the admission in evidence of approximately 200 issues of his magazine, Hollywood Life, which were found in his room at the time of his arrest. These magazines are clearly relevant and in themselves constitute overwhelming proof of certain of the elements in the case against defendant. He argues, however, that prejudice from the admission of this evidence appears from the facts that the magazines contained not only relevant material but also material not relevant to the crimes charged and that the jury asked for and were allowed to have the magazines in the jury room during their deliberations. Defendant's original objection to the introduction of this evidence was on the sole ground that the prosecution had not shown that defendant edited or wrote the material in Hollywood Life. The prosecution had shown, however, that defendant was its publisher. Thereafter, defendant asked that the magazines be excluded from evidence and suggested that only such portions as were pertinent should be received in evidence. The magazines as a whole, and not merely selected portions thereof, were relevant since, as shown by other evidence, they were an instrumentality by which defendant carried out his threats to "blast" his victims and the victims, as Vlasoff testified, were "told" to advertise in the magazine.

[13,14] Tarantino on direct examination testified in effect that he did not commit the extortions charged. The prosecution, over objection, cross-examined him as to other, similar offenses to which he had not referred in his testimony in chief. He contends that his cross-examination improperly went beyond "matters about which he was examined in chief." Pen.Code, § 1323. The contention is without merit. Since Tarantino's testimony on direct examination amounted to a general denial of the truth of the charges against him, "the permissible scope of cross-examination is very wide." People v. Zerillo, 1950, 36 Cal.2d 222, 228, 223 P.2d 223, 227. The cross-examination here was directed primarily to matters implicit in Tarantino's general denial, i. e., his purpose and motive, his general plan and scheme.

Defendant urges that the following circumstances show that the verdicts were coerced: The jury retired to deliberate on the morning of December 18 and the verdicts were returned on the evening of December 22. At 4 p. m. on December 19 the jury came into court after they had sent the judge a note signed by the foreman which stated, "We cannot agree on any count." The foreman told the judge that the division of the jury was nine to three. (At no time was it disclosed how many votes were for acquittal and how many for conviction.)

At 10:40 a. m. on December 21 the foreman gave the judge a note which stated that the jury "stand 11 to 1, and no chance of a change"; another juror had written, "Any further argument is very likely to result in bodily harm to one or more jurors." The judge instructed the jury at some length to consider the case dispassionately, and said, "I might just say, and this is not a threat, that if any juror inflicts any bodily harm on any other juror, I certainly would take care of that situation and deal with it in a manner that would make the offender very sorry that the incident occurred, if it does occur. Now, that is not a threat; that is just a rather blunt statement, but I beg all of you to put aside any ill feeling that you might have, if you have any. * * * You are not partisans or advocates but judges. Now, if—don't let any feeling of pride or feeling of personal hurt or animosity prevent you from discussing this case with calmness and with equanimity."

On December 22 the judge received three notes. One, written by the foreman on the night of December 21, stated, "deliberation is proceeding in a friendly atmosphere. We are determined to continue in this manner whether we eventually reach a verdict or not." A note from a juror, marked 3:35 p. m., December 22, stated, "The opposed juror states he is withholding information from us until tomorrow morning. He states he is protecting three interests, the State, the defense and the jury." And another note from the foreman, also marked 3:35 p. m., December 22, stated, "We are not deliberating now and have not been deliberating during many long periods of time previous to this. * * * It is the opinion of everyone that we cannot do any more."

At 4:30 p. m. the judge called the jury into the courtroom and said, "Now, it is your duty, under your oaths as jurors, to deliberate, and to refuse to discuss the case further is a violation of your oaths as jurors.

I know that you have been very patient and have been here a long time, and maybe tempers wear thin, but it is your duty to deliberate until the court excuses you." The judge pointed out that the jury need not be in agreement as to all counts and asked them to deliberate "somewhat further." At 8:45 p. m. they returned with the verdicts.

[15, 16] There was nothing in the statements of the trial judge, representative portions of which are quoted above, which suggested an opinion as to what verdicts should be reached, nor was there any improper pressure upon the jury to agree. Cf. People v. Walker, 1949, 93 Cal.App.2d 818, 821-825, 209 P.2d 834, and cases there cited and summarized; People v. Crowley, 1950, 101 Cal.App.2d 71, 75-78, 224 P.2d 748. It does not appear that the judge required the jury to prolong their deliberations unduly, particularly in view of the fact that the trial had consumed 44 days. The judge dealt properly with the suggested "bodily harm to one or more jurors." We conclude that the record does not support defendant's claim that the verdicts were coerced.

Other arguments of defendant do not relate to matters which could have had a prejudicial effect as to the conviction upon Count 2 and need not be specifically discussed.

The judgment and order on Count 2 are affirmed; on Count 1, 3 and 4 the judgment and order are reversed and the cause is remanded for a new trial.

SPENCE, Justice.

I concur.

The majority opinion reverses as to counts 1, 3, and 4 upon the authority of People v. Cahan, 44 Cal.2d 434, 282 P.2d 905, and People v. Berger, 44 Cal.2d 459, 282 P.2d 509. I dissented in those cases and my views remain unchanged concerning the undesirability there of departing from the previously established nonexclusionary rule. Nevertheless, the majority there decided that the earlier cases should be overruled, and that the exclusionary rule should be adopted. Since the decision of the cited cases, the exclusionary rule has become the rule in this state governing the admissibility of evidence; and the trial courts have been required to accept and apply it. I have reluctantly determined that I should now yield to the views of the majority and accept the exclusionary rule as the established rule.

The reasons for my determination may be briefly stated. The exclusionary rule, as established by the Cahan and Berger decisions, is admittedly merely a "rule of evidence." People v. Cahan, supra, 44 Cal. 2d at page 450, 282 P.2d at page 910. Concerning the desirability of adopting the exclusionary rule, there has been sharp disagreement throughout the years among the best legal minds. It being merely a rule of evidence, I believe that the paramount consideration now, in the interest of the orderly administration of justice in this state, is that there be a firmly established rule which will not be subject to change from time to time with the possible change in the views of a single member of this court. My views respecting the desirability of adhering to an established rule constituted one of the reasons for my dissent in the Cahan and Berger cases. In the situation now confronting me, that same reason would seem to indicate that I should accept the rule established by the majority opinions in those cases.

Furthermore, it is clear from the opinion in the Cahan case, that this court still has before it the difficult task of adopting "workable rules" to supplement the general exclusionary rule. People v. Cahan, supra, 44 Cal.2d at page 451, 282 P.2d 905. Numerous cases are now pending here involving the determination of such workable rules. Other pending cases, like the present one, call for a determination of the question of whether the admission of evidence, which should have been excluded under the exclusionary rule, has resulted in a miscarriage of justice. Const. Art. VI, sec. 4½. It appears desirable that all members of this court should participate in the determination of the numerous questions presented by the pending cases, and it further appears that full participation by any member of this court in the determination of many of these important questions will be possible only if such member is willing to accept the exclusionary rule as the established rule. If perchance, either the exclusionary rule itself, or any other rule that this court may adopt to supplement it, should prove unsatisfactory, it is within the province of the Legislature to deal with this important evidentiary problem in such manner as it may deem appropriate.

EDMONDS, J., concurs.

TRAYNOR, Justice.

I dissent.

I would reverse the judgment and order on all counts.

Defendants were convicted of four crimes alleged to be part of an extensive criminal venture whereby Tarantino used threats of exposure by magazine and radio to extort money from his victims. Since the victims were of unsavory character, to convince the jury, it was necessary for the prosecution to substantiate its case by evidence that the victims were telling the truth. It accomplished this purpose by introducing sixty excerpts of illegally obtained recordings of conversations that took place in Tarantino's room. These recordings permeated the prosecution's case, and the record demonstrates that they weighed heavily with the jury in substantiating the testimony of the victims. After the jury had been out for over a day, the jurors reported that they could not agree on any count of the indictment. Thereafter excerpts of the recordings were repeatedly played to them at their request, and not until after four days of deliberation were they able to reach a verdict.

The majority opinion concedes that under these circumstances the admission of the illegally obtained evidence was prejudicial as to three of the counts. It concludes, however, that as to Count 2, no prejudice is shown. It reaches this conclusion on the following grounds: (1) The alleged Vlasoff extortion occurred before the microphone was hidden in Tarantino's room, and there "is no mention in the evidence obtained by the device of the alleged offense against Vlasoff." (2) Vlasoff's testimony is "impressively strengthened by the testimony of other witnesses, the victims of Counts 3 and 4 and the victims of extortions not charged against the defendants, showing the pattern of defendant's criminal operations." (3) The jury was instructed that "Each count set forth in the Indictment charges a separate and distinct offense. You must consider the evidence applicable to each alleged offense as though it were the only accusation before you for consideration, and you must state your finding as to each count in a separate verdict, uninfluenced by the mere fact that your verdict as to any other count or counts is in favor of, or against, the defendants. They may be convicted or acquitted upon any or all of the offenses charged, depending upon the evidence and the weight you give to it, under the Court's instructions." (4) "It is to be presumed that the jury obeyed this instruction and was not influenced to return a guilty verdict as to Count 2 upon evidence other than that pertinent to this count." When these grounds are viewed in the light of the record they demonstrate that the admission of the illegally obtained evidence was just as prejudicial with respect to the Vlasoff count as it was with respect to the others.

Vlasoff testified that during the pendency of the present proceedings he had been indicted for attempting to steal money by means of fraudulent and marked cards and loaded dice, that he had been a pimp living off the earnings of prostitutes, and that he had been arrested at different times for vagrancy, pimping, gambling, and after-hours sales of liquor. He also admitted committing perjury for $1,000 by signing a false affidavit. Had his testimony stood alone, it is doubtful that it would have convinced the jury of defendants' guilt on Count 2. What other evidence would the jury consider "pertinent to this count?" It would consider the same evidence that the majority opinion considers relevant to sustain the conviction on Count 2, namely, the evidence "showing the pattern of defendant's criminal operations," evidence that, with respect to crimes not charged, was only admissible because it was relevant as showing "criminal methods and purposes similar to those shown by the testimony of Vlasoff." Inextricably intermixed with the admissible relevant evidence of other crimes was the inadmissible evidence of those crimes provided by the recordings. The jury could not rationally determine whether the testimony of the other victims "impressively strengthened" Vlasoff's testimony until it determined whether those victims were telling the truth, and it would inevitably turn to the recordings in making that determination.

The judgment in this case must stand or fall as a whole. Since all of the offenses charged were part of one pattern of alleged criminal conduct, evidence of each offense was relevant to prove all of the others. The indictment itself listed defendants' conversations with Vlasoff as overt acts of the conspiracy charged in Count 1. In reaching its verdict on Count 2 the jury was not required so to compartmentalize the evidence as to disregard the evidence on the other counts, for the evidence on the other counts, including the illegally obtained evidence, was not only relevant but "pertinent" to Count 2, and indeed, the majority opinion itself relies on the legally obtained evidence on the other counts to affirm the conviction on Count 2. Since the jury was instructed to consider all of the relevant evidence, it cannot be assumed that in reaching its verdict on Count 2 it relied solely on the legally obtained evidence on the other counts to substantiate Vlasoff's testimony and disregarded the illegally obtained evidence on those counts. Nor can it be assumed that it relied on both classes of evidence in reaching its verdict on Counts 1, 3, and 4 but only on legally obtained evidence in reaching its verdict on Count 2. The conclusion is inescapable that if the admission of the illegally obtained evidence was prejudicial as to Counts 1, 3, and 4, it was also prejudicial as to Count 2.

GIBSON, C. J., concurs.

CARTER, Justice.

I dissent.

I am in full accord with the views expressed by Mr. Justice TRAYNOR in his dissenting opinion, and I do not believe it is possible for anyone to say with any degree of sincerity or conviction that the conceded error in the admission of material evidence unlawfully obtained does not permeate the entire record and equally affect the determination of the jury as to Count 2 as well as to the other counts. This must be apparent when we consider the effect of the instruction given by the court to the jury relative to the evidence offered of other similar offenses which the prosecution claims the defendant had committed.¹ In view of this instruction it must be assumed that the jury considered all of the illegally obtained evidence for whatever bearing "it might have on the question of whether defendants are innocent or guilty of any crime charged against them in this action" and if such illegally obtained evidence tended to show that defendant had a motive for the offense charged against him in Count 2, or that he entertained the intent which is a necessary element of said offense, or that he possessed knowledge that might have been useful in the commission of said offense, or that there existed in his mind a plan, scheme, system or design which fitted into the commission of said offense, or that there existed in his mind a consciousness of guilt, it would be relied upon to establish his guilt of the offense charged in Count 2. Certainly it cannot be said that the tremendous volume of illegally obtained evidence which was offered by the prosecution in this case did not tend to establish some or all of the above mentioned elements of the offense charged in Count 2, and therefore I think it is only fair to assume that the illegally obtained evidence admitted over the objection of defendant weighed heavily with the jury in determining the guilt of the defendant Tarantino of the crime charged in Count 2. In view of this clear and obvious situation I do not think it can fairly be said that the admission of this evidence did not result in a miscarriage of justice as to Count 2 but did result in a miscarriage of justice as to Counts 1, 3 and 4.

Without considering the effect of the above quoted instruction relating to the applicability of the illegally obtained evidence to Count 2, the majority opinion states: "The sixty excerpts of illegally obtained recordings were played repeatedly to the court and jury. They contained the names of the complaining witnesses and defendant's recorded remarks connected these names, insofar as Counts 1, 3 and 4 are concerned, with threats and demands for money. Since the recordings clearly constituted a substantial and important part of the evidence pertinent to the last mentioned counts, it cannot be said that the verdicts as to those counts rested on evidence independent of them. See Stevens v. Snow, 1923, 191 Cal. 58, 67, 214 P. 968. Accordingly their admission in evidence deprived the defendant of a fair trial and resulted in a miscarriage of justice which necessitates a new trial as to such counts." As justification for its holding that the admission of the illegally obtained evi-

1. "Evidence was offered in this case for the purpose of showing that the defendants committed other crimes than the ones of which they are accused, and for which they are on trial in this action. Such evidence was received for a limited purpose only, not to prove distinct offenses or continued criminality, but for such bearing, if any, as it might have on the question whether defendants are innocent or guilty of any crime charged against them in this action.

"You are not permitted to consider that evidence for any other purpose, and as to that purpose, you must weigh such evidence as you do all other in the case. You are not permitted to consider that evidence for any other purpose. The value, if any, of such evidence, depends on whether it tends to show, first, that the defendants had a motive for the commission of the offense charged against them in this action, or, second, that the defendants entertained the intent which is a necessary element of the alleged crime for which they are now on trial, as pointed out in these instructions, or, third, that the defendants possessed knowledge that might have been useful in the commission of any crime for which they are now on trial; or, fourth, that there existed in the minds of the defendants a plan, scheme, system or design, into which fitted the commission of the offense for which they are now on trial; or, fifth, that there existed in the minds of the defendants a consciousness of guilt."

dence deprived the defendant of a fair trial and resulted in a miscarriage of justice which necessitates a new trial as to Counts 1, 3 and 4, but not as to Count 2, the majority opinion states: "Independently of the recordings, the effect of Vlasoff's testimony describing the commission of the offense against him is impressively strengthened by the testimony of other witnesses, the victims of Counts 3 and 4 and the victims of extortions not charged against the defendants, showing the pattern of defendant's criminal operations. This admissible evidence of other offenses is of such probative, corroborative effect that the record as a whole, notwithstanding its further content of illegally obtained evidence, falls short of leading us to the opinion that as to this count of the indictment (Count 2), defendant's conviction can be said to constitute a miscarriage of justice. Cal. Const., art. VI, § 4½." The majority opinion then discusses the effect of the instructions given by the court to the jury with respect to the weighing of the evidence as to each count in the indictment and the determination of the sufficiency of the evidence as to each count independent of the other, and concludes that it must be presumed that the jury followed these instructions. But the majority makes no mention of the instruction hereinabove quoted and the effect such instruction might have in causing the jury to give consideration to the illegally obtained evidence in arriving at their verdict as to Count 2. I am disposed to agree with the majority that it must be presumed that the jury followed the instructions of the court, but in so doing they would be required to give consideration to much if not all of the illegally obtained evidence in their determination of the guilt or innocence of the defendant of the offense charged in Count 2, and therefore if, as the majority hold, such illegally obtained evidence deprived defendant of a fair trial and resulted in a miscarriage of justice as to Counts 1, 3 and 4, it is inescapable that a fair and honest consideration of the record points unerringly to the same conclusion as to Count 2.

Since the majority here invokes section 4½ of article VI of the Constitution of California as the basis for its holding that the judgment as to Count 2 should be affirmed, I think it might be well to give consideration to the applicability of this provision to the case at bar. In my opinion section 4½ of article VI of the Constitution of California postulates a wise and salutary concept of appellate review in both criminal and civil cases. Its adoption marked a departure from the rigid application of technical rules which had been previously invoked by this court and which had resulted in the reversal of judgments in criminal cases where there was scarcely any doubt as to the guilt of the defendant and it was obvious that form rather than substance was playing too dominant a role in the decisions of our courts. Hence the people saw fit in the adoption of this provision to write into the Constitution the concept that a reviewing court should not reverse a judgment because of a mere technical error which did not go to the merits of the case or could not possibly affect the result and thereby enjoined upon the reviewing court the duty to examine the entire record and determine therefrom whether or not the error complained of had resulted in a miscarriage of justice before ordering a reversal of the judgment. This amendment was adopted about the time that I began the practice of law, and I believed at the time of its adoption and still believe that it constituted a major salutary step in the administration of justice in this state. While this constitutional provision has not been applied with uniformity by our courts, I think the best reasoned cases have uniformly held that it cannot be invoked to cure an error which affects the substantial rights of the litigant, or, in other words, an error which might affect the determination of a material issue in a case. As early as 1913 this court speaking through Mr. Justice Sloss in the case of People v. O'Bryan, 165 Cal. 55, at pages 65-66, 130 P. 1042, at page 1046, made the following illuminating observations with reference to the application of this section to the review of a judgment of conviction in a criminal case:

"This much, however, we think may be safely said. Section 4½ of article

6 of our Constitution must be given at least the effect of abrogating the old rule that prejudice is presumed from any error of law. Where error is shown, it is the duty of the court to examine the evidence and ascertain from such examination whether the error did or did not in fact work any injury. The mere fact of error does not make out a prima facie case for reversal which must be overcome by a clear showing that no injury could have resulted.

"On the other hand, we do not understand that the amendment in question was designed to repeal or abrogate the guaranties accorded persons accused of crime by other parts of the same Constitution or to overthrow all statutory rules of procedure and evidence in criminal cases. When we speak of administering 'justice' in criminal cases, under the English or American system of procedure, we mean something more than merely ascertaining whether an accused is or is not guilty. It is an essential part of justice that the question of guilt or innocence shall be determined by an orderly legal procedure, in which the substantial rights belonging to defendants shall be respected. For example, if a court should undertake to deny to a defendant charged with a felony the right of trial by jury, and after a hearing of the evidence render a judgment of conviction, it cannot be doubted that such judgment should be set aside even though there had been the clearest proof of guilt. Or, if a defendant, after having been once acquitted, should be again brought to trial and thereupon convicted, in disregard of his plea that he had been once in jeopardy, it would hardly be suggested that, because he was in fact guilty, no 'mis-carriage of justice' had occurred."

In People v. Sarazzawski, 27 Cal.2d 7, 11, 161 P.2d 934, 936, decided in 1945, this court declared: "When a defendant has been denied any essential element of a fair trial or due process, even the broad saving provisions of section 4½ of article VI of our state Constitution cannot remedy the vice and the judgment cannot stand. People v. Mahoney, 201 Cal. 618, 627, 258 P. 607; People v. Adams, 76 Cal.App. 178, 186-187, 244 P. 106; People v. Gilliland, 39 Cal.App.2d 250, 264, 103 P.2d 179; People v. Duvernay, 43 Cal.App.2d 823, 829, 111 P. 2d 659. That section was not designed to 'abrogate the guaranties accorded persons accused of crime by other parts of the same Constitution or to overthrow all statutory rules of procedure and evidence in criminal cases. When we speak of administering "justice" in criminal cases, under the English or American system of procedure, we mean something more than merely ascertaining whether an accused is or is not guilty. It is an essential part of justice that the question of guilt or innocence shall be determined by an orderly legal procedure, in which the substantial rights belonging to defendants shall be respected.' People v. O'Bryan, 165 Cal. 55, 65, 130 P. 1042, 1046, opinion of Mr. Justice Sloss; People v. Wilson, 23 Cal.App. 513, 524, 138 P. 971."

In People v. Hall, 199 Cal. 451, 458, 249 P. 859, 861, Mr. Justice Shenk, speaking for a unanimous court, said: "The amendment by which said section 4½ was added to the Constitution was not 'designed to repeal or abrogate the guarantees accorded persons accused of crime by other parts of the same Constitution or to overthrow all statutory rules of procedure and evidence in criminal cases.' People v. O'Bryan, 165 Cal. 55, 130 P. 1042; People v. Frey, 165 Cal. 140, 131 P. 127; People v. Wilson, 23 Cal.App. 513, 138 P. 971; People v. Ho Kim You, 24 Cal.App. 451, 141 P. 950." (Emphasis added.)

In People v. Carmichael, 198 Cal. 534, 547, 246 P. 62, 67, Mr. Justice Curtis speaking for this court said: "No authority has been called to our attention which can be construed as holding that section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution can be relied upon to sustain the judgment herein. As we have already said, in our opinion it was prejudicial error for the court to refuse the appellant the right to examine the jurors as to the effect on their minds of the standing of the former jury. The ruling of the court in thus limiting the appellant in his examination of the jurors was, in our opinion, the deprival of the appellant of a fundamental right—a right to be tried by an impartial jury. It was never intended by this provision of the Constitution to take from the defendant in a criminal action his fundamental right to a jury trial or in any substantial manner to abridge this right. People v. Wismer, 58 Cal.App. 679, 688, 209 P. 259."

In People v. Bomar, 73 Cal.App. 372, 378, 238 P. 758, 760, the court said: "Neither do we think that section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution is applicable in the present case. Before any accused person can be called upon to defend himself on any charge prosecuted by information, he is entitled to a preliminary examination upon said charge, and the judgment of the magistrate before whom such examination is held as to whether the crime for which it is sought to prosecute him has been committed, and whether there is sufficient cause to believe him guilty thereof. These proceedings are essential to confer jurisdiction upon the court before whom he is placed on trial. To say that he was accorded a fair trial upon an information filed against him without a substantial compliance with these jurisdictional requirements, and therefore that there had been no miscarriage of justice, hardly meets the situation. Such an argument would apply with equal force to the validity of the conviction upon an information filed by the district attorney in a case where no preliminary examination at all had been held. Such practice would result, in legal effect, in wiping out all provisions of the Constitution and the Penal Code providing for preliminary examination, and in clothing the district attorney with unlimited authority to file information against whomsoever in his judgment he might consider guilty of crime. We do not believe that it was ever the intention to extend the scope of section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution to any such limits."

In People v. Salaz, 66 Cal.App. 173, 185, 225 P. 777, 781, the court said: "While it is true that section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution confers upon this court the power to weigh, to a limited extent, the entire evidence upon which a conviction was had, still 'we are not substituted for the jury. We are not to determine, as an original inquiry, the question of defendant's guilt or innocence.' We are to 'decide whether, in our judgment, any error committed has led to the verdict which was reached.' People v. O'Bryan, 165 Cal. 55, 130 P. 1042. (Italics ours.) And whenever we are unable to determine whether the defendant would have been convicted had erroneously admitted testimony been withheld from the jury's consideration, this section of the Constitution cannot be applied to uphold the judgment. People v. MacPhee, 26 Cal.App. 218, 146 P. 522. See, also, People v. Columbus, 49 Cal.App. [761] 763, 194 P. 288; Freeman v. Adams, [63 Cal. App. 225] 218 P. 600, and People v. Roe, 189 Cal. 548, 209 P. 560. After a most careful consideration of the entire cause, including the evidence, we are unable to determine whether the jury would or would not have convicted appellant had Dr. Wagner's opinion as to the position of the parties been withheld from them. This being so, we do not think that the judgment can be upheld by reason of this provision of the Constitution." (Emphasis added.)

In People v. Abbott, 132 Cal.App. 109, 114; 22 P.2d 566, 568, the court said: "Appellant, however, argues that, even if this be true, section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution should rescue the case from the fate of a new trial. We do not think this constitutional section permits us to consider the evidence of the whole case as a trial tribunal and sustain or reverse every judgment that reaches us upon our own 'verdict.' It does not intend to repeal the fundamental rights of trial by judge and jury where witnesses appear, and their testimony may be given such weight as their words, conduct, and appearance would seem to justify. There is certainly great doubt that the jury disregarded the court and found defendant guilty of one of the offenses excluded by the terms of the court's instructions. It is almost certain it did not. The defendant is entitled to a jury trial on all offenses charged against him before being punished for them, and we should not take the chance of depriving him of such right upon unreasonable and strained constructions and presumptions." (Emphasis added.)

The foregoing review of the authorities in this state relating to the application of section 4½, article VI, of the Constitution makes it crystal clear that an error such as the one here under review cannot be cured by the application of this section.

While a majority of this court has recently invoked this section for the purpose of affirming a judgment in a case where the appealing party had been denied the right to a peremptory challenge of a juror, its decision is clearly contrary to all the authorities, see my dissenting opinion in Buckley v. Chadwick, Cal., 289 P.2d 242, and it is obvious that this provision was only relied on in that case as some slight justification for the conclusion reached by the majority. In other words the majority desired to affirm the judgment and section 4½ of article VI was invoked even though the error there committed may have deprived the appellant of his right to a fair and impartial jury. No other case has gone this far or even approached it. The effect of such a decision is to permit the majority to resort to section 4½ of article VI as a device which may be used for the affirmation of any judgment regardless of the seriousness of the error committed. In my opinion this is the situation which exists in the case at bar. To state the matter pointedly, it simply amounts to this: A majority of this court desires to affirm the judgment in this case, and section 4½ of article VI of the Constitution is relied upon to cure any error which may have occurred so far as Count 2 is concerned.

I also agree with appellant that it was prejudicial error to admit in evidence some 200 weekly issues of Hollywood Life, a magazine published by defendant, and to permit these magazines to be examined by the jury during their deliberations. While these issues may have contained material evidence in support of the charges against the defendant, they also contained many articles which had no bearing whatsoever upon any of the offenses charged, but may have had the effect of prejudicing the jury against the defendant. These issues contained many articles attacking members of the police department of San Francisco including high officials in said department. They also contained many articles attacking officials and employees of one of the most powerful newspaper syndicates in California. They also contained articles attacking many public officials of San Francisco and California including the present attorney general. None of these articles had any bearing whatsoever upon any of the offenses charged against the defendant. It was therefore error of the most prejudicial character to admit in evidence the complete issues of these magazines and permit the jury to peruse the same.

Defendant may be an undesirable character. His conduct as disclosed by the record is such that it could not help but create resentment, animosity and ill will on behalf of many prominent, influential people. His attacks upon most if not all of these people appear to be wholly unjustified and deserving of condemnation, but the problem before this court in reviewing his conviction of the offenses charged is to determine whether or not he was accorded that fair and impartial trial guaranteed by the Constitution and laws of this state. Even a wicked, disreputable scandalmonger is entitled to a fair trial before he is convicted and punished. In my opinion the admission of the illegally obtained evidence and the issues of the Hollywood Life magazine constituted error of such magnitude that a fair and impartial trial was not had. Had this evidence been excluded it is not beyond the realm of probability that a different result may have been reached by the jury. The jury deliberated for five days before arriving at its verdict. This fact makes it obvious that at least some of the jurors were not convinced as to the guilt of the defendant on all of the counts, and it may be that Count 2 was the one regarding which the doubt existed. In this state of the record I am convinced that the only solution which can be reached by this court which will be consonant with the quality of justice which should be administered by a court of justice, is that the judgment as to all counts should be reversed and the defendant should be granted a new trial.

Rehearing denied; GIBSON, C. J., and CARTER and TRAYNOR, JJ., dissenting.

45 Cal.2d 684

CITY OF SUSANVILLE (a Municipal Corporation), Petitioner and Respondent,
v.

LEE C. HESS COMPANY (a Corporation),
Defendant and Appellant;

Ann Rathner, as City Clerk, etc., et al.,
Cross-Defendants and Respondents.
Sac. 6576.

Supreme Court of California.

In Bank.

Dec. 2, 1955.

Action brought by city to determine validity of proceedings theretofore taken under Improvement Act of 1911. The Superior Court, Lassen County, Bertram D. Janes, J., entered judgment declaring all proceedings taken to be valid, and the law-abiding contractor appealed. The Supreme Court, McComb, J. pro tem., held, inter alia, that where the city council had passed a resolution declaring a contractor to be the lowest bidder and awarding to the contractor a contract for work under the Act, the contract was thereby complete, and, in the absence of fraud, mutual mistake or some other ground of rescission, the city was without power to rescind its action and award the contract to the second lowest bidder.

Judgment reversed.

Opinion, 285 P.2d 1007, vacated.

1. Municipal Corporations ⇨374(1)

Where city council passed resolution awarding to contractor contract for work under Improvement Act of 1911 and later passed resolution rescinding first award and awarded contract to second lowest bidder, contractor did not lose its right to object to rescinding action taken by council or to litigate issue of validity of city's proceedings on ground that it had not exercised its administrative remedies by appealing to city council. Streets and Highways Code, §§ 5003, 5100 et seq., 5265 et seq., 5268.

2. Administrative Law and Procedure ⇨229

Where an administrative remedy is provided by statute, relief must be sought from administrative body and remedy exhausted before courts will act, and a court violating this rule acts in excess of jurisdiction. Streets and Highways Code, § 5003.

3. Administrative Law and Procedure ⇨225

Where a statute provides an administrative remedy and also provides an alternative judicial remedy, the rule requiring exhaustion of the administrative remedy has no application if the person aggrieved, having both remedies afforded him by the same statute, elects to use the judicial one. Streets and Highways Code, §§ 5003, 5100 et seq., 5265 et seq., 5268.

4. Municipal Corporations ⇨374(1)

Where contractor sought to litigate issue of validity of city proceedings and to object to action taken by city council in rescinding contract, section of Streets and Highways Code providing that exclusive remedy of any person affected or aggrieved by error, irregularity, informality, or neglect or omission of officer should be by appeal to legislative body in accordance with related provisions was inapplicable. Streets and Highways Code, §§ 5003, 5220, 5221, 5230 et seq., 5258, 5259, 5265-5268.

5. Municipal Corporations ⇨316, 490

Section of Streets and Highways Code providing that no error, irregularity, informality, and no neglect or omission of officer in any proceeding taken under certain statutes, which did not directly affect jurisdiction of legislative body to order work or improvement, should avoid or invalidate proceeding or assessment and that exclusive remedy of any person affected or aggrieved thereby should be by appeal to legislative body in accordance with related provisions, is a substantive, not procedural, provision, and grants right but provides for no machinery for enforcement. Streets and Highways Code, § 5003.

6. Municipal Corporations ⇨490

The only sections of Streets and Highways Code referring to appeal to legislative body are those sections which do not become operative until work or a part thereof has been done or assessment levied. Streets and Highways Code, §§ 5003, 5366 et seq.

7. Municipal Corporations $\S$ 321(1)

Section of Streets and Highways Code providing that no action with reference to assessments or review of proceedings, acts, determinations or to questions of validity of assessments, or to enjoin issuance of bonds, shall be maintained unless commenced within 30 days after recording of warrant, diagram and assessment is purely a statute of limitation against actions of an entirely different type from city's action to determine validity of proceedings theretofore taken under Improvement Act of 1911. Streets and Highways Code, §§ 5265 et seq., 5660.

8. Municipal Corporations $\S$ 354

Section of Streets and Highways Code describing operation of judgment upholding proceeding and conclusiveness of findings did not make council's action in rescinding first award and awarding contract to second lowest bidder "conclusive in the absence of actual fraud". Streets and Highways Code, §§ 5003, 5273.

9. Municipal Corporations $\S$ 325

Section of Streets and Highways Code describing operation of judgment upholding proceedings and conclusiveness of findings applies to those findings, conclusions and determinations which act authorizes legislative body to make. Streets and Highways Code, §§ 5221, 5233, 5273, 5368.

10. Municipal Corporations $\S$ 490

Section of Streets and Highways Code providing for written protest as remedy for an owner of property liable to be assessed must be read with succeeding section providing for disposition of such protests. Streets and Highways Code, §§ 5220, 5221.

11. Municipal Corporations $\S$ 374(1)

Section of Streets and Highways Code providing for appeal to legislative body and describing person entitled to appeal and matter appealable marks first point in any proceedings under the act at which contractor is bound, if he be aggrieved, to appeal to the council, and does not apply until some of work has been done or until assessment has been made. Streets and Highways Code, §§ 5003, 5366.

12. Municipal Corporations $\S$ 330(1)

Improvement Act of 1911 was originally enacted and has maintained its place in statute books because of fixed legislative policy that fairness, efficiency and security in construction of public works can best be attained by statutory scheme which would require that such contracts for such work must be let at competitive bidding. Streets and Highways Code, § 5100 et seq.

13. Municipal Corporations $\S$ 266

Improvement Act of 1911 must be followed by legislative bodies, and no attempt upon their part to claim authority to act except strictly in accord with such act can be successful. Streets and Highways Code, § 5100 et seq.

14. Contracts $\S$ 22(1)

In letting of contracts for doing of public works, where legislative body or administrative officer is required by statute to call for bids and must under competitive bidding conditions let contract to lowest responsible bidder, making of award gives rise to contract between public body or agent and successful bidder. Streets and Highways Code, § 5100 et seq.

15. Municipal Corporations $\S$ 354

Though municipal corporation has discretion as to time and manner of corporate improvements and purchase of supplies, when discretion has been exercised and a contract made relative thereto, legislative function has been exhausted and duty has become purely ministerial, and contract so made cannot be impaired at option of municipality; hence, when bid has been accepted by proper authorities, such acceptance cannot be revoked. Streets and Highways Code, § 5100 et seq.

16. Municipal Corporations $\S$ 354

Where city council passed resolution declaring contractor to be lowest bidder and awarding to contractor contract for work under Improvement Act of 1911, contract was thereby complete, and, in absence of fraud, mutual mistake or some other ground of rescission, city was without power to rescind its action and award contract to second lowest bidder. Streets and Highways Code, § 5100 et seq.

17. Municipal Corporations $\S$ 336(1)

Statute requiring that notice of award of public works contract shall be published by clerks was not intended as method whereby communication of acceptance by city should be given to bidder, but is limited in its effect to notification required to be given to property owners interested. Streets and Highways Code, § 5248; West's Ann.Civ. Code, §§ 1550, 1565, 1581.

18. Municipal Corporations ⇨336(1)

Resolution of common council making award of public works contract is public act of public body and is a matter of which notice may be presumed, so far as interested parties, such as bidders, are concerned. Streets and Highways Code, §§ 5100 et seq., 5248.

19. Declaratory Judgment ⇨395

On appeal from action brought by city to determine validity of proceedings theretofore taken under Improvement Act of 1911, District Court of Appeal could not assume that, if proceedings were declared valid, there would be on part of city any refusal to perform ministerial acts, and therefore court would not mandate city to perform affirmatively any acts. Streets and Highways Code, §§ 5100 et seq., 5265 et seq.

Clewe, Blade & McDonald and Robert W. Anderson, Oroville, for appellant.

Donald P. Cady, City Atty., Susanville, Sturgis, Den-Dulk, Douglass & Henes and Eugene K. Sturgis, Oakland, for respondents.

Richard C. Waltz, City Atty., Beverly Hills, Archie L. Walters, City Atty., Burbank, Grayson Price, City Atty., Chico, Thomas F. McBride, City Atty., Concord, Donald A. Stewart, City Atty., San Diego, Donald H. Smith, City Atty., Seaside, C. M. Ozias, City Atty., Fresno, Leo R. B. Henrickson, City Atty., La Mesa, Allen Grimes, City Atty., Modesto, John W. Collier, City Atty., Oakland, Hilton W. Melby, Asst. City Atty., Oakland, Karl Brooks, City Atty., Petaluma, J. F. DuPaul, City Atty., San Diego, and John A. Nejedly, Walnut Creek, as amici curiae on behalf of respondents.

McCOMB, Justice pro tem.

This cause was transferred to this court after decision by the District Court of Appeal, Third Appellate District. Upon further examination of the record, we adopt the opinion of Mr. Presiding Justice Van Dyke, with such omissions and additions as hereinafter appear, as and for the decision of this court. As modified, it reads [285 P. 2d 1008]:

"The City of Susanville adopted a resolution of intention to do certain public work within its boundaries, proceeding under the Improvement Act of 1911, now contained in Division 7, Part 3, of the Streets and Highways Code, § 5100 et seq. All prescribed action was duly taken, up to and including a call for bids, and Lee C. Hess Company, a corporation, submitted the lowest bid. The city council passed a resolution declaring Hess Company to be the lowest responsible bidder and awarding to it the contract for doing the work. Four days later, and acting upon mistaken advice by the Assistant Director of the Department of Professional and Vocational Standards that Hess Company was not a properly licensed contractor, the city council held a special meeting attended by all its members, but without any notice to Hess Company, and thereat passed a resolution declaring that Hess Company had not been qualified to bid the work and purporting to award the contract to one Katsaros, a bidder whose bid had been next lowest to that of Hess Company.

"In this case the trial court found that the Hess Company had been properly licensed at all material times. The first resolution awarding the contract to Hess Company directed, as required by the statute, that the city clerk publish notice of that award, but no notice was published. The second resolution directed the publication of notice of award to Katsaros, and that publication was made, and a proposed formal written contract was delivered to Katsaros. At this point, and before the formal contract was executed by Katsaros, the city began this action under the provisions of chapter 10 of said division 7 of said Streets and Highways Code, to determine the validity of proceedings theretofore taken. The code provides that at any time after bids have been received, and prior to the date fixed for the beginning of the work, the legislative body conducting the proceedings may bring an action in the superior court to determine the validity of the proceedings and the validity of any contract entered, or to be entered into pursuant thereto. Any contractor to whom a contract has been awarded may also bring the action. The action is declared to be in the nature of a proceeding in rem and anyone interested is given the right to appear and 'contest the validity of such proceedings and contract or uphold the same.' (§ 5268.) Hess Company answered the city's petition, asserting that the contract had been awarded to it and declaring its willingness to enter into the formal written contract in accordance with the award. It asked that the legislative body and other city officials be mandated to recognize it as the contractor for the work and to proceed to deal with it in that capacity. The trial court found in favor of the city, declaring all proceedings taken to be valid, including the second resolution which, in effect, rescinded the prior resolution awarding the contract to Hess Company and adjudging that a contract executed by the city and Katsaros would be a valid contract. All relief asked by Hess Company was denied. From that judgment Hess Company has appealed.

[1] "In support of its appeal Hess Company contends that when the city council made the award to it a binding contract between the city and the Hess Company arose; that the city's power to act further in the matter of making an award had been exhausted and that its action rescinding the award was a nullity. It contends further that the meeting at which the second and rescinding resolution was passed was an illegal meeting in that it was not held at the city hall as prescribed by law. Before examining these contentions we will consider the claim of the city that Hess Company lost all right it might have had to object to the rescinding action taken by the council or to litigate the issue of the validity of the city's proceedings because it had never appealed to the city council, that is to say, had not exercised its right to administrative remedies which the city contends was afforded it by the relevant statutes. The contention cannot be sustained.

[2, 3] "It is, of course, well settled that where an administrative remedy is provided by statute relief must be sought from the administrative body and the remedy exhausted before the courts will act; and that a court violating the rule acts in excess of jurisdiction. (Abelleira v. District Ct. of Appeal, 17 Cal.2d 280, 292, 109 P.2d 942, 132 A.L.R. 715.) It is equally well settled that where a statute provides an administrative remedy and also provides an alternative judicial remedy the rule requiring exhaustion of the administrative remedy has no application if the person aggrieved, and having both remedies afforded him by the same statute, elects to use the judicial one. (Scripps Memorial Hospital, Inc., v. California Emp. Comm., 24 Cal.2d 669, 673, 151 P.2d 109, 112, 155 A.L.R. 360.) * *"

[4, 5] In the present case judicial and administrative remedies were granted the Hess Company in the alternative. Section 5003 of the Streets and Highways Code, relied on by the city, reads as follows: "This division shall be liberally construed in order to effectuate its purposes. No error, irregularity, informality, and no neglect or omission of any officer, in any procedure taken under this division, which does not directly affect the jurisdiction of the legislative body to order the work or improvement, shall avoid or invalidate such proceeding or any assessment for the cost of work done thereunder. The exclusive remedy of any person affected or aggrieved thereby shall be by appeal to the legislative body in accordance with the provisions of this division." This section is inapplicable to the present case as will be seen from the following analysis of that section and various other sections of the Streets and Highways Code:

(a) Section 5003 is substantive, not a procedural provision. It grants a right but provides for no machinery to enforce this right.

(b) Sections 5220, 5258, 5259, 5265, 5266, 5267, and 5268 are purely procedural sections, providing the machinery which section 5003 does not.

(c) Section 5220 provides a remedy for an owner of property liable to be assessed and for no other class of persons. It does not provide for an appeal to the legislative body, but for a written protest.

(d) Section 5221 provides for the disposition of such protests.

(e) Sections 5230 et seq. provide for a change of work or change of assessment boundaries, and nothing else.

(f) Sections 5258 and 5259 are specifically limited by the terms of section 5258 to "any owner of, or other persons having any interest in, any lot or land liable to assessment * * *." Section 5258 does not provide for appeal to the legislative body but provides for filing a written notice with the clerk.

(g) Section 5265 provides for the bringing of an action to determine the validity of proceedings by the legislative body.

(h) Section 5266 grants the contractor the same right.

(i) Section 5267 and section 5268 merely provide what the nature of the action is, for publication of summons, and for appearance by any interested person in such action.

[6] (j) The only sections referring to appeal to the legislative body are sections 5366 et seq., and these sections do not become operative until the work or a part thereof has been done or assessment levied.

There is nothing in the act or in any of the cases interpreting the act which provides that the contractor must appeal to the legislative body, except under section 5366.

The statement in Stotts v. Meese, 39 Cal. App. 334, 178 P. 727, relied on by the city, that while there was nothing in the curative section (which is identical with section 5003) in the Vrooman Act which authorized the superintendent of streets to appeal to the city council for the correction of an assessment, nevertheless if the superintendent of streets had appealed, the city council could have corrected the error, was dictum in such case. Actually, the cited case is one wherein a property owner attacked the validity of an assessment, and is therefore not authority for any proposition now presented to us.

[7] Section 5660 of the Streets and Highways Code is also urged as authority for the proposition that the Hess Company may not maintain this action. The section provides that no action, suit, or proceeding with reference to assessments or with reference to review of proceedings, acts, determinations or to questions of validity etc. of assessments, or to enjoin the issuance of bonds, shall be maintained by any person unless such action is commenced within 30 days after the recording of the warrant, diagram and assessment. This is purely a statute of limitation against actions of an entirely different type from the instant action. The time limit is 30 days after the recording of the warrant, etc. That time has not arrived.

Mathes v. City of Long Beach, 121 Cal. App.2d 473, 263 P.2d 472, 474, is also urged by the city as authority for the proposition that minor irregularities in a validation proceeding are to be ignored. This is a correct statement of the law as an abstract proposition. However, the principle has nothing whatever to do with any phase of the present case. In the first place, the action of the city council in rescinding the award to Hess Company was not a "minor irregularity," or an irregularity at all. It was an act which the council had no authority to perform and was therefore ineffective.

An examination of the facts in the Mathes case shows that the contractor questioned the validity of the contract awarded to him under the authority of section 5266 of the code, in some 19 particulars. The opinion does not disclose what 18 of these particulars were, but discusses only one, which was the proposed inclusion in the contract of a recital that the federal government had the power to stop the work at any time, and what would be done in the case of such termination of the work. The contractor contended that since the property owners whose lands were to be assessed were not advised as to the proposed inclusion of this clause that the contract was void, and the trial court so found. However, the District Court of Appeal reversed the decision and held that the contract was entirely valid; that the clause under consideration, defining the rights of the parties if the federal government should stop work, was similar to clauses in contracts excusing performance because of natural calamities. The court said that "Instead of impinging upon, this clause recognized and protected substantial rights of the city, the property owners affected, and the contractor" and that "Therefore, this court has come to the conclusion that it was error to hold that this clause, measured by the provisions of the Improvement Act of 1911, imposed upon the owners within the assessment district a burden not authorized by law."

The court further said that its conclusion was supported by sections 4410 to 4412, inclusive, of the Government Code, which recognize the possibility of stoppage of public work by order or proclamation of the President of the United States, and provide that in such circumstances the contracting parties may agree for the payment of compensation for work done before it is stopped by an overriding power.

The court dismissed the other 18 asserted defects saying that they had been given careful consideration by the trial court and the findings by the trial court were that none of them affected the validity of the contract. This decision clearly is of no value in disposing of the problems presented in the instant case.

[8] It is urged that section 5273 of the Streets and Highways Code made the determination of the city council "conclusive in the absence of actual fraud." The section reads: "Operation of judgment upholding proceedings: Conclusiveness of findings, etc. If the validity of the proceedings and of the contract or proposed contract is sustained, the validity of such proceedings or contract shall not thereafter be contested in any action, suit or proceeding, and the judgment entered in the action herein provided for shall be conclusive evidence of the validity of such contract and of all proceedings prior thereto. In such action, all findings, conclusions and determinations of the legislative body which conducted the proceedings shall be conclusive in the absence of actual fraud."

[9] Obviously this section applies to those findings, conclusions and determinations which the act authorizes the legislative body to make. It does not apply to every conceivable determination of such body for if it did, no useful purpose would be served by the validation proceedings which contemplate judicial review.

The city attempts to apply the provisions of sections 5221, 5233 and 5368 of the Streets and Highways Code to section 5273, making a point of the fact that under these sections certain findings and determinations of the city council are final and conclusive. The non-applicability of these sections to the instant case is demonstrated by the following:

[10] Section 5221 appears in chapter 8 of the 1911 Act under the chapter heading, "Protest and Hearing." It is necessary to read section 5220 with section 5221. Section 5220 provides for the hearing of objections to the proposed work and grants to any owner of property liable to be assessed the right to make written protest against the proposed work or against the extent of the district to be assessed. Section 5221 sets up the procedure for the hearing of such protests.

Section 5233 appears in chapter 8.5 of the 1911 Act under the chapter heading "Change of Work, Boundaries of Assessment District or Proceedings." This section gives the right to any interested person to file written objections to changes in the proposed work or in changes of the boundaries of the assessment district, and provides the procedure for hearing such objections by the legislative body.

Section 5368 appears in chapter 16 of the 1911 Act under the chapter heading "Making and Confirming the Assessment." This section provides that determinations of legislative bodies shall be final and conclusive upon all persons entitled to appeal to the legislative body as to matters listed in section 5366 which may be the subject of appeal to the council.

[11] This section is the first point in any proceedings under the act at which the contractor is bound, if he be aggrieved, to appeal to the council. The matters concerning which an appeal may be taken concern the "work done," "the assessment," a claim "that the work has not been performed according to the contract in a good and substantial manner", or a claim "that any portion of the work for any reason was omitted or illegally included in the contract". It also gives a right to those persons "having or making any objection to the correctness of the assessment or diagram or other act, determination or proceedings of the superintendent of streets or engineer * * *."

Obviously this section does not apply until some of the work has been done or until an assessment has been made. Each section cited entails notice to the interested party and hearing thereafter. No notice was given to the Hess Company of the city's intention to rescind the award and no hearing was offered. None is provided by the act. The court's jurisdiction cannot be so summarily ousted.

[12, 13] "Before considering the contentions of Hess Company upon the merits, it should be said that the Improvement Act of 1911 was originally enacted and has maintained its place in the statute books because of a fixed legislative policy that fairness, efficiency and security in the construction of public works can best be attained by a statutory scheme which would require that such contracts for such work must be let at competitive bidding. From the beginning to the end the provisions of the Improvement Act of 1911 are mainly aimed at securing such competitive bidding; and the courts have consistently construed the act with that legislative purpose in mind. Legislative bodies must follow the act and no attempt upon their part to claim authority to act except strictly in accord therewith can be successful. The act contemplates that before bids are invited the public improvement shall be thoroughly planned; that detailed and exhaustive plans and specifications of the work shall have been adopted; and that every material term and condition of the proposed contract shall have been stated, all to the end that where contractors are invited to bid they will know exactly what they are proposing to do under the contract they offer to enter into. The statute does require that after an award has been made a formal written contract shall be executed and appropriate bonds furnished for faithful performance of the work and for the payment of subcontractors, laborers and materialmen. But so well have all things been stated in the plans and specifications, in the proposal for bids, in the information and instructions to bidders, in the notice inviting bids and in the required bid forms that the formal contract is a brief document referring to these preceding writings for a statement of the obligation of the parties; these writings being expressly made a part of the formal contract.

[14, 15] "It has long been decided in this and other states and in the courts of the United States that in the letting of contracts for the doing of public works where the legislative body or the administrative officer is required by statute to call for bids and must under competitive bidding conditions let the contract to the lowest responsible bidder, the making of the award gives rise to a contract between the public body or agent and the successful bidder. * * *" [285 P.2d 1009.] (M. F. Kemper Const. Co. v. City of Los Angeles, 37 Cal.2d 696, 700 [1], 235 P.2d 7; Williams v. City of Stockton, 195 Cal. 743, 748 [4 et seq.], 751, 235 P. 986.) In 10 McQuillin on Municipal Corporations, third edition (1950), section 29.71, page 343, the rule is accurately stated, thus: "While it is true that a municipal corporation has discretion as to the time and manner of making corporate improvements and the purchase of supplies, still when this discretion has been exercised and a contract made relative thereto, the legislative function has been exhausted, and the duty has become purely ministerial, and a contract so made cannot be impaired at the option of the municipality. Hence, when a bid has been accepted by the proper authorities, such acceptance cannot be revoked."

[16] "Applying the foregoing, we hold that the Hess Company's bid had been accepted and the contract awarded to it by regular action of the city council in strict pursuance of the statutory scheme. All the essentials of contract were present and Hess Company was entitled as of right to have the further proceedings take their statutory way. The city was without power, in the absence of fraud, mutual mistake or some other ground of rescission, none of which is claimed to have existed, to rescind its action and to take the contract from Hess Company and award it to Katsaros.

"Respondent argues that since the statutes require that 'Notice of the award of the contract shall be published by the clerk' (Sts. & Hy.Code, § 5248), this fixes the way, and the exclusive way, in which the acceptance of the bidder's proposal can be communicated to the successful bidder and that until this has been done no contract has arisen. Says respondent:

"The provisions of the Civil Code of the State of California provide the essentials of a contract. These essentials are:

"(a) Offer;

"(b) Acceptance;

"(c) Communication by each to the other.' (Citing Civ.Code, §§ 1550, 1565 and 1581.)

[17,18] "We think the Streets and Highways Code section referred to was not intended by the legislature as a method whereby communication of the acceptance by the city should be given to the bidder, but on the contrary that it is limited in its effect to the notification which is required to be given to the property owners interested who for ten days after the giving of such notice are by the statute given the right of taking over the work themselves by entering into a written contract to do so at the price at which the award had been made to the bidder. The language of the statute bears this out. The section does not say that the notice by the clerk is a notice to the bidder of the city's acceptance of his offer, but on the contrary is a notice of the award itself. The award is treated as having been made and so far as the bidder be concerned any of the usual methods of conveying that information to him could be followed. Indeed, since the resolution making the award is the public act of a public body, it is a matter of which notice may be presumed so far as interested parties are concerned. It appears in the case at bar that the president of Hess Company was present when the bids were opened and the award was made.

[19] "Appellant asks that this Court not only reverse the judgment of the trial court but go further and mandate the city council, its members, its clerk and the city's superintendent of streets to proceed to notice the award to appellant, and if within the ten days allowed the property owners themselves do not take over the work, then to go further and enter into the formal contract with appellant and permit it to proceed to perform the work. We think it would not be proper for this Court to so order. This is a special statutory proceeding whereunder a legislative body or one who has been awarded a contract by such body for the doing of public work may, without refusing to go forward, set at rest all questions concerning the legality of what has been done by bringing this action. The matter of whether or not the legislative body or any member of that body or employee of the city has refused to perform ministerial duties is not before the Court. The sole issue is the legality of what has been done. We cannot assume that if by the court these proceedings are declared to be valid and the contract declared to have been awarded to Hess Company, there will be any refusal to perform ministerial acts arising because of that situation. We, therefore, decline to go further than to decide the issues of legality of proceedings tendered by the petition filed by the city. The proceedings were valid to the point to which they had been taken when the award was made to the Hess Company and were invalid beyond that point."

The judgment is reversed.

GIBSON, C. J., and SHENK, CARTER, TRAYNOR, SCHAUER and SPENCE, JJ., concur.

45 Cal.2d 640

The PEOPLE of the State of California,
Plaintiff and Appellant,

v.

Irma BROWN, Defendant and Respondent.
Cr. 5765.

Supreme Court of California.
In Bank.

Nov. 29, 1955.

Rehearing Denied Dec. 28, 1955.

Prosecution for possession of heroin.

Upon defendant's motion to set aside the information, the Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Thomas L. Ambrose, J., set aside information, and the people appealed. The Supreme Court, Traynor, J., held that, where officers, who did not have reasonable cause to believe that defendant had committed a felony, arrested defendant and thereafter found that container in her left hand contained heroin, defendant's guilt of felony would not justify the arrest and search.

Order affirmed.

1. Arrest ⇨63(3)

In absence of evidence of anything apparent to officers' senses before arrest and search that defendant was committing or attempting to commit a public offense, defendant's arrest could not be justified on ground that an offense was being committed or attempted in arresting officers' presence. Pen.Code, § 836.

2. Arrest ⇨63(4)

Where officers, who did not have reasonable cause to believe that defendant had committed a felony, arrested defendant and thereafter found that container in her left hand contained heroin, defendant's guilt of felony would not justify the arrest and search. West's Ann. Health & Safety Code, § 11500; Pen.Code, §§ 836, 995; West's Ann. Const. art. 1, § 19; U.S.C.A.Const. Amends. 4, 14.

3. Arrest ⇨71

Legality of an arrest is not necessarily determinative of lawfulness of search incident thereto. Pen.Code, § 836; West's Ann.Const. art. 1, § 19; U.S.C.A.Const. Amends. 4, 14.

4. Arrest ⇨71

Some searches may be reasonable and, hence, lawful in absence of warrant or an arrest, and others may be unreasonable and, hence, unlawful although incident to a lawful arrest, and, therefore, question is not whether arrest of guilty felon is lawful in absence of reasonable cause for officers to believe him guilty but whether search incident to arrest is reasonable. Pen.Code, § 836; West's Ann.Const. art. 1, § 19; U.S.C.A.Const. Amends. 4, 14.

5. Arrest ⇨63(4)

If it is necessary to rely on the search to justify the arrest, search, which cannot be justified by what it turns up, cannot justify the arrest. Pen.Code, § 836; West's Ann.Const. art. 1, § 19; U.S.C.A.Const. Amends. 4, 14.

6. Arrest ⇨63(4), 71

Regardless whether arrest of guilty defendant is lawful, it is clearly unreasonable if officer does not have reasonable cause to believe the defendant guilty, and search incident thereto can be no more reasonable than the arrest itself. Pen. Code, § 836; West's Ann.Const. art. 1, § 19; U.S.C.A.Const. Amends. 4, 14.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., William E. James, Deputy Atty. Gen., S. Ernest Roll, Dist. Atty., Jere J. Sullivan, Lewis Watnick and Arthur L. Alarcon, Deputy Dist. Attys., Los Angeles, for appellant.

Charles H. Matthews, Los Angeles, for respondent.

A. L. Wirin and Fred Okrand, Los Angeles, as amici curiae on behalf of respondent.

TRAYNOR, Justice.

By information defendant was charged with one count of possessing heroin in violation of Health and Safety Code, § 11500, a felony. Her motion to set the information aside (see Penal Code, § 995) was granted on the ground that all of the evidence of the crime other than admissions was obtained by an illegal search of her person in violation of her constitutional rights. The People appeal.

At about 7:30 p. m. on January 28, 1955, two deputy sheriffs of Los Angeles County parked their car at the corner of 47th Place and Avalon Boulevard. They observed defendant walk in front of their car from the southwest to the northwest corner of the intersection. She had some parcels in her right arm and a coin purse in her right hand, and her left hand was clenched in a fist. The officers left their car, and after approaching defendant from behind, one officer grabbed defendant's right wrist and the other her left wrist. They identified themselves and asked to see what she had in her left hand. She refused their request and asked them not to take her to jail but to allow her to talk to her husband. They did not inform her that she was under arrest, but one of the officers took a small rubber container from her left hand, and subsequent analysis indicated that it contained heroin. The officers took defendant to their car and talked with her. She told conflicting stories about getting the rubber container, but denied knowing that it contained heroin. After further conversation the officers took her to the county jail.

The attorney general contends that the search in this case was incidental to defendant's arrest and that if the arrest was lawful, the search was reasonable within the meaning of the constitutional provisions. U.S.Const., 4th and 14th Amendments; Cal.Const., Art. I, § 19.

Section 836 of the Penal Code provides: "A peace-officer may make an arrest in obedience to a warrant delivered to him, or may, without a warrant, arrest a person:

"1. For a public offense committed or attempted in his presence.

"2. When a person arrested has committed a felony, although not in his presence.

"3. When a felony has in fact been committed, and he has reasonable cause for believing the person arrested to have committed it.

"4. On a charge made, upon a reasonable cause, of the commission of a felony by the party arrested.

"5. At night, when there is reasonable cause to believe that he has committed a felony."

[1] There was no evidence of anything apparent to the officers' senses before the arrest and search that defendant was committing or attempting to commit a public offense. The arrest, therefore, cannot be justified on the ground that an offense was being committed or attempted in their presence, State v. Owens, 302 Mo. 348, 259 S.W. 100, 101, 32 A.L.R. 383; Snyder v. United States, 4 Cir., 285 F. 1, 2; State v. Wills, 91 W.Va. 659, 114 S.E. 261, 264, 24 A.L.R. 1398; Haynes v. State, 110 Tex.Cr.R. 553, 9 S.W.2d 1043; State v. Jokosh, 181 Wis. 160, 193 N.W. 976, 977; see, Taylor v. United States, 286 U.S. 1, 5-6, 52 S.Ct. 466, 76 L.Ed. 951; Coverstone v. Davies, 38 Cal. 2d 315, 320-321, 239 P.2d 876; People v. Craig, 152 Cal. 42, 46, 91 P. 997; Restatement, Torts, § 119, comment m, and the attorney general makes no contention to the contrary. Nor is there any evidence, nor is it contended, that the officers had "reasonable cause" to believe that defendant had committed a felony, that a charge based "upon a reasonable cause" had been made, or that the officers had a warrant for defendant's arrest.

[2] The attorney general contends, however, that since defendant was in fact guilty of a felony, the arrest was authorized by subdivision 2 of section 836 whether or not the officers had reasonable cause so to believe. He points out that subdivision 2 does not contain the reference to reasonable cause found in subdivisions 3, 4, and 5, that the legality of an arrest is governed by state law, Johnson v. United States, 333 U.S. 10, 15, 68 S.Ct. 367, 92 L.Ed. 436; United States v. Di Re, 332 U.S. 581, 589, 68 S.Ct. 222, 92 L.Ed. 210, and that a reasonable search without a warrant incident to a lawful arrest is not unlawful, Harris v. United States, 331 U.S. 145, 150-151, 67 S.Ct. 1098, 91 L.Ed. 1399; United States v. Rabinowitz, 339 U.S. 56, 60-64, 70 S.Ct. 430, 94 L.Ed. 653, and concludes that defendant's guilt therefore justified the arrest and search. We cannot agree with this conclusion.

[3,4] It should be noted at the outset that the legality of an arrest is not necessarily determinative of the lawfulness of a search incident thereto. Just as some searches may be reasonable and hence lawful in the absence of a warrant or an arrest, Carroll v. United States, 267 U.S. 132, 153, 45 S.Ct. 280, 69 L.Ed. 543, others may be unreasonable and hence unlawful although incident to a lawful arrest. United States v. Lefkowitz, 285 U.S. 452, 463-467, 52 S.Ct. 420, 76 L.Ed. 877; Go-Bart Importing Co. v. United States, 282 U.S. 344, 356-358, 51 S.Ct. 153, 75 L.Ed. 374; see, Harris v. United States, supra, 331 U.S. 145, 153, 67 S.Ct. 1098, 91 L.Ed. 1399. Accordingly, the question presented is not whether the arrest of a guilty felon is lawful in the absence of reasonable cause for the officer to believe him guilty, but whether the search incident to the arrest is reasonable, and it is therefore unnecessary to determine whether a requirement of reasonable cause applies by implication to subdivision 2 of section 836.¹

[5,6] The United States Supreme Court has consistently held that a search, whether incident to an arrest or not, can not be justified by what it turns up. Johnson v. United States, supra, 333 U.S. 10, 16-17, 68 S.Ct. 367; United States v. Di Re, supra, 332 U.S. 581, 595, 68 S.Ct. 222; Lustig v. United States, 338 U.S. 74, 80, 69 S.Ct. 1372, 93 L.Ed. 1819; Byars v. United States, 273 U.S. 28, 29, 47 S.Ct. 248, 71 L.Ed. 520; see also, Hernandez v. United States, 9 Cir., 17 F.2d 373; Snyder v. United States, supra, 285 F. 1, 3; Poldo v. United States, 9 Cir., 55 F.2d 866, 869; Allen v. State, 183 Wis. 323, 333-334, 197 N.W. 808, 39 A.L.R. 782; State v. Pluth, 157 Minn. 145, 195 N.W. 789, 792; Keith v. State, 30 Okl.Cr. 168, 235 P. 631, 633; People v. Stein, 265 Mich. 610, 251 N.W. 788, 790, 92 A.L.R. 481; Smith v. State, 169 Tenn. 633, 90 S.W.2d 523, 524; Morgan v. State, 197 Ind. 374, 151 N.E. 98, 100; People v. Henneman, 373 Ill. 603, 27 N.E.2d 448, 449; State v. Miles, 29 Wash. 2d 921, 190 P.2d 740, 745; State v. George, 32 Wyo. 223, 231 P. 683, 689; State ex rel. Thibodeau v. District Court, 70 Mont. 202, 224 P. 866, 870; Aitken v. White, 93 Cal. App.2d 134, 145, 208 P.2d 788, semble; Cook v. Singer Sewing Machine Co., 138 Cal.App. 418, 422, 32 P.2d 430, semble; contra: State v. Williams, Mo., 14 S.W.2d 434, 435-436. If, therefore, it is necessary to rely on the search to justify the arrest, the conclusion is inescapable that a search that cannot be justified by what it turns up cannot justify the arrest. Moreover, whether or not the arrest of a guilty defendant is lawful, it is clearly unreasonable if the officer has no "reasonable cause" to believe the defendant guilty, and a search incident thereto can be no more reasonable than the arrest itself.

To accept the attorney general's contention would defeat the purpose of the constitutional provisions prohibiting unreasonable searches and seizures and destroy the efficacy of the exclusionary rule in many felony prosecutions. Officers would be free to arrest and search anyone, however innocent, in the hope that the search would justify the arrest. "[T]he constitutional provisions make no distinction between the guilty and the innocent, and it would be manifestly impossible to protect the rights of the innocent if the police were permitted to justify unreasonable searches and seizures on the ground that they assumed their victims were criminals. Thus, when consideration is directed to the question of the admissibility of evidence obtained in violation of the constitutional provisions, it bears emphasis that the court is not concerned solely with the rights of the defendant before it, however guilty he may appear, but with the constitutional right of all of the people to be secure in their homes, persons, and effects." People v. Cahan, 44 Cal.2d 434, 439, 282 P.2d 905, 907. In the light of these considerations we adopted the exclusionary rule "because other remedies have completely failed to secure compliance with the constitutional provisions on the part of police officers with the attendant result that the courts under the old rule have been constantly required to participate in, and in effect condone, the lawless activities of law enforcement officers." 44 Cal.2d 445, 282 P.2d 911. We were fully aware that in its immediate operation the exclusionary rule would permit guilty persons to escape punishment, but were convinced that it was necessary to secure respect by law enforcement agencies of constitutional guarantees. It would fail of its purpose, if in the only area of its effective operation it could be defeated because the arresting officer guessed correctly in making an arrest.

1. This question would be presented directly if a guilty felon sued an officer for false arrest on the ground that the officer had no reasonable cause to believe him guilty (see, Restatement, Torts, § 119, comment g), or sought to justify resisting arrest on the same ground. See, State v. Nolan, 354 Mo. 980, 192 S.W.2d 1016, 1019-1022.

The order is affirmed.

GIBSON, C. J., and SHENK, CARTER, SCHAUER and SPENCE, JJ., and McCOMB, J. pro tem., concur.

Rehearing denied, McCOMB, J., participating in place of EDMONDS, J.

SHENK and SPENCE, JJ., dissenting.

45 Cal.2d 645

The PEOPLE of the State of California,
Plaintiff and Appellant,

v.

Charles A. SIMON, Defendant and
Respondent.

Cr. 5768.

Supreme Court of California,
In Bank.

Nov. 29, 1955.

Rehearing Denied Dec. 28, 1955.

Prosecution for possession of narcotic. The Superior Court, San Diego County, John A. Hewicker, J., set aside information, and the people appealed. The Supreme Court, Traynor, J., held that, where arresting officer, who merely felt that defendant and another did not have any lawful business in warehouse district at 10:40 p. m., and who saw that the other, who was under 21, had a liquor bottle in his possession, searched defendant first and asked questions only after his search uncovered marijuana cigarette in his possession, and there was nothing to indicate that, had officer confined himself to a reasonable inquiry, he would have discovered anything to confirm his suspicion that defendant did not have lawful right to be where he was, defendant was entitled to have information set aside on ground that all evidence against him, other than admissions, had been obtained by illegal search of his person.

Order affirmed.

1. Arrest ⇨71

Search incident to an arrest cannot be justified, in absence of reasonable cause, merely because it revealed defendant was in fact guilty of a felony, and search of defendant's person may be justified only if he was committing or attempting to commit an offense in the arresting officer's presence or if officer had reasonable cause to believe that he had committed a felony, but it is not significant whether the search precedes or follows the arrest. Pen.Code, § 836.

2. Arrest ⇨71

If arresting officer is entitled to make an arrest on basis of information available to him before he searches, and, as an incident to such arrest, is entitled to make a reasonable search of person arrested and place where he is arrested, there is nothing unreasonable in his conduct if he makes a search before instead of after the arrest, and a search is not unlawful merely because it precedes rather than follows the arrest. Pen.Code, § 836.

3. Arrest ⇨63(4)

Mere fact that defendant was walking on street with 20 year old friend, who had bottle of liquor, did not constitute reasonable cause to believe that defendant was committing or attempting to commit an offense in arresting officer's presence either by aiding or abetting his friend in committing a crime or contributing to the delinquency of a minor. West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, § 25662; Welfare and Institutions Code, § 702; Pen.Code, § 836.

4. Arrest ⇨63(4)

Mere fact that defendant and another had walked a few blocks in warehouse district at night and then had retraced their steps would not constitute reasonable cause to believe that either had committed a felony, even if the arresting officer had entertained such a belief. Pen.Code, § 836.

5. Arrest ☞63(4)

There is nothing unreasonable in an officer's questioning of persons outdoors at night, and it is possible that, in some circumstances, even a refusal to answer would, in light of other evidence, justify an arrest. Pen.Code, § 836

6. Arrest ☞71

Indictment and Information ☞137(1)

Where arresting officer, who merely felt that defendant and another did not have any lawful business in warehouse district at 10:40 p. m., and who saw that the other, who was under 21, had a liquor bottle in his possession, searched defendant first and asked questions only after his search, uncovered marijuana cigarette in his possession, and there was nothing to indicate that, had officer confined himself to a reasonable inquiry, he would have discovered anything to confirm his suspicion that defendant did not have lawful right to be where he was, defendant was entitled to have information set aside on ground that all evidence against him, other than admissions, had been obtained by illegal search of his person. West's Ann.Health & Safety Code, § 11500; Pen.Code, §§ 836, 995; West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, § 25662; Welfare and Institutions Code, § 702.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., and William E. James, Deputy Atty. Gen., for appellant.

Oscar F. Irwin, San Diego, for respondent.

A. L. Wirin and Fred Okrand, Los Angeles, as amici curiae on behalf of respondent

TRAYNOR, Justice.

By information defendant was charged with one count of possessing a narcotic in violation of Health and Safety Code, § 11500, a felony. His motion to set the information aside (see Penal Code, § 995) was granted on the ground that all of the evidence against him, other than admissions, was obtained by an illegal search of his person in violation of his constitutional rights. The People appeal.

At about 10:40 p. m. defendant, age 21, and a friend, age 20, were observed walking on the sidewalk in a warehouse district by a San Diego police patrolman who was walking his beat. The officer testified that "Well, I observed [defendant] walking south on Seventh Avenue, from Island, he went south to J Street, turned left on J, proceeded east on J Street to the corner of Ninth and J, where he turned around and followed the same course back to Seventh and Island." The officer then stopped defendant and his friend and searched them both, and in one of defendant's pockets he found a marijuana cigarette. Defendant told him that he had bought it in Tijuana, but he did not acknowledge knowing what it was. Defendant's friend had a bottle of liquor, and the officer arrested them both. After he was taken to the police station, dust and lint were collected from defendant's pockets and analysed, and particles of marijuana were found.

With respect to his reasons for the searches and arrests the officer testified as follows: "I suspected [defendant] of committing a crime. What crime? Possession of alcoholic beverages. Did you see him with an alcoholic beverage? His partner had a bottle. Oh, his partner had one, did he? I wanted to find out so I searched him. Did he have an alcoholic beverage on him? I didn't find any. Why did you assume that he had an alcoholic beverage on him, why would you suspect that was a crime? Because of his age. Did you ask him how old he was? Yes, I did. Before or after you made the search of him? I searched his partner first and he was twenty years old— The partner was twenty years old? Yes, sir * * *. After you searched his partner then you searched this defendant? Yes, sir. * * * Did you ask him his name and age, before you searched him? I never asked him, they had I.D. cards. Did you look at the I.D. cards? Yes, sir. How old did it show he was? Twenty-one, I believe. Twenty-

"one? Yes, sir. * * * I assumed him to be under twenty. * * * Didn't you say his I.D. card shows him to be twenty-one? I searched him before I looked at his I.D. card. Oh, you did, and you didn't try to ascertain his age before you conducted the search, did you? No sir, he looked younger than his partner. And the search was made solely because of the fact that you thought he was [a] minor in possession of alcoholic beverage? * * * Not solely for that purpose. What other reason? Well, the area that the boys were found in, it is not a residential area and I didn't feel that they had any lawful business down there. It was a warehouse district and it was late at night."

The attorney general contends that the search in this case was incidental to a lawful arrest and was therefore reasonable. Defendant, on the other hand, contends that the search preceded the arrest and was not incidental thereto and that in any event the arrest was unlawful.

[1,2] In People v. Brown, Cal., 290 P. 2d 528, we held that a search incident to an arrest could not be justified in the absence of "reasonable cause" under Penal Code, § 836 merely because it revealed that defendant was in fact guilty of a felony. Accordingly, the search of defendant's person may be justified only if he was committing or attempting to commit an offense in the officer's presence, Penal Code, § 836, subd. 1, or the officer had reasonable cause to believe he had committed a felony. Penal Code, § 836, subd. 5. In such circumstances, however, it has been held that it is not significant whether the search precedes or follows the arrest. State v. Mc-

Daniel, 115 Or. 187, 231 P. 965, 237 P. 373, 376; State v. Reynolds, 101 Conn. 224, 125 A. 636, 637-638; Ingle v. Commonwealth, 204 Ky. 518, 264 S.W. 1088, 1090; Knight v. State, 171 Ark. 882, 286 S.W. 1013, 1014-1015; see also Clark v. State, 78 Okl.Cr. 423, 149 P.2d 994, 997; State v. Rotolo, 39 Wyo. 181, 270 P. 665, 666-667. Thus, if the officer is entitled to make an arrest on the basis of information available to him before he searches, and as an incident to that arrest is entitled to make a reasonable search of the person arrested and the place where he is arrested, there is nothing unreasonable in his conduct if he makes the search before instead of after the arrest. In fact, if the person searched is innocent and the search convinces the officer that his reasonable belief to the contrary is erroneous, it is to the advantage of the person searched not to be arrested. On the other hand, if he is not innocent or the search does not establish his innocence, the security of his person, house, papers, or effects suffers no more from a search preceding his arrest than it would from the same search following it. In either case the important considerations are whether the officer had reasonable cause before the search to make an arrest and whether the search and any seizures incident thereto were or were not more extensive than would reasonably be justified as incident to an arrest. See, United States v. Rabinowitz, 339 U.S. 56, 60-64, 70 S.Ct. 430, 94 L.Ed. 653. We conclude, therefore, that a search is not unlawful merely because it precedes rather than follows the arrest.¹

1. In most of the cases cited for a contrary rule, United States v. Swan, D.C., 15 F.2d 598, 599; Raniele v. United States, 8 Cir., 34 F.2d 877, 880; Papani v. United States, 9 Cir., 84 F.2d 160, 164; United States v. McCunn, D.C., 40 F. 2d 295, 296; United States v. Setaro, D.C., 37 F.2d 134, 136-137; United States v. Sully, D.C., 56 F.Supp. 942, 943-944; United States v. Waller, D.C., 108 F.Supp. 450, 452-453, there were either other reasons for holding the search unreasonable or the statement of the rule was dictum. Thus, in United States v. Waller, supra, although the court stated that a search that preceded an arrest could not be justified as incident thereto, it held that defendant had consented to the search. In Raniele v. United States, supra, the court was of the opinion that before the search the officers had insufficient grounds for believing an offense was being committed in their presence (see also, United States v. Setaro, supra), and in United States v. Swan, supra, and United States v. McCunn, supra, defendant was not present or discovered by the officers until after the search was completed.

[3] In the present case, however, there was no evidence of anything apparent to the officer's senses before the arrest and search that defendant was committing or attempting to commit an offense in his presence, see, People v. Brown, Cal., 290 P.2d 528, and it does not appear that the officer had reasonable cause to believe he had committed a felony. It is true that defendant's friend had a bottle, and it may be assumed without deciding that the appearance of the bottle and of defendant's friend were sufficient to justify the officer's concluding that the friend was committing a misdemeanor in his presence. Bus. and Prof.Code, § 25662 (possession of alcoholic beverage by a minor on a public street); see Coverstone v. Davies, 38 Cal.2d 315, 319-321, 239 P.2d 876. The mere fact, however, that defendant was walking on the street with a 20 year old friend who had a bottle did not constitute reasonable cause to believe that defendant was committing or attempting to commit an offense in the officer's presence by either aiding or abetting his friend in committing a crime or contributing to the delinquency of a minor. Welfare and Institutions Code, § 702; United States v. Di Re, 332 U.S. 581, 592-594, 68 S.Ct. 222, 92 L.Ed. 210; see also Hernandez v. United States, 9 Cir., 17 F.2d 373; Pearson v. United States, 10 Cir., 150 F.2d 219, 221; Morgan v. State, 197 Ind. 374, 151 N.E. 98, 100.

[4,5] Similarly, there is no merit in the attorney general's contention that the officer had reasonable cause to believe that defendant had committed a felony. The officer's own testimony does not indicate that he believed defendant guilty of a felony; he merely felt that the boys did not have any lawful business in a warehouse district at 10:40 p. m. Moreover, the mere fact that two persons walked a few blocks in a warehouse district at night and then retraced their steps would not constitute reasonable cause to believe either had committed a felony, even if the officer had entertained such a belief. State v. Miles, 29 Wash.2d 921, 190 P.2d 740, 747; People v. Henneman, 273 Ill. 603, 27 N.E.2d 448, 449; People v. Stein, 265 Mich. 610, 251 N.W. 788, 790; see also,

Hernandez v. United States, supra, 17 F.2d 373; Pearson v. United States, supra, 150 F.2d 219, 221; Morgan v. State, supra, 197 Ind. 374, 151 N.E. 98, 100. This is not a case in which the officer knew or reasonably believed that a felony had recently been committed in the neighborhood, see, Gisske v. Sanders, 9 Cal.App. 13, 15, 98 P. 43, or in which a response to a reasonable inquiry elicited evidence that defendant may have been guilty of a crime. See, Hughes v. Oreb, 36 Cal.2d 854, 858, 228 P.2d 550. There is, of course, nothing unreasonable in an officer's questioning persons outdoors at night, Gisske v. Sanders, supra, 9 Cal.App. 13, 16-17, 98 P. 43; People v. Exum, 382 Ill. 204, 47 N.E.2d 56, 60; People v. Henneman, 367 Ill. 151, 10 N.E. 2d 649, 650; United States v. Jankowski, 2 Cir., 28 F.2d 800, 802; see also Morgan v. United States, 10 Cir., 159 F.2d 85, 86-87; Kaiser v. United States, 8 Cir., 60 F.2d 410, 412-413; Strogan v. United States, 3 Cir., 60 F.2d 483; Brinegar v. United States, 338 U.S. 160, 178, 69 S.Ct. 1302, 93 L.Ed. 1879, Burton, J., concurring, and it is possible that in some circumstances even a refusal to answer would, in the light of other evidence, justify an arrest. See, Gisske v. Sanders, supra, 9 Cal.App. 13, 17, 98 P. 43. Even if it were conceded that in some circumstances an officer making such an inquiry might be justified in running his hands over a person's clothing to protect himself from an attack with a hidden weapon, certainly a search so intensive as that made here could not be so justified. In the present case the officer searched first and asked questions only after his search uncovered the incriminating cigarette, and there is nothing to indicate that had he confined himself to a reasonable inquiry, he would have discovered anything to confirm his suspicion that defendant had no lawful right to be where he was.

[6] Under these circumstances, to permit an officer to justify a search on the ground that he "didn't feel" that a person on the street at night had any lawful business there would expose anyone to having his person searched by any suspicious officer no matter how unfounded the sus-pitions were. Innocent people, going to or from evening jobs or entertainment, or walking for exercise or enjoyment, would suffer along with the occasional criminal who would be turned up. As pointed out by Mr. Justice Jackson in a similar case, "We meet in this case, as in many, the appeal to necessity. It is said that if such arrests and searches cannot be made, law enforcement will be more difficult and uncertain. But the forefathers, after consulting the lessons of history, designed our Constitution to place obstacles in the way of a too permeating police surveillance, which they seemed to think was a greater danger to a free people than the escape of some criminals from punishment. Taking the law as it has been given to us, this arrest and search were beyond the lawful authority of those who executed them." United States v. Di Re, supra, 332 U.S. 581, 595, 68 S.Ct. 222, 229.

The order is affirmed.

GIBSON, C. J., and SHENK, CARTER, SCHAUER and SPENCE, JJ., and McCOMB, J. pro tem., concur.

Rehearing denied, McCOMB, J., participating in place of EDMONDS, J.

SHENK and SPENCE, JJ., dissenting.

45 Cal.2d 652

The PEOPLE of the State of California,
Plaintiff and Appellant,

v.

Maxine Ann BOYLES, Defendant and
Respondent.

Cr. 5766.

Supreme Court of California.
In Bank.

Nov. 29, 1953.

Prosecution for possession of heroin. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, David Coleman, J., set aside information on ground that all evidence of the crime, other than admissions, had been obtained by an illegal search of defendant's person, and the people appealed. The Supreme Court, Traynor, J., held that, where, defendant successfully prevented prosecution from presenting evidence as to reasonable cause which would have justified defendant's arrest, she would not be heard to contend that evidence before committing magistrate was necessarily illegally obtained and, therefore, insufficient to support the information.

Order reversed.

1. Criminal Law $\hookrightarrow$ 394

Where arresting officers had cooperation of hotel manager and could have apprehended defendant just as well from another nearby vantage point without committing any trespass, their ability to arrest and search defendant was not dependent upon their presence in hotel room, and, therefore, trespass, if any, was entirely unrelated and collateral to securing of evidence to which defendant objects and could not render inadmissible evidence which was obtained when arresting officers seized defendant as she entered hotel room. West's Ann. Health & Safety Code, § 11500; Pen.Code, § 836.

2. Arrest $\hookrightarrow$ 71

Where there is no evidence that defendant was committing or attempting to commit a public offense in presence of arresting officer, search of defendant may be justified only if it was incidental to a lawful arrest under Penal Code provision authorizing arrest without warrant when felony has in fact been committed and arresting officer has reasonable cause for believing the person arrested to have committed it. Pen.Code, § 836, subd. 3.

3. Arrest $\hookrightarrow$ 71

If arrest made under Penal Code provision authorizing arrest without warrant when felony has in fact been committed and arresting officer has reasonable cause for believing the person arrested to have committed it, search incident to such arrest would not be unlawful merely because it preceded, rather than followed the arrest. Pen.Code, § 836, subd. 3.

4. Arrest $\hookrightarrow$ 63(4), 71

Where arresting officer's belief of defendant's guilt is based upon reasonable cause, and a felony has in fact been committed, not only are requirements of Penal Code provision authorizing arrest without warrant when felony has in fact been committed and when arresting officer has reasonable cause for believing the person arrested had committed it satisfied, but a search incident to an arrest thereunder is reasonable. Pen.Code, § 836, subd. 3.

5. Arrest ☞63(4)

Reasonable cause to justify an arrest may consist of information obtained from others and is not limited to evidence which would be admissible at trial on issue of guilt.

6. Criminal Law ☞1137(7)

Where, in prosecution for possession of heroin, defendant successfully prevented prosecution from presenting evidence as to reasonable cause which would have justified defendant's arrest, she would not be heard to contend that evidence before committing magistrate was necessarily illegally obtained and, therefore, insufficient to support the information. West's Ann. Health & Safety Code, § 11500; Pen.Code, §§ 836, subds. 1, 3, 995.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., William E. James, Deputy Atty. Gen., S. Ernest Roll, Dist. Atty., Jere J. Sullivan and Lewis Watnick, Deputy Dist. Attys., Los Angeles, for appellant.

Alan Ross, Los Angeles, for respondent.

A. L. Wirin and Fred Okrand, Los Angeles, as amici curiae on behalf of respondent.

TRAYNOR, Justice.

By information defendant was charged with one count of possessing heroin in violation of Health and Safety Code, § 11500, a felony. Her motion to set the information aside (see Penal Code, § 995) was granted on the ground that all of the evidence of the crime other than admissions was obtained by an illegal search of her person in violation of her constitutional rights. The People appeal.

At about 10:00 a. m. on May 2, 1955 three officers of the Los Angeles police department obtained the key to a hotel room from the manager of the hotel and entered the room and waited. About 11:00 a. m. defendant knocked on the door or made some signal. The officers opened the door and one of them grabbed defendant's hands and found two bindles of heroin in her right hand. One of the officers testified that he asked defendant "if she had any more stuff. She said no. That is all there was. I asked her how much was there and she said a gram and a half. I asked her where she got it and she said she scored it from a friend down on Second Street. I asked her what it cost her. She said $30." He also testified that he believed a felony was being committed at the time of the arrest. The prosecuting attorney then asked what reason he had for his belief, and defendant objected on the ground that the answer would be hearsay and a conclusion of the witness. The prosecuting attorney stated that he had a right to show that the arrest was legal and that the search was incident to the arrest, but the court indicated that since the officer had made a positive statement as to his belief, any question as to its validity should come from cross-examination. On cross-examination the officer was asked, "You personally did not witness any activity of this defendant with regard to narcotics before the date of this arrest, did you?" He answered, "I did not." No further questions with respect to the basis of his belief were asked. It does not appear from the record who was the regular occupant of the hotel room where the officers waited. They did not have a search warrant or a warrant for defendant's arrest.

[1] It should be noted at the outset that whether or not the officers were trespassers in the room where they waited for defendant is immaterial in this case. It does not appear that the room was searched, and even if it was, nothing that may have been found in the room was offered or introduced in evidence. It is apparent that the officers were waiting and watching for someone to enter the room. Since they had the cooperation of the manager of the hotel, however, any such person could have been apprehended just as well from some other vantage point nearby without committing any trespass, and thus their ability to arrest and search defendant was not dependent on their presence in the room. Under these circumstances, the trespass, if any, was entirely unrelated and collateral to the securing of the evidence to which defendant objects, and it could not therefore render that evidence inadmissible. Goldman v. United States, 316 U.S. 129, 134-135, 62 S.Ct. 993, 86 L.Ed. 1322; see also, United States v. Mitchell, 322 U.S. 65, 70-71, 64 S.Ct. 896, 88 L.Ed. 1140; McQuire v. United States, 273 U.S. 95, 99-100, 47 S.Ct. 259, 71 L.Ed. 556; United States v. Lee, 274 U.S. 559, 563, 47 S.Ct. 746, 71 L.Ed. 1202.

The Attorney General contends that the search in this case was incidental to a lawful arrest and was therefore reasonable. Defendant, on the other hand, contends that the search preceded the arrest and was not incidental thereto and that in any event the arrest was unlawful.

[2,3] In People v. Brown, Cal., 290 P.2d 528, we held that a search incident to an arrest could not be justified in the absence of "reasonable cause" under Penal Code, § 836 merely because it revealed that defendant was in fact guilty of a felony. We also held in that case that an arrest could not be justified under subdivision 1 of section 836 when there was no evidence of anything apparent to the officer's senses before the arrest and search that defendant was committing or attempting to commit a public offense in his presence. Accordingly, since there was no such evidence in this case, the search may be justified only if it was incidental to a lawful arrest under subdivision 3 of section 836. If, however, an arrest under that subdivision was lawful, the search incident thereto would not be unlawful merely because it preceded rather than followed the arrest. People v. Simon, Cal., 290 P.2d 531.

Section 836, subd. 3, provides that an officer may make an arrest without a warrant "When a felony has in fact been committed, and he has reasonable cause for believing the person arrested to have committed it."

[4] Defendant contends that to justify a search incident to an arrest under this subdivision there must be evidence, other than any turned up in the search, that a felony has in fact been committed. Such evidence is present in any case in which the officer has reasonable cause to believe defendant guilty of a felony. When his belief of defendant's guilt is based on reasonable cause and a felony has in fact been committed, not only are the requirements of subdivision 3 satisfied, but a search incident to an arrest thereunder is reasonable. See, United States v. Di Re, 332 U.S. 581, 591, 68 S.Ct. 222, 92 L.Ed. 210; Johnson v. United States, 333 U.S. 10, 15, 68 S.Ct. 367, 92 L.Ed. 436; In re Dixon, 41 Cal.2d 756, 761-762, 264 P.2d 513; cf., People v. Brown, Cal., 290 P.2d 528.

[5,6] In the present case one of the arresting officers testified that he believed a felony was being committed at the time of the arrest. Since the court and not the officer must make the determination whether the officer's belief is based upon reasonable cause, the officer must testify to the facts or information known to him on which his belief is based. United States v. Bianco, 3 Cir., 189 F.2d 716, 719; United States v. Heitner, 2 Cir., 149 F.2d 105, 106-107; see also, Grau v. United States, 287 U.S. 124, 127, 53 S.Ct. 38, 77 L.Ed. 212; Byars v. United States, 273 U.S. 28, 29, 47 S.Ct. 248, 71 L.Ed. 520; People v. Tarantino, Cal., 290 P.2d 505; Michel v. Smith, 188 Cal. 199, 206, 205 P. 113. Under the peculiar circumstances of this case, however, defendant is not in a position to challenge the failure of the record to establish the basis for the officer's belief. When the prosecuting attorney sought to establish that basis, defendant objected and the committing magistrate ruled that the matter should be gone into on cross-examination. At that time defendant limited the examination to a determination that the officer had not personally witnessed any activity of defendant with regard to narcotics. It is settled, however, that reasonable cause to justify an arrest may consist of information obtained from others and is not limited to evidence that would be admissible at the trial on the issue of guilt. Brinegar v. United States, 338 U.S. 160, 171-176, 69 S.Ct. 1302, 93 L.Ed. 1879; United States

v. Li Fat Tong, 2 Cir., 152 F.2d 650, 652; Aitken v. White, 93 Cal.App.2d 134, 145, 208 P.2d 788; Cook v. Singer Sewing Machine Co., 138 Cal.App. 418, 422-423, 32 P.2d 430. Thus in the present case it is entirely possible that the officer's belief that defendant had narcotics in her possession was fully justified by reliable information obtained by him from others in carrying out his duties. Since defendant successfully prevented the prosecution from presenting such evidence, if any, she cannot now contend that the evidence before the committing magistrate was necessarily illegally obtained and therefore insufficient to support the information.

The order is reversed.

GIBSON, C. J., and SHENK, CARTER, SCHAUER and SPENCE, JJ., and McCOMB, J. pro tem., concur.

45 Cal.2d 613

PEOPLE of the State of California, Plaintiff and Appellant,

v.

ONE 1948 CHEVROLET CONVERTIBLE
COUPE, License No. 1 P 46718, Engine
No. FAA 433685, Defendant,

Bank of America National Trust and Savings Association, a national banking association, Legal Owner and Respondent.

L. A. 23728.

Supreme Court of California.

In Bank.

Nov. 29, 1955.

As Modified on Denial of Rehearing

Dec. 28, 1955.

Proceeding by the People to forfeit an automobile as used in violation of narcotics laws. From a judgment of the Superior Court, Los Angeles County, James G. Whyte, J., forfeiting the automobile to the State, subject to the interest of defendant bank, and ordering release of automobile to bank in satisfaction of its lien thereon for sum exceeding value thereof, the People appealed. The Supreme Court, Traynor, J., held that plea of guilty of unlawful possession of marijuana in automobile by its registered owner's son in possession of automobile and his statement to police inspector that he knew that another occupant of automobile had marijuana in his possession were admissible in evidence to forfeit both registered owner's and bank's interests in automobile.

Judgment reversed.

Opinion, 280 P.2d 193, vacated.

1. Forfeitures ☞5

In proceeding to forfeit automobile as used in violation of narcotics laws, police officer's testimony that one of occupants of automobile dropped a can containing marijuana into bushes beside street as they were leaving automobile following arresting officers' orders was competent evidence proving, independently of any extrajudicial statements, that a narcotic drug had been in automobile. West's Ann.Health & Safety Code, § 11610.

2. Forfeitures ☞3, 5

A bank's lien on automobile was subject to forfeiture for use thereof in violation of narcotics laws by son of purchaser thereof only if purchaser's interest was properly forfeited, though bank did not make reasonable investigation, required by statute, of purchaser's moral responsibility, character and reputation, before creation of lien, and bank could protect its interest by asserting any defense of purchaser to forfeiture, though she defaulted in forfeiture proceeding. West's Ann.Health & Safety Code, §§ 11610, 11620.

3. Forfeitures ☞5

Judicial inquiry as to collusion between person making unlawful use of another's property and alleged innocent owner surrendering control over property to such person is unnecessary to authorize forfeiture of property.

4. Forfeitures ☞5

A registered automobile owner, entrusting vehicle to her son, accepted risk of his use thereof in violation of narcotics laws. West's Ann.Health & Safety Code, § 11610.

5. Forfeitures ☞5

When a narcotic is found on occupant of automobile, there is no presumption or inference that registered owner of automobile or person entrusted therewith by such owner knew of narcotic's presence, and People, in proceeding to forfeit automobile as used in violation of narcotics laws, must establish such knowledge by other evidence. West's Ann.Health & Safety Code, §§ 11610, 11619, 11620.

6. Evidence ☞207(4), 239

In proceeding to forfeit automobile as used in violation of narcotics laws by registered owner's son and others, son's plea of guilty of unlawful possession of marijuana in automobile and his statement to police inspector that he knew before and at time of his arrest and seizure of automobile that another occupant thereof had marijuana in his possession, were admissible in evidence to forfeit interests of both such owner and bank having lien on automobile, in absence of proof of statutory defense. West's Ann.Health & Safety Code, §§ 11610, 11620.

7. Forfeitures ☞5

A proceeding by State to forfeit automobile as used in violation of narcotics laws is in rem, though claimants of automobile are entitled to jury trial. West's Ann.Health & Safety Code, § 11610.

8. Evidence ☞239

Declarations, as well as acts, of person in control of automobile at time of its seizure as used in violation of narcotics laws, bind automobile and all claimants thereof in proceedings to forfeit it. West's Ann. Health & Safety Code, § 11610.

9. Evidence ☞239

A registered automobile owner's son, to whom she entrusted automobile, had authority to speak for it while he had right to its possession and responsibility for its use, and his admissions to police officers were as binding as such owner's would have been in proceeding to forfeit automobile as used by son in violation of narcotics laws. West's Ann.Health & Safety Code, § 11610.

10. Evidence ☞239

In proceeding to forfeit automobile as used in violation of narcotics laws, statement to police inspector by registered automobile owner's son, who was in possession of automobile at time of its seizure, that he knew before and at such time that another occupant of vehicle had marijuana in his possession, was admissible in evidence to prove son's knowledge of presence of narcotic in automobile. West's Ann.Health & Safety Code, § 11610.

11. Evidence ☞268

Ordinarily, a declaration of state of mind is admissible only to prove declarant's state of mind at time of declaration.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Donald D. Stoker and W. B. Thayer, Deputy Atty. Gen., for appellant.

Samuel B. Stewart, Jr., San Francisco, Hugo A. Steinmeyer and Joseph S. Potts, Los Angeles, for respondent.

TRAYNOR, Justice.

In this proceeding the People seek the forfeiture of an automobile for being used in violation of section 11610 of the Health and Safety Code. The notice of seizure and intended forfeiture, Health & Safety Code, § 11612 et seq. was directed to Mrs. V. E. Phillips, the registered owner, Ronald Leon Phillips, her son, and the Bank of America, the legal owner. Mrs. Phillips defaulted. The bank answered, denying that the vehicle was used in violation of the narcotics laws and that any narcotic was unlawfully in the possession of any occupant thereof.

[1] The cause was tried by the court sitting without a jury. See, People v. One 1941 Chevrolet Coupe, 37 Cal.2d 283, 300, 231 P.2d 832. Officer Brogan of the Long Beach Police Department testified that on August 3, 1953, he and officer O'Rourke saw the vehicle parked at the curb of a city street near school grounds where no cars are ordinarily parked. They decided to investigate and found four occupants in the vehicle. Clothier was in the front seat behind the wheel, see, People v. One 1951 Ford Sedan, 122 Cal.App.2d 680, 691-692, 265 P.2d 176. Dean and DeCordova were also in the front seat, and Phillips was in the rear seat. As they were getting from the vehicle to the sidewalk following orders of the officers, Clothier dropped a can containing marijuana into the bushes. The four suspects were arrested, and the vehicle was seized. Thus, by competent evidence, independently of any extrajudicial statements, the People proved that a narcotic had in fact been in the vehicle. People v. One 1941 Buick Club Coupe, 72 Cal. App.2d 593, 596, 165 P.2d 44; People v. One 1940 Buick 8 Sedan, 70 Cal.App.2d 542, 545-546, 161 P.2d 264.

Phillips' plea of guilty in a criminal action for unlawful possession of the marijuana was admitted in evidence against the registered owner but was excluded as against the bank. See, Vaughn v. Jonas, 31 Cal.2d 586, 593-596, 191 P.2d 432; People v. One 1940 Oldsmobile Club Coupe, 80 Cal.App.2d 372, 377-378, 181 P.2d 950; Langensand v. Obert, 129 Cal.App. 214, 218, 18 P.2d 725; People v. Sanderson, 129 Cal.App. 531, 533, 18 P.2d 982. Inspector Doyle, the officer in charge of the Narcotics Division of the Long Beach Police Department testified that at "2:15 in the morning of the day of the arrest" he questioned the suspects and that "at a later time after the arrest", in the presence of Clothier and the other occupants of the vehicle, he had a conversation with Phillips in which Phillips stated in effect that he knew before and at the time of the arrest and seizure that an occupant of the vehicle had marijuana in his possession.¹

1. The testimony of the police officer as to the conversation with Phillips was: "I questioned Phillips as to the—in fact, I questioned him generally as to who was the registered owner of the car. Phillips admitted he was.

"I asked him to relate what had occurred in regard to purchasing this marijuana. Phillips stated that he had met Clothier, who was down here on leave from a naval vessel which was moored at San Francisco,—which was moored in San Francisco Bay, and they had picked up the other party Dean, and DeCordova also was from another vessel in the same area, came down here to Long Beach with Clothier and he had agreed to drive them back to San Francisco in time to be on their vessel by 8:00 o'clock Monday morning, and that on the afternoon before the arrest they decided they would purchase some marijuana, they would take it to San Francisco and sell it, and that the four of them had pooled their funds and that he then drove the other three occupants in this car to Tijuana, and there on the street, he and Clothier contacted a Mexican and Clothier left with this Mexican, at which time he returned and had this marijuana.

"It was shown to them there and then Phillips was worried about the Customs officials finding it in his car. Clothier and DeCordova had their sailor uniforms in a parcel or package within the car; that they had decided to change into their clothes later on in the trip. They decided that the two boys would change into their sailor clothes, and take the marijuana and walk across the border ahead of the car. There would be less suspicion.

"They both agreed to it, and Clothier took the narcotics and he and DeCordova walked across the border.

"After waiting for sometime across the border, Dean came up to them on the United States side and told them not to get restless, that Phillips had sent him ahead to tell them he was in the line. After Phillips crossed the line, he picked up the suspects and proceeded north back to Long Beach.

"At a place outside of San Diego they stopped at a service station and Clothier got out of the car and went to the rest room at which time he came back and

This statement was also admitted against the registered owner but excluded as against the bank.

The court found that Phillips had no interest in the vehicle, that at the time of the arrest and seizure Phillips was in possession of the vehicle, that it was being used to transport marijuana on the person of Clothier, an occupant thereof, that, as against the registered owner only, on the basis of the admissions, Phillips was aware of the presence of marijuana on the person of an occupant of the vehicle at the time of seizure. The court also found that the bank had not made a reasonable investigation of the moral responsibility, character, and reputation of the purchaser before its lien was created, Health & Safety Code, § 11620, that as against the bank, the admission of Phillips that he knew Clothier had marijuana at the time of the seizure was inadmissible hearsay, and that there being no other sufficient evidence of that fact, Phillips had no knowledge of the presence of any narcotic in the vehicle. Accordingly, judgment was entered forfeiting the vehicle to the state subject to the interest of the bank in the sum of $855.02. Since that sum was in excess of the value of the vehicle at the time of the seizure, it was ordered that the vehicle be released to the bank in satisfaction of its lien. The People appeal.

[2] Even though the bank did not make the investigation required by section 11620, its interest is not subject to forfeiture in the absence of a proper forfeiture of Mrs. Phillips' interest, People v. One 1937 Plymouth 6 4-Door Sedan, 37 Cal.App.2d 65, 72-74, 98 P.2d 750, and despite the fact that she defaulted, the bank may protect its own interest by asserting any defense she had to the forfeiture. People v. One 1939 La Salle 8 Touring Sedan, 45 Cal.App.2d 709, 713, 115 P.2d 39. The basic question on this appeal, therefore, is whether there was a proper forfeiture of Mrs. Phillips' interest in the vehicle.

[3-6] It was not necessary that Mrs. Phillips know of the illegal use. "* * * certain uses of property may be regarded so undesirable that the owner surrenders his control at his peril. The law thus builds a secondary defense against a forbidden use and precludes evasions by dispensing with the necessity of judicial inquiry as to collusion between the wrongdoer and the alleged innocent owner." Van Oster v. State of Kansas, 272 U.S. 465, 467, 47 S.Ct. 133, 134, 71 L.Ed. 354. The purpose of the statutes is to curb the narcotic traffic, and "The public interest to be protected against the drug and its victims outweighs the loss suffered by those whose confidence in others proves to be misplaced". People v. One 1941 Ford 8 Stake Truck, 26 Cal.2d 503, 508, 159 P.2d 641, 643. By entrusting the vehicle to her son, Mrs. Phillips accepted the risk that it would be used contrary to law. People v. One 1940 Ford V-8 Coupe, 36 Cal.2d 471, 476, 224 P.2d 677; People v. One 1933 Plymouth Auto, 13 Cal.2d 565, 568, 90 P.2d 799; People v. One 1951 Ford Sedan, 122 Cal.App.2d 680, 687, 265 P.2d 176; Dobbins' Distillery v. United States, 96 U.S. 395, 398, 402, 24 L.Ed. 637; Van Oster v. State of Kansas, supra, 272 U.S. 465, 467, 47 S.Ct. 133, 71 L.Ed. 354; Goldsmith Jr., Grant Co. v. United States, 254 U.S. 505, 512-513, 41 S.Ct. 189, 65 L.Ed.

Phillips was driving, and after they left this rest room and got about two miles, Clothier broke out a marijuana cigarette which he told them he had rolled in the washroom and lit it and passed it round to all four of them.

"At a place—they weren't certain whether it was in the City limits of Long Beach or on the border, they stopped for a cup of coffee or sandwich. When they got back in the car, Phillips, having driven, Clothier offered to drive, and he permitted Clothier to drive the car back to Long Beach, and Clothier did drive it, and they came back to the area which is north of where they were arrested, and which had been the original point of departure, and none of their other companions were around, and they drove around the block and stopped, at which time the police car came up to them and found them and shook them down as they took them out of the car."

376. When, as in this case, the narcotic is found on an occupant of the vehicle, there is no presumption or inference that the registered owner or person entrusted with the vehicle had knowledge thereof (see People v. One 1941 Buick Sport Coupe, 28 Cal.2d 692, 695, 171 P.2d 719) as there is when the narcotic is found on the person of the registered owner or his trustee, People v. One 1952 Chevrolet, 128 Cal.App.2d 414, 417, 275 P.2d 509; People v. One 1940 Chrysler, 77 Cal.App.2d 306, 314, 175 P.2d 585, and the People must establish by other evidence that the registered owner or the person entrusted with the vehicle had knowledge of the presence of a narcotic therein. People v. One 1951 Mercury Sedan, 116 Cal.App.2d 692, 693-694, 254 P.2d 140. The People established that knowledge herein by Phillips' plea of guilty in the criminal action and by his statement to Inspector Doyle. These admissions were admissible to forfeit Mrs. Phillips' interest (for the reasons set forth below) and were therefore admissible to forfeit the bank's, for once the vehicle is shown to have been illegally used as to the registered owner, the only defense available to the lien claimants is Health and Safety Code, section 11620. People v. One 1940 Ford V-8 Coupe, supra, 36 Cal.2d 471, 474, 224 P.2d 677.

[7-9] The proceeding under section 11610 is in rem, People v. One 1933 Plymouth Auto, supra, 13 Cal.2d 565, 569, 90 P.2d 799, even though it is a kind of in rem proceeding in which the claimants to the property are entitled to a jury trial, People v. One 1941 Chevrolet Coupe, supra, 37 Cal.2d 283, 286, 300, 231 P.2d 832, and the declarations as well as the acts of the person in control of the vehicle bind the vehicle and thereby bind all claimants thereto. Dobbins' Distillery v. United States, supra, 96 U.S. 395, 398-402, 24 L.Ed. 637; Interstate Securities Co. v. United States, 10 Cir., 151 F.2d 224, 226; United States v. One Buick Automobile, D.C., 21 F.2d 789, 790-791; United States v. One 1952 De Soto Club Coupe, D.C., 122 F.Supp. 568, 569. In United States v. One 1949 Pontiac Sedan, 7 Cir., 194 F.2d 756, 761, certiorari denied Moses v. United States, 343 U.S. 966, 72 S. Ct. 1061, 96 L.Ed. 1363, cited for a contrary rule, the court declared, "However, in view of our further conclusions, the propriety of the exclusion of this evidence is not decisive of the issues herein." In United States v. Packard Sedan, 23 F.2d 865, 869, the United States District Court for the Southern District of Florida reached a contrary result without reference to the Dobbins' Distillery case and similar cases. If Mrs. Phillips had been in possession of the vehicle and made these admissions, there could be no doubt that they would bind the vehicle and justify the forfeiture of her interest and necessarily therefore the interest of the bank. People v. One 1951 Ford V-8 Coupe, 119 Cal.App.2d 612, 613, 259 P.2d 693. She entrusted the vehicle to Phillips, and while he had the right to its possession and responsibility for its use, he had authority to speak for it and his admissions are as binding on it as hers would have been. Dobbins' Distillery v. United States, supra, 96 U.S. 395, 398-402, 24 L. Ed. 637; United States v. One Buick Automobile, supra, 21 F.2d 789, 791. The statement in People v. One 1950 Mercury, 116 Cal.App.2d 746, 751, 254 P.2d 666, that the driver's admissions do not bind the other claimants was unnecessary to the decision therein and is disapproved.²

2. In that case the forensic chemist "would not say that these were the same cigarettes that he examined in his laboratory and that the specific cigarettes before him were narcotic. * * * Therefore so far as the record in this case is concerned the cigarettes found in the coat and in the car are brown

[10] Even if Phillips' plea of guilty and his statement to Inspector Doyle were not binding on the vehicle as vicarious admissions, his statement to the Inspector was admissible to prove his state of mind, i.e., his knowledge of the presence of a narcotic in the vehicle. Although the People did not state for what purpose Phillips' statement to Inspector Doyle was offered, the court admitted it as against Mrs. Phillips, the registered owner, and it is clear from the record that the court considered the admissibility of Phillips' statement on the issue of knowledge apart from the issue as to whether or not a narcotic was in the vehicle. The presence of a narcotic in the vehicle had already been proved by direct evidence independently of any extrajudicial statements. The remaining issue in the case was Phillips' knowledge, and the record leaves no doubt that the court considered Phillips' statements as offered to prove that knowledge, for it found as against her "on the basis of admissions of Ronald L. Phillips that he was aware of the presence of marijuana on the person of an occupant of said vehicle," but that as against the bank that Phillips "had no knowledge" of the presence of any narcotic in the vehicle. See, Cripe v. Cripe, 170 Cal. 91, 94, 148 P. 520.

[11] Ordinarily a declaration of a state of mind is admissible only to prove the declarant's state of mind at the time of the declaration. See, Adkins v. Brett, 184 Cal. 252, 255, 193 P. 251; In re Estate of Carson, 184 Cal. 437, 445, 194 P. 5, 17 A.L.R. 239; In re Estate of Anderson, 185 Cal. 700, 718, 198 P. 407. It has been held in this state, however, that under certain circumstances declarations are admissible to prove a state of mind at a particular time although uttered before or after that time, apparently on the theory that under these particular circumstances "[t]he stream of consciousness has enough continuity so that we may expect to find the same characteristics for some distance up or down the current." Chaffee, Progress of the Law—Evidence, 1919-1922, 35 Harv.L.Rev. 428, 444; In re Estate of McDevitt, 95 Cal. 17, 26, 30 P. 101; In re Estate of Ricks, 160 Cal. 450, 466, 117 P. 532 [declarations of testator after will was executed admissible to show mental condition at time it was executed]; Williams v. Kidd, 170 Cal. 631, 648 et seq., 151 P. 1; Donahue v. Sweeney, 171 Cal. 388, 391-392, 153 P. 708; De Cou v. Howell, 190 Cal. 741, 750, 214 P. 444 [declarations of grantor made after making a deed admissible on issue of delivery]; In re Estate of Anderson, supra, 185 Cal. 700, 720, 198 P. 407, 416 [declarations of testatrix at a "not far distant time" after execution of will that she then feared her aunt admissible to show attitude toward her aunt at the time she executed will]; Schooler v. Williamson, 192 Cal. 472, 476, 221 P. 195 [declarations of decedent made a week after the time of alleged transfer to plaintiff that envelope and endorsement thereon were the ones referred to by him in a conversation two years earlier admissible to show intent of decedent in making such indorsement whenever it was made]; Whitlow v. Durst, 20 Cal.2d 523, 525, 127 P.2d 530 [declarations of husband a few days after alleged reconciliation, admissible to show lack of intent to reconcile]; Hansen v. Bear Film Co., 28 Cal.2d 154, 173-174, 168 P.2d 946 [declarations of deceased owner of stock after transfer of paper cigarettes, no more." 116 Cal. App.2d at pages 750-751, 254 P.2d at page 669. There was thus no evidence other than the admission of the driver, one of the registered owners, that the vehicle was used illegally. For the same reasons that a conviction in a criminal proceeding cannot be had without proof of the corpus delicti independently of admissions of the defendant, People v. Cullen, 37 Cal.2d 614, 624-625, 234 P.2d

1, a forfeiture of a vehicle cannot be had without proof independently of admissions that a narcotic was in the car. There was therefore no basis for the forfeiture of even the driver's interest in the vehicle. The rule admitting declarations of a state of mind was not invoked or considered in that case and it is therefore no authority one way or the other as to the application of that rule.

stock admissible to show stock was to be held in trust]; In re Estate of Sargavak, 35 Cal.2d 93, 96-98, 216 P.2d 850, 21 A.L.R. 2d 307 [declarations of decedent before and after execution of an instrument admissible to show intent with which it was executed]; Casey v. Casey, 97 Cal.App.2d 875, 878-883, 218 P.2d 842 [declarations of grantor before and after conveyance admissible to show whether she intended the grant as a gift or a trust]. See, 141 A.L.R. 704-710; McBaine, Admissibility in California of Declarations of Physical and Mental Condition, 19 Cal.L.Rev. 231, 367; McCormick on Evidence [1955] 466-467, 567-570.

In this case Phillips knew that he was arrested, he knew that the vehicle was seized because an occupant thereof possessed a narcotic. There was no reason to hold him under arrest, if, prior thereto, he did not know of such possession, yet, he not only did not disclaim such knowledge but while under arrest and at a time in close proximity to the arrest and seizure freely admitted his knowledge in the presence of the other suspects. Under the circumstances his statement was plainly relevant to show his knowledge at the time of the arrest and seizure. The matters admitted were within his special knowledge, the hearsay dangers of faulty perception and memory were not present, there was no apparent motive for misstatement, and the fact that his statement was not only against his interest in the possession of the vehicle as well as his mother's interest therein, but against his interest penally, gives reasonable assurance of his veracity. Under these circumstances Phillips' statement was admissible to prove that he knew at the time of the seizure of the vehicle that there was a narcotic therein.

The judgment is reversed.

GIBSON, C. J., and SHENK, EDMONDS, CARTER, SCHAUER and SPENCE, JJ., concur.

45 Cal.2d 546

DE LUZ HOMES, Inc., a corporation,
Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

COUNTY OF SAN DIEGO, a Body Corporate and Politic, Defendant and Appellant.

WIRE MOUNTAIN HOMES, Inc., No. 1, a corporation, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

COUNTY OF SAN DIEGO, a Body Corporate and Politic, Defendant and Appellant.

WIRE MOUNTAIN HOMES, Inc., No. 2, a corporation, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

COUNTY OF SAN DIEGO, a Body Corporate and Politic, Defendant and Appellant.

DE LUZ HOMES, Inc., a corporation,
Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

COUNTY OF SAN DIEGO, a Body Corporate and Politic, Defendant and Appellant.

L. A. 23564, 23656.

Supreme Court of California,
In Bank.

Nov. 25, 1955.

Rehearing Denied Dec. 21, 1955.

Actions were brought by taxpayers against county to recover taxes paid under protest. The Superior Court of San Diego County, L. N. Turrentine, J., entered judgments in favor of taxpayers and orders remanding the proceedings to county board of equalization, and the county appealed. The Supreme Court, Traynor, J., held that Superior Court erred in determining the full cash value of leasehold estates of lessee taxpayers who had erected housing projects on military installations of the federal government under the National Housing Act, where Superior Court deducted annual burdens, including payments of principal and interest on mortgage debts, from annual benefits, and thereby computed a value that was inversely proportional to the size of the mortgage debt payments.

Judgments and orders reversed with directions to remand proceedings to county board of equalization.

1. Taxation ⚡318

When property is not assessed between the first Mondays in March and July for any tax year, assessor must assess it when he discovers its physical existence, its taxable status, or fact that it has not been assessed. Revenue and Taxation Code, § 531.

2. Taxation ⚡318

Only if delayed assessment has been caused by negligence of assessor and will cause substantial injury to taxpayer, is the assessment invalid because not timely. Revenue and Taxation Code, § 531.

3. Taxation ⚡362

When both taxpayer and assessor appeared before county board of equalization on third Monday in July and argued, respectively, that an immediate assessment should be made and that assessment should be delayed, matter was "investigated" within meaning of section of Revenue and Taxation Code providing that after five days succeeding time when notice of date when matter will be "investigated" is sent by clerk of county board to all persons interested, county board may direct assessor to assess any taxable property other than state assessed property that has escaped assessment, and therefore neither taxpayer nor assessor could complain in the Supreme Court that it did not receive five days' notice of meeting. Revenue and Taxation Code, § 1611.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Investigated".

4. Taxation ⚡318

Where there was no indication either that assessor was negligent or that taxpayer acted to its detriment in reliance on fact that it was not assessed during regular assessment period, and taxpayer appeared before county board of equalization on third Monday in July of 1953 and asked that it be assessed at figures that it supplied, and assessor appeared in opposition to petition and stated that he had insufficient information properly to assess taxpayer at that time, and that he had attempted to cooperate with taxpayer, but that taxpayer had given him conflicting information, and board passed motion authorizing assessor to enter assessment as soon as he secured sufficient information, 1953 assessment was not invalid, on ground that it was not timely. Revenue and Taxation Code, § 531.

5. Taxation ⚡347

Provision of the Revenue and Taxation Code that all taxable property shall be assessed at its "full cash value" requires an assessment at price that property would bring to its owner if it were offered for sale on an open market under conditions in which neither buyer nor seller could take advantage of the exigencies of the other. Revenue and Taxation Code, §§ 110, 401.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Full Cash Value".

6. Taxation ⚡347

Phrase "full cash value" as used in provision of the Revenue and Taxation Code that all taxable property shall be assessed at its "full cash value" is a measure of desirability translated into money amounts, and may be called the market value of the property for use in its present condition. Revenue and Taxation Code, §§ 110, 401.

7. Taxation ⚡40(8)

The Constitution requires not only that all nonexempt property be taxed, but that, except as otherwise specified, all property be assessed by the same standard of valuation. West's Ann.Const. art. 13.

8. Taxation ⚡348

Since nonexempt possessory interests in land and improvements, such as leasehold estates under leases by the United States government of realty on military installations for construction of housing projects under the National Housing Act, are taxable property, they must be assessed at full cash value. National Housing Act, §§ 801-809, 803 as amended 12 U.S.C.A. §§ 1748-1748h, 1748b; 34 U.S.C.A. § 522a; Revenue and Taxation Code, §§ 110, 401; West's Ann.Const. art. 13.

9. Taxation ⇨80

Since practice of assessors of entering entire value of land and improvements on tax roll without distinction between possessory and reversionary interests results in a single amount reflecting both interests on the roll, the constitutional mandate that all property be taxed is obeyed, and as between reversioners and possessors, payment of the tax is a private arrangement. West's Ann.Const. art. 13.

10. Taxation ⇨80

When possessory interest in realty is taxable, and reversion is exempt, only the possessory interest is subject to assessment and taxation. West's Ann.Const. art. 13.

11. Taxation ⇨348

Since possessory interest in realty must be assessed in accord with standard of valuation applicable to all other property, its estimated value is the price it would bring if offered on an open market under conditions in which neither buyer nor seller could take advantage of the exigencies of the other, and such hypothetical market price is its value, even though a sale of the property has not been made or contemplated. Revenue and Taxation Code, §§ 110, 401.

12. Taxation ⇨348

The absence of an actual market for a particular type of property does not mean that it has no value or that it may escape from the constitutional mandate that all property shall be taxed in proportion to its value, but only that the assessor must then use such pertinent factors as replacement costs and income analyses for determining valuation. Revenue and Taxation Code, §§ 110, 401; West's Ann.Const. art. 13.

13. Taxation ⇨348

Assessors generally estimate value by analyzing market data on sales of similar real property, replacement costs, and income from property, and, since no one of these methods alone can be used to estimate the value of all property, the assessor, subject to requirements of fairness and uniformity, may exercise his discretion in using one or more of them. Revenue and Taxation Code, §§ 110, 401; West's Ann.Const. art. 13.

14. Taxation ⇨493(8)

Where assessing authority's estimate of value of specific property at a specific time is reviewed by county board of equalization at request of taxpayer, board's decision in regard to specific valuations and methods of valuation employed are equivalent to findings and judgment of a trial court and are reviewable only for arbitrariness, abuse of discretion, or failure to follow standards prescribed by the legislature. Revenue and Taxation Code, §§ 110, 401; West's Ann.Const. art. 13.

15. Taxation ⇨348

Capitalization of income is a generally accepted method of valuing property, from which income may be or is derived, for tax assessment purposes. Revenue and Taxation Code, §§ 110, 401; West's Ann.Const. art. 13.

16. Taxation ⇨348

Under the "capitalization of income" method of valuing property from which income may be or is derived, for tax assessment purposes, the value of property is the sum of anticipated future installments of net income from the property, less an allowance for interest and the risk of partial or no receipt. Revenue and Taxation Code, §§ 110, 401; West's Ann.Const. art. 13.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Capitalization of Income".

17. Taxation ⇨348

The "capitalization of income" method of valuing property, for which income may be or is derived, for tax assessment purposes, involves a capitalization or discounted valuation of the realized or prospective net monetary income derivable by continuous exploitation rather than by resale. Revenue and Taxation Code, §§ 110, 401; West's Ann.Const. art. 13.

18. Taxation ⇨348

The first step in the process of applying the capitalization of income method to value property, for which income may be or is derived, for tax assessment purposes, is to determine prospective net income, and that is done by estimating future gross income and deducting therefrom expected necessary expenses incident to maintenance and operation of the property, and in instances in which future income cannot be estimated with reasonable accuracy or is not ascribable entirely to the property, prospective net monetary income is imputed in an amount equal to a minimum reasonable return on estimated market value. Revenue and Taxation Code, §§ 110, 401; West's Ann.Const. art. 13.

19. Taxation ⇨348

Where capitalization of income method is used for valuing property, from which income may be or is derived, for tax assessment purposes, the second step, after determining prospective net income, is to discount each future installment of income by a rate of interest that takes into account the hazards of the investment and the accepted concepts of a fair return, and the sum of the discounted installments is the present value of the property. Revenue and Taxation Code, §§ 110, 401; West's Ann.Const. art. 13.

20. Taxation ⇨348

In valuing real property, assessor must adhere to the statutory standard of "full cash value," and must therefore estimate the price the property would bring on an open market under conditions in which neither buyer nor seller could take advantage of the exigencies of the other, and net earnings to be capitalized therefore are not those of the present owner of the property, but those that would be anticipated by a prospective purchaser. Revenue and Taxation Code, §§ 110, 401; West's Ann.Const. art. 13.

21. Taxation ⇨348

The standard of "full cash value" in section of the Revenue and Taxation Code providing that all taxable property shall be assessed at its "full cash value" applies equally to a leasehold interest, and, accordingly, assessor must estimate price a leasehold would bring on an open market under conditions, in which neither buyer nor seller could take advantage of the exigencies of the other, and assessor must therefore capitalize, not the anticipated net earnings of the present lessee, but those of a prospective assignee. Revenue and Taxation Code, §§ 110, 401; West's Ann.Const. art. 13.

22. Taxation ⇨348

In assessing a leasehold interest by capitalizing anticipated net earnings of a prospective assignee, the anticipated net earnings equal expected gross income less necessary expenditures for maintenance, operation and taxes, and no deduction is made for cost of lease to present lessee. Revenue and Taxation Code, §§ 110, 401; West's Ann.Const. art. 13.

23. Taxation ⇨355

In determining income to be capitalized to establish value of leasehold for appraisal purposes, no deduction can be made for amortization. Revenue and Taxation Code, §§ 110, 401; West's Ann.Const. art. 13.

24. Taxation ⇨348

In establishing value of leasehold for tax appraisal purposes, no concept of income, which includes depreciation in capital value as a positive or negative item of income, is acceptable as a basis of valuation under the capitalization of income method. Revenue and Taxation Code, §§ 110, 401; West's Ann.Const. art. 13.

25. Taxation ⇨348

In establishing value of leasehold for tax appraisal purposes, rent paid for leasehold interest, like cost of improvements that revert to the lessor, is part of the cost of the purchase price of the leasehold by a prospective purchaser, and to include a deduction for it is improper. Revenue and Taxation Code, §§ 110, 401; West's Ann.Const. art. 13.

26. Taxation ⇨348

Since the full cash value for tax assessment purposes of a long-term possessory interest in realty may approach the value of the fee, near equality between the two estimated values does not of itself demonstrate invalidity in the valuation of either one. Revenue and Taxation Code, §§ 110, 401; West's Ann.Const. art. 13.

27. Taxation ⚡5

The near equality of leasehold values to those of fee belonging to the United States government does not constitute a violation of the immunity of the federal government from taxation by the states. Revenue and Taxation Code, §§ 110, 401; West's Ann.Const. art. 13.

28. Taxation ⚡5

Where tax was imposed solely on privately owned possessory interest of lessees in land owned by the federal government, and, under terms of contract between the federal government and the lessees, would be paid entirely by the lessees, neither the legal nor economic incidence falls on the federal government. Revenue and Taxation Code, §§ 104, 107, 201; National Housing Act, § 807 as amended 12 U.S.C.A. § 1748f.

29. Taxation ⚡348

In determining value of leaseholds of lessees to whom the federal government leased lands on military installations for construction of housing projects under the National Housing Act, assessor erred in imputing an income of 6 percent and taxes of 2 percent to an amount somewhat less than the estimated fee value of the lands and improvements, and in deducting the $100 rent paid to the federal government, and in capitalizing the difference at 8 percent. National Housing Act, §§ 801-809, 803, 807 as amended 12 U.S.C.A. §§ 1748-1748h, 1748b, 1748f; 34 U.S.C.A. § 522a; Revenue and Taxation Code, §§ 110, 401; West's Ann.Const. art. 13.

30. Taxation ⚡348

Where expected annual expenditures for housing projects on military installations of the federal government under the National Housing Act by lessees, had been estimated by both the Federal Housing Administration and the lessees and therefore there was carefully formulated evidence as to anticipated expenses available to assessing authorities, value of possessory interests of lessees for tax assessment purposes could best be estimated in terms of actual income rather than imputed income. National Housing Act, §§ 801-809, 803, 807 as amended 12 U.S.C.A. §§ 1748-1748h, 1748b, 1748f; 34 U.S.C.A. § 522a; Revenue and Taxation Code, §§ 110, 401; West's Ann.Const. art. 13.

31. Taxation ⚡349

Trial court erred in determining the full cash value of leasehold estates of lessees, who had erected housing projects on military installations of the federal government under the National Housing Act, where court deducted annual burdens, including payments of principal and interest on mortgage debts, from annual benefits, and thereby computed a value that was inversely proportional to the size of the mortgage debt payments. National Housing Act, §§ 801-809, 803, 807 as amended 12 U.S.C.A. §§ 1748-1748h, 1748b, 1748f; 34 U.S.C.A. § 522a; Revenue and Taxation Code, §§ 110, 401; West's Ann.Const. art. 13, § 1.

32. Taxation ⚡348

County equalization board in estimating, for tax assessment purposes, the full cash value of the possessory estates of lessees, who constructed housing projects on military installations of the federal government under the National Housing Act, should deduct annual operating and maintenance expenses and deposit to replacement reserve from annual gross income, and should capitalize the difference at the rate that it determines will allow for risk, interest and taxes, and the period of capitalization should be the remaining years of the lease. National Housing Act, §§ 801-809, 803, 807 as amended 12 U.S.C.A. §§ 1748-1748h, 1748b, 1748f; 34 U.S.C.A. § 522a; Revenue and Taxation Code, §§ 110, 401; West's Ann.Const. art. 13.

James Don Keller, Dist. Atty., San Diego, and County Counsel, and Carroll H. Smith, Deputy County Counsel, San Diego, for appellant.

Joel E. Ogle, County Counsel (Orange County), George F. Holden and Stephen K. Tamura, Deputy Counsel, Santa Ana, as Amici Curiae on behalf of appellant.

Holbrook, Tarr, Carter & O'Neill, W. Sumner Holbrook, Jr., Francis H. O'Neill, Los Angeles, Alexander W. Rutan, Santa Ana, and Robert A. Oakes, San Diego, for respondents.

TRAYNOR, Justice.

Actions to recover taxes, levied against possessory interests in tax exempt land and improvements and paid under protest, were brought against the County of San Diego, Revenue & Taxation Code, §§ 5103, 5138, in 1953 by De Luz Homes and in 1954 by De Luz Homes, Wire Mountain Homes No. 1 and Wire Mountain Homes No. 2. The county appeals from judgments in favor of plaintiffs and from orders remanding the proceedings to the county board of equalization. The 1953 and 1954 actions raise the same substantive question and have been consolidated on appeal.

De Luz Homes is a 562-unit housing project located on land owned by the United States Government at Camp Pendleton, a military installation in San Diego County. The project provides housing for military and civilian personnel stationed at the camp at maximum rentals prescribed by the Federal Housing Administration and the Department of the Navy and was constructed under the provisions of Title VIII of the National Housing Act (12 U.S.C.A. §§ 1748-1748h [known as the Wherry Act]) and section 522a of Title 34 of the United States Code Annotated. Title VIII provides, "In order to assist in relieving the acute shortage of housing which now exists at or in areas adjacent to military installations * * * and to increase the supply of rental housing accommodations available to military and civilian personnel at such installations, the [Federal Housing] Commissioner is authorized * * * to insure mortgages * * * [on] property * * * designed for rent for residential use by civilian or military personnel of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, or Air Force * * * assigned to duty at the military installation at or in the area of which such property is constructed." * 12 U.S.C.A. § 1748b(a), (b) (2); see, Senate Report on Military and Naval Installations—Construction, 82d Cong., 1st Sess., Sen.Rep. No. 727. Section 522a of Title 34 of the United States Code Annotated authorizes the Secretary of the Navy to lease property under the control of the Department of the Navy whenever it shall be advantageous to the government.

In July, 1952, the United States Government, acting through the Secretary of the Navy, leased a single parcel of 95.22 acres at Camp Pendleton to De Luz Homes, Inc., a Delaware Corporation, for a period of 75 years at an annual ground rental of $100. The lease, as amended, states that the Secretary of the Navy has determined that lease of the premises will effectuate the purpose of "erecting, maintaining, and operating thereon a housing project, consisting of approximately 562 units, substantially in accordance with detailed plans and specifications submitted by the Department of the Navy * * * and approved by the Federal Housing Commissioner." In addition to building and equipping the project and paying the ground rental, the lessee is required to obtain mortgage insurance from the Federal Housing Administration, to lease the units at rents specified by the Federal Housing Administration and the Department of the Navy to persons designated by the commanding general of the camp, to maintain the premises for the term of the lease, to provide protection against fire and other losses, and to "pay to the proper authority, when and as the same become due and payable, all taxes, assessments, and similar charges which, at any time during the term of this lease, may be taxed, assessed or imposed upon the Government or upon the Lessee with respect to or upon the leased premises." The Government promises to provide "when and as available" fire and police protection on a nonreimbursable basis and has reserved rights of inspection and a right of way to connect the project with the school site adjoining it. The buildings and other improvements erected by De Luz became the property of the United States as they were completed, and all ranges, refrigerators, and other items required by the plans must remain on the premises and will become the property of the United States after the mortgage debt is paid. Under its contract of mortgage insurance with the Federal Housing Administration, the lessee is required to pay an annual insurance premium, to insure the improvements against fire and other losses, and to accumulate a fund for replacing worn-out improvements and equipment. Under the terms of the lease, the lessee must continue to insure and to accumulate a replacement reserve for the remainder of the lease after the mortgage debt is paid. The lease cannot be transferred or assigned by De Luz without written approval of the Government, but may be terminated by the Government upon sixty days' notice in the event of default by De Luz in the payment of the annual ground rental or accumulation and maintenance of the replacement reserve, or, irrespective of default, after fifty years from execution of the lease.

De Luz, at its sole expense, had 562 housing units constructed in accordance with the plans drawn by the Department of the Navy and installed therein ranges, refrigerators, screens, shades, and other items designated in the plans. Construction of the entire project cost somewhat in excess of $4,516,000, and to finance it De Luz borrowed from the Republic National Bank of Dallas, Texas, approximately $4,600,000, at 5% per year, payable in full thirty days after completion of the project. After the project was completed, De Luz refinanced the loan by borrowing from the First National Bank of Boston approximately $4,516,000, at 4% per year and repayable in fixed annual installments, including interest, of $248,388. The installment payments began on February 1, 1954, and will continue thereafter for 32 years and eight months until 1986. To secure the loan, De Luz gave the bank a mortgage on its leasehold interest and, as required by its lease, purchased a mortgage insurance policy from the Federal Housing Administration.

All net income from subrentals becomes the property of De Luz, and the company estimates that its maximum potential gross income, assuming 100% occupancy, is $552,354 per year. It forecasts, however, that after making a 20% allowance for vacancies and paying $27,967 into the replacement reserve, $251,271 for maintenance and operating expenses, and $248,388 in payment of its loan, it will expend $55,238 annually in excess of income until its mortgage debt is repaid. After 1986, however, when it will have repaid the loan, it expects income to exceed disbursements by $214,762 per year.¹ The Federal Housing Administration estimates that at 100% occupancy De Luz would receive a gross income of $554,980 per year, and that with a 3% vacancy allowance and deductions of $156,401 for operating expenses, $27,967 for accumulation of the replacement reserve, and $38,400 for taxes, but without a deduction for repayment of the loan, De Luz will receive an annual net income of $305,862.

On Monday, July 20, 1953, after the regular assessment period for the tax year 1953-1954, Rev. & Tax.Code, § 405 and during the period for equalization, Rev. & Tax.Code, § 1603, De Luz appeared by counsel before the Board of Supervisors of San Diego County sitting as a board of equalization. It stated that De Luz Homes had not been assessed, that it waived the five day notice to which it was entitled by statute, Rev. & Tax.Code, § 1611, and that it petitioned the board "to add an assessment of a possessory interest to the De Luz Homes * * * the same being exempt property of the United States, and the assessment to be of a possessory interest therein with a full cash value of $40,350.00." The assessor objected, stating that he had not been able to assess De Luz because of insufficient information as to personal property on the premises, that his office had delayed the assessment to give the taxpayer sufficient time to gather information, and

1. In July, 1953, when the project was about 70% completed, De Luz predicted that maximum gross income, after a 10% vacancy allowance, would be $490,482, that disbursements would exceed income by $35,267.08 per year until 1986, and that thereafter, with the loan repaid, annual income would exceed expenses by $235,701.92.

that his office had "not had any cooperation from the taxpayer." The board denied the petition by De Luz with the understanding that as soon as the assessor obtained a full statement of personal property the entire assessment would be put on the roll. On July 31, 1953, the assessor entered an assessment of De Luz for the tax year 1953-1954 at a valuation of $86,690 for the possessory interest in land, $487,380 for the possessory interest in improvements, and $61,380 for personal property, and he levied taxes thereon totalling $35,013.29. De Luz filed an application with the board to reduce the assessment, Rev. & Tax.Code, §§ 1604, 1607, and on August 24, 1953, the board held a hearing, received oral and written evidence, and denied the application. De Luz thereupon paid the full amount of the levy, filed a protest contending that $29,738.57 of the tax was excessive and void, and filed an action to recover the allegedly excessive amount and for revaluation of its possessory interest in land and improvements. Rev. & Tax.Code, § 5138. The court found that the assessment had not been made during the regular assessment period, that it was not properly an "escape assessment", Rev. & Tax.Code, § 531, and that it therefore was void. The court also concluded that certain personal property on the premises had been transferred to the United States Government prior to the first Monday in March of 1953 and was not taxable, and that in valuing the possessory interest in land and improvements the assessor had used an illegal method that resulted in a constructively fraudulent tax. The court found, however, that De Luz "expressly waive[d] any objection to said assessment so far as said 'personal property' was concerned * * * [and] at all times herein has conceded an equitable and moral duty to be assessed in the sum of not more than $40,350 for said tax year on its possessory interest in exempt land and improvements and to pay taxes in a total sum of $1,892.68 therein." The court ordered the board of equalization to reconvene, to take new evidence of value, to recompute the value of the possessory interest in accord with the formula offered by De Luz, and to enter such value on the tax roll in lieu of the value entered by the assessor, provided that no amount less than $40,350 be entered.

During the next regular assessment period for the tax year 1954-1955, the assessor valued the possessory interest of De Luz Homes in land at $108,909 and in improvements at $896,518, resulting in a total valuation of $1,005,427, and levied a tax thereon of $50,372.04. An application for reduction of the valuation and the tax thereon was filed with the board of equalization and denied. Rev. & Tax.Code, §§ 1605, 1607. De Luz paid the tax under protest, filed a claim for refund with the board of supervisors, Rev. & Tax.Code, § 5096, and, after its denial, filed an action in the superior court to recover the taxes. Rev. & Tax.Code, § 5103.

Wire Mountain Homes No. 1 and Wire Mountain Homes No. 2 also are housing units for military and civilian personnel assigned to duty at military bases in San Diego County. As in the case of De Luz Homes, they are located on land leased from the federal government, were constructed pursuant to Title VIII of the National Housing Act, 12 U.S.C.A. §§ 1748-1748h, were financed by loans secured by mortgages insured by the Federal Housing Administration, and are subleased at rents prescribed by the Federal Housing Administration and the Department of the Navy. Until 1986, when the mortgage loan will have been repaid, annual disbursements, including debt repayment, are expected to exceed income from subrentals and thereafter income is expected substantially to exceed disbursements. For the tax year 1954-1955 the assessor valued the possessory interests of the Wire Mountain projects by the same method used for De Luz Homes. Wire Mountain Homes paid the taxes levied on the possessory interests under protest, filed claims for refund with the board of supervisors, and, after the claims were denied, filed actions for recovery of the amounts paid.

The 1954 actions by De Luz and Wire Mountain Homes were consolidated for trial, and the court found that the value of each of the possessory interests was zero, that the method valuation used by the assessor was improper, and that the tax based on such method constituted constructive fraud. As in the 1953 action by De Luz, the court ordered the board of equalization to reconvene, to take new evidence of value, to recompute the value of the possessory interests by a method specified by the court, and to order the assessor to enter the new assessment on the tax roll in lieu of the amount previously approved by the board. The court retained jurisdiction to review the proceedings of the board and to make such further orders, findings of fact, and judgments, including repayment of taxes, Rev. & Tax. Code, § 5141, as might be necessary.

In the method of valuation employed by the assessor, the fee value of the land is estimated "by the same methods and approaches to value that [are used in assessing] all other taxable land in the county, similarly situated and of a similar nature." A percentage of the amount so estimated is deducted as an allowance for restrictions on the use of the property imposed by the lease, and to the difference, known as the base value, is imputed an income equal to a reasonable rate of return on the base value. In the case of De Luz, the assessor found the reasonable rate of return to be 6%, and he added an additional 2% for taxes. The percentage representing reasonable income and taxes, known as the "economic rental" of the leasehold, was translated into numerical figures from each of the leaseholds, and from it was deducted the lessee's rent to the government, a nominal amount of $100 reduced to $35 to allow for the ratio of assessment value to market value normally used by the assessor. The difference between the imputed income and the rent charged by the government, known as the lessee's "equity" or "bonus value" in the leasehold, was capitalized at the rate of 8% for the remaining years of the lease, and the amount so computed was deemed the present value of the lessee's equity. A safety factor for overlooked burdens was deducted from it, and the remaining amount was entered on the tax roll as the value of the possessory interest in the government-owned land. The improvements were valued in an essentially identical manner: Their value was estimated as if they were owned in fee; percentage deductions were made for depreciation and restrictions on use imposed by the lease; an "economic rental" of 8% was imputed to the difference. Since the government charges no rent for the improvements, the "economic rental" equaled the lessee's "equity," and its present value, when capitalized at 8% for the remaining years of the lease and reduced by a safety factor for undiscovered burdens, was deemed the taxable value of the improvements.

Concluding that this method failed to take annual benefits and burdens into account and therefore was improper, the court directed the board of equalization to take evidence on expected annual gross income, expected annual operating expenses, the rate of capitalization that would allow for ad valorem taxes, the amount of money that plaintiffs had invested in their leaseholds, and the annual sum required to amortize their investments together with interest thereon at 6%. The board was ordered to compute the value of the possessory interests by using actual expected net income, rather than imputed income. It was directed to deduct annual operating expenses and amortization from annual gross income, to capitalize the difference for fifty-two years at a rate equal to 6% plus an appropriate allowance for taxes, to reduce the amount so computed to 35% thereof to allow for the "proper" ratio of assessed value to market value, and to enter the net result on the tax roll as the value of the possessory interests in the leaseholds.

In addition to remanding the proceedings to the board, the court made specific findings as to the values of the possessory interests for the tax years 1953-1954 and 1954-1955. It found the possessory interest of De Luz to have a total value in 1953, for both land and improvements, of $7,700, as opposed to the assessor's total valuation of $574,070, and in 1954 it found that each of the possessory interests had a value of zero, as compared with estimates by the assessor of $1,005,427 for De Luz, $112,440 for Wire Mountain Homes No. 1, and $129,750 for Wire Mountain Homes No. 2. In reaching these results, the court employed a method of valuation different from that which it ordered the board to follow. It deducted "annual burdens" (total annual disbursements, including operating expenses, payments into the replacement reserve, and payments of principal and interest on the mortgage debts) from "annual benefits" (annual gross income), and found that until 1986, when the debts will have been repaid, annual burdens will exceed annual benefits, and that thereafter annual benefits will exceed burdens. Capitalizing the expected excess of burdens over benefits and the expected excess of benefits over burdens over a period of fifty-two years, the court found that the capitalized value of net burdens exceeded the capitalized value of net benefits. It interpreted this result to mean that the present value of future income from the leaseholds was less than zero, and that therefore the possessory interests have no value at this time. In the case of De Luz, for example, it found that "burdens" will exceed "benefits" by $55,238 per year until 1986, and that "benefits" will exceed "burdens" thereafter by $214,762 per year. It computed the present value of $55,238 per year for thirty-two years commencing in 1954 as $1,043,813 and the present value of $214,762 per year for nineteen years commencing in 1986 as $218,474. Subtracting the present worth of net "benefits" from the present worth of net "burdens," it obtained a figure of $825,339. It interpreted this figure to mean that the present value of expenditures was greater than the present value of profits, and that therefore De Luz had no taxable value at the time of assessment. The county contends that the 1953 assessment of De Luz was timely, that the method of valuation employed by its assessor is valid, and that the values of the leaseholds as found by the assessor and approved by the board of equalization are correct.

Timeliness of the 1953 Assessment of De Luz Homes.

[1-4] "If any property belonging on the local roll has escaped assessment, the as-essor shall assess the property on discovery at its value on the lien date for the year for which it escaped assessment * *." Rev. & Tax.Code, § 531. Thus, when property is not assessed between the first Mondays in March and July for any tax year, the assessor is required to assess it when he discovers its physical existence, its taxable status, see, Imperial Irrigation District v. County of Riverside, 96 Cal.App. 2d 402, 407, 215 P.2d 518, or the fact that it has not been assessed. Carpenter v. Pacific Coast Ins. Ass'n, 10 Cal.2d 304, 306, 74 P.2d 511. Only if a delayed assessment were caused by the assessor's negligence and would cause substantial injury to the taxpayer has it been suggested that such assessment may be improper. See, Carpenter v. Pacific Coast Ins. Ass'n, supra, 10 Cal.2d 304, 306, 74 P.2d 511. In the present case, however, there is no indication either that the assessor was negligent or that De Luz acted to its detriment in reliance on the fact that it was not assessed during the regular assessment period. Instead, the record discloses that De Luz appeared before the board of equalization on the third Monday in July of 1953 and asked that it be assessed at figures it supplied. The assessor appeared in opposition to the petition and stated that he had insufficient information properly to assess De Luz Homes at that time, that he had attempted to cooperate with the taxpayer, and that the taxpayer had given him conflicting information about personal property on the premises. The board passed a motion authorizing the assessor to enter an assessment as soon as he secured sufficient information. It is contended that this authorization was improperly granted because it was not preceded by five days' notice as required by section 1611 of the Revenue and Taxation Code. That section provides: "After five days succeeding the time when notice of the date when the matter will be investigated is sent by the clerk of the county board to all persons interested, the county board may direct the assessor to: (a) Assess any taxable property other than State assessed property that has escaped assessment." When both De Luz and the assessor appeared before the board on the third Monday in July and argued, respectively, that an immediate assessment should be made and that assessment should be delayed, the matter was "investigated" within the meaning of the statute, and neither De Luz nor the assessor can now complain that they did not receive five days' notice of the meeting. De Luz, moreover, specifically waived notice and requested immediate assessment at the valuations it offered. Since the board could have concluded that the assessor had not had sufficient information to make an assessment up to the time of the hearing, and since there is no evidence that the board acted arbitrarily or abused its discretion, its directions to the assessor cannot be set aside, McClelland v. Board of Supervisors, 30 Cal.2d 124, 129, 180 P.2d 676; Los Angeles Gas & Electric Co. v. County of Los Angeles, 162 Cal. 164, 170, 121 P. 384, 9 A.L.R. 1277; Utah Construction Co. v. Richardson, 187 Cal. 649, 655, 203 P. 401; cf. Universal Consol. Oil Co. v. Byram, 25 Cal.2d 353, 356, 357, 153 P.2d 746. The assessor entered his assessment without further notice to De Luz on July 31, 1953, and since neither the order of the board nor any statute required such notice, and since the assessment was made in accord with the directions of the board, it was validly entered on the tax roll.

The Valuation of Possessory Interests in Tax Exempt Property

[5,6] The standard of valuation prescribed by the Legislature is that, "[A]ll taxable property shall be assessed at its full cash value." Rev. & Tax.Code, § 401. "Full cash value", as defined in section 110 of the Revenue and Taxation Code, "means the amount at which property would be taken in payment of a just debt from a solvent debtor." It provides, in other words, for an assessment at the price that property would bring to its owner if it were offered for sale on an open market under conditions in which neither buyer nor seller could take advantage of the exigencies of the other. It is a measure of desirability translated into money amounts, see, Brandeis, J., concurring in State of Missouri ex rel. Southwestern Bell Tel. Co. v. Public Service Comm., 262 U.S. 276, 310, 43 S.Ct. 544, 67 L.Ed. 981, and might be called the market value of property for use in its present condition. Indeed, section 401 of the Revenue and Taxation Code, as originally enacted (Pol.Code, § 3627) contained the words "market value" as the standard for valuation of the stock of domestic corporations, and after "market value" was deleted in 1881 (Stats., 1881, Ch. LIII, p. 57), this court stated that the term had been synonymous with "full cash value." Crocker v. Scott, 149 Cal. 575, 585, 87 P. 102, 104; see also, San Francisco National Bank v. Dodge, 197 U.S. 70, 79, 25 S.Ct. 384, 49 L.Ed. 669.

[7] This standard of value must be used in the assessment of all taxable property, for the Constitution of California states, "All property in the State except as otherwise in this Constitution provided, not exempt under the laws of the United States, shall be taxed in proportion to its value, to be ascertained as provided by law, or as hereinafter provided." Art. XIII, § 1. The Constitution requires not only that all nonexempt property be taxed, Chesebrough v. City and County of San Francisco, 153 Cal. 559, 568-569, 96 P. 288; Crocker v. Scott, 149 Cal. 575, 585, 87 P. 102, but that except as otherwise specified all property be assessed by the same standard of valuation. Mahoney v. City of San Diego, 198 Cal. 388, 398, 403, 245 P. 189; Wilson v. Supervisors of Sutter Co., 47 Cal. 91, 92 [construing substantially similar provision in section 13 of Article XI of the Constitution of 1849]. Thus, it was held reversible error for a board of equalization to value one type of property at the price it would bring as salvage while valuing other property at the price it would bring in its present use and condition. Mahoney v. City of San Diego, supra, 198 Cal. 388, 400-402, 245 P. 189.

[8-10] Since nonexempt possessory interests in land and improvements, such as the leasehold estates involved in the present actions,² are taxable property, Rev. &

2. The possessory interest is admittedly taxable in the hands of the present lessees, and would be taxable even if they defaulted and the leaseholds were assumed by the Federal Housing Commissioner. 12 U.S.C.A. § 1748f.

Tax.Code, §§ 201, 104, 107; Parr-Richmond Industrial Corp. v. Boyd, 43 Cal.2d 157, 164, 272 P.2d 16; Kaiser Co. v. Reid, 30 Cal.2d 610, 618, 184 P.2d 879; see, Delaney v. Lowery, 25 Cal.2d 561, 564, 154 P.2d 674, they too must be assessed at "full cash value." In practice, assessors usually enter the entire value of land and improvements on the tax roll without distinction between possessory and reversionary interests, and since this practice results in a single amount reflecting both interests on the roll, the constitutional mandate that all property be taxed is obeyed. San Pedro, L. A. & S. L. R. Co. v. City of Los Angeles, 180 Cal. 18, 22, 179 P. 393. As between reversioners and possessors payment of the tax is a private arrangement. Simms v. County of Los Angeles, 35 Cal.2d 303, 313, 217 P.2d 936; San Pedro, L. A. & S. L. R. Co. v. Los Angeles, supra, 180 Cal. 18, 22, 179 P. 393; Lick v. Austin, 43 Cal. 590, 594-596. When, however, the possessory interest is taxable and the reversion is exempt, only the possessory interest is subject to assessment and taxation. City of Pasadena v. County of Los Angeles, 182 Cal. 171, 176, 187 P. 418; People v. Shearer, 30 Cal. 645, 661. "When * * * there is a lease of land owned by the state or a municipality, the reversion being exempt from taxation, the usufructuary interest alone is subject to tax in proportion to its value; and in the absence of agreement to the contrary, the tax necessarily falls upon the lessee." Hammond Lumber Co. v. County of Los Angeles, 104 Cal.App. 235, 240, 285 P. 896, 898.

[11,12] Since the possessory interest must be assessed in accord with the standard of valuation applicable to all other property, its estimated value is the price it would bring if offered on an open market under conditions in which neither buyer nor seller could take advantage of the exigencies of the other, and this hypothetical market price is its value even though a sale of the property has not been made or contemplated. It is well settled that "the absence of an 'actual market' for a particular type of property does not mean that it has no value or that it may escape from the constitutional mandate that 'all property * * * shall be taxed in proportion to its value' (Art. XIII, sec. 1) but only that the assessor must then use such pertinent factors as replacement costs and income analyses for determining 'valuation.'" Kaiser Co. v. Reid, 30 Cal.2d 610, 623, 184 P.2d 879, 887.

[13,14] Assessors generally estimate value by analyzing market data on sales of similar property, replacement costs, and income from the property (see, 1 Bonbright, Valuation of Property, pp. 113-266; American Institute of Real Estate Appraisers, The Appraisal of Real Estate, pp. 75-85; Fisher, Real Estate in California, p. 157), and since no one of these methods alone can be used to estimate the value of all property, the assessor, subject to requirements of fairness and uniformity, may exercise his discretion in using one or more of them. Utah Construction Co. v. Richardson, 187 Cal. 649, 652-653, 203 P. 401; Southern California Tel. Co. v. Los Angeles County, 45 Cal.App.2d 111, 116-118, 113 P.2d 773. The assessing authority's estimate of the value of specific property at a specific time is reviewed by the board of equalization at the request of the taxpayer, Rev. & Tax.Code, §§ 1601-1615, and the board's decision in regard to specific valuations and the methods of valuation employed are equivalent to the findings and judgment of a trial court and reviewable only for arbitrariness, abuse of discretion, or failure to follow the standards prescribed by the Legislature. McClelland v. Board of Supervisors, supra, 30 Cal.2d 124, 129, 180 P.2d 676; Universal Consol. Oil Co. v. Byram, supra, 25 Cal.2d 353, 356, 153 P.2d 746; Miller & Lux, Inc., v. Richardson, 182 Cal. 115, 128, 187 P. 411; Los Angeles Gas & Electric Co. v. County of Los Angeles, supra, 162 Cal. 164, 168, 121 P. 384, 9 A.L.R. 1277.

[15-19] In the present case, the assessor purported to value the leaseholds by the capitalization of income method, a generally accepted method of valuing property from which income may be or is derived. Kaiser Co. v. Reid, 30 Cal.2d 610, 623, 184 P.2d 879; Pullman Co. v. Richardson, 185 Cal. 484, 496, 197 P. 346; Al-paugh Irrigation Dist. v. County of Kern, 113 Cal.App.2d 286, 293, 248 P.2d 117; Birch v. County of Orange, 59 Cal.App. 133, 138, 210 P. 57; H. & W. Pierce v. Santa Barbara County, 40 Cal.App. 302, 306, 180 P. 641; see, Wild Goose Country Club v. County of Butte, 60 Cal.App. 339, 341, 212 P. 711. According to this method, the value of property is the sum of anticipated future installments of net income from the property, less an allowance for interest and the risk of partial or no receipt. (See, American Institute of Real Estate Appraisers, The Appraisal of Real Estate, Ch. 17, 18; Babcock, The Valuation of Real Estate, pp. 39, 127-129; 1 Bonbright, The Valuation of Property, Ch. XI.) "[I]t involves a capitalization or discounted valuation of the realized or prospective net monetary income derivable by continuous exploitation rather than by resale." (1 Bonbright, op.cit. supra, p. 230.) The first step in the process is to determine prospective net income and this is done by estimating future gross income and deducting therefrom expected necessary expenses incident to maintenance and operation of the property. In instances in which future income cannot be estimated with reasonable accuracy or is not ascribable entirely to the property, prospective net monetary income is imputed in an amount equal to a minimum reasonable return on estimated market value. See, Kaiser Co. v. Reid, 30 Cal.2d 610, 623, 184 P.2d 879. Since it is generally accepted that a person who agrees to receive payment in the future is entitled to interest both for waiting and the risk of partial or no receipt, the second step is to discount each future installment of income by a rate of interest that takes into account the hazards of the investment and the accepted concepts of a "fair return." The sum of the discounted installments is the present value of the property.³ An apt example of determining the value of property by the capitalization of net income method is given by counsel in a companion case: Assume that the most effective use that may be made of an item of property is the rental thereof, that the property may be rented for a period of three years (at the end of which it will be worthless) for a gross rental of $120 a year, to be paid at the end of the year, that the expenses, e.g., repairs, of the lessor incident to the property will be $20 a year, also to be paid at the end of the year, and that a 6 percent rate of return is appropriate to the amount of risk involved to the lessor. The value of the property will be determined as follows:

Annual gross income	$120.00
Annual expense	20.00
Annual net income	$100.00
Present worth of $100 to be received:
1 year in the future ($$100 \times .9434$) ⁴	$94.34
2 years in the future ($$100 \times .89$) ⁴	89.00
3 years in the future ($$100 \times .8396$) ⁴	83.96
Value of property	$267.30

[20] In valuing property, the assessor must adhere to the statutory standard of "full cash value", and must therefore estimate the price the property would bring on an open market under conditions in which neither buyer nor seller could take advantage of the exigencies of the other. The net earnings to be capitalized, therefore, are not those of the present owner of the property, but those that would be

3. In practice, the present value of an amount to be received in regular future installments is computed by multiplying the annual amount by a present value factor that reflects interest, risk, and, if applicable, a decline in income in later years. (See, American Institute of Real Estate Appraisers, The Appraisal of Real Estate, Appendix, Tables I-IX; Finney, Principles of Accounting, [3d ed.] Ch. 10; Schmutz, Condemnation Appraisal Handbook, Ch. 9.)

4. The coefficients for a 6% return were taken from a standard discount table printed in Babcock, Valuation of Real Estate, p. 538.

anticipated by a prospective purchaser. "Anticipated future earning power is the sole matter of consequence, since reported earnings are already water under the mill." (Bonbright, op. cit. supra, p. 229; see also Babcock, op. cit. supra, pp. 229-230.) The present owner may have invested well or poorly, may have contracted to pay very high or very low rent, and may have built expensive improvements or none at all. To value property by capitalizing his anticipated net earnings would make the value of property equal to the present value of his profits, since, however, the legislative standard of value is "full cash value", it is clear that whatever may be the rationale of the property tax, it is not the profitability of property to its present owner. If a purchaser would buy a given property on an open market, the property has a value equal to the price such purchaser might be expected to pay.

[21,22] The standard of "full cash value" applies equally to a leasehold interest. Accordingly, the assessor must estimate the price a leasehold would bring on an open market under conditions in which neither buyer nor seller could take advantage of the exigencies of the other. He must therefore capitalize, not the anticipated net earnings of the present lessee, but those of a prospective assignee. To a prospective assignee, anticipated net earnings equal expected gross income less necessary expenditures for maintenance, operation, and taxes.⁵ No deduction is made for the cost of the lease to the present lessee, i. e., his charges for rent and amortization of improvements, for to a prospective assignee the value of a leasehold is measured solely by anticipated gross income less expected necessary expenditures.

In Blinn Lumber Co. v. County of Los Angeles, 216 Cal. 474, 481, 14 P.2d 512, 84 A.L.R. 1304, this court stated that a person who has assumed a lease will deduct from his annual income statement an aliquot portion of the price he paid to acquire the lease and of the cost of improvements that he installed. Such practice is in accord with generally accepted principles of accounting to determine the net income and net worth of the present owner. (See, Finney, op. cit. supra, chs. 11, 12.) By allocating past costs to present and future income, the income recipient apportions expenditures for long-term benefits to each revenue period in which some of the benefit is realized. The remaining unamortized cost appears on the balance sheet as an asset valued at cost less the amounts already charged to income. (See, Finney, op. cit. supra, pp. 192, 207; 2 Bonbright, op. cit. supra, p. 894 et seq.) Although this procedure is sound accounting practice to determine the net income and net worth of the present owner, it will not reflect the "full cash value" of the property. The accountant deals with past historical cost to the present owner and by the process of amortization spreads the cost of property over its useful life. (Babcock, op. cit. supra, pp. 402-403.) The unamortized cost reflected on the balance sheet has no relation to the "full cash value," i. e., the price that a willing buyer would pay a willing seller.

[23-25] Furthermore, in determining the income to be capitalized to establish value for appraisal purposes, no deduction can be made for amortization. (Fisher, Nature of Capital and Income, pp. 238, 255.) "[N]o concept of income which includes * * * depreciation in capital value as a positive or negative item of income, is acceptable as a basis of valuation under the 'capitalized-income' method." (Bonbright, op. cit. supra, p. 910 citing Fisher.) "[I]n valuation, net earnings are net 'before depreciation,' i. e., net earnings are a combination of income and capital returns and are computed as the actual difference between the 'puts' and 'takes.' Appraising presupposes a purchaser, and the valuation is made at a figure which the net earnings can support including a return

5. Although taxes are themselves based on value, the tax rate is known, and therefore an allowance for taxes can be expressed as a percentage of the value to be found. In practice, an allowance for taxes is usually made as an addition to the capitalization rate and is reflected in the present worth factor. (See 1 Bonbright, The Valuation of Property, p. 257.)

of capital equal to the successive losses of value expected in the depreciation of the property. Since the value is the end and object of valuation, the process cannot include an expense item based upon the answer." (Babcock, op. cit. supra, p. 420.) Rent paid for a leasehold interest, like the cost of improvements that revert to the lessor, is part of the cost or purchase price of the leasehold, and to include a deduction for it, is likewise to include an item of expense based on the answer, i. e., the value of the property. Thus, it would not only be anomalous to deduct any part of that value, the very answer sought, from the income that is to be capitalized to obtain that answer, it would be a duplication, for the interest rate applied in capitalizing net income provides for a return of capital value as well as interest. (American Institute of Real Estate Appraisers,

The Appraisal of Real Estate, p. 321; ibid., p. 214; Babcock, op. cit. supra, p. 230; see example given below, note 7.

It is apparent, therefore, that in requiring the assessor to deduct the present lessee's charges for rent and amortization from estimated gross income the court in the Blinn case confused income for accounting purposes with income for appraisal purposes.⁶ Moreover, there will be no "waste of capital" as feared by the court in the Blinn case, 216 Cal. at page 478, 14 P.2d at page 514, when the purchaser's cost equals the capital value of the property.⁷ If the cost exceeds this value, then there is a wastage of capital, but only at the time of purchase and it is properly disregarded by persons valuing property in terms of future income.

To deduct amortization charges of the present lessee not only is to subtract a part

6. The Blinn case also erred in ordering that actual rent and amortization be deducted from imputed gross income without making an adequate distinction between imputed gross and imputed net income. An imputed gross income must be sufficiently large to allow for expenditures and therefore must exceed the minimum reasonable return on an investment. The court in Blinn, however, deducted actual rental and amortization charges from an imputed gross income of 6% of the fee value of the leased land, and also used 6% as the rate of capitalization. 216 Cal. at page 479, 14 P.2d 512. It can hardly be assumed, however, that the same percentage that reasonably reflected the risk and interest incident to capitalizing net income was sufficient to serve as a basis for the deduction of the lessee's charges.

7. That this capital value will be restored to the purchaser through operation of the capitalization of income method may be demonstrated by continuing the example above, note 6. If a purchaser buys the property for the capitalized value of $267.30, he will receive each year a return of capital and interest as follows:

Year	Net Amount Rec'd.	Interest at 6% on Unrecovered Capital Value	Annual Partial Return of Capital Value	Amount of Capital Value Unrecovered at End of Year
1st	$100	$16.04 ($267.30x.06)	$83.96 ($100-16.04)	$183.34 ($267.30-83.96)
2nd	100	11.00 (183.34x.06)	89.00 ($100-11.00)	94.34 (183.34-89.00)
3rd	100	5.66 (94.34x.06)	94.34 ($100- 5.66)	0 (94.34-94.34)
Total capital value returned $267.30.

Thus, the value determined by applying the capitalization rate to net income, exclusive of amortization, results in no waste of capital, for the annual net receipts result in a complete return of the original capital of $267.30 plus interest at the rate of 6% on the unrecovered value remaining at the end of each year.

8. Thus, using the figures of the previous example, a deduction for amortization of the investment in the property in estimating future net income gives the following absurd result:

"Annual income	$120.00
"Annual expense
"(a) Repairs	$20

"(b) Amortization of cost in equal annual payments over 3 years with 6% interest on unrecovered cost

	100
"Net income to be capitalized	$000.00
"Value determined by capitalization of income	$000.00"

of the very figure that is being determined, the value of the property, from the elements of the computation, but is to reach a valuation of zero in every case in which the lessee had estimated future earnings correctly and had invested their present value in the leasehold.⁸ Under such circumstances, the lessee, although paying no property taxes would recover the full amount of his investment plus interest over the life of the lease (see example supra). Thus, in the case of De Luz, the Federal Housing Administration estimates that annual net income, after deducting operating expenses, the required contribution to the replacement reserve, and taxes, will be $305,862 per year. The present value of the right to receive that amount for the period of the lease, 75 years, is $5,033,255, when capitalized at 6%. If, however, an annual deduction of $274,279 is made from gross income to allow for recoupment of the lessee's investment at 6%,⁹ annual income is but $31,583 per year, with a present value of $393,555. According to the estimates of De Luz, annual net income, except for amortization of its investment and taxes, will be $162,645 per year, which has a present value of $2,026,719 at 8%. If amortization is deducted, the net income is a negative figure, and the leasehold has a value of zero. There is no doubt, however, that the right to receive $162,645 per year for 75 years has a value equal to the sum of the amounts to be received less a discount for risk and interest. De Luz invested approximately $4,516,000 to receive the annual income from the lease, and in reliance on its receipt the First National Bank of Boston loaned the principal of the investment and the Federal Housing Administration insured the loan. In the light of these facts, to hold that the leasehold has a value of zero would require a unique concept of value for purposes of taxation entirely different from that used in the ordinary course of business. Statements in the Blinn cases, 216 Cal. 474, 478-482, 14 P.2d 512, 84 A.L.R. 1304; Id., 216 Cal. 468, 472-473, 14 P.2d 516, requiring the assessing authorities to deduct the present lessee's charges to rent and amortization from expected income when valuing possessory interests by an analysis of anticipated earning power are therefore disapproved.¹⁰

[26-28] It is contended that the value of the leaseholds, when no deduction from income is made for amortization and rent, will approach the estimated fee values of the land and improvements. Since it is conceivable that the "full cash value" of a long-term possessory interest may approach the value of the fee, near equality between the two estimated values would not of itself demonstrate invalidity in the valuation of either one. Nor does near equality of the leasehold values to those of the fee constitute a violation of the immunity of the federal government from taxation by the states. Since the tax is imposed solely on the privately owned possessory interest of the lessee, Rev. & Tax.Code, §§ 201, 104, 107, and under the terms of the contract between the federal government and the lessee will be paid entirely by the lessee (see also, 12 U.S.C.A. § 1748f), neither its legal nor economic incidence falls on the federal government. See, Wilson v. Cook, 327 U.S. 474, 483, 66 S.Ct. 663, 90 L.Ed. 793; S. R. A., Inc., v. State of Minnesota, 327 U.S. 558, 569, 66 S.Ct. 749, 90 L.Ed. 851; Oklahoma Tax Comm. v. Texas Co.,

9. The amount is predicated on the compound interest, equal yearly installments, and declining income assumptions of the Inwood Coefficient. (See, American Institute of Real Estate Appraisers, The Appraisal of Real Estate, Appendix, Table III.)

10. In Hammond Lumber Co. v. County of Los Angeles, 104 Cal.App. 235, 285 P. 896, the District Court of Appeal, in affirming a judgment denying recovery of taxes on a possessory interest, explained a method of valuation that deducted the lessee's rent from imputed gross income and that was presented in evidence to the county board of supervisors by the assessing authorities. 104 Cal.App. at page 244, 285 P. 896. That method did not control the decision of the court in the Hammond case, see especially, 104 Cal.App. at page 246, 285 P. 896, and it should not be inferred that it now controls assessing authorities.

336 U.S. 342, 364, 69 S.Ct. 561, 93 L.Ed. 721; State of Alabama v. King & Boozer, 314 U.S. 1, 9-14, 62 S.Ct. 43, 86 L.Ed. 3; cf. Society for Savings in City of Cleveland v. Bowers, 349 U.S. 143, 75 S.Ct. 607, 610.

[29] In determining the value of the leaseholds, the assessor imputed an income of 6% and taxes of 2% to an amount somewhat less than the estimated fee value of the land and improvements, deducted the $100 rent paid to the government therefrom, and capitalized the difference at 8%. This method is erroneous in several respects. First, the deduction from imputed income of the $100 rent paid to the government substitutes valuation according to the profitability of the property to its present owner for the statutory standard of "full cash value." As pointed out above, the price that a leasehold would command on an open market under conditions in which neither buyer nor seller could take advantage of the exigencies of the other is based on expected future net income from the leasehold without regard to rent paid by the present lessee. Second, no adequate distinction is made between imputed gross income and imputed net income. An imputed gross income would have to be sufficiently large to allow for deduction of anticipated necessary expenses incident to operating and maintaining the project, but no deduction for these items, either actual or imputed, is made. Imputed net income would equal the minimum reasonable return on the investment, but the assessor's method deducts the $100 rent to be paid the government, and thereby reduces imputed income to a rate of return less than the rate of capitalization.

[30] The value of the leaseholds involved in the present case can be estimated more accurately by capitalizing expected future actual net income instead of an imputed income. According to the imputed income analysis used by the assessor, the value of the leaseholds was deemed to be equal to the present value of an income imputed to the "base value" of the leaseholds, the "base value" being equal to the estimated value of the fee less a deduc-tion for "burdens and restrictions of the lease." The initial step in the computation, an estimation of the fee value of the land and improvements "by the same methods and approaches to value that [are used in assessing] all other taxable land in the county, similarly situated and of a similar nature," necessitates an assumption that land and improvements located in a military installation and devoted solely to housing designated persons at rents regulated by the government can be said to be "similarly situated and of a similar nature" to privately owned lands and improvements in the county, even though great differences exist in geographic location, expected stability of income, and the range of uses for which the properties are available. The second step in the assessor's computation was to deduct a "restriction percentage for limitations on the use prescribed by the lease," the amount "depending upon the burdens and restrictions of the lease," but there is no indication either that the percentage deducted is an adequate or proper measure of such limitations, or that the lease in fact imposes any burdens on the fee, for it is doubtful that the land would promise the substantial income that it now does were it not for the assurance of continued occupancy by military personnel provided by the lease. See, Meade Heights, Inc., v. State Tax Comm. of Md., 202 Md. 20, 31, 95 A.2d 280. After deducting an allowance for limitations, the assessor imputed an income of 6% to the remainder, but it is not at all clear that actual anticipated income less expenses will approximate such imputed income. Moreover, to obtain the present value of the imputed income, the assessor capitalized the income at a rate of 8%. The capitalization rate is supposed to reflect risk and interest attributable to the particular investment to which it is applied (see, 1 Bonbright, The Valuation of Property, pp. 259-264), but the assessor's rate appears to measure, not the risk and interest attributable to the investment at bar, but that attributable to an income hypothetically imputed to a "base value." In summation, the assessor's valuation of the leaseholds is predicated on the assumption that a certain percentage of an amount somewhat less than the fee value, when capitalized at an abstractly reasonable rate, equals the value of the possessory interest. In some cases this assumption may have to be made, and we do not condemn all estimates of value based on capitalization of an imputed income. In valuing property wherein actual income is derived in large part from enterprise activity and cannot be ascribed entirely to the use of the property, an imputed income analysis may be both useful and appropriate. In the present actions, however, the income from the possessory interests will be from sub-rentals and can be ascribed entirely to the possessory estates. Moreover, future income can be expected to remain stable, for rents are controlled in amount by the Federal Housing Administration and the Department of the Navy and occupancy is assured by the fact that the project is located on a military installation that is "deemed to be a permanent part of the Military Establishment." * (12 U.S.C.A. § 1748b(b) (2).) Expected annual expenditures have been estimated by both the Federal Housing Administration and the lessees and therefore carefully formulated evidence as to anticipated expenses is available to the assessing authorities. Under these circumstances, the value of plaintiffs' possessory interests can best be estimated in terms of actual income rather than imputed income. See, Pullman Co. v. Richardson, 185 Cal. 484, 496, 197 P. 346; Alpaugh Irrigation Dist. v. County of Kern, 113 Cal.App.2d 286, 293, 248 P.2d 117; Birch v. County of Orange, 59 Cal.App. 133, 138, 210 P. 57; H. & W. Pierce, Inc., v. Santa Barbara County, 40 Cal.App. 302, 306, 180 P. 641; Wild Goose Country Club v. County of Butte, 60 Cal.App. 339, 341, 212 P. 711.

[31] Although the trial court employed methods of actual income analysis both in its findings and in its order of remand, we have concluded that both of the court's methods are improper for estimating the "full cash value" of possessory estates. In its findings the court deducted annual "burdens," including payments of principal and interest on the mortgage debts, from annual "benefits," and thereby computed a value that was inversely proportional to the size of mortgage debt payments. Since deduction of "credits secured by mortgage or trust deed" is contrary to section 1 of Article XIII of the California Constitution and to well established decisions of this court, Lick v. Austin, 43 Cal. 590, 594; Eisley v. Mohan, 31 Cal.2d 637, 643, 192 P.2d 5; cf. Henne v. Los Angeles County, 129 Cal. 297, 298, 61 P. 1081, decided before repeal in 1910 of former section 4 of Article XIII, the method is erroneous. Moreover, in stating that net "burdens" have a present value, the court assumed that annual losses expected to be sustained in future years have a present value in the same sense as money to be received in regular future installments, and it also assumed that such present value may be used in valuing possessory interests for purposes of taxation. Although the assumption that future losses have a present value could rest on the theory that a sum of money invested at present to provide for the payment of expected losses might be termed their present value, a property valuation computed in the manner illustrated by the court's findings and resting on the court's assumptions would in effect alter the property tax from a levy on the present value of property to a tax on the net worth of the individual taxpayer. Plaintiffs, however, do not rely on the method used in the court's findings, but contend that the method outlined in the order of remand is controlling. According to this method, the present lessee's anticipated annual charges to operating expenses, taxes, rent, and amortization of money invested in the leasehold together with interest thereon are deducted from anticipated annual gross income. The difference, when capitalized and reduced to the "proper" ratio of assessment to market values, is deemed the value of the possessory interest. The error of this method is that deduction of amortization does not conform either to the statutory standard of value or to the accepted principles of capitalization heretofore discussed.

* 63 Stat. 572.

[32] The proceedings must be remanded to the county board of equalization for determination of the value of the possessory interests and the taxes thereon. Universal Consol. Oil Co. v. Byram, 25 Cal.2d 353, 362-363, 153 P.2d 746. The board shall take evidence on annual anticipated gross income, operating and maintenance expenses, the amount required to be deposited in the replacement reserve, and the percentage that will adequately allow for taxes. Moreover, since the rate of capitalization is predicated on the risk, interest, and provisions for replacement of capital relative to the investment to which it is applied (see, 1 Bonbright, op. cit. supra, pp. 259-262), the board shall take evidence on these matters and ascertain therefrom the proper rate of capitalization. It shall deduct annual operating and maintenance expenses and the deposit to the replacement reserve from annual gross income, and shall capitalize the difference at the rate that it determines will allow for risk, interest, and taxes. The period of capitalization shall be the remaining years of the lease, for although the government is authorized to terminate the leases at the end of fifty years, the terms of the leases and the statute under which they were drawn (see especially 12 U.S.C.A. § 1748b (b) (2)) clearly contemplate that the leases will exist for their full terms. Kaiser Co. v. Reid, 30 Cal.2d 610, 620, 184 P.2d 879.

The judgments and orders are reversed with directions to the trial court to remand the proceedings to the county board of equalization for action in accord with this opinion. Each party shall bear its own costs on appeal.

GIBSON, C. J., and SHENK, EDMONDS, CARTER, SCHAUER and SPENCE, JJ., concur.

FAIRFIELD GARDENS, Inc., a corporation,
Plaintiff and Appellant,

v.

COUNTY OF SOLANO, a Body Corporate and Politic, Defendant and Respondent.

Sac. 6568.

Supreme Court of California.

In Bank.

Nov. 25, 1955.

Rehearing Denied Dec. 21, 1955.

Taxpayer brought action against county to recover taxes paid under protest. The Superior Court of Solano County, Harlow V. Greenwood, J., entered judgment adverse to the taxpayer, and the taxpayer appealed. The Supreme Court, Traynor, J., held that in determining assessment values of leaseholds of lessee taxpayer, which constructed housing projects on lands of the federal government at air force base, deductions should not be made for lessee's debt payments or amortization of its investment in the leaseholds from anticipated gross income.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Taxation ☞355

In determining assessment values of leaseholds of lessee, which constructed housing projects on lands of the federal government at air force base, deductions should not be made for lessee's debt payments or amortization of its investment in the leaseholds from anticipated gross income. National Housing Act, §§ 801-809, 807 as amended 12 U.S.C.A. §§ 1748-1748h, 1748f; 10 U.S.C.A. § 1270; Revenue and Taxation Code, §§ 104, 107, 110, 401, 1603, 1605, 1607, 1609, 4986; West's Ann.Const. art. 13, § 1.

2. Taxation ☞355

In determining assessment values of leaseholds of lessee, which constructed housing projects on lands of the federal government at air force base, deductions should not have been made for rent paid by lessee to the government from anticipated annual gross income. National Housing Act, §§ 801-809, 807 as amended 12 U.S.C.A. §§ 1748-1748h, 1748f; 10 U.S.C.A. § 1270; Revenue and Taxation Code, §§ 104, 107, 110, 401, 1603, 1605, 1607, 1609, 4986; West's Ann.Const. art. 13, § 1.

3. Taxation ⇨495

Tax assessment would not be set aside on appeal because of erroneous deduction of rent paid by taxpayer to the government, where only the taxpayer appealed and not county, since the error was favorable to the taxpayer.

4. Taxation ⇨495

Tax assessment of leasehold interests would not be set aside because of the erroneous deduction of $200 rent paid by the taxpayer, since de minimis non curat lex.

5. Taxation ⇨348

In determining assessment values of leaseholds of lessee, which constructed housing projects on lands of the federal government at air force base, fact that separate deduction was made from present value of future net income for restrictions in leases, consisting of rent ceilings, replacement requirements, etc., would not invalidate assessor's method of valuation. National Housing Act, §§ 801-809, 807 as amended 12 U.S.C.A. §§ 1748-1748h, 1748f; 10 U.S.C.A. § 1270; Revenue and Taxation Code, §§ 104, 107, 110, 401, 1603, 1605, 1607, 1609, 4986; West's Ann.Const. art. 13, § 1.

Holbrook, Tarr, Carter & O'Neill, W. Sumner Holbrook, Jr., and Francis H. O'Neill, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Kenneth I. Jones, County Counsel, James M. Shumway, Asst. County Counsel, Fairfield, Felix S. Wahrhaftig, Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., E. G. Benard and James E. Sabine, Deputy Attys. Gen., for respondent.

TRAYNOR, Justice.

Fairfield Gardens, Inc., a California corporation, hereinafter called Fairfield, brought an action against the County of Solano to recover taxes paid under protest that were levied against its possessory interest in tax exempt land and improvements. Revenue & Taxation Code, § 5138.

It appeals from a judgment that it recover nothing and that defendant recover costs.

Fairfield constructed two housing projects containing 980 dwelling units on separate plots of land owned by the United States Government at Travis Air Force Base in Solano County. The projects were built pursuant to the provisions of Title VIII of the National Housing Act, 12 U.S.C.A. §§ 1748-1748h (known as the Wherry Act) and section 1270 of Title 10 of the United States Code Annotated, were financed by loans secured by mortgages insured by the Federal Housing Administration, and were subleased to military and civilian personnel assigned to duty at the base and designated as tenants by the commanding officer at rents regulated by the Federal Housing Administration and the Air Force. On completion, all improvements became the property of the federal government, and each of the projects is leased to Fairfield for 75 years at an annual ground rental of $100. The provisions of the lease are essentially identical with those of the lease between the government and De Luz Homes, see De Luz Homes, Inc., v. County of San Diego, Cal., 290 P.2d 544, and, as in that case, state that the lessee shall pay all "taxes, assessments, and similar charges which, at any time during the term of this lease, may be taxed, assessed or imposed upon the Government or upon the Lessee with respect to or upon the leased premises." See, 12 U.S.C.A. § 1748f.

The assessor valued Fairfield's possessory interests in the land and improvements, Rev. & Tax.Code, §§ 107, 104, for the tax year 1953-1954 at $1,574,880 and levied a tax thereon of $64,727.56. Contending that the value of the leasehold was worth no more than a nominal sum of $20, Fairfield filed an application for reduction of the valuation and cancellation of the tax thereon with the county board of equalization. Rev. & Tax.Code, §§ 1603, 1605, 1607, 4986. At the hearing of the application, Rev. & Tax. Code, § 1609, Fairfield introduced forecasts of maximum potential gross income, expected vacancies, and anticipated expenses, including operating expenses, required payments into a replacement reserve, and payments of principal and interest on its mortgage debt. It contended that in valuing the leaseholds, the assessing authorities should deduct all of the foregoing expenses from gross income and should capitalize the difference for a period of time equal to the anticipated useful life of the improvements at a rate adequate to allow for risk, interest, and taxes. It also advocated an alternative method of valuation, whereby its total investment in the leasehold, together with interest thereon, would be deducted in annual aliquot portions from anticipated annual gross income, and the difference would be capitalized over the remaining term of the lease. Under either method, it asserted, the capitalized value of future income is less than zero, and therefore the leasehold has no taxable value.

In opposition to the application, the assessor stated that he estimated that gross income from the leasehold, after a vacancy allowance of 3% in dwelling units and 50% in carports, will be $892,000 per year and that net income, after an allowance of $321,872 for operating expenses and the required payment into the replacement reserve, will be $571,020 [sic] per year. He stated that in his opinion a discount of 6% for risk and interest and 2% for taxes would be adequate, and that future annual net income from the leasehold, when capitalized at such discount, has a present value of $7,160,000. He stated that he deducted 10% for "restrictions in the leases," reduced the difference to 25% thereof to allow for the ratio of assessment value to market value, apportioned the net amount, $1,574,880, between the two projects in proportion to the number of dwelling units in each, and entered $792,030 and $792,850 on the tax roll as the value of the possessory interests in each project. In allowing for anticipated annual expenses, the assessor included, inter alia, office salaries, telephone and telegraph, legal and auditing services, janitorial materials, water and sewage, cleaning and grounds payroll, painting, repairs, insurance, and rent paid to the government by Fairfield, but he did not include either Fairfield's payments of principal and interest on its mortgage debt or an allowance for amortization of its investment in the leasehold. Although some differences existed between the assessor and Fairfield in respect to amounts of anticipated income and expenses, the major point at issue was whether deductions for the lessee's debt payments or amortization of its investment in the leasehold should be made from anticipated gross income.

The board sustained both the method of valuation used by the assessor and the amount of the valuation. After receiving in evidence the documents and transcript of testimony introduced before the board, the court reduced the present value of anticipated net income to $6,977,692 to correct arithmetical errors and affirmed the decision of the board. Fairfield appeals, contending that in valuing its leasehold by an analysis of earning power, the assessing authorities must deduct payments of its mortgage debt or amortization of its investment from anticipated annual gross income.

[1] Fairfield's contentions have been determined adversely to it in De Luz Homes, Inc., v. County of San Diego, Cal., 290 P.2d 544, wherein it was stated that deduction of mortgage payments would be contrary to section 1 of Article XIII of the California Constitution and that a deduction for amortization of the lessee's investment would substitute a method of valuation dependent on the profitability of property to its present owner for the statutory standard of "full cash value." Rev. & Tax. Code, §§ 401, 110.

[2-4] The method used by the assessor in the present case is similar to that approved in De Luz, but we must disapprove it to the extent that it deducts rent paid by Fairfield to the government from anticipated annual gross income. The rent that a leasehold would command on an open market under conditions in which neither buyer nor seller could take advantage of the exigencies of the other is based on expected future net income from the leasehold without regard to the rent presently paid by the lessee, and therefore such rent is not deducted in estimating the earning power of the leasehold. The assessment of the possessory interest of Fairfield for the tax year 1953-1954, however, need not be set aside because of the erroneous deduction of the $200 rent paid to the government, for although the error was favorable to the taxpayer, the county did not appeal, Hamilton v. Abadjian, 30 Cal.2d 49, 53, 179 P.2d 804; In re Estate of Keith, 175 Cal. 26, 28, 165 P. 10, and, moreover, de minimis non curat lex. Merrill v. Hurlburt, 63 Cal. 494, 497; see, Miller & Lux, Inc., v. Richardson, 182 Cal. 115, 128, 187 P. 411; H. & W. Pierce, Inc., v. Santa Barbara County, 40 Cal.App. 302, 306, 180 P. 641 and cases there cited.

[5] A second difference between the method used by the assessor in the present case and that approved in De Luz is the deduction from the present value of future net income in the present case for "restrictions in the lease, consisting of rent ceilings, replacement requirements, etc." In De Luz, the assessor estimated the fee value of land and improvements in the leasehold and deducted a percentage thereof as an allowance for limitations imposed by the lease. We disapproved the entire method of valuation, and stated in regard to the deduction from the value of the fee that there was no indication "either that the percentage deducted is an adequate or proper measure of such limitations, or that the lease in fact imposes any burdens on the fee." The deduction in the present case, however, is not from the value of the fee but from the expected earning power of the leasehold, and makes proper allowance for the risk that earnings may be less than presently expected. Although the risk that future income may be less than presently expected may be reflected adequately in the estimate of future annual incomes and in a capitalization rate computed according to risk, interest, and provisions for replacement of assets, see De Luz Homes, Inc., v. County of San Diego, Cal., 290 P.2d 544; 1 Bonbright, The Valuation of Property, pp. 259-262; Finney, Principles of Accounting (3d ed.), ch. 10, the fact that a separate deduction was made for it in the present case does not invalidate the assessor's method of valuation.

The judgment is affirmed.

GIBSON, C. J., and SHENK, EDMONDS, CARTER, SCHAUER and SPENCE, JJ., concur.

VICTOR VALLEY HOUSING CORPORATION, a Corporation, Plaintiff and Respondent,
v.

COUNTY OF SAN BERNARDINO, a Body Corporate and Politic, Defendant and Appellant.

MESA ESTATES, Inc., a Corporation, Plaintiff and Respondent,
v.

COUNTY OF SAN BERNARDINO, a Body Corporate and Politic, Defendant and Appellant.
L. A. 23494, 23495.

Supreme Court of California.

In Bank.

Nov. 25, 1955.

Rehearing Denied Dec. 21, 1955.

Taxpayers brought actions against county for recovery of taxes paid under protest. The Superior Court of San Bernardino County, Carl B. Hilliard, J., entered judgments and orders adverse to the county, and the county appealed. The Supreme Court, Traynor, J., held that in determining assessment values of possessory interests of taxpayer lessees in housing projects constructed on air force base of United States government under the National Housing Act, limitation of anticipated earnings to period of cost amortization would make value dependent on income accounting of present owner of property, and would be contrary to the statutory standard of "full cash value," and, in estimating value of future earning power, it was necessary to take into account anticipated net earnings for full period during which it was expected that income would be received.

Judgments and orders reversed with directions to remand proceedings to county board of equalization.

I. Taxation 348

In determining assessment values of possessory interests of lessees in housing projects constructed on air force base of United States government under the National Housing Act, limitation of anticipated earnings to period of cost amortization would make value dependent on income accounting of present owner of property, and would be contrary to the statutory standard of "full cash value," and, in estimating value of future earning power, it was necessary to take into account anticipated net earnings for full period during which it was expected that income would be received. National Housing Act, §§ 801-809, 803, 807 as amended 12 U.S.C.A. §§ 1748-1748h, 1748b(b) (2), 1748f; Revenue and Taxation Code, §§ 110, 401, 5096-5099, 5103; 10 U.S.C.A. §§ 1270, 1270d.

2. Taxation ⇨348

In determining assessment values of possessory interests of lessees in housing projects constructed on air force base of United States government under the National Housing Act, it was proper, in estimating future net earnings, to deduct expected maintenance expenditures from anticipated gross income of years in which such expenditures will be made or incurred, and anticipated net income accordingly is reduced for years in which large expenditures are anticipated. National Housing Act, §§ 801-809, 803, 807 as amended 12 U.S.C.A. §§ 1748-1748h, 1748b(b) (2), 1748f; Revenue and Taxation Code, §§ 110, 401, 5096-5099, 5103; 10 U.S.C.A. §§ 1270, 1270d.

3. Taxation ⇨348

In determining assessment values of possessory interests of lessees in housing projects constructed on air force base of United States government under the National Housing Act, deductions under accounts entitled "deferred maintenance," "future but presently anticipable ordinary maintenance and repair," or "depreciation," for amounts that do not reflect anticipated expenditures for years in which they are deducted but that instead represent amortization of investment, is to substitute improperly a method of valuation dependent on profitability of property to its present owner for statutory standard of "full cash value." National Housing Act, §§ 801-809, 803, 807 as amended 12 U.S.C.A. §§ 1748-1748h, 1748b(b) (2), 1748f; Revenue and Taxation Code, §§ 110, 401, 5096-5099, 5103; 10 U.S.C.A. §§ 1270, 1270d.

4. Taxation ⇨348

In determining assessment values of possessory interests of lessees in housing projects constructed on air force base of United States government under the National Housing Act, though expenses might prove to be more costly and net income less than presently anticipated, such risks properly could be taken into account in selecting rate of capitalization. National Housing Act, §§ 801-809, 803, 807 as amended 12 U.S.C.A. §§ 1748-1748h, 1748b(b) (2), 1748f; Revenue and Taxation Code, §§ 110, 401, 5096-5099, 5103; 10 U.S.C.A. §§ 1270, 1270d.

Albert E. Weller, County Counsel, J. B. Lawrence, Deputy County Counsel, San Bernardino, Felix S. Wahrhaftig, Sacramento, Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., E. G. Benard and James E. Sabine, Asst. Attys. Gen., for appellant.

Holbrook, Tarr, Carter & O'Neill, W. Summer Holbrook, Jr., Francis H. O'Neill, Los Angeles, and William J. Johnstone, Victorville, for respondents.

TRAYNOR, Justice.

Victor Valley Housing Corporation and Mesa Estates, Inc., California corporations, hereinafter called Victor Valley and Mesa, brought actions against the County of San Bernardino, Revenue & Taxation Code, § 5103, for recovery of taxes paid under protest that were levied against possessory interests in tax exempt land and improvements for the tax year 1953-1954. The actions were consolidated for trial, and the county appeals from judgments in favor of plaintiffs and orders remanding the proceedings to the county board of equalization.

Victor Valley and Mesa are housing projects of 400 and 250 units, respectively, for military and civilian personnel assigned to duty at George Air Force Base in San Bernardino County. The projects are located on land owned by the United States Government and leased to Victor Valley and Mesa for 75 years at annual rentals of $100, were constructed by the lessees pursuant to the provisions of Title VIII of the National Housing Act, 12 U.S.C.A. §§ 1748-1748h and section 1270 of Title 10 of the United States Code annotated, were financed by loans secured by mortgages insured by the Federal Housing Administration, and were subleased to persons designated as tenants by the commanding officer at rents regulated by the Federal Housing Administration and the Air Force. On completion, all improvements became the property of the federal government, and Victor Valley and Mesa manage the projects under leases that are essentially identical with the lease between De Luz Homes and the government, see, De Luz Homes, Inc., v. County of San Diego, Cal., 290 P.2d 544, and that provide, as in the case of De Luz, that the lessee shall pay "all taxes, assessments, and similar charges which, at any time during the term of the lease, may be taxed, assessed or imposed upon the Government or upon the Lessee with respect to or upon the leased premises." 10 U.S.C.A. § 1270d; 12 U.S.C.A. § 1748f.

The assessor valued the possessory interests of Victor Valley and Mesa in land improvements for the tax year 1953-1954 at $484,200 and $344,000, respectively, and levied taxes thereon of $25,226.82 and $17,922.40.¹ Victor Valley and Mesa paid the levies under protest and filed applications with the county board of equalization for reduction of the valuations to zero. At the hearing of the application, the assessor testified that in valuing the leaseholds he estimated the fee value of the land, imputed an income thereto of 7.5%, deducted the annual rent paid to the government from such income, capitalized the difference between imputed income and rent at 7.5%, deducted 5% of the product "in recognition of the restrictive conditions of the lease," and deemed the resulting figure the present value of the possessory interest in land. The replacement cost of improvements, less deductions for depreciation and restrictions created by the lease, was deemed the value of the possessory interest in improvements, and the sum of the values of the possessory interests in land and improvements was considered the present value of the leasehold.

As a check on the foregoing method, the assessor made an analysis of anticipated earning power by estimating future annual gross income, deducting therefrom operating expenses, payment into a replacement reserve required by the Federal Housing Administration, and rent paid to the government, and capitalizing the difference at a rate thought adequate to allow for risk, interest and taxes. He did not deduct payments of principal and interest on the lessees' mortgage debts or amortization of their investments in the leaseholds. Since he thought that the buildings would be greatly depreciated in 53 years, he limited his expectation of actual income to such period, and determined the present value of the remaining 20 years of the lease by imputing an income to the land, deducting therefrom rent to be paid to the government, and capitalizing the difference. The sum of the capitalized values of anticipated and imputed earnings was deemed the value of the leasehold. Since the figure obtained by the first method was lower than that obtained by the immediately foregoing method, he selected the former as the basis of his assessment, reduced it to 20% thereof to allow for the ratio of assessment value to market value, and entered it on the tax roll. Victor Valley and Mesa substantially agreed with the amount of gross income and operating expenses forecast by the assessor, but contended that in estimating net income, he should deduct allowances for deferred replacement of assets and payments of principal, interest, and insurance on their mortgage debts.

The board of equalization ordered that the present value of improvements that will revert to the government on termination of the leases be deducted from the value of the leaseholds and otherwise affirmed the method of valuation employed by the assessor. The amount of the valuation of Mesa was not affected by the board's order, and that of Victor Valley was reduced by

1. The assessor made initial assessments for the tax year 1953-1954 of $398,000 against Victor Valley and $356,660 against Mesa on the assumption that the lessees owned the improvements in fee, but at his request the board of equalization ordered these assessments cancelled.

but $1,000. Claims for refund were denied by the board of supervisors. Rev. & Tax Code, §§ 5096-5099. After receiving in evidence the documents and transcript of testimony introduced before the board of equalization, the court held the assessor's method of valuation improper and remanded the proceedings to the board with directions to take evidence on the amount of money invested in the leaseholds and the "reserve necessary for future but presently anticipable ordinary maintenance and repair." The board was directed to deduct rent to the government, operating expenses, amortization, a specified sum "for deferred maintenance reserve for replacement of household equipment," and a specified sum "for the future but presently anticipable ordinary maintenance and repair of the housing units" from anticipated annual gross income, to capitalize the difference for the remaining years of the lease at 7.5%, to reduce the amount so computed to 20% thereof to allow for the ratio of assessed value to market value, and to enter the net amount on the tax roll, provided that it enter an amount no less than $3,900.

The method used by the assessor was held inappropriate for valuing leaseholds of the kind in question in De Luz Homes, Inc., v. County of San Diego, Cal., 290 P.2d 544, wherein it was stated that under the circumstances attending such leaseholds, the value of plaintiffs' possessory interests can best be estimated in terms of actual income rather than imputed income, and that in any event, an analysis of imputed income must make an adequate distinction between imputed gross income and imputed net income.

[1] The income analysis used by the assessor as a check against his imputed income estimate requires further discussion. In the assessor's income analysis, it is assumed that since the buildings will be greatly depreciated at the end of fifty-three years, actual income can be anticipated only for such time, and that to value the remaining twenty years of the lease, it is necessary to impute an income to the land alone. The assessor's exhibits make clear, however, that in fifty-three years it is not expected either that the buildings will have come to the end of their economic life or that the receipt of income will cease, but it is expected that the cost of the buildings will be largely amortized. Limitation of anticipated earnings to the period of cost amortization, however, makes value dependent on the income accounting of the present owner of property, and is contrary to the statutory standard of "full cash value." Rev. & Tax Code, §§ 401, 110; De Luz Homes, Inc., v. County of San Diego, Cal., 290 P.2d 544. In estimating the value of future earning power, it is necessary to take into account anticipated net earnings for the full period during which it is expected that income will be received. Since the terms of the lease and the statute under which it was drawn (see especially, 12 U.S.C.A., § 1748b(b) (2)) contemplate that the possessory interest will exist for the full period of the lease, the assessing authorities could properly limit expectations of future income to a period of time shorter than the term of the lease only if they believed that income in fact will be zero after such time.

[2-4] The order of the court was similar to the order of the trial court in De Luz Homes, Inc., v. County of San Diego, Cal., 290 P.2d 544, and must be disapproved as contrary to the statutory standard of "full cash value." Rev. & Tax Code, §§ 401, 110. Moreover, the deductions ordered for "deferred maintenance reserve for replacement of household equipment" and for "future but presently anticipable ordinary maintenance and repair of housing units" raise additional questions. In estimating future net earnings, it is proper to deduct expected maintenance expenditures from the anticipated gross income of the years in which such expenditures will be made or incurred, and anticipated net income accordingly is reduced for years in which large expenditures are anticipated. To make deductions, however, under accounts entitled "deferred maintenance," "future but presently anticipable ordinary maintenance and repair," or "depreciation," for amounts that do not reflect anticipated expenditures for the years in which they are deducted but that instead represent amortization of investment is to substitute a method of valuation dependent on the profitability of property to its present owner for the statutory standard of "full cash value." Although expenses may prove to be more costly and net income less than presently anticipated, such risks properly may be taken into account in selecting the rate of capitalization. (See, 1 Bonbright, The Valuation of Property, pp. 259-262.)

The judgments and orders are reversed with directions to the trial court to remand the proceedings to the county board of equalization for action in accord with the opinions expressed above and in De Luz Homes, Inc., v. County of San Diego, Cal., 290 P.2d 544. Each party shall bear its own costs on appeal.

GIBSON, C. J., and SHENK, EDMONDS, CARTER, SCHAUER and SPENCE, JJ., concur.

45 Cal.2d 586

EL TORO DEVELOPMENT CO., Inc., a corporation, Plaintiff and Appellant,

v.

COUNTY OF ORANGE, a Body Corporate and Politic, Defendant and Respondent.

L. A. 23769.

Supreme Court of California.

In Bank.

Nov. 25, 1955.

Rehearing Denied Dec. 21, 1955.

Taxpayer brought action against county to recover taxes paid under protest. The Superior Court of Orange County, John Shea, J., entered judgment adverse to the taxpayer, and taxpayer appealed. The Supreme Court, Traynor, J., held that where assessor, in determining assessment value of lessee taxpayer's possessory interests in housing project constructed at marine air base on land owned by the federal government, under the National Housing Act, made no distinction between imputed gross income and imputed net income, and valuation of leasehold could be more adequately made by capitalizing anticipated earnings, assessor's valuation of possessory interests in land and improvements could not be sustained.

Judgment reversed with directions to remand proceedings to county board of equalization.

1. Taxation — 348

Where assessor, in determining assessment value of lessee's possessory interests in housing project constructed at marine air base on land owned by the federal government, under the National Housing Act, made no distinction between imputed gross income and imputed net income, and valuation of leasehold could be more adequately made by capitalizing anticipated earnings, assessor's valuation of possessory interests in land and improvements could not be sustained. National Housing Act, §§ 801-805, 807 as amended 12 U.S.C.A. §§ 1748-1748d, 1748f; 34 U.S.C.A. §§ 522a, 522e; Revenue and Taxation Code, §§ 102, 1601-1615, 4986, 5138.

2. Taxation — 348

Assessor, in determining assessment value of lessee's possessory interests in housing project constructed at marine air base on land owned by the federal government, under the National Housing Act, should not have assessed refrigerators, ranges, and garbage disposal units. National Housing Act, §§ 801-805, 807 as amended 12 U.S.C.A. §§ 1748-1748d, 1748f; 34 U.S.C.A. §§ 522a, 522e; Revenue and Taxation Code, §§ 102, 1601-1615, 4986, 5138.

Holbrook, Tarr, Carter & O'Neill, W. Sumner Holbrook, Jr., Francis H. O'Neill, Los Angeles, and Alexander W. Rutan, Santa Ana, for appellant.

Joel E. Ogle, County Counsel, George F. Holden and Stephen K. Tamura, Asst. County Counsel, Santa Ana, for respondent.

TRAYNOR, Justice.

El Toro Development Co., a California corporation, hereinafter called El Toro, brought an action against the County of Orange, Revenue & Taxation Code, § 5138, to recover taxes paid under protest that were levied against personal property and possessory interests in tax-exempt land and improvements. Plaintiff appeals from a judgment that it recover nothing.

El Toro had a 571-unit housing project constructed at El Toro Marine Air Base in Orange County on land owned by the United States Government that was leased to El Toro for 75 years at an annual rental of $100. The project was built pursuant to the provisions of Title VIII of the National Housing Act, 12 U.S.C.A., §§ 1748-1748d and section 522a of Title 34 of the United States Code Annotated. It was financed to the extent of 90% of its cost by a loan from the Bank of America and to the extent of 10% thereof by a loan from the contractors who built it, and was subleased to military and civilian personnel designated as tenants by the commanding officer at rents regulated by the Federal Housing Administration and the Marine Corps. The loan by the Bank of America is secured by a mortgage on the leasehold insured by the Federal Housing Administration and by a chattel mortgage on all ranges, refrigerators, and garbage disposal units in the project. The lease between El Toro and the government provides: "That the buildings and other improvements erected by the Lessee, constituting the aforesaid housing project, shall be and become, as completed, real estate and part of the leased premises, and property of the United States, leased to the Lessee to effectuate the purposes of Title VIII of the National Housing Act * * *. That upon the termination of the FHA period (as hereinafter defined),¹ all ranges, refrigerators, screens, shades, and other items required to be furnished in accordance with the detailed plans and specifications submitted by the Department, and approved by the Commissioner, shall remain on the leased premises and become the property of the Government without compensation; provided, however, that where the Lessee replaces any such items, this Condition * * * shall apply only to the replacement."

Congress provided that the interest of the lessee is taxable, 34 U.S.C.A. § 522e, and the lease provides that the lessee must pay all "taxes, assessments and similar charges which, at any time during the term of the lease, may be taxed, assessed or imposed upon the Government or upon the Lessee with respect to or upon the leased premises." (See, 12 U.S.C.A. § 1748f.) The assessor placed an assessment of $1,235,190 on El Toro's possessory interests in land and improvements and $39,000 on the "personal property" consisting of ranges, refrigerators, and garbage disposal units, and levied taxes thereon of $44,869.28. El Toro's application to the county board of equalization, Rev. & Tax.Code, §§ 1601-1615, 4986, for reduction of the valuation of its possessory interests in land and improvements and for cancellation of the assessment on personal property was denied.

The court found that the assessor valued the possessory interests in land by capitalizing imputed income, that he valued the possessory interests in buildings by deducting the present value of the government's reversion from the value of the fee and ascribing the difference to the lessee, and that he checked the values so obtained by analyzing anticipated income from the leasehold for forty-five years following construction of the project. These methods of valuation were used by the assessor in Victor Valley Housing Corp. v. County of San Bernardino, Cal., 290 P.2d 565, and are described therein. Deeming the ranges, refrigerators, and garbage disposal units personal property owned by the lessee, he assessed them at their market value less 30% thereof to allow for the ratio of assessment value to market value. The court rejected El Toro's contentions that the ranges, refrigerators, and garbage disposal

1. Paragraph 26(b) of the lease states: "That as used herein, the term 'FHA period' means the period during which there is a mortgage insured or held by the Commissioner under the National units were owned by the government and therefore were assessable only to the extent of El Toro's possessory interest in them, and that in estimating future earnings the assessing authorities should deduct either payments on the mortgage debts or amortization of the investment in the leasehold from anticipated gross income.

Housing Act covering the interest of the Lessee or the leasehold interest is owned and operated, or otherwise controlled by the Federal Housing Commissioner."

[1] Since the assessor's imputed income analysis made no distinction between imputed gross income and imputed net income, and since valuation of the leasehold may be more adequately made by capitalizing anticipated earnings, De Luz Homes, Inc., v. County of San Diego, Cal., 290 P.2d 544, his valuation of the possessory interests in land and improvements cannot be sustained.

[2] His assessment of the refrigerators, ranges, and garbage disposal units must also be disapproved. Valuation by analysis of anticipated earnings assumes that the entire present value of a given piece of property is the capitalized sum of future net income from the property. (See, 1 Bonbright, The Valuation of Property, Ch. XI.) Since capitalized income represents the full value of the property, added amounts for separate parts of the property would be improper. In the present case, tenants rent dwelling-units equipped with screens, shades, ranges, refrigerators, and garbage disposal equipment and serviced by walks, roads, and other benefits, and their rentals therefore represent income from all of the property encompassed by the leasehold, and not merely the land and buildings. El Toro cannot charge additional rent for the ranges, refrigerators, and garbage disposal machinery, nor can it rent dwellings without such equipment. Anticipated sub-rentals, therefore, represent income from all of the property encompassed by the lease, and the present value of net sub-rentals represents the full value of the possessory interest. To tax that value and also the value of the ranges, refrigerators, and garbage disposal units, would be double taxation. (See, Rev. & Tax.Code, § 102.)

The judgment is reversed with directions to the trial court to remand the proceedings to the county board of equalization for action in accord with the opinions expressed above and in De Luz Homes, Inc., v. County of San Diego, Cal., 290 P.2d 544, and Victor Valley Housing Corp. v. County of San Bernardino, Cal., 290 P.2d 565. Each party shall bear its own costs on appeal.

GIBSON, C. J., and SHENK, EDMONDS, CARTER, SCHAUER and SPENCE, JJ., concur.

137 Cal.Ap.2d 581

Mary MEGARRY and Letitia Megarry, Plaintiffs and Appellants,

v.

James NORTON, Defendant and Respondent.
Civ. 8676.

District Court of Appeal. Third District.
California.

Dec. 6, 1955.

Action for libel. The defendant interposed a general and special demurrer. The Superior Court, Solano County, Greenwood, J., sustained a demurrer, the plaintiffs declined to amend the complaint and they appealed from the judgment. The District Court of Appeal, Van Dyke, P. J., held that in libel action against defendant who hung sign on parked automobile bearing inscription "Nuts To You-You Old Witch", complaint which alleged that plaintiffs were owners of business establishment in front of which automobile had been parked in alleged violation of ordinance, that plaintiffs had posted notice upon automobile calling attention of defendant to parking violation and advising him that if violations continued plaintiffs would call attention of traffic officers, and that defendant's sign was hung the following day, stated cause of action.

Reversed.

1. Libel and Slander ⇐19

In determining whether a publication is libelous it must be considered as a whole and must not be divided in segments and each portion treated as a separate unit. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 45.

2. Libel and Slander ⇐19

In determining whether words are capable of defamatory meaning, courts will construe them according to fair and natural meaning that will be given them by reasonable persons of ordinary intelligence and will not consider what persons, setting themselves to work to deduce some unusual meaning, might extract from them. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 45.

3. Libel and Slander ⇐97

In libel action against defendant who hung sign upon automobile bearing inscription "Nuts To You-You Old Witch", complaint was not subject to special demurrer on grounds that plaintiffs were not identified in the sign as being the object thereof, where such element was supplied by allegations as to ownership of property in front of which sign was displayed, coupled with allegations that persons to whom publication was made understood that plaintiffs were being thereby described. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 45.

4. Libel and Slander ⇐97

In libel action against defendant who hung sign on automobile bearing inscription "Nuts To You-You Old Witch", complaint was not demurrable for failure to contain technical requirements of innuendo inducement and colloquium, if since plaintiffs were objects of publication as alleged publication was libelous on its face. West's Ann.Civ. Code, § 45a.

5. Libel and Slander ⇐84, 85

In libel action against defendant who hung sign upon automobile bearing inscription "Nuts To You-You Old Witch", complaint which alleged that plaintiffs were owners of business establishment in front of which automobile had been parked in alleged violation of ordinance, and that plaintiffs had posted on automobile a notice of violation and advised defendant that if violations continued owners would call attention of traffic officers, and that defendant's sign was hung the following day stated cause of action. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 45a.

O'Hara, Randall, Castagnetto & Kilpatrick, Vallejo, for appellants.

O'Hara, O'Hara & Healy, Vallejo, for respondent.

VAN DYKE, Presiding Justice.

This is an appeal from a judgment entered when appellants declined to amend their complaint after the trial court had sustained a demurrer thereto.

The complaint alleges that appellants are the owners of a business establishment located at 520 El Dorado Street in Vallejo and that they reside on property adjacent thereto; that for some time prior to February 13, 1952 the respondent, in violation of a city ordinance, continuously during the morning and evening hours parked his automobile at or about said establishment; that on February 13, 1952 the appellants caused to be posted upon respondent's automobile a notice which called his attention to his parking violations and advised him that if these violations continued the owners would call the attention of the traffic officers to the same; that on the next day the respondent "contriving to injure the plaintiffs, and each of them, in their reputation and to bring them into public contempt and ridicule" maliciously and wrongfully hung a sign upon a motor vehicle, parked at said location, in view of appellants' neighbors, the public, and the named traffic patrolman, which sign bore the inscription "Nuts To You-You Old Witch"; that appellants' neighbors, the public, and said officer, due to the location of said sign, reasonably understood the inscription thereon to refer to appellants and that as a result thereof appellants suffered distress of body and mind to their damage in the sum of $5,000. They prayed for both general and exemplary damages.

It is apparent from the facts alleged that the sign placed in public view, as alleged, by respondent was intended to subject appellants to contempt and ridicule and its wording, its design and the place and manner of its publication made it apt for the achievement of that purpose. Under the provisions of Section 45 of the Civil Code, therefore, the publication, if false, was libelous.

[1, 2] In determining whether a publication is libelous or not it must be considered as a whole and must not be divided into segments and each portion treated as a separate unit. Washer v. Bank of America National Trust & Savings Association, 87 Cal.App.2d 501, 197 P.2d 202; Blake v. Hearst Publications Incorporated, 75 Cal.App.2d 6, 170 P.2d 100; Harris v. Curtis Publishing Co., 49 Cal.App.2d 340, 121 P.2d 761; Rosenberg v. J. C. Penney Co., 30 Cal.App.2d 609, 86 P.2d 696. Treating the publication here complained of as a whole, the opening phrase "Nuts to You" discloses a purpose to expose the objects thereof to contempt and ridicule and the further and accompanying phrase "You Old Witch" was clearly used in a derogatory sense. In determining whether words are capable of defamatory meaning, the courts will construe them according to the fair and natural meaning that will be given them by reasonable persons of ordinary intelligence and will not consider what persons, setting themselves to work to deduce some unusual meaning, might extract from them. Lorentz v. R.K.O. Radio Pictures, Inc., 9 Cir., 155 F.2d 84. The words used here are not fairly susceptible of an innocent interpretation, Peabody v. Barham, 52 Cal.App.2d 581, 584, 126 P.2d 668, for, assuming the truth of the charges that respondent acted under the circumstances alleged, then it is apparent that he intended to expose these women to contempt and ridicule and that he went about it effectively.

[3-5] Respondent interposed both a general and a special demurrer. He claims here that some of the specifications of special demurrer were good and that, therefore, since leave to amend was given and refused, the judgment appealed from must be affirmed. We do not agree. He says that the appellants were not identified in the publication as being the objects thereof. That element, however, is supplied by the allegations of the complaint as to the ownership of the property in front of which the sign was displayed, coupled with the allegations that the persons to whom the publication was made understood that the appellants were being thereby described. That is sufficient. He argues further that the alleged defamation is not libelous on its face and, therefore, in order to state a cause of action, the complaint must contain the technical requirements of innuendo, inducement and colloquium. But respondent's premise is not sound. The publication, once it is shown, as alleged, that appellants were the objects thereof, is libelous on its face as that phrase is used in Section 45a of the Civil Code. Hence, it was unnecessary to allege explanatory matters such as inducement, innuendo or other extrinsic facts. Appellants' complaint stated a cause of action and was not subject to the special demurrer pleaded.

The judgment appealed from is reversed.

PEEK and SCHOTTKY, JJ., concur.

137 Cal.App.2d 689

PEOPLE of the State of California,
Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Samuel D. COLLINS, Defendant and Appellant.

Cr. 5233.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 2, California.

Dec. 9, 1955.

Defendant was convicted of abortion and homicide growing out of an illegal operation and filed motion in nature of writ of coram nobis. The District Court of Appeal, Fox, J., held that defendant would not be heard to assert that it was unlawful to charge him with a prior conviction and that such charge operated to his prejudice.

Motion denied.

1. Criminal Law ¶997(4)

In proceeding on motion in nature of writ of coram nobis, defendant would not be heard to assert that it was unlawful to charge him with a prior conviction and that such charge in abortion and homicide prosecution operated to his prejudice.

2. Criminal Law ¶997(6)

Coram nobis is a remedy of narrow scope, and the writ is not intended to authorize any court to reverse and review its opinion, and will not lie to correct errors of law, but only enables court to recall some adjudication made while some fact existed which, if before court, would have prevented rendition of the judgment and which, without any fault or negligence of the party, was not presented to the court.

3. Criminal Law ¶997(2)

Defendant's motions for new trial and appeals from judgments of conviction for abortion and homicide growing out of an illegal operation were proper proceedings in which to present issue based upon asserted illegality of inclusion of his prior conviction in the several counts of the informations.

4. Criminal Law ¶997(6)

Coram nobis will not lie for purpose of obtaining a belated review of a question of law.

Samuel D. Collins, in pro. per.

William Bronsten, Los Angeles, court appointed counsel.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., William E. James, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

FOX, Justice.

This is a motion, filed by defendant in propria persona,¹ which is in the nature of a writ of coram nobis. People v. Smith, 120 Cal.App.2d 531, 534, 261 P.2d 306. Defendant seeks to vacate sentences pronounced against him following his convictions in 1946 of abortion and homicide growing out of an illegal operation. As a part of each count it was charged that defendant had suffered a prior conviction for abortion. This allegation was true. See People v. Collins, 4 Cal.App.2d 86, 40 P.2d 542. Defendant appealed from the 1946 judgments and orders denying his motions for new trial. See People v. Emery, 79 Cal.App.2d 226, 179 P.2d 843, and People v. Collins, 80 Cal.App.2d 526, 132 P.2d 585. They were each affirmed and a hearing was denied by the Supreme Court in each case.

[1] Defendant bases his motion on the theory that it was unlawful to charge the prior conviction and that it operated to his prejudice by increasing his minimum sentence from 9 to 15 years. His motion can not be granted.

[2] As this court recently pointed out in a related proceeding, People v. Collins, 136 Cal.App.2d 756, 289 P.2d 302, "coram nobis is a remedy of narrow scope." People v. Adamson, 34 Cal.2d 320, 326, 210 P.2d 13, 15; People v. Sica, 116 Cal.App.2d 59, 62, 253 P.2d 75. The writ "is not intended to authorize any court to revise and review its opinions; but only to enable it to recall some adjudication made while some fact existed which, if before the court, would have prevented the rendition of the judgment, and which, without any fault or negligence of the party, was not presented to the court." (Emphasis added.) People v. Gilbert, 25 Cal.2d 422, 442, 154 P.2d 657, 667; People v. McCoy, 115 Cal.App.2d 565, 567, 252 P.2d 371; People v. Smith, supra. As said in People v. Tuthill, 32 Cal.2d 819, 822, 198 P.2d 505, 506, "the writ does not lie to correct errors of law." People v. Cook, 97 Cal.App.2d 284, 285, 217 P.2d 498; People v. Martinez, 88 Cal.App.2d 767, 771, 199 P.2d 375.

[3,4] Defendant had an opportunity to raise the asserted illegality of the inclusion of his prior conviction in the several counts of the informations on his motions for a new trial and on his appeals. Those were the proper proceedings in which to present that issue. People v. McVicker, 37 Cal.App.2d 470, 473, 99 P.2d 1110; People v. Reid, 195 Cal. 249, 253, 232 P. 457, 36 A.L.R. 1435. By the present motion defendant is seeking a belated review of a question of law. Coram nobis does not lie for that purpose under the authorities cited above.

1. This court appointed counsel to represent him in this proceeding.

The motion is denied.

MOORE, P. J., and ASHBURN, J. pro tem., concur.

137 Cal.App.2d 630

Alton D. HURLEY, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Ralph B. SMITH, doing business as Ralph B. Smith Processing Plant, Defendant and Appellant.

Civ. 8623.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Dec. 8, 1955.

Action by employee for wages and out of pocket expenses. The Superior Court, Merced County, R. R. Sischo, J., entered judgment for employee and employer appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Peek, J., held that evidence sustained finding that employer had orally agreed to hire employee at a salary of $750 per month plus out of pocket expenses.

Affirmed.

1. Appeal and Error ⇨931(1)

Upon review of a judgment for plaintiff, appellate court must view the record in the light most favorable to him.

2. Master and Servant ⇨80(10)

In employee's action for wages, evidence sustained finding that employer had orally agreed to hire employee at a salary of $750 per month plus out of pocket expenses.

3. Evidence ⇨588

Before evidence can be disregarded as inherently improbable, there must exist a physical impossibility of the evidence being true, or its falsity must be apparent without resort to inference or deductions.

4. Appeal and Error ⇨1011(1)

Mere substantial conflicts in evidence are wholly insufficient to warrant a reviewing court in substituting its opinion for that of the trial court.

V. P. DiGiorgio and Thomas R. Davis, Bakersfield, for appellant.

Chas. M. Stark and Paul W. McComish, San Francisco, for respondent.

PEEK, Justice.

Defendant appeals from a judgment in favor of plaintiff in the sum of $3,296.67, for salary and out-of-pocket expenses found by the court to be due under the terms of an oral contract of employment.

Plaintiff's complaint alleged three separate causes of action. The first alleged, and the court found, that on August 8, 1952, plaintiff and defendant entered into an oral contract under the terms of which defendant employed plaintiff as superintendent of a turkey processing plant to be operated by defendant; that defendant promised to pay plaintiff a salary at the rate of $750 a month; and that plaintiff rendered services in accordance with said agreement between August 8, 1952, and January 15, 1953. The second cause of action alleged, and the court found, that defendant agreed to pay plaintiff his out-of-pocket expenses. The third cause of action alleged defendant to be indebted to plaintiff for services previously rendered at defendant's request, upon which count the court found against plaintiff. Defendant's appeal is directed solely to the court's finding and judgment as predicated upon plaintiff's first cause of action.

[1,2] Viewing the record as we must, in the light most favorable to plaintiff, it appears that plaintiff and defendant had been engaged in one branch or another of the poultry business for many years prior to this proceeding. Some time during the early part of 1952, the parties discussed the possibility of establishing a turkey eviscerating plant in connection with freezing and storage facilities to be operated in Merced County. Following their original conversation numerous meetings and conversations were had and many letters passed between the parties, eventually resulting in defendant undertaking the establishment of a plant as contemplated and plaintiff acting as his employee in the establishment thereof. No reason would appear to summarize at length the discussions and letters between the parties. Suffice it to say that this portion of the record is decidedly conflicting. However there is testimony by plaintiff that during their preliminary negotiations, and at the time the oral agreement was found by the court to have been entered into, the defendant agreed to employ him at a salary of $750 a month; that during the Fall of that year defendant told plaintiff, in relation to salary which plaintiff stated was then due, that defendant would catch up with that as soon as he got the plant into operation and a few cars of turkeys rolling. Plaintiff further testified that in December defendant authorized a check in the sum of $750, being the amount of one month's salary. Such evidence was sufficient if believed by the court, and obviously it was, to sustain a finding in plaintiff's favor.

"As had so often been said, questions as to the weight and sufficiency of the evidence, the construction to be put upon it, the inferences to be drawn therefrom, the credibility of witnesses commensurate with their conduct and manner of testifying, and the determination of conflicts and inconsistencies in their testimony are matters for the trial court to resolve." Thompson v. City of Long Beach, 41 Cal.2d 235, 246, 259 P.2d 649, 655.

[3,4] The defendant additionally contends that the testimony of the plaintiff is inherently improbable and inconsistent with his written statements and memoranda to defendant. "'(4) Before evidence can be disregarded as inherently improbable there must exist a physical impossibility of the evidence being true, or its falsity must be apparent without resort to inferences or deductions.'" Howard v. Howard, 128 Cal.App.2d 180, 184, 275 P.2d 88, 91. At most the evidence referred to by defendant merely discloses a substantial conflict in the testimony. But conflicts, whether substantial or otherwise, are wholly insufficient to warrant a reviewing court in substituting its opinion for that of the trial court.

The judgment is affirmed.

VAN DYKE, P. J., and SCHOTTKY, J., concur.

137 Cal.App.2d 656

UNION BANK AND TRUST COMPANY OF LOS ANGELES, as Executor of the Estate of Mary M. Kelly, Deceased, Plaintiff and Appellant,

v.

Lydia FABIANO, Anthony Bonaccorsi, et al.,
Defendants and Respondents.

Civ. 5215.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District,
California.

Dec. 8, 1955.

Action to recover from alleged partnership and others an amount allegedly due plaintiff's decedent. The Superior Court, Riverside County, O. K. Morton, J., rendered summary judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Barnard, J., held that pleadings and affidavits raised substantial fact issues, including issue whether partnership ever existed, precluding summary judgment.

Judgment reversed.

1. Judgment ⇨186

On motion for summary judgment, duty of court is to determine whether a triable issue is presented, and not to determine the issue itself.

2. Judgment ⇨181(4), 185.1(4), 185.2(6, 7)

Summary judgment must be used with caution and any doubt must be resolved against applicant, and affidavits of applicant should be strictly construed, while those of his opponent should be liberally construed and facts alleged therein must be accepted as true and need not be composed wholly of evidentiary facts. West's Ann. Code Civ.Proc. § 437c.

3. Judgment ⇨185.3(1)

In action to recover from alleged partnership amount allegedly received for use and benefit of plaintiff's decedent, pleadings and affidavits raised substantial fact issues, including issue whether partnership ever existed, precluding summary judgment. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. §§ 437c, 462.

S. V. O. Prichard, Beverly Hills, John M. Dvorin, Robert P. Schifferman, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Sherman & Weissman, for respondents.

BARNARD, Presiding Justice.

This is an appeal from a summary judgment granted under the provisions of Section 437c of the Code of Civil Procedure.

On March 23, 1954, James F. Kelly as executor of the Estate of Mary M. Kelly, Deceased, filed this action against Lydia Fabiano and Anthony Bonaccorsi, personally and as copartners, two corporations being also named as defendants. The complaint alleged that Fabiano and Bonaccorsi were copartners doing business under the name of "Desert House of Lydia" or "House of Lydia"; that the defendants and each of them became indebted to the decedent in the sum of $18,054.70 for money had and received for her use and benefit; that the whole amount is still due and unpaid; and that demand for payment had been refused. The defendant Bonaccorsi filed an answer admitting that he is a copartner in the business being conducted in the name of "House of Lydia", and denying each and every other allegation of the complaint. His prayer was that the defendant take nothing by reason of the complaint. Fabiano filed an answer admitting that she was a partner in the business being conducted under the name of "House of Lydia", and denying each and every other allegation of the complaint. As a separate defense "and by way of plea in abatement" she alleged that on October 28, 1953, she and Mary M. Kelly entered into a written copartnership agreement for the operation of a business known as "Desert House of Lydia"; and that this agreement provided that in the event of any dispute between the partners the matter should be submitted to arbitration before any suit was filed. Her prayer was that the action be abated pending compliance with the arbitration agreement, and that plaintiff take nothing by reason of the complaint.

On July 8, 1954, an order was entered reciting that James F. Kelly had died and substituting The Union Bank & Trust Co., as executor of the estates of Mary M. Kelly and of James F. Kelly, as plaintiff in the action.

On December 24, 1954, the defendants gave notice of a motion for a summary judgment stating that it would be based upon the record in the action and the affidavit of Lydia Fabiano, which was filed therewith. Her affidavit alleged that on October 28, 1953, affiant and Mary M. Kelly and Bonaccorsi entered into a written partnership agreement to conduct a business known as "Desert House of Lydia"; that from time to time Mrs. Kelly paid sums of money into the partnership for its use; that affiant and Bonaccorsi conducted the partnership business up to and after the death of Mrs. Kelly, and the money sued for represents money paid by the decedent to operate the business; that no dispute arose during Mrs. Kelly's lifetime; and that no action for dissolution of the partnership or an accounting has been filed. A copy of the claimed agreement was attached to the affidavit, which purported to be signed by Mrs. Kelly, Fabiano and Bonaccorsi.

Counteraffidavits were filed by the attorney for the estate and the trust officer of the executor bank. The first of these alleged that affiant, acting as attorney for the estate, had become convinced that Mrs. Kelly had been deprived of sums of money by means of fraud and deceit practiced upon her by the defendants; that the depositions of Fabiano, of Bonaccorsi, and of their attorney were then taken, which disclosed that Bonaccorsi had never signed the partnership agreement; that the claimed partnership agreement was never executed; that the fact that no partnership ever existed was recognized by the defendants; that no partnership with Mrs. Kelly as a member ever existed, and she never invested any funds therein; that Mrs. Kelly's investment was treated as a loan and not as a partnership contribution, as evidenced by the tender of promissory notes; and that the defendants obtained money from Mrs. Kelly at a time when she was under the influence of alcohol and not able to realize the nature of their actions.

The affidavit of the trust officer, made on information and belief as permitted by Section 437c, alleged that on October 28, 1953, after a discussion between Mrs. Kelly, Fabiano and the attorney, the parties abandoned the idea of going forward with the partnership, and decided to form a corporation; that Mrs. Kelly delivered a check for $10,000 to Fabiano on October 28, 1953; that Mrs. Kelly died on November 28, 1953; that on December 21, 1953, the directors of a corporation known as "Desert House of Lydia" adopted a resolution stating that Mrs. Kelly had loaned the corporation $9500 and ratifying the act of its secretary in executing a note for that amount; that the note referred to is dated December 1, 1953, is in favor of Mrs. Kelly and/or her estate, and provides for payment in ten years with interest at 4%; that Mrs. Kelly was never consulted about and never agreed to the terms of the note; that this note represents the $10,000 advanced by Mrs. Kelly on October 28, less the cost of incorporation; that the note was sent by mail to the former executor, who declined to accept it and returned it; that at the taking of the depositions four other checks issued by Mrs. Kelly were produced, totalling $8,054.73, payable to House of Lydia or to Fabiano; and that no consideration for those checks ever passed from any of the defendants to Kelly.

At the time of the hearing three other affidavits were filed by the defendants, which merely add to the conflict, with denials and contrary allegations with respect to a number of disputed matters. The court granted the motion for summary judgment and entered a judgment in favor of the defendants, from which the plaintiff has appealed.

The appellant contends, among other things, that issues of fact were presented which could not be tried by the court in ruling upon a motion for a summary judgment. The respondents contend that no triable issue of fact is disclosed by the record; that it appears without contradiction "that plaintiff and defendants were partners"; and that since a partnership relation existed only an action for dissolution and accounting would lie.

[1,2] On a motion for summary judgment under Section 437c, the duty of the court is to determine whether a triable issue is presented, and not to determine the issue itself. The remedy must be used with caution and any doubt must be resolved against the applicant. The affidavits of the moving party should be strictly construed, while those of his opponent should be liberally construed and the facts alleged therein must be accepted as true and need not be composed wholly of evidentiary facts. Eagle Oil Refining Co. v. Prentice, 19 Cal.2d 553, 122 P.2d 264; Travelers Indemnity Co. v. McIntosh, 112 Cal.App.2d 177, 245 P.2d 1065; Werner v. Sargeant, 121 Cal.App.2d 833, 264 P.2d 217.

[3] The complaint alleged that Fabiano and Bonaccorsi were partners in a certain business, that the defendants became indebted to Mrs. Kelly, and that this debt had not been paid. The answer of Bonaccorsi admitted that he is a partner in this business but denied that Fabiano is or was such a partner, while the answer of Fabiano admitted that she was a partner in this business but denied that Bonaccorsi is or was such a partner. Both answers denied that the defendants became indebted to Mrs. Kelly, and also denied that that debt had not been paid. The Fabiano answer further alleged that Mrs. Kelly and Fabiano were copartners in operating a business known as "House of Lydia", and that the partnership agreement provided that no suit could be filed until an arbitration was had. These new allegations were deemed denied. Sec. 462, Code Civ.Proc. Not only were issues of fact thus presented by the pleadings, but there were a large number of such issues raised by the affidavits filed. Among other things, triable issues of fact were thereby presented as to whether or not any partnership ever existed; whether or not Mrs. Kelly was a member of any such partnership; whether or not such a partnership was abandoned, or in any event terminated by her death; whether the $10,000 admittedly received by the defendants was a loan; whether that money was obtained by fraud and deceit; whether or not Mrs.

Kelly had the mental capacity to enter into any such a contract; whether or not any of the monies sued for were received for the use of a partnership of which each of the individual defendants denied that the other was a member; and whether the allegation with respect to a partnership agreement was a valid defense to the claim for over $18,000, or in any event applicable only to the $10,000 mentioned in the written agreement relied on by the defendants which was admittedly not signed by one party until after Mrs. Kelly's death. It clearly appears that many issues of fact were presented which could not properly be determined on such a motion.

The judgment is reversed.

GRIFFIN and MUSSELL, JJ., concur.

137 Cal.App.2d 584

Rex BIRCH, Plaintiff and Appellant,

v.

William J. MAHANEY and Irene R. Mahaney, Defendants and Respondents.

Civ. 16218.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 1, California.

Dec. 8, 1955.

Action against owners and operators of a restaurant for injuries alleged to have been sustained by plaintiff in the restaurant by reason of negligence of a waitress. The jury returned a verdict for plaintiff in the sum of $5,000. The Superior Court, San Mateo County, Murray Draper, J., granted defendant's motion for new trial upon ground of insufficiency of evidence to support the verdict, and the plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Peters, P. J., held that where evidence on the vital issue of negligence was conflicting, trial court's order granting new trial on ground of insufficiency of evidence should be affirmed.

Order affirmed.

1. Appeal and Error ⇨901

Where trial court has specified insufficiency of evidence as basis for granting a new trial, to secure a reversal, the burden on the appellant is a heavy one.

2. Appeal and Error ⇨1015(3)

In passing upon a motion for new trial based upon alleged insufficiency of evidence, it is exclusive province of trial court to judge credibility of witnesses, determine probative force of testimony, and weigh the evidence.

3. New Trial ⇨70

The trial court, in considering sufficiency of evidence on motion for new trial based on alleged insufficiency of evidence, to sustain verdict, may draw inferences opposed to those drawn at trial, and, where only conflicts consist of inferences deduced from uncontradicted probative facts, court may resolve such conflicts in determining whether case should be retried.

4. Appeal and Error ⇨1015(1)

An appellate court will reverse trial court's order granting a new trial for insufficiency of evidence to sustain verdict only where it can be said as matter of law that there is no substantial evidence to afford a contrary judgment.

5. Appeal and Error ⇨1015(2)

In action against restaurant owners for injuries claimed to have been sustained by plaintiff while a patron by reason of alleged negligence of waitress, where evidence was conflicting on vital issue of negligence, trial court's order granting a new trial on ground of insufficiency of evidence was affirmed.

6. Appeal and Error ⇨854(6)

A general order granting new trial will be affirmed if it can be sustained on any ground.

7. Appeal and Error ⇨933(4)

Where there was a valid ground upon which trial court could have acted in granting new trial, District Court of Appeal would conclusively presume that trial court acted on that ground.

8. Appeal and Error ⇨706(3)

Where argument on motion for new trial was not transcribed and was not before appellate court, appellate court, on appeal from order granting new trial, could not determine what the trial court said, if anything.

9. Appeal and Error ⇨717

Remarks made by trial judge during trial or argument, or even an opinion filed by him, cannot be used to impeach a formal decision, order or judgment later made or entered.

10. Appeal and Error ⇨717

Though trial judge's opinion will aid appellate court in ascertaining the process by which a judgment has been reached, the opinion will not be considered on appeal from order granting new trial in determining whether verdict of jury or findings of court are supported by evidence.

11. Appeal and Error ⇨854(1)

A trial judge's order concludes the case and cannot be impeached by judge's opinion, and the question that concerns reviewing court is whether final decision, judgment or order is correct and not whether reasons expressed in the opinion are in harmony with the result reached or whether they sustain the decision.

Albert Picard, San Francisco, for appellant.

Boyd & Taylor, San Francisco, for respondents.

PETERS, Presiding Justice.

Plaintiff brought this action against the owners and operators of a restaurant, claiming to have been injured therein by reason of the negligence of a waitress. Defendants denied the major allegations of the complaint, and pleaded contributory negligence as an affirmative defense. The cause proceeded to trial before a jury. The jury brought in a verdict for the plaintiff in the sum of $5,000. The defendants moved for a new trial on practically all of the statutory grounds. The trial court granted the motion "upon the insufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict." Plaintiff appeals.

[1-4] Where the trial court has specified insufficiency of the evidence as the basis for granting a new trial, to secure a reversal, the burden on the appellant is a heavy one, indeed. In Brooks v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 27 Cal.2d 305, 307, 163 P.2d 689, 690, the Supreme Court described this burden as follows: "In passing upon a motion for a new trial based upon the insufficiency of the evidence, it is the exclusive province of the trial court to judge the credibility of the witnesses, determine the probative force of testimony, and weigh the evidence. [Citation.] In considering the sufficiency of the evidence upon such motion the court may draw inferences opposed to those drawn at the trial [Citation], and where the only conflicts consist of inferences deduced from uncontradicted probative facts, the court may resolve such conflicts in determining whether the case should be retried. [Citation.] It is only where it can be said as a matter of law that there is no substantial evidence to support a contrary judgment that an appellate court will reverse the order of the trial court." See also Ballard v. Pacific Greyhound Lines, 28 Cal.2d 357, 170 P.2d 465; Green v. Soule, 145 Cal. 96, 78 P. 337; Grover v. Sharp & Fellows etc. Co., 66 Cal.App.2d 736, 153 P.2d 83.

The facts of the present case indicate that the trial court acted within its powers in granting the motion.

On January 23, 1952, plaintiff, the manager of a life insurance agency, attended a sales meeting of the insurance company at The Chukker, a restaurant operated by defendants. Around noon the meeting adjourned to enable the restaurant employees to set the tables for lunch. Plaintiff testified that he joined a group of six or seven people near the end of the bar who were talking shop, and stood near the wall in the back of the group about seven feet from the bar. This left an open passageway between where he was standing and the bar. The next thing plaintiff remembers is holding his head and feeling dizzy. This testimony was corroborated by two witnesses, who also testified that they saw a waitress strike the plaintiff in the back of the head at the base of his skull with a tray while plaintiff was standing straight up near the wall, and away from the bar.

The testimony as to the circumstances of the accident was sharply contradicted by the waitress involved. She testified that she was bringing a plastic tray 36 inches in diameter loaded with food,¹ from the kitchen to the cocktail lounge, carrying it with her left hand; that as she approached the bar the passageway was so crowded that she was forced to stop; that she then said: "Coming through please, hot";² that while she was stopped the plaintiff, who was leaning over the bar, suddenly straightened up and his head struck the tray; that she did not see plaintiff before the accident.

[5] It is quite apparent that plaintiff's evidence is ample to support the implied finding of the jury that the waitress was negligent and that such negligence was the proximate cause of the accident. But it is equally clear that the testimony of the waitress directly contradicts that of plaintiff and his witnesses. If the accident happened as the waitress said it did, the jury could have found that she was not negligent, or, even if she were, that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence. The evidence being conflicting on the vital issue of negligence, the trial court's order granting a new trial on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence, under the rules already stated, must be affirmed.

[6,7] Appellant seeks to evade the application of this rule by the contention that, although the order granting the new trial specified insufficiency of the evidence, on the argument on the motion for a new trial, the trial judge stated that in his

1. Plaintiff testified that the tray contained only empty dishes.

2. Two of plaintiff's witnesses testified that they did not hear the waitress say anything.

opinion the only question upon which he had any doubt was whether the medical evidence produced by plaintiff showed a causal connection between the blow and the claimed injuries. The appellant devotes the major portion of his brief to demonstrating that the uncontradicted medical evidence shows such a causal connection and contends that, in view of the remarks by the trial judge, the correctness of this conclusion is the only question now before this court. We agree with appellant that Dr. Parisi testified, without contradiction and without ambiguity, that the claimed injuries were caused by the blow. It is not necessary to review that testimony, however,³ because we are not limited on this appeal to the question urged by appellant. It is a well-settled rule that a general order granting a new trial will be affirmed if it can be sustained on any ground. Mazzotta v. Los Angeles Ry. Corp., 25 Cal.2d 165, 153 P.2d 338; Ballard v. Pacific Greyhound Lines, 28 Cal.2d 357, 170 P.2d 465; Stone v. Los Angeles County Flood Control Dist., 81 Cal.App.2d 902, 185 P.2d 396; Smith v. Royer, 181 Cal. 165, 183 P. 660. Here there was a valid ground upon which the court could have acted, and we must conclusively presume that the court acted on that ground.

[8] Moreover, appellant is in no legal position to urge the point under discussion. Apparently the argument on the motion for a new trial was not transcribed. At any rate, it is not before us. Therefore, there is no way we can determine what the trial court said, if anything, at this time.

[9-11] Another complete answer to this argument is that, even if the trial judge did make the statement in question, and even if there were a proper record so showing, such fact would not permit us to reverse the challenged ruling. It is settled law that the remarks made by a trial judge during a trial or argument, or even an opinion filed by him, cannot be used to impeach a formal decision, order or judgment later made or entered. This well-settled rule was stated as follows in Diaz v. Schultz, 81 Cal.App.2d 328, 332, 183 P.2d 717, 719, quoting from People v. Driggs, 111 Cal.App. 42, 44, 295 P. 51: “* * * it is what the court did, and not what the judge of the court stated during the course of the trial, that determines the course of our inquiry upon this appeal, as there is a vital distinction between what the judge of a trial court may say and what the trial court actually does. In other words, it is the legitimate privilege of a trial court, at the conclusion of an argument upon motion for new trial, to state his views concerning the case, and then, upon fuller and maturer deliberation, come to the conclusion that a different order should be made, and then to enter the same. When the cause is brought to an appellate court, argument as to what the trial court may have thought, as given utterance by the words used before final action is taken, cannot be considered, unless directly in line with the subsequent orders made.” In other words, the deliberations of the courts are conclusively merged in their final orders, decisions and judgments, and oral opinions or statements of the courts may not be considered to reverse or impeach such orders, decisions or judgments. As was said in Stone v. Los Angeles County Flood Control Dist., 81 Cal.App.2d 902, 907, 185 P.2d 396, 399: “While an opinion of the judge of the trial court will aid the appellate court in ascertaining the process by which a judgment has been reached it will not be considered in determining whether or not the verdict of the jury or the findings of the court are supported by the evidence. [Citations.] The order when made by the court concludes the case and it cannot be impeached by the judge’s opinion. The

3. Nor need we consider respondents’ contention that the new trial could have been granted on the theory that the evidence as to the amount of damage does not sustain the $5,000 verdict. We agree with appellant that the uncontradicted evidence shows serious damage proxi-mately caused by the blow, and that that same evidence would support the finding as to the amount of the damages. But, for reasons already stated, those issues are not before us in view of the conflict in the evidence on the issue of negligence.

question that concerns the reviewing court is whether or not the final decision, judgment or order is correct and not whether the reasons expressed in the opinion are in harmony with the result reached or whether they sustain the decision. [Citation.]" See also Williams v. Kinsey, 74 Cal.App.2d 583, 169 P.2d 487; DeCou v. Howell, 190 Cal. 741, 214 P. 444; People v. Jefferson, 84 Cal.App.2d 709, 191 P.2d 487; Koon v. Sher, 98 Cal.App.2d 530, 220 P.2d 784.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

BRAY and FRED B. WOOD, JJ., concur.

137 Cal.App.2d 468

Chester WALLACE, doing business under the firm name and style of Wallace Roofing Co., Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

CARPENTERS LOCAL UNION NO. 1040 OF THE UNITED BROTHERHOOD OF CARPENTERS AND JOINERS OF AMERICA; and North Coast Counties District Council of Carpenters, Defendants and Appellants.

Roofers, Damp and Waterproof Workers Local Union No. 240 of the United State, Tile and Composition Workers Association, Defendant and Respondent.

Civ. 8007.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Dec. 2, 1955.

Rehearing Denied Dec. 28, 1955.

Employer's action to enjoin labor unions from engaging in work stoppage by reason of jurisdictional dispute. The Superior Court, Humboldt County, Delos A. Mace, J., entered order granting temporary injunction, and one of unions appealed. Same union also renewed its earlier motion for order directing Superior Court to dismiss action. The District Court of Appeal, Peek, J., held that where such union's only contention was that trial court lacked jurisdiction because of failure of employer to exhaust his remedies by submission of dispute to arbitration pursuant to plan binding both employer and unions, issuance of temporary injunction was not abuse of discretion.

Order affirmed and motion denied.

1. Labor Relations ⇐844

State policy outlawing jurisdictional coercive activity in maintenance of peaceful industrial relations justifies injunctive as well as legal relief. West's Ann.Labor Code, §§ 1115-1120, 1115, 1116, 1118.

2. Appeal and Error ⇐954(1) Injunction ⇐135

Whether preliminary injunction should be granted rests largely in discretion of trial court, whose order will not be reversed on appeal unless there is manifest abuse of discretion.

3. Labor Relations ⇐368

In employer's action to enjoin labor unions from engaging in work stoppage by reason of jurisdictional dispute, wherein one of unions contended only that trial court lacked jurisdiction because of failure of employer to exhaust his remedy by submission of dispute to arbitration pursuant to plan binding both employer and unions, issuance of temporary injunction was no abuse of discretion. West's Ann.Labor Code, §§ 1115-1120, 1115, 1116, 1118.

4. Appeal and Error ⇐1175(7)

Where there was no motion to dismiss appeal in labor dispute and District Court of Appeal was asked only to dismiss action and dissolve injunction, function of appellate court was only to decide appeal or dismiss it, and it would not dismiss action or dissolve injunction under circumstances.

Todd & Todd, San Francisco, for defendants-appellants.

Falk & Falk, Eureka, for plaintiff-respondent Chester Wallace.

P. H. McCarthy, Jr., F. Nason O'Hara, Herbert S. Johnson, San Francisco, for cross-complainant and respondents.

PEEK, Justice.

This is an appeal from an order granting a temporary injunction which enjoined the defendants, Carpenters Local Union No. 1040 and North Coast Counties District Council of Carpenters of the United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America, hereinafter referred to as "Carpenters", from threatening or engaging in work stoppages and from advertising or publishing that plaintiff does not employ members of unions affiliated with the A. F. of L., and ordering that any jurisdictional disputes between the Carpenters and Roofers, Damp and Waterproof Workers Local Union No. 240 of the United Slate Tile and Composition Roofers Damp and Waterproof Workers Association, hereinafter referred to as "Roofers", be submitted for settlement by the party claiming to be aggrieved under the provisions of a certain agreement entitled "Plan for National Joint Board for Settlement of Jurisdictional Disputes" of the Building and Construction Trades Department of the A. F. of L., the Associated General Contractors of America and participating employer associations.

The record shows that Wallace, doing business under the name of Wallace Roofing Co., had agreed to be bound by said plan. He had contracted both with the Carpenters and the Roofers, the former contract antedating the latter. Both unions are craft unions affiliated with the A. F. of L., and as such are bound by the plan for settlement of jurisdictional disputes. Wallace entered into a subcontract to perform roofing work at a school in Arcata. The Carpenters demanded that he use them rather than roofers upon such work, and upon his refusal the Carpenters pulled the men employed by the general contractor from the work. Similar instances occurred thereafter. Plaintiff's attorney subsequently wired the chairman of the Joint Board, informing him of the situation and shortly thereafter received a copy of a telegram purported to have been sent by the chairman to the general vice president of the Carpenters, wherein the vice president was directed to remove that union's picket line, to return their men to work and to process any work complaints in accordance with Joint Board procedures. The Carpenters continued their refusal to work for any general contractor who had contracted with Wallace for roofing, and this proceeding followed. Because the Roofers Union refused to join as plaintiff, it was named as a defendant. Thereafter the business agent of the Carpenters filed a like proceeding wherein he, as representative of the Carpenters, sought to specifically enforce the collective bargaining agreement between the Carpenters and plaintiff. Thereafter a complaint in intervention was filed on behalf of the Roofers, seeking similar relief for that union. The actions were consolidated for the purpose of determining whether or not an injunction should issue. Following their appeal to this court, the Carpenters moved this court for an order directing the trial court to dismiss the action and dissolve the injunction. No motion to dismiss the appeal was made, and it was announced at the time of oral argument that no dismissal was desired. We concluded that the function of this court was either to decide the appeal or to dismiss it, but not to dismiss the action or dissolve the injunction. Wallace v. Carpenters Local Union No. 1040, 133 Cal.App. 2d 321, 284 P.2d 102. Subsequent to the filing of that opinion, the Carpenters again filed a notice of motion for an order of this court directing the superior court to dismiss the action. The second motion was calendared for and heard at the same time as the appeal on the merits.

It is the Carpenters' first contention that the trial court lacks jurisdiction because of the failure of plaintiff to exhaust his remedies by submission of the dispute to arbitration as provided in the plan previously referred to. Such contention by the Carpenters completely ignores the California Jurisdictional Strike Act. St.1947, ch. 1388, adding sections 1115-1120 to the Labor Code. By the provisions of that Act, jurisdictional strikes as therein defined are declared to be against public policy of this state and unlawful. Section 1115. Any person injured or threatened with injury from a violation of the Act is entitled to injunctive relief. Section 1116. Section 1118 defines a jurisdictional strike as being the concerted cessation of work or any other concerted interference with an employer's operation and business, and expressly includes disputes arising out of work assignments involving conflicting claims of two unions for jurisdiction over a particular type of work.

injunction." Wallace v. Carpenters Local Union No. 1040, supra, 133 Cal.App.2d at page 322, 284 P.2d 102.

The order is affirmed, and the motion is denied.

VAN DYKE, P. J., and SCHOTTKY, J., concur.

[1-3] No question is raised, nor do the Carpenters challenge the finding that a jurisdictional question exists between them and the Roofers as to which union has the exclusive right to work assignments by Wallace. The Carpenters content themselves with the contention that merely by reason of the existence of the plan for settlement of disputes, the court lacked jurisdiction to issue the injunction. No argument is made nor authority cited as to why the Jurisdictional Strike Act and the cases interpreting the same are not wholly controlling in this case. "The state policy of outlawing jurisdictional coercive activity in the maintenance of peaceful industrial relations justifies the injunctive as well as legal relief." Sommer v. Metal Trades Council, 40 Cal.2d 392, 401, 254 P.2d 559, 565. Furthermore, "[w]hether a preliminary injunction shall be granted rests largely in the discretion of the trial court and will not be reversed on appeal unless there is a manifest abuse of discretion." Isthmian S.S. Co. v. National Marine Beneficial Ass'n, 40 Cal.2d 433, 435, 254 P.2d 578, 579. In the absence of any showing by the Carpenters except as noted, it cannot be said that the trial court abused its discretion in the issuance of the injunction they now attack.

[4] Turning to the Carpenters' motion for an order directing the trial court to dismiss the action and dissolve the injunction, it appears that since nothing to the contrary has been shown, we must conclude as we did on the previous motion that " * * the function and the jurisdiction of this court in the present state of the record is either to decide the appeal or dismiss it, but not to dismiss the action or dissolve the

137 Cal.App.2d 648

Joe R. RAMOS, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Betty J. CYPHER, as Administratrix of the Estate of C. L. Cypher, Deceased, Peerless Casualty Company, a corporation, and City of Vacaville, a municipal corporation, Defendants, Betty J. Cypher, as Administratrix of the Estate of C. L. Cypher, Deceased, Appellant.

Civ. 8718.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Dec. 8, 1955.

Declaratory judgment action, in which the administratrix of an estate was a defendant. The administratrix moved for change of venue to county in which her decedent's estate was being probated. The Superior Court, Solano County, Harlow V. Greenwood, J., denied the motion, and the administratrix appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Van Dyke, P. J., held that where person had contract with deceased for latter to construct certain street improvements on person's land, and city completed contract upon deceased's failure to do so, and claimed reimbursement from person, and person filed contingent claim against deceased's estate, and filed declaratory judgment action to determine rights and duties of parties, action was not against administratrix in her official capacity on a claim for payment of money; and administratrix could not obtain a change of venue to county in which estate was being probated.

Order affirmed.

1. Executors and Administrators ⚡436

An action for declaratory judgment is not a suit against an administrator in his official capacity on a claim for payment of money, under statute prescribing that the venue of such an action against an administrator lies in the county which has jurisdiction of the estate. West's Ann. Code Civ.Proc. § 395.1.

2. Executors and Administrators ⚡436

Where person had contract with deceased for latter to construct certain street improvements on person's land, and city completed contract upon deceased's failure to do so, and claimed reimbursement from person, and person filed contingent claim against deceased's estate, and filed declaratory judgment action to determine rights and duties of parties, action was not against administratrix in her official capacity on claim for payment of money, and administratrix could not obtain change of venue to county in which estate was being probated. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 395.1.

King & Ghidella, Napa, for Peerless Casualty Co., and Betty J. Cypher.

Leo C. Dunnell, William H. Herbert, & Adey May Dunnell, Fairfield, for plaintiff-respondent Joe R. Ramos.

Sinclair M. Dobbins & Walter W. Weir, Jr., Vacaville, for City of Vacaville.

VAN DYKE, Presiding Justice.

Plaintiff, Joe R. Ramos, brought this action against the above named defendants asking for a declaration of his rights and duties and a determination of his obligations arising out of a series of transactions with C. L. Cypher, during his lifetime, his administratrix after his death, Peerless Casualty Company, and the City of Vacaville. The administratrix moved that the place of trial be changed to the County of Napa, in which county the estate of her decedent was being probated, claiming that she was entitled to such order by virtue of the provisions of Section 395.1 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Her motion was denied, and from the order of denial she appeals.

The complaint sets forth the following matters: During the lifetime of Cypher, plaintiff contracted with him to construct certain street improvements in a subdivision owned by plaintiff and located in the City of Vacaville, County of Solano. Cypher failed to do the work in accordance with the ordinance requirements of the city and the city refused to accept the streets as so improved. Thereafter it was agreed between Cypher and the city that the city would conditionally approve and accept the streets, provided that Cypher would undertake a program of repair and completion estimated to cost $6,000, and secure his performance thereof by a surety bond. Ramos agreed that if Cypher would enter into that undertaking he would release to him the moneys he had been holding back under the contract between himself and Cypher. Peerless Casualty Company bonded Cypher in the sum of $6,000 to perform the rectifying work, naming Ramos as obligee. However, Cypher did not perform the work. Thereupon the city performed it at a cost of over $8,000 and claimed a right to recover that sum from Ramos. Ramos had demanded, before the city performed the work, that the administratrix of the estate of Cypher perform the work of rectification which Cypher was bound to do and the administratrix refused. Ramos demanded the penalty of the bond of the bonding company and the company refused, claiming it was not liable. Ramos filed a claim contingent in character against the estate of Cypher for the amount which the city claimed a right to recover against him or for such portion of that sum for which Ramos might be held to be responsible by reason of the failure of Cypher to comply with the terms and conditions of the agreement for the rectification of the street work. By this action Ramos sought to have the rights and obligations of the parties determined.

Section 395.1 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides:

"When a defendant is sued in his official capacity as executor, administrator, guardian or trustee, on a claim for the payment of money or for the recovery of personal property, the county which has jurisdiction of the estate which he represents shall be the proper county for the trial of the action."

At the outset it is necessary, in order that appellant prevail, that this be a suit on a claim for the payment of money of the estate or for the recovery of personal property therefrom. Admittedly it is not a suit for the recovery of personal property. Appellant contends that it is a suit based on a claim for the payment of money. But we think that this action is what it purports to be, a suit for declaratory relief and that any ultimate recovery that may be ordered against the estate, if it be determined that there is liability of the estate to the plaintiff in the action, is incidental only to the prime purpose of the action, which is to obtain a declaratory judgment.

[1] As indicating the wide variance between a suit for declaratory judgment and a suit "on a claim for the payment of money", the following may be considered: It was held in Coruccini v. Lambert, 113 Cal.App.2d 486, 248 P.2d 457, that where a plaintiff may be entitled to declaratory relief, even though the judgment may be unfavorable to him, the court should not dispose of the case on demurrer. It was also held in C. Dudley De Velbiss Co. v. Kraitz, 101 Cal.App.2d 612, 225 P.2d 969, that where the complaint alleges an existing actual controversy, the court should not sustain a demurrer thereto and dismiss the action, since it is not essential to entitle plaintiff to seek declaratory relief that he should establish his right to a favorable declaration, and that, even where the plaintiff is not entitled to a favorable declaration, yet the court should render judgment and should not merely dismiss the action. It was held in Moss v. Moss, 20 Cal.2d 640, 642, 128 P.2d 526, 141 A.L.R. 1422, that declaratory relief may be refused even where a cause of action for such relief is stated under the statute if it appears to the trial court, in the exercise of its discretion, that such determination is not necessary or proper at the time and under all the circumstances. The statute itself declares that the plaintiff in an action for a declaration of rights may ask such declaration either alone or with other relief and that the court may make a binding declaration of such rights or duties whether or not further relief is or could be claimed at the time. Indeed, a suit for declaratory relief may, by express provision of statute, be brought when no cause of action exists in the usual sense of that phrase. Enough has been said, we think, to indicate the wide difference between a proper petition for declaratory relief and an ordinary action for the payment of money.

[2] Returning to the complaint in the present case it is to be noted that neither in the claim which petitioner says he filed against the estate being administered by the appellant nor in his pleading for declaratory relief herein, does he affirmatively allege that he has any claim against the estate. It may turn out that for one reason or another the city has no valid claim for reimbursement against the petitioner. In that event petitioner admits he has no claim for recoupment from the estate. We are satisfied that this is a typical suit for declaratory relief and is not a suit against the administratrix in her official capacity on a claim for the payment of money from the funds in her hands as such. Therefore, the order of the trial court denying her petition for change of venue was correct.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

SCHOTTKY and PEEK, JJ., concur.

137 Cal.App.2d 570

Michael BROUSSEAU by Donat Brousseau, his guardian ad litem, and Donat Brousseau, Plaintiffs and Appellants,

v.

CARNATION CO., a corporation, and Ray Ohman,
Defendants and Respondents.

Civ. 8579.

District Court of Appeal. Third District,
California.

Dec. 6, 1955.

Action against driver of truck to which was attached a trailer from which cups of ice cream were thrown to people along parade route and against driver's employer for injuries sustained by minor child when run over by trailer. The Superior Court, Sacramento County, Malcolm Glenn, J., entered a judgment of dismissal upon defendant's motion for a nonsuit, and plaintiffs appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Peek, J., held that the evidence was sufficient to take case to jury on question of whether defendant driver was negligent in failing to exercise the degree of care commensurate with the danger to be avoided.

Judgment reversed.

1. Trial ⇨139(1)

A nonsuit may be granted only when giving to plaintiff's evidence all the value to which it is legally entitled, indulging in every legitimate inference which may be drawn from such evidence favorable to plaintiff's case, and disregarding conflicting evidence, there is no evidence of sufficient substantiality to support a verdict for plaintiff.

2. Automobiles ⇨162(1)

The presence of children is in itself a warning to driver of motor vehicle requiring the exercise of care for their safety.

3. Automobiles ⇨162(2)

If driver of motor vehicle had knowledge of presence of children, he may be held responsible for injury to child, though he did not see injured child in time to prevent injury.

4. Negligence ⇨10

If the realizable likelihood that third person may act in a particular manner is the hazard or one of the hazards which makes actor negligent, such an act whether innocent, negligent, intentionally tortious or criminal does not prevent actor from being liable for harm caused thereby.

5. Automobiles ⇨245(8)

In action against driver of truck to which was attached a trailer from which cups of ice cream were thrown to people along parade route and against driver's employer for injury sustained by minor child when run over by trailer, evidence was sufficient to take case to jury on question of whether driver of truck, knowing that small children were in the street, was negligent in failing to exercise the degree of care commensurate with the danger to be avoided, regardless of whether injured boy fell or was pushed by other children into street, since possibility of being pushed into street was not too remote to constitute one of the hazards connected with defendants' activity.

Anthony J. Scalora, Sacramento, for appellant.

Johnson, Davies & Greve, Sacramento, for respondent.

PEEK, Justice.

This is an appeal by plaintiffs from a judgment of dismissal entered in favor of defendants upon their motion for a nonsuit.

[1] Summarizing the evidence in light of the well-established rule that, "* * * a nonsuit may be granted only when, disregarding conflicting evidence, giving to plaintiff's evidence all the value to which it is legally entitled and indulging in every legitimate inference which may be drawn from that evidence favorable to plaintiff's case, the result is a determination that there is no evidence of sufficient substantiality to support a verdict in favor of the plaintiff." Dunn v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co., 43 Cal.2d 265, 268, 272 P.2d 745, 746, Hilyar v. Union Ice Co., 45 Cal.2d 30, 286 P.2d 21, it appears that defendant Ohman was employed by the defendant Carnation Company as a driver-salesman; that pursuant to instructions from the company's Sacramento branch manager, he drove a small panel truck to which was attached a flat two-wheel trailer in a Fourth of July parade; that on the trailer was an ice cream cabinet containing small paper cups of ice cream which were thrown out to people along the route of the parade by two girls employed by defendant company; that defendant Ohman saw numerous children along the parade route; that there were some ice cream cups which fell into the street; that he couldn't watch all of the time; that he observed people picking up the cups from where they had landed; that when the cups were thrown out Ohman observed that more than a normal amount of excitement was created among the children; that he could see to the rear through two eight-by-eight-inch windows in the rear of the truck; that at the time of the accident the truck and trailer were slightly to the right of the center of the street and moving at a speed of from two to four miles per hour. At the point near where the accident occurred Ohman had been compelled to stop because of a halt in the parade. There were automobiles parked along the street and people standing in the street and along the curb. Defendant had driven approximately 20 feet from his halted position when the accident occurred. He did not see the accident and was aware of it only when a bystander told him that a boy had been pushed or had fallen under the trailer. The injured boy was standing with his parents and two younger brothers in the front line of a crowd, including a large number of children. When a cup landed in the street approximately eight feet or so in the street from him, plaintiff Michael Brousseau saw the cup and ran for it, as did numerous other children. As he did so, he was pushed or fell down, and the left wheel of the trailer ran over the right side of his body. Analyzing this evidence in light of the rule approved in the Dunn and Hilyar cases previously mentioned, it is apparent that Ohman was aware that the young women in throwing out the ice cream cups caused great excitement among the children along the parade route; that some of the cups fell in the street; that he paid no attention to what was happening from the time he started his truck until the accident occurred; that he looked to neither side nor through the back windows; that it could well be inferred by the jury that the young ladies' throwing was not as exact as it might have been, and that it could also be inferred that Ohman did not see the Brousseau child because he was not exercising the degree of care commensurate with the danger to be avoided, knowing that small children were in the street along the route of the parade and knowing that the actions of children under such circumstances would be highly unpredictable.

[2, 3] "The presence of children is in itself a warning requiring the exercise of care for their safety. [Citation.] Moreover if the evidence shows that a driver has knowledge of the presence of children he may be held to have been responsible although it appears that he did not see the injured child in time to prevent the injury." Conroy v. Perez, 64 Cal.App.2d 217, 224, 148 P.2d 680, 684 [quoted with approval in the recent Hilyar case].) It would therefore appear that the jury might well have concluded that Ohman's conduct was not of that degree of care required of one under such circumstances.

[4, 5] Defendants however contend that Ohman could not have been guilty of negligence since he had a right to assume that the young women would throw the cups as instructed; and that since the truck itself had passed Michael before he ran into the street and the mishap occurred by his being pushed by someone else into the rear wheel some 15 feet behind the driver, it cannot be said that he was negligent in any way. However, the court held in Richardson v. Ham, 44 Cal.2d 772, 777, 285 P.2d 269, 272, "If the realizable likelihood that a third person may act in a particular manner is the hazard or one of the hazards which makes the actor negligent, such an act whether innocent, negligent, intentionally tortious or criminal does not prevent the actor from being liable for harm caused thereby.'” Here, the possibility of other children pushing the injured boy into the street as he ran for the ice cream cup was not so remote as not to constitute one of the hazards connected with defendants’ activity. Hence under the circumstances the question of Ohman’s negligence was one of fact for the jury.

The judgment is reversed.

VAN DYKE, P. J., and SCHOTTKY, J., concur.

137 Cal.App.2d 445

Carl WHITSON and Maude Whitson,
Plaintiffs and Appellants,

v.

Hector GOUDESEUNE and Mrs. Hector Goudeseune, Defendants and Respondents.

Civ. 20875.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 2, California.

Dec. 2, 1955.

Action for judgment that defendants as owners of lot 3 in a certain tract did not have a right of way easement along the rear of certain lots owned by plaintiffs, and for apportionment of expenses of maintaining easement. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Paul Nourse, J., refused relief and the plaintiffs appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Fox, J., held that an easement grant “to each and every other party hereto and to the present owners of said lot 3 and their and each of their successors in ownership of said lots or portions of lots” was a sufficient designation or description to identify the grantees and that the court had properly refused apportionment of maintenance expense where not all parties who were served by the easement were parties to the action.

Affirmed.

1. Easements ⇨12(2)

In easement deed “for the purpose of creating and establishing an easement for driveway purposes with right of ingress and egress over and across the strip of land here and after described for the common benefit of all the lots or portions above referred to and lot 3 of tract No. 13567”, language, including “hereby grant * * * to each and every other party hereto and to the present owners of said lot 3 and their and each of their successors in the ownership of said lots or portions of lots an easement for the purposes aforesaid over such strip of land to the end that said easement shall be used and enjoyed in common by said owners and their successors” was adequate to convey easement and disclosed intent to make same appurtenant to lot 3.

2. Easements ⇨21

Where easement deed was adequate to convey easement and disclosed intent to make easement appurtenant to lot 3, deed entitled owners of such lot to use and enjoyment thereof and easement followed ownership of such lot “into whomsoever hands the same might come.”

3. Easements ⇨12(3), 21

Easement deed wherein grant was “to each and every other party hereto and present owners of said lot 3 and their and each of their successors in the ownership of said lots or portion of lots” was sufficient designation or description of grantees and created valid easement as to such owners and their successors. West’s Ann. Civ.Code, § 3538.

4. Declaratory Judgment ⇨388

Where all parties served by easement were not before court in action for declaratory judgment, statute providing that court may refuse to exercise power to grant declaratory relief in any case where declaration or determination is not necessary or proper at the time under all the circumstances supported action of trial judge in refusing to apportion cost of maintaining easement between those who were parties to the action. West’s Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 1061.

5. Declaratory Judgment $\Rightarrow$ 388

Where plaintiff had not applied to court for appointment of arbitrator in accordance with statute to apportion costs of easement maintenance and did not comply with other provisions of the statute he could not complain that court in his action for declaratory judgment refused to give him relief under such statute. West's Ann.Civ. Code, § 845.

Desmond & Desmond, Long Beach, for appellants.

Robert E. Krause, Long Beach, for respondents.

FOX, Justice.

By their amended complaint plaintiffs seek, inter alia, a declaration that defendants as the owners of Lot 3, Tract No. 13567, in the city of Long Beach, do not have a right of way easement along the rear of Lots 12 and 13 which are owned by plaintiffs. They also seek, in the event the easement is established, a determination of the proper proportion of the expense of maintaining it in good repair that should be borne by each of the parties.

The trial court found that a valid easement existed but declined to apportion the expenses of its upkeep. Plaintiffs appeal. We have concluded the decision of the trial court is correct on both aspects of the case.

Prior to 1949 there was an "easement for driveway purposes" running easterly from Loma Avenue along and over the rear portions of Lots 15, 14, 13 and 12. It also crossed Lot 3, where it ended. This easement had been used for years by Mrs. McQuestion who owned the latter lot. The easement, however, was only 10 feet wide. An easement five feet wider was desired. This extra width was proposed to be taken from Lots 1 and 2 lying to the north of the other lots. As a means of accomplishing this result, the owners of the old easement executed a deed to eliminate it. This instrument was signed by Mrs. McQuestion, who owned Lot 3, and the other owners. As a part of the same transaction the owners of Lots 1 and 2, and Lots 12 to 15, inclusive, executed an Easement Deed "for the purpose of creating and establishing an easement for driveway purposes with right of ingress and egress over and across the strip of land hereinafter described for the common benefit of all of the lots or portions above referred to and lot 3 of Tract No. 13567 * * *" and "hereby grant * * * to each and every other party hereto and to the present owners of said lot 3 and their and each of their successors in the ownership of said lots or portions of lots an easement for the purposes aforesaid over said strip of land to the end that said easement shall be used and enjoyed in common by said owners and their successors."

[1,2] It is clear, of course, that the language of the deed is adequate to convey an easement and discloses an intention to make the easement appurtenant to Lot 3, thus entitling the owner of this lot to the use and enjoyment thereof. Moots v. Kasten, 90 Cal.App.2d 734, 736, 203 P.2d 537. Since the easement is appurtenant to Lot 3 it follows the ownership of this lot "into whomsoever hands the same may come." Currier v. Howes, 103 Cal. 431, 436, 37 P. 521, 523.

[3] Plaintiffs contend that defendants do not have a valid easement because the owner of Lot 3 was not named in the easement deed. Their position, however, is not well founded. In Carlson v. Lindauer, 119 Cal.App.2d 292, 306, 259 P.2d 925, 932, the court stated, "It is not necessary that a grantee in a deed be mentioned by name. If the designation or description is sufficient to identify the person or persons intended, the deed is effectual." Schade v. Stewart, 205 Cal. 658, 272 P. 567. "That is certain which can be made certain." Civ. Code, sec. 3538. In the Carlson case the caption of the deed recited that it was between Union Oil Co., First Party, and "Lucy Lindauer hereinafter referred to as 'Owner', whether one or more, Second Party." Union then proceeded to release and quitclaim "unto owner, its heirs, successors and assigns, all of its right, title and interest in and to" certain described land. At the time Union executed this indenture Lucy Lindauer had passed on. It was held that "The designation of the grantee in the operative clause of the deed as 'Owner, its heirs, successors and assigns' was sufficient to pass title to the then owner of the estate in the surface, although Lucy was dead at the time." Schade v. Stewart, supra. The court further pointed out, 119 Cal.App.2d at page 308, 259 P.2d at page 933: "There is no doubt but that Union intended a conveyance, and that it had in mind some person or persons to whom title to the estate in the oil and gas should pass. * * * The deed conveyed the estate in the oil and gas to the then record owner of the estate in the surface." In the instant matter the deed granted an easement over the described property to the owners of Lot 3 and their successors. It is thus clear from the foregoing authorities that the deed in question conveyed an easement over the described property to the owners of Lot 3 and that defendants as the successors of such owners have the use and enjoyment thereof.

Plaintiffs rely on Osterberg v. Osterberg, 68 Cal.App.2d 254, 156 P.2d 46. That case is not inconsistent with our holding here. It simply says that a deed which does not contain the name of the grantee, i. e., the space for the designation of the grantee is blank, and there is "no sufficient identification of the party to whom the property is to be conveyed," is a nullity, 68 Cal.App.2d at page 264, 156 P.2d at page 51. Here there is "sufficient identification" of the persons to whom the easement is granted, viz., the owners of Lot 3 and their successors. The grant of the easement contained in the deed here in question is therefore effectual under the authorities previously cited.

[4] Plaintiffs' remaining complaint on appeal is that the trial court, having found that defendants held a valid easement over their property, should have apportioned the cost of maintaining the easement between the parties. The refusal to make the apportionment was based on the finding that "there are other parties served by the easement who are not before the court, particularly the owners of Lot 2, who are also served by said easement." This is obviously an adequate reason for the court's position, for all those who enjoy the use of the right of way should share in its maintenance. But, of course, those who were not before the court would not be bound by any such order or judgment. Consequently any effort to fix the amount of each users' assessment would be abortive. Section 1061, Code of Civil Procedure, supports the action of the trial judge. It provides that "The court may refuse to exercise the power granted by this chapter in any case where its declaration or determination is not * * * proper at the time under all the circumstances." The absence of parties necessary to enable the court to make a complete determination of their respective obligations, and thus completely resolve the controversy, constituted a reasonable basis for the trial court's refusal to make the requested apportionment.

[5] Plaintiffs point to Civil Code section 845, which provides that in the absence of an agreement the cost of maintaining such an easement should be shared proportionately to the use made of it by each owner. Plaintiffs have failed, however, to follow the procedure prescribed therein for apportionment of such costs. It is to the effect that any owner may apply to the superior court for the appointment of an impartial arbitrator to apportion these costs. If the arbitration award is not accepted by all the owners, the court may determine their proportionate liability. The section further provides that if any owner of an easement fails, after demand in writing, to pay his proportion of the expense, action may be brought against him for contribution. None of these provisions of section 845 were complied with. Plaintiffs, therefore, cannot complain that they were not granted relief under that section.

The judgment is affirmed.

MOORE, P. J., and ASHBURN, J. pro tem., concur.

137 Cal.App.2d 491

SAVANNA SCHOOL DISTRICT of ORANGE COUNTY, California, a body politic of the State of California, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Ethel McLEOD, Bernice Jolly, Vera Sparkes, Margaret R. Sullivan, Dorothy Dargatz, Dolores Myrick, and Lorraine Wade, Defendants and Appellants.

Civ. 5213.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Dec. 2, 1955.

Action by school district for declaratory relief and to quiet title to land. The Superior Court, Orange County, John Shea, J., rendered judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Mussell, J., held that where deed to school district provided that conveyance was for public school purposes only, and that land should revert to grantors upon failure of district to erect and maintain a public school building thereon, district's erection of buildings and use of them for school purposes for forty-five years constituted full performance of deed provision, and land did not revert upon abandonment of school.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Appeal and Error ⇨907(3)

On appeal on judgment roll, findings must receive such construction as will uphold rather than defeat judgment, and wherever, from facts found, other facts may be inferred which will support judgment, such inference will be deemed to have been made.

2. Appeal and Error ⇨544(2)

On appeal on judgment roll, reviewing court is limited to determination of whether judgment is supported by findings and whether error appears on face of record.

3. Deeds ⇨145, 153

A clause in deed imposing obligations or restrictions on grantee will be construed as a covenant rather than a condition subsequent when that can reasonably be done, and such condition and restriction must be interpreted in light of deed as a whole in order to ascertain intention of parties.

4. Estates ⇨7

A condition involving a forfeiture must be strictly interpreted against party for whose benefit it is created. West's Ann. Civ.Code, § 1442.

5. Deeds ⇨155

Estates ⇨7

"Conditions subsequent" are those which in terms operate upon an estate conveyed and render it liable to be defeated for breach of condition, and they are not favored in law and a deed provision will not be construed as a condition subsequent if language will bear any other reasonable construction.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Conditions Subsequent".

6. Schools and School Districts ⇨65

A grant of land to a school district with provision that title shall revert upon failure to maintain building for school purposes is to be interpreted in favor of district.

7. Schools and School Districts ⇨65

Where deed to school district provided that conveyance was for public school purposes only, and that land should revert to grantors upon failure of district to erect and maintain a public school building thereon, district's erection of buildings and use of them for school purposes for forty-five years constituted full performance of deed provision, and land did not revert upon abandonment of school.

Leroy P. Anderson, Costa Mesa, for appellants.

Joel E. Ogle, County Counsel, Orange County, George F. Holden and Stephen K. Tamura, Assts. County Counsel, Santa Ana, for respondent.

MUSSELL, Justice.

This is an action for declaratory relief and to quiet title to land in Orange county, deeded to plaintiff for school purposes. On July 25, 1904, W. J. Cole and Emma Cole, husband and wife, deeded the land involved to the respondent school district. The deed contained the following language:

"That the parties of the first part do hereby grant unto the said party of the second part, subject to the terms, conditions and agreements hereinafter contained, and solely for the uses and purposes hereinafter stated, that certain lot, piece or parcel of land situate in the County of Orange, State of California, and described as follows: (Here follows description of the property.)

"Said land is hereby conveyed to said party of the second part for public school purposes only, and it is expressly understood and agreed that as a consideration for this conveyance said party of the second part shall build and maintain a public school building on said land, and that the title and ownership of said land shall revert to said parties of the first part upon a failure by said party of the second part to erect and maintain a building thereon to be used exclusively for public school purposes."

After the execution of this deed the school district took possession of the property and erected a frame building thereon which it continuously used and maintained for school purposes until 1931. In that year the district removed the frame building and in its place constructed a brick building which it continuously used and maintained exclusively for school purposes from 1931 to 1949. During the year 1949 the brick building was found to be unsafe for school purposes and the district then abandoned it and acquired a new site upon which it now conducts its school. Since 1949 the brick building has not been used for school purposes.

In 1953 plaintiff commenced this action against appellants, each of whom claim a fractional interest in the property as descendants of the grantors and as distributees of the estate of W. J. Cole, one of the grantors. Appellants claim title to the property on the ground that the land reverted to them when the school district abandoned the school building in 1949 and ceased to use it for school purposes.

The trial court found the facts as stated and further found that plaintiff had performed all conditions to be performed by it as set forth in the grant deed; that the erection of a building on said property for public school purposes and the use of said building for said school purposes for a period of forty-five years constituted a full performance by plaintiff of all the terms and provisions of said deed; that plaintiff is now and for a period of forty-five years last past has been the owner of and in possession of the land involved; that the claims of defendants to said property are without any right whatsoever and that defendants have not, nor have any of them, any right, title or interest whatever in said land. Defendants appeal from the judgment decreeing that the school district is the owner of the property and that the defendants have no right, title or interest therein.

[1,2] This is an appeal on the judgment roll alone. Therefore, the findings are to receive such a construction as will uphold rather than defeat the judgment, and wherever, from the facts found, other facts may be inferred which will support the judgment, such inference will be deemed to have been made. Goldberg v. List, 11 Cal.2d 389, 394, 79 P.2d 1087, 116 A.L.R. 900. The findings should receive a liberal construction to uphold rather than to defeat the judgment and we are here limited to a determination of whether the judgment is supported by the findings and whether error appears upon the face of the record. Montaldo v. Hires Bottling Co., 59 Cal.App.2d 642, 646, 139 P.2d 666.

[3-6] A clause in a deed imposing obligations or restrictions on the grantee will be construed as a covenant rather than a condition subsequent when that can reasonably be done and such condition and restriction must be interpreted in the light of the deed as a whole in order to ascertain the intention of the parties. Rosecrans v. Pacific Elec. Ry. Co., 21 Cal.2d 602, 605-

606, 134 P.2d 245; Tamalpais Land & Water Co. v. Northwestern Pac. R. Co., 73 Cal.App.2d 917, 929, 167 P.2d 825. A condition involving a forfeiture must be strictly interpreted against the party for whose benefit it is created. Civ.Code, § 1442. Conditions subsequent are those which in terms operate upon an estate conveyed and render it liable to be defeated for the breach of the conditions. As is said in Gramer v. City of Sacramento, 2 Cal.2d 432, 437-438, 41 P.2d 543, 545:

"Such conditions are not favored in law because they tend to destroy estates, and no provision in a deed relied on to create a condition subsequent will be so interpreted, if the language of the provision will bear any other reasonable construction. * * * There must be language used which is so clear as to leave no doubt but that the grantor intended that an estate upon condition subsequent should be created—language which ex proprio vigore imports such a condition."

A grant of the character here involved is to be interpreted in favor of the grantee. Streicher v. Heimburge, 205 Cal. 675, 683, 272 P. 290. We are of the opinion that the law stated in Hasman v. Elk Grove Union High School, 76 Cal.App. 629, 245 P. 464, is controlling in the instant case. That case has been commented upon in such cases as O. T. Johnson Corp. v. Pacific E. R. Co., 19 Cal.App.2d 306, 311, 65 P.2d 368; Booth v. County of Los Angeles, 124 Cal. App. 259, 261, 12 P.2d 72, and Rosecrans v. Pacific Elec. Ry. Co., 21 Cal.2d 602, 606, 134 P.2d 245, supra, and apparently has not been overruled. In the Hasman case, the action was brought by the administratrix of the estate of Joseph Kerr for the recovery of certain real property conveyed by Kerr to the defendant school district in 1893. The property was conveyed to the school trustees "to have and to hold all and singular the said premises, together with the appurtenances, unto the said parties of the second part and to their successors forever, provided the same shall be used for the purpose of maintaining thereon a high school, otherwise the above described property shall revert to and become the property of the party of the first part, his heirs or assigns." Upon the execution of the deed the high school went into possession of the property, erected buildings thereon, and continuously thereafter maintained a high school upon the premises until September 29, 1922, and during that period of time no other property was used for high school purposes. In December, 1920, at an election, the electors voted in favor of changing the location of the school to a new site. Thereafter buildings were erected on the new site and the main activities of the high school were conducted thereon. The buildings on the old site were used for classes in agriculture and "during stormy weather, the athletic classes and work have been conducted thereon." The court there held that to maintain a school does not necessarily mean to keep it up perpetually; that the deed involved could be reasonably interpreted so as to avoid a forfeiture; that in compliance with the literal terms of the deed, the property was "used for the purpose of maintaining thereon a high school," and the deed did not provide for a reversion upon the discontinuance of such use, but only upon failure to so use it; that the condition of the deed was satisfied when the high school district in good faith, and without any intention at the time of changing the location of the school, erected buildings on the property and conducted a high school thereon for twenty-nine years, and until the interests of the school demanded a change of location; that such use of the property was a permanent use even though the use of the property for school purposes was subsequently abandoned.

In Booth v. County of Los Angeles, 124 Cal.App. 259, 12 P.2d 72, supra, one Harshman in 1884 conveyed certain real property to the County of Los Angeles. The deed contained the following clause: "This conveyance is made for the purpose of a road or highway, to revert to said J. J. Harshman, his heirs and assigns if not so used." Immediately subsequent to the execution of this deed the county of Los Angeles used the premises as a road and continued said use until 1888 when the city of Compton was incorporated. The land, being within the corporate limits of the city, was used thereafter as a street and was continuously so used until about 1916. Since that year the county has been in possession of the premises, using the same continuously as a stock pile upon which to store decomposed granite and rock for the county road department. The court followed and affirmed the law stated in the opinion in the Hasman case, supra, and held that the entire object of the condition of the deed was accomplished when a road or public highway was established and accepted by the public and that "Had it been the intention of the grantor herein that the property should revert upon the discontinuance of its use for road purposes, it would have been so easy to have so stated in plain and simple language that it must be inferred from the terms actually employed that such was not the intention of the grantor."

In the Hasman and Booth cases, supra, the deeds provided for reversion to the grantors, "his heirs and assigns" and in the instant case the deed provides for a reversion to the grantors. The language used may be reasonably construed as meaning that the condition was intended by the grantors to be effective only during their lifetime. Rowbotham v. Jackson, 68 S.D. 566, 5 N.W.2d 36, 142 A.L.R. 193. In Victoria Hospital Assoc. v. All Persons, 169 Cal. 455, 147 P. 124, 125, the deed involved contained the following provisions: "This deed is made upon the express condition and for the consideration that the said real property hereby conveyed * * * shall be used by the said party of the second part for benevolent purposes." The court said, 169 Cal. at pages 462-463, 147 P. 124, at page 127:

"It is further to be noted that the grant is made 'for the consideration hereinafter stated,' and that the 'consideration' thus referred to is the matter relied upon as expressing a condition. The words 'upon the express condition' are followed by the words 'and for the consideration that the said real property * * * shall be used,' etc., indicating that the words 'condition' and 'consideration' were used as expressing the same idea. If the words 'upon the express condition' be here given the technical effect claimed for them by appellant, they are inconsistent with the words 'for the consideration' which simply imply a promise or covenant on the part of the grantee to use the property in the way prescribed, rather than a mere condition having no promissory force."

[7] The findings of the trial court that the erection of buildings on the premises involved for school purposes and the use of said buildings for such purposes for forty-five years constituted a full performance by plaintiff of all the terms and provisions of the questioned deed are supported by the record.

The judgment is affirmed.

BARNARD, P. J., and GRIFFIN, J., concur.

137 Cal.App.2d 739

Ruth F. HINMAN, also known as Ruth G. Cates, Plaintiff and Appellant,

v.

Joseph M. HINMAN, Defendant and Respondent.
Civ. 5222.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District,
California.

Dec. 12, 1955.

Rehearing Denied Jan. 9, 1956.

Hearing Denied Feb. 8, 1956.

Proceeding on divorced wife's motion for increase in allowance for support of child. The Superior Court, Orange County, Robert Gardner, J., denied motion and denied wife's motion for attorney fees and costs on appeal, and wife appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Barnard, P. J., held that record on appeal upon clerk's transcript, without evidence, did not disclose that trial court had abused its discretion in refusing to modify support order.

Orders affirmed.

1. Divorce ⇨309

Where an award is made for support of a child in a divorce decree pursuant to agreement of parties as expressed in a property settlement agreement approved by court, amount may be later increased if child's welfare requires it, and ability of other party to make increased payments is an important consideration.

2. Appeal and Error ⇨907(3)

When an appeal is presented upon clerk's transcript without any record of evidence, it will be presumed that trial court received substantial evidence which supports its findings.

3. Divorce ⇨312.5

Record on appeal upon clerk's transcript, without evidence, in proceeding on divorced wife's motion for increase in allowance for support of child, did not disclose that trial court had abused its discretion in refusing to modify support order.

4. Divorce ⇨286

Where record on appeal from denial of divorced wife's motion for increase in allowance for support of child contained no evidence, so that it did not appear whether wife had sufficient funds to prosecute appeal or whether husband was able to furnish such funds, and support order was affirmed on appeal, it was presumed that trial court's order denying wife's motion for attorney fees and costs on appeal was supported by evidence.

Carter, Young, Zetterberg & Henrie, Pomona, for appellant.

Winthrop O. Gordon, Santa Ana, for respondent.

BARNARD, Presiding Justice.

Appeals from orders made in connection with a request for an increased allowance for the support of a minor.

In August, 1944, the plaintiff was granted a interlocutory decree of divorce which, among other things, awarded her the custody of two minor children, a boy and a girl, subject to visitation rights in the defendant; ordered the defendant to pay $25 per month for the support of each child in accordance with the terms of a property settlement agreement approved by the court and attached to the decree; and ordered him to keep in effect two insurance policies on his life, totalling $9171, for the benefit of the children. A final decree was entered in August, 1945. Each of the parties married again and, by agreement of the parties, custody of the boy was later relinquished to the defendant.

On January 4, 1955, the plaintiff filed notice of motion for an increase in the allowance for the support of the daughter, for an order granting her visitation rights with respect to the boy, and for attorneys fees and costs. In support of the motion she filed an affidavit alleging that conditions had changed since the entry of the original order; that the daughter was now 14 years of age and the expense of maintaining and educating her had increased in that she was taking music lessons, desired to take dancing lessons, and was engaged in various school and social activities; that the defendant's income had increased and affiant was informed that he was now earning in excess of $5,000 a year; that affiant's present husband was drawing a veteran's disability pension of $237.50 per month, but was presently ill and unable to work; that affiant was then earning $190 per month; that the welfare of the daughter required that these support payments be increased; and that the defendant had the ability to pay the same. On January 7, she filed a supplemental affidavit itemizing the expenses and needs of the daughter, which totaled $203 per month. In arriving at this figure the daughter was charged with her pro rata share of maintaining affiant's household, including interest, taxes, insurance, public utilities, food, maintaining a family car, and purchasing household furniture and supplies; to which was added the cost of entertainment, trips, gifts to friends, and the premium on an insurance policy on the daughter's life. At the hearing of this motion on January 14, the plaintiff and the defendant were sworn and testified, and an order was entered denying the motion except that the defendant was ordered to pay $75 attorney fees, payable at $10 per month.

On January 24, the plaintiff filed notice of a motion to vacate the order entered on January 14, and for a different order granting an increase in the support payments. In support thereof, the affidavit of one of plaintiff's counsel was filed alleging that at the hearing on January 14, the plaintiff and the defendant had testified to certain things and the judge had said certain things. It was stated that the plaintiff had then testified that her present husband was receiving a veteran's disability of $237 per month, but was presently ill and unable to work; that she and her husband had two other children; that she was working with a regular take-home pay of $192 to $194 per month; and that she was also receiving $20 per month for after-hours work. It was further stated that the defendant had then testified that he was employed by Orange County; that he was receiving $464 per month less federal taxes withheld of $54.60, and less retirement funds withheld of $33.96; and that his necessary expenses totaled $379 per month and that he had less important expenses amounting to $73.49 per month. It was also stated that the judge had then remarked that $25 per month was inadequate for the support of a minor child; that each of the parties, by remarrying, had acquired new responsibilities; that there was a total income in plaintiff's family of $450; that the defendant's expenses were greater than his take-home pay of $375 per month; and that he would therefore make no change in the support order.

This motion was heard on January 28, and the reporter's transcript of that hearing is the only one presented on this appeal. It appears therefrom that no evidence was then produced, and the proceeding consisted of arguments made by the attorneys and remarks made by the court. The attorney for the plaintiff argued that conditions had changed and the defendant was earning more now than he was in 1944; that a father's duty of support still runs even though new associations are formed; that the retirement funds taken from the defendant's pay constitute a capital asset which should not be considered; that he thought the parties could arrive at an agreement with respect to visitation rights; and that the matter should be reconsidered, the prior order vacated, and a new order made increasing the award to $100 per month. The judge asked counsel to show him how a larger award could be made in view of the evidence, pointed out that each of the parties was maintaining one child and the defendant was required by the divorce decree to keep two life insurance policies in effect, and reviewed from his memory of the evidence at the first hearing the figures as to the net income and expenses of the defendant and the family income of the plaintiff's family. He finally stated that he would take the matter under advisement, consider the matter as reopened, go over the record again on the basis of his recollection of the evidence, and that if he could find any way to give plaintiff relief he would do so.

On February 8, 1955, an order was entered denying the motion to increase the payments for support and for further costs and attorneys fees. On February 23, the plaintiff filed notice of appeal from the order entered on January 14, 1955, and from the order entered on February 8, 1955. The plaintiff then gave notice of a motion for costs and attorneys fees on appeal, to be made on March 11, in support thereof she filed an affidavit alleging that the facts showed that the defendant had increased his earning power; that the daughter required various things amounting to $203 per month; that the court had erred in figuring defendant's take-home pay by allowing deductions used to build up his capital assets; that the court had erred in basing its holding on the theory that when the parents of a child remarried they acquired their own responsibilities; that affiant's only remedy is by appeal since no further change of circumstances is anticipated; that $165 for costs and $500 for attorney fees are needed for the appeal; and that affiant is unable to pay these costs on an appeal which she has taken in good faith. On March 11, 1955, the court entered an order reciting that the defendant was sworn and testified at the hearing, and denying the motion. On March 21, 1955, the plaintiff filed another notice of appeal from this order.

The appellant contends that a mother should not bear the whole increased cost of supporting her minor daughter when the father's earning power has increased; that a mother's remarriage does not release the father from his duty to share in such increased costs; that the respondent should not be excused from assisting the mother in bearing the increased costs by attributing part of his earnings to capital producing assets; that the stepfather's disability payments should not be considered; and that the court abused its discretion in comparing the net income of the two families and in denying the plaintiff increased support for the minor daughter.

[1] Where an award is made for the support of a child in a divorce decree pursuant to the agreement of the parties as expressed in a property settlement agreement approved by the court, the amount may be later increased "if the child's welfare requires it." Puckett v. Puckett, 21 Cal.2d 833, 136 P.2d 1, 6. The ability of the other party to make an increased payment is also an important consideration and one which may be controlling.

[2] While the record shows that oral testimony on both sides was received at the first hearing on January 14, 1955, there is no transcript of such testimony, and apparently no reporter was present. The reporter's transcript of the second hearing on January 28, discloses that no new evidence was produced. The incidental references therein to portions of the evidence received at the prior hearing disclose merely the interpretation placed thereon by the persons making the comments. When an appeal is presented upon a clerk's transcript without any record of the evidence produced, it will be presumed that the trial court received substantial evidence which supports its findings. Stevens v. Stevens, 129 Cal.App.2d 19, 276 P.2d 139.

[3] The affidavit filed by appellant's attorney on January 24, in support of the motion to vacate the prior order, was intended for that purpose and not as evidence to be used on a rehearing, and the interpretation placed by the appellant's attorney on certain alleged testimony previously received furnishes no proper record of the evidence actually received, under any of the rules prescribing how such a record may be made and presented, and no further evidence was offered. Even if that affidavit were to be considered it would merely be a partial record, from that counsel's memory, of his interpretation of the effect of portions of conflicting evidence. A question of fact was presented for the court's decision upon conflicting evidence, and it does not certainly appear from the record that the child's welfare required the making of the order requested, or that the respondent was financially able to pay more. In view of the presumptions which apply, and on the record before us, it cannot be held that the court abused its discretion in refusing to modify the support order.

[4] On the appeal from the order denying costs and attorneys fees on appeal the appellant relies on Sorrels v. Sorrels, 105 Cal.App.2d 465, 234 P.2d 103. In that case, where the order appealed from was reversed, an order denying a motion for attorneys fees and costs on appeal was also reversed. It was there held that it was an abuse of discretion to deny such an order in a case where the appeal was meritorious, and where the evidence showed that the plaintiff did not have sufficient funds to prosecute an appeal and that the defendant was able to furnish such funds. There is no record here to show the existence of such facts. It appears that the defendant testified at the hearing on this motion, but we have no way of knowing what evidence was produced. It must be presumed, in support of the court's order, that the evidence supported the court's action.

The meager record before us indicates that the question originally raised with respect to visitation rights was withdrawn during the proceedings, and no point is raised in that connection on this appeal.

The orders appealed from are affirmed.

GRIFFIN and MUSSELL, JJ., concur. }

137 Cal.App.2d 497

The PEOPLE of the State of California,
Respondent,
v.

George RHINEHART, Jr., Appellant.
Cr. 3154.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 1, California.
Dec. 5, 1955.

Defendant was convicted of participating in automobile theft. The Superior Court, San Mateo County, Louis B. DeMatteis, J., entered judgment of conviction and order denying defendant's motion for new trial, and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Peters, P. J., held that evidence was sufficient to sustain the conviction.

Judgment and order affirmed.

1. Criminal Law Ⓒ1144(13)

Upon appeal from judgment of conviction and from order denying defendant's motion for new trial, evidence must be construed most favorably to prosecution.

2. Larceny Ⓒ55

Evidence was sufficient to sustain a conviction for participation in theft of automobile. Vehicle Code, § 503.

3. Automobiles Ⓒ339

Defendant, who is trying to start stolen automobile is in possession of such automobile under suspicious circumstances, and mere possession of stolen automobile under suspicious circumstances is sufficient to sustain conviction for taking vehicle without owner's consent. Vehicle Code, § 503.

4. Witnesses Ⓒ277(2)

Where, in prosecution for participation in theft of automobile, defendant, on direct examination, made a general denial that he had ever driven the stolen automobile or had taken or moved it or assisted anyone else in such activities and testified to his version of occurrences on night he was apprehended, permitting prosecution, on cross-examination, and over objection, to examine defendant as to his whereabouts on previous night when the automobile was stolen was proper. Vehicle Code, § 503; Pen.Code, § 1323.

5. Witnesses Ⓒ277(4)

Penal Code provision, which permits only cross-examination of defendant "as to all matters about which he was examined in chief", does not require that, where defendant has made a general denial, cross-examination is limited precisely to matters, dates or times mentioned in the direct examination. Pen.Code, § 1323.

William J. Scammon, Burlingame, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Clarence A. Linn, Asst. Atty. Gen., John S. McInerny, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

PETERS, Presiding Justice.

Defendant was charged with having participated on April 4, 1955, in the theft of a Ford Sedan belonging to Pearl Brent in violation of Section 503 of the Vehicle Code. He waived a jury trial, and stipulated that the case could be tried upon the record of the preliminary hearing, plus his testimony given in the Superior Court. The trial court determined that, beyond a reasonable doubt, even if defendant was not the sole participant in the theft, he participated and knowingly assisted in the theft, and that this violated the code section. From the judgment of conviction based on this holding, and from the order denying his motion for a new trial, defendant appeals.

The code section involved is Section 503 of the Vehicle Code. So far as pertinent here, the section reads: "Any person who drives or takes a vehicle not his own, without the consent of the owner thereof, and with intent to either permanently or temporarily deprive the owner thereof of his title to or possession of such vehicle, whether with or without intent to steal the same, or any person who is a party or accessory to or an accomplice in any such driving or unauthorized taking or stealing is guilty of a felony * * *."

Tested by the rules applicable to appeals in criminal cases the evidence, and the reasonable inferences therefrom, sustain the conviction.

Miss Brent owned the Ford Sedan, license number 5B43966, that was stolen. At about 8:30 p. m. on April 4, 1955, she parked it in front of a residence in San Mateo, and when she returned to where she had parked the car at about 10 p. m. it was gone. She had given no one, in general, permission to use the car, and, in particular, had not given defendant such permission. She did not know the defendant.

On April 5, 1955, at about 9:30 p. m., Officer Ellison of the San Francisco Police Department, saw the Ford, under suspicious circumstances, in San Francisco. It was parked on a deserted street, and on the rear seat of the car were two wheels and tires and other accessories from a Chevrolet. The officer knew that a short time before, about six blocks away, a Chevrolet had been found that had been completely stripped. The officer also noted that there was a metal coil attached to the ignition that served to short out the ignition. The Ford bore the license plate 3G948. The officer left to call a tow car and returned to the scene about 10 p. m. He testified that as he approached the Ford he saw defendant sitting in it and the starter was turning the motor over, but the engine was not running. There was no key in the ignition. The defendant was bleeding from several cuts on his head, but he did not appear intoxicated. Under questioning by the officer, the defendant stated that the car belonged to a friend named "Frank," and that "Frank" had told him to fill the Ford with gas and drive it "up the Navy Road." The officer took the defendant to "Frank's" supposed address "and no one was living there by that name. We questioned neighbors and they said no one lived there by the name of 'Frank.'"

Sergeant Otten of the San Mateo Police Department testified that on April 6, 1955, while questioning defendant, the defendant first stated that a person by the name of "Frank" had given him money to buy gas and instructed him to drive the car to Navy Road and leave it there. In a later conversation the same day the defendant said the other boy's name was "Roosevelt"; that on the night of April 4th, "Roosevelt," driving a Chevrolet, picked him up and they drove down to the Peninsula; that near the area from which the Ford was stolen "Roosevelt" stopped the Chevrolet, and told defendant that he, "Roosevelt," was going to pick up another car. The officer summarized what defendant then told him as follows: "At that time the Ford was taken and Rhinehart [the defendant] drove the Chevrolet back to San Francisco, where this other person stripped the Chevrolet." Sergeant Otten took defendant to San Francisco to try to locate where "Roosevelt" lived, but "he was not home."

The defendant testified on his own behalf. He denied that he had ever driven, taken, pushed or moved the Ford at any time, or that he had ever assisted any other person in such activities. Over his objection, on cross-examination, he stated that on the night of April 4th he and "Frank Roosevelt" had gone for a ride down the Peninsula in a Chevrolet; that "Frank" stopped the car and told defendant to drive it back to San Francisco; that he wondered how "Frank" was to get back to San Francisco, but asked no questions; that he did not then see the stolen Ford; that he drove the Chevrolet back to San Francisco, parked it on Navy Road where he had been told to, and walked a mile home, because he had no carfare. On direct examination he testified that on April 5th he met "Frank," driving the Ford, in San Francisco; that "Frank" told him he was going to drive the Ford to the spot where it was subsequently found and that defendant, later in the day, should drive it to Navy Road where he had left the Chevrolet; that "Frank" gave him 50 cents for gasoline; that defendant then visited some friends, had something to drink, and got into a fight in which his head was cut; that he then visited some more friends; that upon leaving these friends he saw the Ford parked where "Frank" had stated he would leave it; that he sat in the Ford for a few minutes to clear his head; that he did not try to start the car as there were no keys; that while sitting there Officer Ellison came by and questioned him; that he and Officer Ellison went to look for "Frank," but could not find him; that he and Officer Otten, the next day, went looking for "Frank," but could not find him; but they did find the house in which he lived.

[1,2] If this evidence be construed most favorably to the prosecution, as this court must construe it, People v. Newland, 15 Cal.2d 678, 104 P.2d 778; People v. Daugherty, 40 Cal.2d 876, 256 P.2d 911, it is sufficient to sustain the conviction. On two occasions the officers were unable to locate the "Frank Roosevelt," who defendant said had taken the Ford. Defendant admits to being with "Frank" in the general area from which the Ford was stolen. He told Officer Otten that the Ford was then stolen. Defendant was arrested behind the wheel of the stolen car while attempting to start it without keys. The ignition of the car had been shorted. The evidence shows that defendant knew, when "Frank" got out of the Chevrolet, that he was going to and did take the Ford, and it is a reasonable inference that defendant knew, or should have known, that it was a stolen car. This evidence sustains the finding that defendant was a "person who is a party or accessory to or an accomplice in any such driving or unauthorized taking" of the car as set forth in Section 503 of the Vehicle Code.

[3] Mere possession of a stolen car, under suspicious circumstances, and certainly defendant while trying to start the car was in possession of it under such circumstances, is sufficient to sustain a conviction under the section. People v. Holland, 82 Cal.App.2d 310, 186 P.2d 58. In People v. Ragone, 84 Cal.App.2d 476, 191 P.2d 126, the court sustained a conviction under the section where the defendants were seen leaving a stolen car, the engine of which was left running, several hours after it was stolen. See also People v. Valdez, 14 Cal.App.2d 580, 58 P.2d 656.

Appellant predicates his claim of insufficiency of the evidence on the holdings in People v. Flores, 58 Cal.App.2d 764, 137 P.2d 767, and People v. Lewis, 81 Cal.App.2d 119, 183 P.2d 271. In the Flores case the only evidence connecting the defendant with the theft was his own admission that he had sat in the car and a fingerprint of his was found on the rear view mirror. There was no evidence, such as exists in the present case, of defendant's presence in the area where the car was stolen, or that the defendant was arrested while sitting in the driver's seat trying to start the car. In the Lewis case the court held that the evidence was insufficient where there was no evidence that defendant either assisted or aided anyone in taking the car, or had taken it himself, or no evidence that the defendant had ever driven the stolen car or been in the area from which it was stolen, the only evidence being that he had ridden in the car and was arrested while sitting in it as a passenger and not as driver. That is not this case.

Both sides to this appeal argue over whether the evidence shows that "Frank Roosevelt" ever existed. The evidence, and the inferences from the evidence, on this issue, are conflicting. But even if it be assumed that "Frank Roosevelt" did exist, this would not aid appellant. The trial court found, assuming that "Frank Roosevelt" actually took the car, that the evidence, beyond a reasonable doubt, showed that defendant knowingly aided, abetted and participated in the theft. That finding finds substantial support in the record, and that finding supports the conviction.

[4, 5] Appellant next complains of the overruling of his objections to portions of his cross-examination. On direct examination defendant first made a complete and general denial—he denied that he had at any time or on any date driven Miss Brent's car, or that he had taken, pushed or moved it, or that he had assisted anyone else in such activities. Then he testified as to his version of the occurrences of April 5th. On cross-examination, the prosecution, over objection, was permitted to examine defendant as to his whereabouts on April 4th, the night the car was stolen. This was clearly proper. While Penal Code Section 1323 only permits cross-examination of the defendant "as to all matters about which he was examined in chief", this does not mean, where the defendant has made a general denial, that the cross-examination is limited precisely to the matters, dates or times mentioned in the direct examination. The Supreme Court, in interpreting this section in People v. Zerillo, 36 Cal.2d 222, 228, 223 P.2d 223, 227, stated: "This does not mean that the cross-examination must be confined to a mere categorical review of the matters, dates or times mentioned in the direct examination. [Citations.] It may be directed to the eliciting of any matter which may tend to overcome or qualify the effect of the testimony given by him on his direct examination. [Citations.] * * * If a defendant takes the stand and makes a general denial of the crime with which he is charged the permissible scope of cross-examination is very wide. [Citations.] Moreover, as stated in People v. Teshara, 141 Cal. 633, 638, 75 P. 338, 340, 'A defendant cannot, by testifying to a state of things contrary to and inconsistent with the evidence of the prosecution, thus indirectly denying the testimony against him, but without testifying expressly with relation to the same facts, limit the cross-examination to the precise facts concerning which he testifies. He can be cross-examined with respect to facts or denials which are necessarily implied from the testimony-in-chief as well as with respect to facts which he expressly states.'" See also People v. Smith, 43 Cal.App.2d 110, 110 P.2d 472.

Tested by these standards the cross-examination was proper.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

BRAY and FRED B. WOOD, JJ., concur.

137 Cal.App.2d 437

Milton M. VERNON, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

OWL TRUCK & CONSTRUCTION CO., a corporation and F. A. Porter, Defendants and Appellants.

Civ. 21163.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Dec. 2, 1955.

Rehearing Denied Dec. 27, 1955.

Hearing Denied Jan. 25, 1956.

Shipper's employee's action for injuries sustained when he fell from bed of defendants' truck while it was standing motionless on shipper's premises. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Samuel R. Blake, J., rendered judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appealed. The District Court of Appeal, White, P. J., held that evidence, with regard to whether it should have been apparent to plaintiff that truck driver was about to tighten, or intended to tighten, chain while plaintiff was in act of stepping over it, was insufficient to require giving of instruction as to qualification of rule that negligence of another need not be anticipated.

Affirmed.

1. Appeal and Error Ⓒ928(4)

In determining whether trial court, in shipper's employee's action for injuries sustained when he fell from bed of defendants' truck, should have instructed that as to qualification of rule that another's negligence need not be anticipated, appellate court would look to evidence favorable to defendants and decide whether such evidence, regardless of contradictions and inconsistencies, would have justified jury's finding that it should have been apparent to plaintiff that defendant truck driver was about to tighten, or intended to tighten, chain while plaintiff was in act of stepping over it.

2. Automobiles Ⓒ246(58)

In shipper's employee's action for injuries sustained when he fell from bed of defendants' truck, evidence, on issue as to whether it should have been apparent to plaintiff that truck driver was about to tighten, or intended to tighten, chain while plaintiff was in act of stepping over it, was insufficient to require giving of instruction as to qualification of rule that another's negligence need not be anticipated.

3. Trial Ⓒ295(1)

Instructions must be considered in their entirety.

4. Trial Ⓒ295(6)

In shipper's employee's action for injuries sustained when he fell from bed of defendants' truck while it was standing motionless on shipper's premises, "dangerous place" instruction was not without ambiguity, but when read in conjunction with all other instructions given, could well be regarded as being intended, and understood by jury, to be statement of law that degree of care required remains constant even as to one who is employed in place of danger, but acts necessary to constitute such care may vary according to circumstances; and no prejudice ensued to defendant from instructions as a whole.

Moss, Lyon & Dunn, Sidney A. Moss, Henry F. Walker, Los Angeles, for appellant.

A. Joseph Sherwood, Beverly Hills, for respondent.

WHITE, Presiding Justice.

Defendants have appealed from a judgment for plaintiff in his action for damages for injuries to his person when he fell from the bed of the truck owned by defendant Owl Truck & Construction Company while it was standing motionless on the premises of plaintiff's employer, Southwest Engineering Company.

The evidence is contradictory in almost all respects. The pertinent portions will be stated in connection with the issues to be determined. Appellants do not question the sufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict and judgment, but urge that two instructions given constitute prejudicial error requiring reversal of the judgment.

One of the instructions so cited as error reads as follows: "A person, who, himself, is exercising ordinary care has a right to assume that others, too, will perform their duty under the law, and he has a further right to rely and act on that assumption. Thus it is not negligence for such person to fail to anticipate injury which can come only from a violation of law or duty by another." Appellants' contention is that the two sentences of the above quoted instruction should have been followed by another sentence, as in B.A.J.I. 138, and that the instruction without that third sentence is an erroneous and incomplete statement of the applicable law. The omitted sentence is: "However, an exception should be noted: the rights just defined do not exist when it is reasonably apparent to one, or in the exercise of ordinary care would be apparent to him, that another is not going to perform his duty." In support of this contention, appellants cite and rely upon the decisions next discussed.

In Stickel v. San Diego Elec. Ry. Co., 32 Cal.2d 157, 195 P.2d 416, it was held that to give the entire instruction was not error and that the instruction as a whole did not impose a duty upon one to anticipate negligence on the part of others. At page 165 of 32 Cal.2d, at page 422 of 195 P.2d, the court said: "It is but a statement as to that common type of negligence, the unreasonable failure to observe what is going on about one, including the negligence of others." Judgment for plaintiff growing out of an intersection collision of two automobiles was there affirmed.

The judgments in Angier v. Bruck, 56 Cal.App.2d 55, 131 P.2d 876, and Carlson v. Shewalter, 110 Cal.App.2d 655, 243 P.2d 549, 552, were reversed for the reason that, under the facts of those cases, an instruction substantially as given in the instant action and hereinbefore quoted should have been qualified by language substantially the same as the third sentence of B.A.J.I. 138, also hereinbefore quoted.

In Angier v. Bruck, supra, there was evidence from which the jury might have found that respondent saw appellant's automobile traveling toward the point of impact at a speed too great to be stopped before the impact, and that respondent could have avoided the collision.

In Carlson v. Shewalter, supra, the jury was instructed that "in making the left hand turn Carlson (appellant) had violated the law * * * that negligence of the respondent could not be predicated on his failure to anticipate that Carlson would make an unlawful movement on the highway" and there was evidence from which the jury could have found that the front end of Carlson's car had been turned across the highway awaiting an opportunity to complete the lefthand turn in plain view of respondent during the time it took him to drive almost a block. In that decision, 110 Cal.App.2d at page 659, 243 P.2d at page 552, it is said: "If the jury had been specifically instructed that respondent could not continue to rely on Carlson's obedience of the law after having the opportunity by the use of reasonable care to discover its violation, we cannot say that their verdict would not have been for appellant under the evidence."

In the instant action, the alleged negligence of appellants which was impliedly found by the jury to have caused plain-tiff's injuries was not so obvious as either the excessive speed toward the intersection in Angier v. Bruck, supra, or the illegal lefthand turn into a driveway in Carlson v. Shewalter, supra. Those violations were, or should have been, observed by the other party in time for him to prevent the injury, and the exception should not have been omitted from the instruction as to one's right to rely upon obedience of the law by others. In the instant action, however, respondent contends that "The evidence was not such as to entitle defendants to have such exception included as part of this instruction."

The record on the instant appeal contains evidence showing, without conflict, that: Defendant Owl Truck & Construction Company's truck, driven by defendant Porter, called at the premises of plaintiff's employer, Southwest Engineering Company, for a load. Defendant Porter was directed to a certain loading bay where a heat exchanger, 26 inches in diameter, 192 inches long, weighing 9,300 pounds, and with projections from the generally cylindrical shape protected by wooden crating, was loaded onto the front portion or tractor of defendants' equipment. Porter was then directed to and did move the truck about 50 feet to a loading area near another crane where another heat exchanger, 36 inches in diameter, 192 inches long, weighing 19,900 pounds, and having 12 inch legs, was loaded onto the semi-trailer on 4 x 6's. Porter was then directed to and did drive ahead a few feet so that the loading area could be used by other trucks. Porter placed two chains with binders across each of the heat exchangers and attached the chains to both sides of the tractor and trailer beds. The front chain across each heat exchanger had its binder on the non-driver's side and the rear chain across each had its binder on the driver's side. Pulling down on the lever of any binder would tighten the chain to which that binder was attached. After the truck was stopped in this third location, plaintiff boarded it, taking with him four tags and a small stapling gun for the purpose of stapling a tag to each side of each of the heat exchangers. The tags could be stapled only to the wooden crates protecting the projecting portions of the heat exchangers. After two tags had been placed on the rear heat exchanger and one on the driver's side of the front heat exchanger, and when plaintiff was within a few steps of the place on the non-driver's side where the fourth tag was to be stapled, he fell from the bed of the tractor to the cement loading area and was severely injured. Either plaintiff or Porter could have been seen by the other across the 26" heat exchanger.

[1,2] As to all other questions of fact, the evidence is in direct conflict. Contrary to respondent's contention, the instant appeal is not one where an appellate court looks only at the evidence most favorable to respondent. If the evidence favorable to defendant, regardless of contradictions and inconsistencies, would have justified the jury's finding that it was or should have been apparent to plaintiff that defendant Porter was about to tighten, or intended to tighten, the chain while he was in the act of stepping over it, then the qualifying instruction as in B.A.J.I. 138 would have been applicable. We therefore summarize both versions.

Plaintiff testified that he himself directed defendant Porter to the loading bay where the first unit was loaded and that he then told Porter he would have to board defendants' equipment after the heat exchangers had been loaded in order to tag them. Defendant Porter denied that it was plaintiff who directed him to the loading bay and testified that no one had told him that anyone would board the tractor or trailer for any purpose.

Plaintiff testified that when he boarded the tractor Porter was standing about 15 to 20 feet away on the driver's side of the equipment talking with a man, and that he climbed onto the truck on that side where he was in plain view of Porter. At that time the front chain and the two rear ones were tight and the rear chain over the front heat exchanger was lying flat on the bed of the tractor. Defendant testified that he had tightened the two chains over the unit on the tractor before moving it to load the second heat exchanger onto the trailer, that both chains on the second unit were tightened before the equipment was moved to the place where plaintiff boarded the equipment and fell from the tractor bed; and that those chains were not loosened at any time after he first tightened them.

Plaintiff and several other witnesses testified that the bill of lading was not given to Porter until after the accident. Porter testified that he went to the office, stood in the door waiting for the bill of lading to be finished, saw plaintiff on the driver's side of the tractor while he was waiting in the office door, that he was given the bill of lading, walked from the office door to the cab of the tractor, put the bill of lading in the seat, took a red flag from under the seat, walked along the driver's side of the tractor and trailer and started to tie the red flag to the protruding rear end of the heat exchanger on the trailer, and then heard plaintiff cry out after he had fallen.

Plaintiff testified that as he proceeded forward on the non-driver's side of the tractor bed he was watching where he stepped; that as he approached and started to step over the chain there was no movement of the chain whatsoever; that, while his foot was raised to step over it, the chain hit his leg just under the knee and caused him to fall to the cement loading area and injure himself; that while he was on the ground he saw Porter's feet and legs on the driver's side below the tractor bed near the binder of the chain which had caused him to fall.

Two of plaintiff's co-employees testified that defendant Porter told them he was not sure just how plaintiff was hurt "but he must have tripped over the chain as he was tightening up the chain". Porter denied that he had made any such statement.

Accepting as true, as the jury apparently did, the testimony that the chain was lying flat on the bed of the tractor when plaintiff began to step over it, he had the right to expect that it would not be tightened at that instant so as to strike his leg and cause him to fall from the truck.

Whenever the chain was tightened across the load it was done by pulling down the lever of the binder. There is no evidence that any movement by Porter showing an intention to pull the lever would necessarily have been made before plaintiff's step over the chain was begun, in order that the chain would strike plaintiff's leg before his step was completed. Plaintiff had been on the truck long enough to step around the tightened chains and over the flat one on the driver's side, and twice around one of the tight chains on the non-driver's side. During that time, according to plaintiff, he had seen Porter talking with a man and making no movement toward or about the truck; and, according to Porter, during that time, he had waited some minutes in the office door, he had seen plaintiff on the truck, had walked from the office, put his bill of lading in the seat, removed a red flag from under the seat, and walked along the driver's side the full length of the equipment. There is no evidence in the record on the instant appeal to which the instruction limiting and qualifying plaintiff's right to assume that Porter would exercise ordinary care for his safety was applicable. The giving of the instruction without the limitation was not error in this case.

In the instant action, the record contains 53 pages of instructions given, both general and specific. It may be noted, also, that the following instruction was given as requested by defendant: "It was the duty of the plaintiff, Milton M. Vernon, to use his sense of sight as an ordinarily reasonable and prudent person would have used it under the circumstances as you find them to have existed at the time of the accident. If the plaintiff failed to so use his sense of sight, he was guilty of negligence, and if it contributed proximately to the occurrence of the accident in any degree, then your verdict must be in favor of the defendants."

Appellants requested that the following instructions be given as their 6th, 7th and 8th:

(6th) "Ordinary care is that care which persons of ordinary prudence exercise in the management of their own affairs in order to avoid injury to themselves or to others."

(7th) "Inasmuch as the amount of caution used by the ordinarily prudent person varies in direct proportion to the danger known to be involved in his undertaking, it follows that in the exercise of ordinary care, the amount of caution required will vary in accordance with the nature of the act and the surrounding circumstances. To put the matter in another way, the amount of caution involved in the exercise of ordinary care increases or decreases as does the danger that reasonably should be apprehended.

"Evidence as to whether or not a person conformed to a custom that had grown up in a given locality or business is relevant and ought to be considered, but is not necessarily controlling on the question whether or not he exercised ordinary care, for that question must be determined by the standard of care that I have stated to you."

(8th) "The law demands that one who is working in a place where he is exposed to danger shall himself exercise his faculties for his own protection.

"He is not in the exercise of ordinary care unless, at each stage of his work, he makes an effective use of his bodily and mental faculties, and observes as attentively as is reasonably possible under the circumstances the conditions of the instrumentalities by which his safety may be affected, and the results of their operation by himself or others, in so far as that operation may tend to subject him to danger."

Instructions 6th and 7th were given as requested, but, in lieu of 8th above quoted, the court of its own motion instructed as follows:

"When a person's lawful employment requires that he work in a dangerous location or a place that involves unusual possibilities of injury or requires that, in the line of his duty, he take risks which ordinarily a reasonably prudent person would avoid, the necessities of such a situation, in so far as they limit the caution that he may take for his own safety, lessen the amount of caution required of him by law in the exercise of ordinary care."

It is the instruction last above quoted that appellants cite as prejudicial error.

About 20 decisions are cited by appellants as authorities requiring reversal because of the giving of that instruction. They include Gleason v. Fire Protection Engineering Co., 127 Cal.App. 754, 16 P.2d 750, and Weddle v. Heath, 211 Cal. 445, 295 P. 832. As stated by Mr. Justice Moore, speaking for the court, in Hechler v. McDonnell, 42 Cal.App.2d 515, 518, 109 P.2d 426, 428, these cases cited by appellant "are authority for rejecting the demands of one who, being familiar with a building and its patent defects, was negligent as a result of which he received his injuries".

More nearly analogous is the case of Wallace v. King, 27 Cal.App.2d 174, 80 P.2d 523, where a workman who was coming down a rope on the side of a 25-foot excavation signaled the operator of a bulldozer at the bottom to stop, the bulldozer was stopped about three feet from the bottom of the rope with its blade motionless in the air, the workman then dropped from the rope and was badly injured by the blade's being dropped on him just as he landed on the loose dirt at the bottom.

In Wallace v. King, supra, 27 Cal.App.2d at page 180, 80 P.2d at page 526, this court said: "Undoubtedly it is the rule that one who is employed in a place where he is exposed to danger must exercise his faculties for his own protection; and if he approaches a place which he knows or ought to know is one of danger, he must take reasonable precautions to avoid being injured (Gleason v. Fire Protection Engineering Co., 127 Cal.App. 754, 757, 16 P.2d 750 * * *); but while the degree of care required remains constant, the acts necessary to constitute such care may vary according to circumstances. (Henderson v. Los Angeles Traction Co., 150 Cal. 689, 89 P. 976.) Therefore, the question presented is whether a reasonably prudent man, situated as respondent, was, seeing what he saw, and knowing what he knew, would have acted as respondent acted, and whether such conduct constituted care in proportion to the danger. If any act or omission on the part of respondent amounted to a want of ordinary care and was a proximate contributing cause of his injury, he cannot recover." (Emphasis added.)

[3,4] While the instruction last complained of by appellant in the instant action is not without ambiguity, nevertheless no citation of authority is necessary for the statement that instructions must be considered in their entirety. When viewed in their entirety, they correctly expound the law applicable to the issues framed by the pleadings and raised by the evidence. We are satisfied that the challenged instructions cannot be said to have misled or confused the jury and certainly no prejudice ensued to appellant therefrom. The instruction in question, when read in conjunction with all the other instructions given, may well be regarded as being intended and understood by the jury to be a statement of the law that, as to one who is employed in a place of danger, "while the degree of care required remains constant, the acts necessary to constitute such care may vary according to the circumstances".

A consideration of the entire record in this case does not admit of the conclusion that without the claimed error in the instructions the verdict would have been different from the verdict actually rendered by the jury.

The judgment is affirmed.

DORAN, J., and NOURSE, Justice pro tem., concur.

137 Cal.App.2d 512

Eleanor E. SMITH, Plaintiff and Appellant,
v.

Thomas H. SMITH, Defendant and
Respondent.
Civ. 20871.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 3, California.
Dec. 5, 1955.

Proceeding on application by father for modification of final divorce decree to obtain custody of minor son from mother. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Allen T. Lynch, J., awarded custody of minor son to father and mother appealed. The District Court of Appeal held that evidence was sufficient to warrant change of custody.

Affirmed.

1. Parent and Child $\S$ 2(4)

An application to change the custody of a child from one parent to the other is addressed to the sound discretion of the trial judge and his order will not be reversed except on a clear showing of an abuse of that discretion.

2. Divorce $\S$ 303(3)

In proceeding on application by father for modification of final divorce decree by changing custody of minor son from mother to father, if a showing of change in circumstances was necessary to warrant the change in custody, evidence was sufficient to show such a change.

3. Divorce $\S$ 312.6(3)

In proceeding on application by father for modification of final divorce decree by changing custody of minor son from mother to father, wherein trial judge interviewed child in chambers without making statement for record of what child said in interview, but no request was made for such statement, it must be assumed that information received by trial judge at interview together with other evidence was sufficient to support the change in custody granted by the trial judge.

4. Appeal and Error $\S$ 203(3)

Allowing nine year old boy to testify without being sworn could not be objected to on appeal where adverse party at no time made any objection to his unsworn testimony, where adverse party cross-examined him, and in addition, at close of hearing, relied on the unsworn testimony. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. $\S$ 1846.

5. Divorce $\S$ 303(3)

In proceeding on application by father for modification of final divorce decree which awarded custody of minor son to mother, whispered conversation between boy and commissioner during trial, allegedly in violation of section of statute providing that a witness can testify and be heard only in presence of all parties subject to their examination, must be assumed to have been consented to by the wife, where no objection was made thereto and no request was made for statement of conversation for record. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. $\S$ 1846.

6. Divorce $\S$ 312.2

Objection could not be raised for first time on appeal that there was a whispered off the record conversation between commissioner and boy whose divorced father was seeking a change of custody. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. $\S$ 1846.

John K. Ford, Los Angeles, for appellant.

James L. Potts, Inglewood, for respondent.

PER CURIAM.

Appeal by plaintiff mother from a minute order modifying the final decree of divorce by changing custody of the minor son of the parties from the mother to defendant father. She urges that the trial court's action in changing custody was an abuse of discretion.

On August 4, 1947 plaintiff was granted an interlocutory judgment of divorce from defendant. The judgment awarded custody of Craig, minor son of the parties, to plaintiff. On August 17, 1948 final judgment was entered, including therein the custody provisions of the interlocutory judgment.

On June 10, 1953 defendant applied for an order changing custody of Craig from plaintiff to himself subject to a right of reasonable visitation in plaintiff, based on the facts that he had remarried and had two children by his second marriage, that Craig was then 9 years of age, and that Craig had frequently expressed a desire to live with him and be raised in his home. Plaintiff opposed the application. The matter was heard by a commissioner who made a report to the court and recommended that custody of Craig be awarded to defendant. Plaintiff filed exceptions to the report and recommendation. At the hearing on the exceptions the court read the record before the commissioner and pursuant to a stipulation interviewed Craig privately in chambers. An order was then made approving the commissioner's recommendation awarding custody of Craig to defendant but modifying his recommendations as to visitation. Plaintiff appeals.

[1] An application to change the custody of a child from one parent to the other is addressed to the sound discretion of the trial judge and his order will not be reversed except on a clear showing of an abuse of that discretion. Holsinger v. Holsinger, 44 Cal.2d 132, 135, 279 P.2d 961.

[2] Plaintiff's first point is that there was no showing of a change of circumstances. Assuming, without deciding, that a showing of a change of circumstances is necessary, there appears to have been a sufficient showing. At the time of the interlocutory decree Craig was only three years and five months old. At the time of the hearing he was nine and a half years old. He is now eleven and a half years old. Since the divorce defendant has remarried and has two children by his new wife. He has visited Craig at all times in accordance with his visitation rights. He has built a room onto his home and furnished it for Craig. Craig told the commissioner he preferred to live at his father's home. During the summer of 1953 while he was living with his father, Craig, on his own, enrolled in a summer school and attended from 8 a. m. to 3 p. m. Plaintiff made it difficult for defendant to visit Craig while the child was in her custody. See Bernstein v. Bernstein, 80 Cal.App.2d 921, 183 P.2d 43; also,

Cornwall v. Cornwall, 108 Cal.App.2d 95, 238 P.2d 8.

[3] As we have mentioned, on stipulation of the parties the trial judge talked to Craig in chambers. The trial judge did not state for the record what the conversation had been. We disapprove of the practice of a judge interviewing a child in chambers without thereafter making a statement for the record of what the child has said in the interview. In Jenkins v. Jenkins, 125 Cal.App.2d 109, 269 P.2d 908, we said that it would be the part of wisdom for the court to make a record of such interviews with children in custody cases in order to protect itself against any suspicion of unfairness on the part of the parent against whom the decision is rendered. However, no request was made for such a statement in the case at bar. Accordingly we must assume that what Craig told the judge, together with the other evidence, was sufficient to warrant a change of custody. Smith v. Smith, 135 Cal.App.2d 100, 286 P.2d 1009.

[4] At the time of the hearing before the commissioner Craig was nine years of age. The following took place when he was called to testify on behalf of defendant:

"Mr. Bronsten [plaintiff's attorney]: I will stipulate he may be sworn.

"The Court: We won't—it isn't necessary to swear the boy in as a witness at his age." Defendant then examined Craig without his having been sworn and plaintiff cross-examined him. Plaintiff asserts the court erred in taking the testimony of Craig without administering an oath to him as required by section 1846 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Obviously Craig should have been sworn. However, plaintiff cannot complain. She at no time made any objection to his testifying without being sworn. She cross-examined him. In her argument at the close of the hearing she relied on the unsworn testimony. She does so in her opening brief here. It is too late to raise the point.

[5, 6] When Craig completed his testimony before the commissioner, the commissioner asked: "Counsel, may I ask the boy one question that he can answer off the record." Counsel did not reply, and no objection to the commissioner doing so was made. A whispered conversation was then had between the boy and the commissioner. The commissioner did not state for the record what the conversation had been, and no request was made for such a statement. Plaintiff contends the procedure was contrary to section 1846 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The conversation should have been stated for the record. It must be assumed that plaintiff consented to the conversation with Craig "off the record." Morris v. Morris, 121 Cal.App.2d 707, 709, 264 P.2d 106; Barr v. Barr, 119 Cal.App.2d 588, 591, 259 P.2d 957. The objection cannot be raised for the first time on appeal.

Finally, plaintiff contends defendant has repeatedly attempted to modify the custody order on the same facts. We have examined the record and find no merit in this contention.

There is no showing that the court abused its discretion in making the order appealed from.

Affirmed.

137 Cal.App.2d 651

Rena S. PHILLIPS, Plaintiff and Appellant,

v.

Mildred C. PHILLIPS, Defendant and Respondent.

Civ. 5232.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Dec. 8, 1955.

Action by ex-wife against ex-husband's subsequent wife, to whom ex-husband had allegedly fraudulently conveyed certain property to evade ex-wife's levy of execution thereon in her attempt to enforce support provisions of her divorce decree, and who had thereupon brought action to quiet title to such property, purportedly served summons upon ex-wife by publication, and obtained judgment, wherein ex-wife sought equitable relief setting aside such judgment, creating and declaring constructive trust and granting declaratory relief. The Superior Court of Riverside County, John G. Gabbert, J., sustained subsequent wife's general and special demurrer without leave to amend and thereupon entered judgment in favor of subsequent wife, and ex-wife appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Mussell, J., held that complaint seeking, inter alia, to set aside judgment in quiet title action and alleging that ex-wife was at all times resident of two specified counties of state and that she did not know of quiet title action, proceedings therein or judgment rendered until fourteen months after filing of such action, could have been amended to state cause of action for equitable relief from extrinsic fraud, and demurrer should not have been sustained without leave to amend.

Judgment reversed with directions.

1. Pleading ⚡225(2)

General rule is that it is abuse of discretion to sustain without leave to amend demurrer to original complaint unless complaint shows on its face that it is incapable of amendment, and this rule applies irrespective of whether leave to amend is requested or not. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 472c.

2. Judgment ⚡443(1)

Judgment may be reopened or vacated in equitable action for extrinsic fraud.

3. Judgment ⚡469(11)

Complaint seeking, inter alia, to set aside judgment based on purported service by publication in quiet title action and alleging that plaintiff was at all times resident of two specified counties of state and that she did not know of quiet title action, proceedings therein or judgment rendered until fourteen months after filing of such action, could have been amended to state cause of action for equitable relief from extrinsic fraud, and demurrer should not have been sustained without leave to amend.

4. Pleading ⚡193(5)

Where complaint could have been amended to state cause of action, demurrer thereto was properly overruled.

5. Judgment ⚡407(2)

Fact that defendant in action to quiet title had filed motion for relief from judgment and that motion was conditionally granted did not preclude such defendant from bringing subsequent suit in equity to vacate such judgment for same cause. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 473.

William G. Junge, Los Angeles, Lance D. Smith, Willard P. Netzley, Puente, and Thomas L. Roquemore, Los Angeles, for appellant.

L. Donald St. Clair, Riverside, for respondent.

MUSSELL, Justice.

This is an action for equitable relief in which plaintiff seeks to set aside a judgment; to create and declare a constructive trust and for declaratory relief. Defendant Mildred C. Phillips demurred to the complaint and her demurrer, which is both general and special, was sustained by the trial court without leave to amend. Plaintiff appeals from the judgment thereupon entered in favor of the defendant Mildred C. Phillips.

[1, 2] The sole question here involved is whether the trial court abused its discretion in sustaining the demurrer without leave to amend. The general rule is that it is an abuse of discretion to sustain without leave to amend a demurrer to an original complaint unless the complaint shows on its face that it is incapable of amendment. Temescal Water Co. v. Department of Public Works, 44 Cal.2d 90, 107, 280 P.2d 1; King v. Mortimer, 83 Cal.App.2d 153, 158, 188 P.2d 502; C. Dudley De Velbiss Co. v. Krintz, 101 Cal.App.2d 612, 617, 225 P.2d 969. This rule applies irrespective of whether leave to amend is requested or not. MacIsaac v. Pozzo, 26 Cal.2d 809, 816, 161 P.2d 449; King v. Mortimer, 83 Cal.App.2d 153, 158, 188 P.2d 502, supra; Code Civ. Proc., Sec. 472c. It is also the rule that a judgment may be reopened or vacated in an equitable action for extrinsic fraud. Giavocchini v. Bank of America Nat. Trust and Savings Ass'n, 39 Cal.App.2d 444, 447, 103 P.2d 603; Baker v. Baker, 217 Cal. 216, 18 P.2d 61. In Metzger v. Vestal, 2 Cal.2d 517, 524, 42 P.2d 67, 70, the court said:

"As types of extrinsic fraud, the courts of appellate jurisdiction of this state have adopted the classic definition, found in United States v. Throckmorton, 98 U.S. 61, 65, 25 L.Ed. 93, in which the Supreme Court of the United States said: "But there is an admitted exception to this general rule in cases where, by reason of something done by the successful party to a suit, there was in fact no adversary trial or decision of the issue in the case. Where the unsuccessful party has been prevented from exhibiting fully his case, by fraud or deception practiced on him by his opponent, as by keeping him away from court, a false promise of a compromise; or where the defendant never had knowledge of the suit, being kept in ignorance by the acts of the plaintiff; or where an attorney fraudulently or without authority assumes to represent a party and connives at his defeat; or where the attorney regularly employed corruptly sells out his client's interest to the other side,—these, and similar cases which show that there has never been a real contest in the trial or hearing of the case, are reasons for which a new suit may be sustained to set aside and annul the former judgment or decree, and open the case for a new and a fair hearing." * * * The gravamen of the rule thus expressed lies in the fact that "the unsuccessful party has been prevented from exhibiting fully his case." Bacon v. Bacon, 150 Cal. 477 [89 P. 317, 322]." (Italics ours.)

It is alleged in the complaint herein, inter alia, that at all times mentioned therein plaintiff has been a resident of the counties of Los Angeles and San Bernardino; that for many years last past defendant Harold B. Phillips owned certain real property therein described; that on February 5,

1946, plaintiff obtained a final decree of divorce from Harold B. Phillips under the terms of which he was required to pay plaintiff certain sums as support and maintenance for herself and two minor children; that on or about May 16, 1952, plaintiff notified defendant Harold Phillips to make the payments specified in said final decree; that on or about May 27, 1952, Harold Phillips conveyed the property involved to his then wife, Mildred C. Phillips; that plaintiff is informed and believes and therefore alleges that said conveyance was made without consideration and for the sole purpose of defrauding her; that plaintiff on or about January 26, 1953, obtained an execution in said action and levied upon the property; that on or about May 10, 1953, Mildred Phillips filed an action against plaintiff and Harold Phillips in Riverside County, being action number 56611; that said action was brought to quiet title to the property involved; that the summons therein was purportedly served upon plaintiff Rena S. Phillips by publication, although the said Mildred Phillips, plaintiff in said Riverside action, at all times knew that said Rena S. Phillips could be found; that on or about December 15, 1953, the decree "removing cloud of levy of execution" and quieting title in said action number 56611 became final, unknown to Rena S. Phillips; that she at no time had any notice, directly or indirectly, as to the filing of said action or as to any proceedings taken therein until on or about July 19, 1954, at which time her attorney was notified of the restraining order and judgment therein; that immediately thereafter she filed a motion in said action to set aside the judgment and said motion was granted by the court on condition that she deposit a bond in the sum of $5,000; that she is without means or funds to post said bond; that the conveyance by Harold Phillips to his wife was executed with the intent to hinder, delay and defraud Rena Phillips; that by reason of the facts alleged, said Rena Phillips has been prevented from asserting her defenses to the Riverside action, number 56611, and has been prevented from levying execution. In the second cause of action plaintiff Rena Phillips alleged that the sum of $5,900, with interest, is due her under the Los Angeles decree and in a third cause of action she alleges that Mildred Phillips is holding the property involved in trust for the benefit of Harold Phillips; that a controversy exists between plaintiff and defendants, and that the court should make a declaration with the respective interests of the property.

[3] It does not appear that the complaint could not have been amended to state a cause of action for the equitable relief sought. It is evident from the record that plaintiff Rena Phillips was not personally served with summons in the action brought by Mildred C. Phillips. The affidavit for publication of summons shows that Rena S. Phillips could possibly be reached at a Los Angeles address. It is alleged in the complaint that Rena Phillips was at all times a resident of Los Angeles and San Bernardino counties and that she did not know that a judgment had been entered against her until July 19, 1954. These and other facts alleged indicate that a cause of action might be stated under the rules announced in the foregoing decisions and under the definition of extrinsic fraud quoted in Metzger v. Vestal, 2 Cal.2d 525, 42 P.2d 70, 71, supra.

[4] No abuse of discretion is shown in the trial court's ruling on the demurrer as to counts two and three of the complaint. The demurrer should have been overruled since the complaint could be amended to state a cause of action. Shook v. Pearson, 99 Cal.App.2d 348, 351, 221 P.2d 757.

[5] Defendant Mildred Phillips argues that the demurrer was properly sustained on the grounds that there was another action pending for the same cause. This argument is based on the allegations in the complaint that Rena Phillips filed a motion under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure and that her motion was conditionally granted. However, it is held in Baker v. Baker, 217 Cal. 216, 218, 18 P.2d 61, supra, that section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure has never been considered as an exclusive method for the exercise of the equity jurisdiction nor as an adequate substitute for the right to proceed by action; that it is a cumulative remedy, and does not displace the remedy in equity; and that an adverse decision on such a motion does not necessarily bar a subsequent suit to vacate the judgment for the same cause.

The judgment is reversed with directions to give plaintiff a reasonable time within which to amend her complaint.

BARNARD, P. J., and GRIFFIN, J., concur.

137 Cal.App.2d 472

Martha Rachel STILES, as Administratrix of the Estate of Laurel Ann Stiles, Deceased, and Martha Rachel Stiles, Individually, Plaintiffs and Respondents,

v.

AMERICAN TRUST COMPANY, a Corporation, as Administrator of the Estate of Dave Holder, Deceased, Defendant and Appellant.

William Laverne DUNN, Plaintiff and Respondent and Appellant,

v.

AMERICAN TRUST COMPANY, a Corporation, as Administrator of the Estate of Dave Holder, Deceased, Defendant and Appellant and Respondent.

Civ. 8646.

District Court of Appeal, Third District,
Division Sacramento, California.

Dec. 2, 1955.

Consolidated actions for injuries arising out of airplane crash. The Superior Court, Mendocino County, Lilburn Gibson, J., entered judgments from which appeals were taken. The District Court of Appeal, Van Dyke, P. J., held, inter alia, that where a pilot promised a motorist a ride in his airplane in consideration for motorist's driving pilot about on business and while they were driving to airport, they came upon a friend of motorist and pilot acquiesced in motorist's suggestion that her friend also be taken up but neither such friend nor anyone on his behalf gave any consideration to pilot for ride, motorist's friend was a "guest" in airplane and, under statute, he could not maintain action for injuries based upon pilot's negligence.

Judgment from which a plaintiff appealed affirmed, defendant's appeal from other judgment dismissed.

1. Negligence $\S$ 221/2

Where a pilot promised a motorist a ride in his airplane in consideration for motorist's driving pilot about on business and while they were driving to airport, they came upon a friend of motorist whom pilot did not know, and pilot acquiesced in motorist's suggestion that her friend also be taken up but neither such friend nor any one on his behalf gave any consideration to pilot for ride, motorist's friend was a "guest" in airplane and, under statute, he could not maintain action for injuries based upon pilot's negligence. Public Utilities Code, $\S$ 21406.

2. Appeal and Error $\S$ 133

Where motion ordering judgment in accordance with motion for directed verdict after erroneous denial of motion is granted and judgment entered accordingly, appeal is to be taken from judgment and not from order granting motion. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. $\S\S$ 630, 963.

3. Judgment $\S$ 197

Where motion for judgment in accordance with motion for directed verdict after erroneous denial of such motion for directed verdict is denied, there is no judgment which can be entered and case may be reset for trial. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., $\S\S$ 630, 963.

4. Appeal and Error $\S$ 85

Appealable judgments and orders are fixed by statute. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. $\S\S$ 630, 963.

5. Appeal and Error $\S$ 133

Statute defining appealable judgments and orders from superior court grants no appeal from order denying motion made pursuant to statute providing for ordering judgment in accordance with motion for directed verdict after erroneous denial of motion, where no verdict has been returned. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. §§ 630, 963.

Burke & Rawles, Ukiah, for respondents.

Rowland R. King and David B. Lombardi, San Francisco, for respondent and appellant Dunn.

Forrest A. Betts of Betts, Ely & Loomis, Los Angeles, Mannon, Brazier & Bell, Ukiah, James A. Williams, Los Angeles, of counsel, for appellant American Trust Co.

VAN DYKE, Presiding Justice.

These are appeals in consolidated actions for damages arising out of an airplane accident in which the respondents Stiles and Dunn suffered serious personal injuries and the infant daughter of Mrs. Stiles was instantly killed. Dave Holder, deceased, was the owner and pilot of the plane in which respondents were riding when it fell shortly after taking off at the Willits Airport.

Respondent Stiles and her baby lived with her mother in Willits. The deceased, Mr. Holder, was a friend of the family. He lived in San Mateo but owned a ranch near Willits, upon which one of the respondent Stiles' married sisters and her husband lived. This sister testified that when Holder came to Willits it was customary for her to use her mother's car to drive him around but that he never paid, nor was expected to pay, for such service. On the day of the accident Holder flew from Belmont to Willits. Upon arrival he telephoned respondent Stiles and asked if her sister was there. Respondent Stiles testified: "I told him no. And then I asked if I could help him, or what he wanted? And he said that he wanted my sister to come up and take him around town some. And I asked him if he wanted me to, if he needed me to come and do it? And he said yes. And he told me if I would that he would take me in the airplane, take me for a ride in the airplane afterwards. And so I told him I would be there in a few minutes." Respondent Stiles then took her small baby and drove her mother's car down town to meet Holder, who then drove to the residence of Mr. Stansberry, whom he wished to see about trading some horses. Respondent Stiles and the baby accompanied him. Mr. Stansberry was not at home, and after a few minutes' conversation with his wife, Holder returned to the car where respondent Stiles and the baby were waiting. He then started to drive to the airport. En route they overtook respondent Dunn who was on foot. He had been out to call upon respondent Stiles, but, of course, had not found her at home. Holder stopped the car and picked up respondent Dunn whom he had never met. The two were introduced by respondent Stiles and they all proceeded to the airport, where respondent Stiles testified Holder asked her to go up with him. Respondent Stiles then asked Holder "if there was enough air" to also take respondent Dunn, and Holder replied that there was. After this conversation, Holder and the respondents boarded the plane. Respondent Stiles held the baby. Holder started the motor, taxied down the runway, and took off. Shortly after leveling off at an altitude of about 75 feet, the plane fell to the earth and crashed into a tree. Holder and the baby were killed and the respondents were injured.

Each of the respondents brought an action for damages against the appellant American Trust Company as the administrator of the estate of Dave Holder, deceased, based upon the alleged negligence, wilful misconduct, and intoxication of Holder. The two actions were consolidated for trial before a jury. The trial court directed verdicts in favor of the defendant on the causes of action predicated on intoxication and on respondent Dunn's cause of action founded on negligence. On other counts the jury disagreed and a mistrial was declared. However, the parties stipulated that it be deemed that the jury had performed its duty and returned directed verdicts. Accordingly, judgment was entered in favor of appellant American Trust Company on the causes of action based on intoxication and on respondent Dunn's cause of action based on negligence. It is conceded on this appeal that the trial court properly directed verdicts on the causes of action based on intoxication, but respondent Dunn has appealed from that portion of the judgment in favor of appellant American Trust Company on his cause of action based on negligence. We will first consider this appeal.

Dunn contends that the trial court erred in holding, as a matter of law, that he was a guest and therefore barred from maintaining an action based on negligence, by virtue of Section 15 of the State Aeronautics Commission Act (now Section 21406 of the Public Utilities Code), which provides:

"No guest riding in or upon any aircraft without giving compensation for such ride shall have, nor shall any other person have, any right of action for civil damages against the airman flying such aircraft or against any other person otherwise legally liable for the conduct of such airman on account of personal injury to or the death of such guest during such ride, unless the plaintiff in any such action establishes that such injury or death proximately resulted from the intoxication or wilful misconduct of said airman."

[1] There was no evidence from which it could be reasonably found that respondent Dunn, or any one on his behalf, gave "compensation" to the deceased Dave Holder for respondent Dunn's ride. As noted above, they met for the first time that morning when respondent Stiles introduced them. Respondent Stiles' furnishing Holder with the use of her mother's car could not constitute "compensation" for the ride for respondent Dunn. At the time that Holder, according to Stiles, promised to give respondent Stiles a ride if she would drive him around, none of the parties contemplated that, unforeseeably, respondent Dunn would accompany them. There was no evidence from which it could be inferred that the use of the car was conditioned upon Holder giving a ride to respondent Dunn or any one other than respondent Stiles. There is no evidence that respondent Dunn expected to suffer detriment from, or to confer any benefit upon, Holder. The arrangement between Holder and respondent Stiles for the use of the car was in no way connected with respondent Dunn. It was merely by chance that he joined them. Holder did no more than acquiesce in respondent Stiles' suggestion that respondent Dunn also be taken up. The trial court correctly held that, as a matter of law, respondent Dunn was a guest. Therefore, it correctly directed a verdict on respondent Dunn's cause of action based on negligence.

As already noted, the jury disagreed and a mistrial was declared. After the jury's discharge, appellant American Trust Company made a motion for judgment pursuant to Section 630 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which provides:

"When a motion for a directed verdict, which should have been granted, has been denied or for any reason not granted, and the jury for any reason, has been discharged without having rendered a verdict, then within 10 days after the discharge of the jury, the court on its own motion, or, after said 10-day period, upon motion, notice of which was given within said 10-day period, may order judgment to be entered in accordance with the motion for a directed verdict. * * *

[2-5] Appellant American Trust Company appeals from the "Judgment and Order" denying said motion as to the causes of action based on wilful misconduct and as to respondent Stiles' causes of action based on negligence. In this case there was not, and could not be, a judgment from which an appeal would lie. If the motion had been granted, then judgment would have been entered accordingly. In such case, the appeal would have to be taken from the judgment and not from the order granting the motion. Costa v. Regents of Univ. of California, 103 Cal.App.2d 491, 495, 229 P.2d 867. However, if the motion is denied, there is no judgment which can be entered and the case may be reset for trial. Herein, the motion was denied by minute order. Although, under Section 963 of the Code of Civil Procedure, an appeal may be taken from an order denying a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, no such provision is made in respect to an order denying a motion for judgment where no verdict is returned. Appealable judgments and orders are fixed by statute. Here the statute defining appealable judgments and orders grants no appeal from an order denying a motion made pursuant to the provisions of Section 630 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The judgment appealed from by appellant Dunn, dated January 19, 1954, decreeing said appellant take nothing by the first cause of action alleged in his amended complaint is affirmed. The appeals of American Trust Company, a corporation, are dismissed.

PEEK and SCHOTTKY, JJ., concur.

137 Cal.App.2d 450

Jacob (Jay) PALEY, Petitioner,

v.

The SUPERIOR COURT of the State of California, IN AND FOR the COUNTY OF LOS ANGELES, Respondent, Bank of America National Trust and Savings Association, Executor of the Estate of Lillian Paley, Deceased, Real Party in Interest.

Civ. 21272.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 3, California.

Dec. 2, 1955.

Hearing Denied Jan. 25, 1956.

Proceeding on petition for alternative writ of mandate to require Superior Court to direct petitioner's deceased wife's attorney to answer certain questions upon deposition. The District Court of Appeal, Ashburn, J. pro tem., held that husband who, under succession statute communitizing property brought into California from common law state, could get one-half of deceased's wife's property, within class described by statute, and could be required to give to wife's estate one-half of his separate property, was in privity with estate which would absorb or release half of such property, and therefore attorney-client privilege would not prevail in husband's action against wife's executor for declaratory relief and wife's attorney could be compelled to answer upon deposition questions as to communications (made by testatrix in connection with preparation and execution of her will) which would tend to support husband's claim that there had been an oral agreement transmuting property within statute into separate property.

Order accordingly.

1. Mandamus ⇨40

Mandamus is appropriate remedy to compel trial court to require witness to testify.

2. Husband and Wife ⇨266

Where wife left will disposing of all of property which she was entitled to dispose of by will, whether such property were her separate property or community property of her husband and herself, and husband, claiming that there had been an oral agreement transmuting community property into separate property, brought action against wife's executor for declaratory relief, evidence with regard to such alleged oral agreement was material and admissible.

3. Witnesses ⇨199(4)

Attorney-client privilege does not survive client's death when matter of his conversations or instructions arises in will contests, petitions to determine heirship, petitions to construe an ambiguous will, or any other type of controversy involving only heirs or next of kin and legatees or devisees of client.

4. Courts ⇨92

Language not necessary to ruling, but responsive to argument presented by counsel and probably intended for guidance of court and attorneys upon new trial, could not be put aside as mere dictum.

5. Witnesses ⇨198(1)

Mere fact that both parties claim under deceased client does not render communications made by client to his attorney admissible. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 1881.

6. Depositions ⇨1

The purpose of a deposition proceeding is to develop facts bearing upon existing or potential issues, and question as to constitutionality of Probate Code section did not arise upon such proceeding. Probate Code, § 201.5; West's Ann.Code Civ. Proc. § 2021, subd. 6.

7. Husband and Wife ⇨247

Probate Code section communitizing property brought into California from a common-law state is strictly a succession statute and does not convert into community property, or otherwise reclassify during lifetime of spouses, property falling within its description, but upon death of either spouse it effects an automatic reclassification to community property for purpose of succession. Probate Code, § 201.5.

8. Witnesses ⇨202

Husband who, under succession statute communitizing property brought into California from common-law state, could get one-half of deceased wife's property within class described by statute and could be required to give to wife's estate one-half of his separate property, was in privity with wife's estate, and therefore attorney-client privilege would not prevail in husband's action against wife's executor for declaratory relief, and wife's attorney could be compelled to answer questions as to communications made by testatrix in connection with preparation and execution of her will which would tend to support husband's claim that there had been an oral agreement transmuting community property and property within statute into separate property. Probate Code, § 201.5; West's Ann. Code Civ.Proc. § 2021, subd. 6.

9. Discovery ⇨28

Policy of California is one of liberality in matter of discovery.

10. Witnesses ⇨198(1)

The attorney-client privilege is grounded on public policy, and is to be strictly construed, since it suppresses relevant facts that may be necessary for just decision.

11. Witnesses ⇨183½

Testimony as to oral agreement with deceased person is subject to closest scrutiny.

Wright, Wright, Green & Wright, S. Earl Wright, Loeb and Loeb, Herman F. Selvin, Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Harold W. Kennedy, County Counsel, and Wm. E. Lamoreaux, Deputy County Counsel, Los Angeles, for respondent.

Fox, Goldman & Kagon, Stanley E. Fox, Beverly Hills, Brady, Nossaman & Walker, Walter L. Nossaman, Joseph L. Wyatt, Jr., Los Angeles, for real party in interest.

ASHBURN, Justice pro tem.

[1] This case involves certain aspects of the problem of the extent of survival after death of a testator's privilege against disclosure by his attorney of confidential communications made by the testator in connection with the preparation and execution of his will. Petitioner Jacob Paley seeks a writ of mandate directing the superior court to require his deceased wife's attorney, Stanley E. Fox, Esq., to answer certain questions upon deposition which the trial court held objectionable as calling for privileged matter, for that reason sustaining objections to said questions. If petitioner's ultimate position is sound mandamus is an appropriate remedy. Brown v. Superior Court, 34 Cal.2d 559, 561, 212 P.2d 878; Carnation Co. v. Superior Court, 96 Cal. App.2d 138, 141, 214 P.2d 552; Ahern v. Superior Court, 112 Cal.App.2d 27, 30, 245 P.2d 568.

It appears that petitioner and his wife, Lillian Paley, were married in 1906 and resided together in the State of Pennsylvania until 1936 when they moved to California, living in this state until the wife's death on January 2, 1954. She left a will dated December 5, 1952 which bears the signatures of Mr. Fox, his secretary and another employee of his firm as attesting witnesses. This will was admitted to probate and Bank of America National Trust and Savings Association was duly appointed and has qualified and is acting as executor thereof. The will makes various specific bequests and leaves the residue of the estate to certain specified beneficiaries, to the exclusion of petitioner. The instrument contains this language: "Third: It is my intention, hereby, to dispose of all property, real or personal, which I am entitled to dispose of by Will, whether said property be my separate property or the community property of my husband and myself."

On or about October 15, 1954 Mr. Paley brought an action against the executor in the superior court seeking declaratory relief. The complaint in paragraph V alleges the marriage and residences as above stated. Further that Mrs. Paley left a substantial amount of personalty which was at all times her separate property, standing in her own name; that it was acquired during marriage in Pennsylvania or with the proceeds of such acquisitions. Defendant's answer alleges that all real and personal property left by decedent was acquired during marriage by gift, bequest, devise or descent, or the rents, issues or profits thereof. Paragraph VI of the complaint alleges that Mr. Paley was at the time of his wife's death and now is the owner of considerable personal property which is his separate estate standing in his own name; that same was acquired partly before and partly after marriage while domiciled in Pennsylvania; that plaintiff has no personal property otherwise acquired. The answer avers that plaintiff acquired a substantial amount of personal property after marriage while domiciled outside the State of California, "which would not have been the separate property of plaintiff if acquired while domiciled in this state," the extent thereof being unknown to defendant.¹ The quoted language uncovers the major controversy between the parties. It points to section 201.5 Probate Code, which says: "Upon the death of either husband or wife one-half of all personal property, wherever situated, heretofore or hereafter acquired after marriage by either husband or wife, or both, while domiciled elsewhere, which would not have been the separate property of either if acquired while domiciled in this State, shall belong to the surviving spouse; the other one-half is subject to the testamentary disposition of the decedent, and in the absence thereof goes to the surviving spouse, subject to the debts of the decedent and to administration and disposal under the provisions of Division III of this code."² Paragraph VII of the complaint alleges an oral agreement between the spouses, made in California while resident here, to the effect that all property acquired by either of them or standing in his or her name was and should be separate property of the one acquiring the same or in whose name it might stand. This allegation is denied by defendant. The complaint then defines in paragraph IX the existing controversy and defendant by answer and cross-complaint gives a slightly different version of it. As appears from the pleadings and the briefs herein these are the questions in dispute. 1. Was there any community property of this marriage? 2. If so, was there an agreement transmuting it and any quasi-community property into separate property as alleged by plaintiff? 3. Was the personalty standing in Jacob Paley's name at time of Lillian's death quasi-community and, if so, did she have the right to make testamentary disposition of one-half of same under section 201.5 Probate Code? 4. Was the personal property standing in the wife's name at her death quasi-community, and, if so, does plaintiff succeed to one-half thereof under said section 201.5, notwithstanding her leaving same to others in her will?

In June 1955 plaintiff commenced the taking of the deposition of Mr. Fox under section 2021, subdivision 6, Code of Civil Procedure, upon the ground that he is the only witness who can establish certain facts material to the issue. Upon advice of counsel he relied upon an asserted privilege with respect to any conversations with Mrs. Paley concerning the preparation of her will and other professional matters. There have been two proceedings before the superior court seeking to compel answers. As a result of the first one the witness was ordered to answer certain questions and objection was sustained to one other. The deposition was resumed and Mr. Fox then testified that he acted for Mrs. Paley throughout the whole process of preparation and drafting of her will; that within a period of two years prior to execution of her will he had conversations with his client about the disposition of property by her will; that no third person was present at any of those conversations; that during the same period he had many conversations with her about other matters of a confidential nature; that they had conversations about the nature, extent, description or identification of property which she claimed to own or over which she had or claimed the right of testamentary disposition. Mr. Fox refused to answer the question to which objection had been sustained, namely: "Q. Will you please state the dates involved, the places at which they were held, the persons present and the substance of what was said at any conversation or discussion you may ever have had with Mrs. Paley as to the nature, extent or testamentary disposition of her property?" The witness having been asked and having refused to answer certain additional questions, the matter was presented the second time to the court. That series of questions is typified by the following.

1. Counsel appropriately assume that Pennsylvania does not have any community property system. 41 C.J.S., Husband and Wife, § 462c, p. 987.

2. We will for convenience designate such holdings as quasi-community property.

"Q. Did Mrs. Paley ever say to you, or in your presence and hearing at any time, in substance or effect, that there was no community property of the marriage between herself and Mr. Paley?

"Q. Did Mrs. Paley at any time ever say to you, or in your presence, or hearing, that all of the property which Mr. Paley had was his own separate property, in substance or effect?

"Q. Did Mrs. Paley ever say to you, or in your presence and hearing, in substance or effect, that she and Mr. Paley had years before had an understanding or agreement to the effect that his property would be his separate property and her property would be her separate property? * * *

"Q. Will you state, Mr. Fox, the substance of the conversations or discussions that you had with Mrs. Paley relating to the nature, extent, identification or disposition or proposed disposition of any property by her?"

The objections to all questions were sustained upon the grounds (1) that the will is not ambiguous and hence oral evidence not admissible or material and (2) that petitioner is a stranger to the will and the subject matter of the conversations is privileged as to him. Petitioner herein challenges both of these conclusions; respondent and the real party in interest stoutly assert that they reflect sound law.

The will on its face is not ambiguous. It declares an intention to dispose of all property over which testatrix has testamentary control. "It is my intention, hereby, to dispose of all property, real or personal, which I am entitled to dispose of by Will"; the addition of the phrase "whether said property be my separate property or the community property of my husband and myself" merely operates by way of description; it does not on its face narrow the scope of the declared and all-inclusive intention. But it is necessary to apply every will to the subject matter upon which it is to operate. To that end extrinsic evidence is always necessary. 57 Am.Jur. section 1041, page 676: "A moment's reflection will show that in giving effect to any will, even the simplest and clearest, some extrinsic evidence must be admitted to identify the persons and property referred to in the will and to enable the court to apply the words of the will to the matters to which it relates, and this necessity is expressly or impliedly recognized in many decisions." Wigmore on Evidence, section 2470, page 227 says: "The truth had finally to be recognized that words always need interpretation; that the process of interpretation inherently and invariably means the ascertainment of the association between words and external objects; and that this makes inevitable a free resort to extrinsic matters for applying and enforcing the document. 'Words must be translated into things and facts.' Instead of the fallacious notion that 'there should be interpretation only when it is needed', the fact is that there must always be interpretation. Perhaps the range of search need not be extensive, and perhaps the application of the document will be apparent at the first view; but there must always be a traveling out of the document, a comparison of its words with people and things. The deed must be applied 'physically to the ground.'

* * * Once freed from the primitive formalism which views the document as a self-contained and self-operative formula, we can fully appreciate the modern principle that the words of a document are never anything but indices to extrinsic things, and that therefore all the circumstances must be considered which go to make clear the sense of the words,—that is, their associations with things." See also annotation in 94 A.L.R. at page 52.

[2] The existence of each type of property—separate, community and quasi-community—is in issue; likewise the question of conversion into separate property by oral agreement. The will furnishes no clue to solution of the questions thus arising. Extrinsic evidence is indispensable to administration of the estate, for the court must ascertain what property is subject to its jurisdiction. The issue of what property was subject to decedent's power of testamentary disposition is the heart of the case. It follows that any questions put to the witness bearing upon the status of any property claimed by decedent or her executor go to the basic issue. And, of course, those questions search for evidence upon a material issue. If perchance the eliciting of such evidence raises a latent ambiguity in the will it can be removed by parol evidence. This is well settled. 26 Cal.Jur. § 208, p. 892; 18 Cal.Jur.2d § 282, p. 774; In re Estate of Wolf, 128 Cal.App. 305, 310, 17 P.2d 1052; In re Estate of Donnellan, 164 Cal. 14, 19, 127 P. 166; In re Estate of Greenwald, 19 Cal.App.2d 291, 296, 65 P.2d 70. But the existence of an ambiguity, latent or patent, is not important at bar, because of the necessity of determining the identity and quality of estate property (authorities supra) as a basis for going ahead with administration on the probate side of the court. The evidence sought by the questions under consideration is material.

[3] The subject of privilege presents a more difficult problem. The rule is well established in this state, as elsewhere, that the privilege does not survive the testator's death when the matter of his conversations or instructions arises in will contests, petitions to determine heirship, petitions to construe an ambiguous will, or any other type of controversy involving only the heirs or next of kin and the legatees or devisees of the testator. Generally to this effect are In re Estate of Dominici, 151 Cal. 181, 90 P. 448; In re Wax's Estate, 106 Cal. 343, 348, 39 P. 624; In re Estate of Nelson, 132 Cal. 182, 188, 64 P. 294; In re Mullin's Estate, 110 Cal. 252, 42 P. 645; 58 Am.Jur. § 505, p. 283; 70 C.J. § 587, p. 438; 64 A.L.R. 185 annotation; 2 A.L.R.2d 659 and 661, annotation. Though varying explanations of the reason for this rule have been given, it is a court made principle based upon considerations of public policy, In re Estate of Dominici, supra, 151 Cal. at page 186, 90 P. 448; City & County of San Francisco v. Superior Court, 37 Cal. 2d 227, 235, 231 P.2d 26, 25 A.L.R.2d 1418, and is limited to controversies between persons in privity with the testator's estate. Between persons claiming under testator and others who are not in privity with his estate the privilege survives. This is a generally accepted proposition. 64 A.L.R. 191, annotation; 2 A.L.R.2d 664, annotation. The rule is usually stated in terms of application to "strangers" or persons claiming adversely to the estate. But the question of who fall within this category is involved in some obscurity, especially in California. Whether one who claims under contract with or conveyance from the testator is a "stranger" within the rule has met with diverse answers in the courts. The following cases³ hold that such a person is not a stranger: Phillips v. Chase, 201 Mass. 444, 87 N.E. 755; Eicholtz v. Grunewald, 313 Mich. 666, 21 N.W.2d 914; Warner v. Kerr, 216 Mich. 139, 184 N.W.

3. This list is by no means complete, merely illustrative.

425; In re Estate of Brzowsky, 267 Wis. 510, 66 N.W.2d 145, 67 N.W.2d 384; Hayes v. Pennock, Tex.Civ.App., 192 S.W.2d 169; Middletown Trust Co. v. Crowell, 89 Conn. 290, 93 A. 785; Johnson v. Antry, Mo., 5 S.W.2d 405; Boyd v. Kilmer, 285 Pa. 533, 132 A. 709; Cummings v. Sherman, 16 Wash.2d 88, 132 P.2d 998. The leading case on this subject is Russell v. Jackson (1851), 9 Hare 387; 68 Eng.Reports 558. The contrary result was reached in In re Smith's Estate, 263 Wis. 441, 57 N.W.2d 727; Emerson v. Scott, 39 Tex.Civ.App. 65, 87 S.W. 369; Flack v. Brewster, 107 Kan. 63, 190 P. 616. Numerous other authorities supporting both sides of the proposition are cited in the annotations in 64 A.L.R. and 2 A.L.R.2d, above cited, and in supplemental citations.

In California the first case on the subject appears to be In re Bauer's Estate, 79 Cal. 304, 312, 21 P. 759. That was a contest over final distribution, decedent's son claiming as sole devisee and the widow under a homestead declaration upon alleged community property. It was held error to exclude testimony of the attorney who prepared the declaration of homestead. At page 312 of 79 Cal., at page 761 of 21 P. the court said: "One other point remains to be considered. The attorney at law who drew the declaration of homestead, and was at the time apparently acting for the deceased and his wife in the matter, was interrogated, on behalf of contestant, as to whether the recital in the declaration of homestead was explained to Mrs. Bauer, if she understood it, what explanation was given, and what she knew about the matter. This was objected to on the ground that it called for a privileged communication between attorney and client, and was sustained, and excepted to. The objection should have been overruled. When two persons address a lawyer as their common agent, their communications to the lawyer, as far as concerns strangers, will be privileged, but as to themselves they stand on the same footing as to the lawyer, and either can compel him to testify against the other as to their negotiations." In effect the holding was that the son stood in the position of the deceased father with respect to the matter of privilege. Concerning this case the court said in Smith v. Smith, 173 Cal. 725, 733, 161 P. 495, 498: "It will be remembered that in the Bauer Case the contest was between a son asserting title to property as an heir and his mother claiming under a homestead, and it was held that the statements of his father and mother, made to the attorney who prepared the declaration of homestead, were not privileged."

Smith v. Smith, supra, was an action to quiet title, etc., brought by the sons of Uriah Smith, deceased, against their step-mother Ella R. Dooley Smith. Plaintiffs claimed under two deeds which their father had placed in escrow to be delivered to them upon his death. Later he conveyed the same properties and others to Ella R. Dooley who thereupon married him. One of the issues was that of knowledge on her part of the escrowed deeds at the time she received her conveyance. Attorney Russell, who drew her deed, testified to a conversation with her and Uriah in which the fact of the existence of those escrowed deeds was mentioned. It was claimed that this was error as the conversation was privileged. The court said, 173 Cal. at page 732, 161 P. at page 497: "It is asserted also that Mr. Russell was attorney and common agent for both grantor and grantee named in the deed which he prepared, and that therefore the communications made to him when they were present were privileged so far as plaintiffs were concerned. There was no proof that Mr. Russell was acting for Mrs. Dooley. He was employed by Mr. Smith and acted under his orders. Nevertheless appellant contends that the statements of Mr. Russell come within the rule of privilege applying where, for example, an attorney acts for a husband and wife in preparing a declaration of homestead. In re Bauer's Estate, 79 Cal. 304-312, 21 P. 759. But that rule only operates against strangers. The sons claiming title under the deeds which had been placed in escrow were not within that category. 'It is generally considered that the rule of privilege does not apply in litigation, after the client's death, between parties, all of whom claim under the client.' 40 Cyc. p. 2380. Among the citations supporting this text are Kern v. Kern, 154 Ind. 29, 55 N.E. 1004, Phillips v. Chase, 201 Mass. 444-448, 87 N.E. 755, 131 Am.St.Rep. 406, and Glover v. Patten, 165 U.S. 394-406, 17 S.Ct. 411, 41 L.Ed. 760." Then follows the observation about the Bauer case which we have quoted. This ruling seems to rest upon the theory that the sons, claiming under the deeds, were not strangers but were in privity with decedent and his estate.

[4, 5] Collette v. Sarrasin, 184 Cal. 283, 193 P. 571, throws considerable doubt upon this conclusion however. It was an action brought by the sole heir of a decedent to have his grant deed to defendant declared to be a mortgage. The attorney who drew the deed was precluded by court rulings from giving any testimony as to the transaction, and defendant's attorney was prevented from making any offer of proof or any statement of what he expected to prove by the witness. The court, in reversing, held that the record as made did not disclose whether the relationship of attorney and client existed in fact or whether there was any confidential communication; that the rulings were reversible error. The court then added: "The mere fact that both parties claim under the deceased does not, in our opinion, make the communication admissible, for under our Code (section 1881, Code Civ.Proc.) the privileged communication cannot be received unless that privilege is directly or inferentially waived by the client." 184 Cal. at page 289, 193 P. at page 573. Though Smith v. Smith is not mentioned this seems to be directed toward the argument presented by respondent in his petition for hearing in Supreme Court, which sought to explain away the Smith decision. The quoted language clearly was not necessary to the ruling, but, as it was responsive to an argument presented by counsel and probably intended for guidance of court and attorneys upon a new trial, it probably cannot be put aside as mere dictum. Cf. People's Lumber Co. v. Gillard, 5 Cal.App. 435, 439, 90 P. 556; Chamberlain Co. v. Allis-Chalmers Mfg. Co., 74 Cal.App.2d 941, 943, 170 P.2d 85; 13 Cal.Jur.2d § 135, p. 666; People v. Bateman, 57 Cal.App.2d 585, 587, 135 P.2d 192.

Counsel have cited no later cases on this point and we have found none. Neither the Smith case nor Collette dealt with the administration of a decedent's estate; the Bauer decision did pass upon that very problem. But in all three instances the effect of death upon the privilege was expressly or impliedly presented. And we must assume that the Collette decision represents presently prevailing law of this state. It merely abolishes the concept that the privity of estate created by an inter vivos transaction is enough to do away with the privilege of attorney and client and leaves unimpaired the principle that in probate matters privity with the decedent's estate under administration is enough to render the privilege inoperative. As applied to the facts at bar it will appear that the necessary privity exists in at least one aspect of the litigation.

[6] The dispute over the existence and ultimate ownership of quasi-community property appears to be the major one in this case; and it extends to property standing in the name of each of the spouses. Counsel for petitioner contend that section 201.5 is unconstitutional when applied to separate property brought by the surviving husband from the State of Pennsylvania. But we apprehend that that question does not arise upon a deposition proceeding, the purpose of which is to develop facts bearing upon existing or potential issues. Moreover, one of the issues in this case is the existence of quasi-community property in the name of decedent and petitioner's succession to one-half of same; and no claim of unconstitutionality of section 201.5 is made with relation to that particular property.

[7, 8] It is established law that section 201.5 does not convert into community property or otherwise reclassify during lifetime of the two spouses property falling within its description and brought here from a common-law state. It is strictly a succession statute and has been upheld on that basis. In re Miller, 31 Cal.2d 191, 196, 187 P.2d 722; In re Estate of Perkins, 21 Cal.2d 561, 570, 134 P.2d 231; Logan v.

Forster, 114 Cal.App.2d 587, 597, 250 P.2d 730; 16 Cal.Jur.2d § 52, p. 101. Separate property of either spouse brought here from Pennsylvania remained during their joint lives the separate property of each, but upon death of either spouse (assuming constitutionality of application of 201.5 to the survivor's separate property) it was automatically reclassified as community property (if fitting the description of 201.5) for purpose of succession. The spouse who takes one-half under this section regardless of the will does so by succession or inheritance and irrespective of whether that half goes through the probate court. If Mr. Paley gets one-half of the wife's property within this class, or if her estate takes one-half of his separate property so reclassified for purpose of succession, it would be quite illogical to hold that he, Mr. Paley, is not in privity with the estate which absorbs or releases half of such property. He is in no different situation from one who takes as heir or legatee. And the rationale of the decisions which hold that the privilege does not prevail in a controversy between persons claiming under the decedent or through his or her estate is fully applicable here.

This issue of quasi-community property having opened the privilege it is opened fully as to conversations about the preparation of the will or the property upon which it is to operate. As Professor Wigmore says in 8 Wigmore on Evidence (3d Ed.) section 2314, page 613: "The confidence is not apportionable by a reference to what the testator might have intended had he known or reflected on certain facts which now bear against the will"; indeed, the privilege covering conversations about preparation or execution of the will or its subject property is not apportionable at all. The inquiry upon deposition as to the existence and extent of quasi-community property naturally leads to the question of the existence of property strictly community and the alleged oral agreement between the spouses transmuting into separate property of each spouse the assets standing in his or her name. Not only should questions concerning the existence and extent of quasi-community property be answered but also those which relate to community property and the claimed oral agreement of transmutation. Certain additional considerations emphasize the soundness of this conclusion.

[9-11] The policy of this state is one of liberality in the matter of discovery, Union Trust Co. of San Diego v. Superior Court, 11 Cal.2d 449, 459-460, 81 P.2d 150, 118 A.L.R. 259, a policy which has been implemented by the deposition statutes which in turn are to be liberally construed. Ahern v. Superior Court, 112 Cal.App.2d 27, 30, 245 P.2d 568. Since the attorney-client privilege is grounded on public policy, it "is strictly construed, since it suppresses relevant facts that may be necessary for a just decision." City & County of San Francisco v. Superior Court, supra, 37 Cal. 2d 227, 234, 231 P.2d 26, 30, 25 A.L.R.2d 1418. Petitioner's claim of an agreement embraces only an oral one. Normally the evidence of such an understanding is within the keeping of the two spouses. While it may be established circumstantially, In re Estate of Raphael, 91 Cal.App.2d 931, 939, 206 P.2d 391, the primary evidence would naturally come from Mr. Paley in this case. But such testimony of an oral agreement with a deceased person is subject to the closest scrutiny. In re Estate of Henderson, 128 Cal.App. 397, 400-401, 17 P.2d 786; Turman v. Ellison, 37 Cal.App. 204, 209-210, 174 P. 396; 10 Cal.Jur.2d § 59, p. 734. If perchance the deceased wife made admissions supporting the husband's claim such as the questions propounded to Mr. Fox imply, his case would be immeasurably strengthened by the attorney's testimony to that effect. If petitioner has a legitimate claim of oral agreement justice demands that he not be denied the benefit of the supporting evidence. See In re Estate of Smead, 219 Cal. 572, 575, 28 P.2d 348. If Mr. Fox' testimony proves to be unfavorable to plaintiff's contentions the cause of the defendant will undoubtedly be promoted thereby.

Specific objection is made to certain questions upon the ground that they are too broad as to time covered and are not confined to conversations relating to the will. An exemplar is this one. "Q. Did Mrs. Paley ever say to you, or in your presence and hearing, in substance or effect, that she and Mr. Paley had years before had an understanding or agreement to the effect that his property would be his separate property and her property would be her separate property?" There is an intimation in the record that any such conversation may have been had in preparation for a divorce action or otherwise unrelated to the will. This question and all others set forth on page 10 of the petition herein, also the first two on page 11, are too broad; and they are objectionable in that their leading nature might elicit forbidden matter if answered affirmatively. For instance an affirmative answer to the quoted interrogatory might afford evidence which in fact remains privileged because a part of a divorce situation and not preparation of the will. But if plaintiff's counsel were able to get a "yes" answer to the question he would have valuable evidence the effect of which might not be eradicable. The witness should not be required to answer the question in that form. But it would be a simple matter upon resumption of the deposition for men of good will and much learning, such as counsel on both sides of this case, to narrow the matter to proper compass and elicit only that which is permissible under the principles herein stated.

We hold that the witness Fox should be by the superior court ordered to answer the questions set forth in footnote 4; that he should not be required to answer those which are copied in footnote 5, but should answer, and if necessary be required by court order to answer, properly formed

4. "Q. What was said at that time with respect to the disposition or proposed disposition of any property by Mrs. Paley?

"Q. Was this particular conversation had with reference to the execution or proposed execution of the will which has now been admitted to probate?

"Q. Are you able at this time to state the gist or substance of the conversations which you had with Mrs. Paley relating to the disposition or proposed disposition of any property whatever?

"Q. Was there any conversation or discussion which you had with Mrs. Paley relating in any way to the nature, extent or disposition of her property, or to the nature, extent or disposition of property over which she claimed any right, at which there were present anyone other than yourself and Mrs. Paley?

"Q. Will you state, Mr. Fox, the substance of the conversations or discussions that you had with Mrs. Paley relating to the nature, extent, identification or disposition or proposed disposition of any property by her?"

5. "Q. Did Mrs. Paley ever say to you, or in your presence and hearing at any time, in substance or effect, that there was no community property of the marriage between herself and Mr. Paley?

"Q. Did Mrs. Paley at any time ever say to you, or in your presence or hearing, that all of the property which Mr. Paley had was his own separate property, in substance or effect?

"Q. Did Mrs. Paley ever say to you, or in your presence and hearing, in substance or effect, that she and Mr. Paley had years before had an understanding or agreement to the effect that his property would be his separate property and her property would be her separate property?

"Q. Did Mrs. Paley at any time communicate to you orally any statement or declaration in substance or effect that there was no community property of the marriage between herself and Mr. Paley?

"Q. Did Mrs. Paley ever communicate to you otherwise than orally any statement or declaration to the effect that Mr. Paley's property was his own separate property?

"Q. Did Mrs. Paley ever communicate to you in any way any statement or declaration in substance or effect, that she had no interest or right of any kind in to any of Mr. Paley's property?

"Q. Do you know of any statement or communication by Mrs. Paley on any occasion, or to any person, in substance or effect of the kind to which I have just referred?

"Q. Will you please state the dates involved, the places at which they were held, the persons present and the substance of what was said at any conversation or discussion you may ever have had with Mrs. Paley as to the nature, extent or testamentary disposition of her property?"

questions designed to elicit the subject matter of such last mentioned inquiries without violation of the limitations of the right of interrogation as herein stated.

Let the writ issue accordingly.

PARKER WOOD, Acting P. J., and VALLÉE, J., concur.

Hearing denied; SHENK, J., dissenting.

137 Cal.App.2d 710

Adolph WEISS, Plaintiff and Appellant,

v.

Robert Jay BRANDT and Frank Arrousez,
Defendants and Respondents.

Civ. 20990.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California.

Dec. 12, 1955.

Rehearing Denied Jan. 10, 1956.

Hearing Denied Feb. 8, 1956.

Financier's action against merchant for money had and received, wherein merchant interposed defense, and a treble damages counterclaim, predicated upon alleged usuriousness of transactions. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Clarence M. Hanson, J., rendered judgment for the merchant on his cross-complaint for the difference between the amount which the merchant was entitled to under findings on his cross-complaint and the amount which the financier was entitled to on his complaint, and the financier appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Nourse, J. pro tem., held, inter alia, that evidence would not sustain finding that there had been sixty-five separate transactions and established to contrary that financier's advances, which admittedly exceeded total amount repaid him, had all been made in accordance with single oral agreement.

Take-nothing judgment against financier and judgment in favor of merchant reversed.

1. Usury ⇨115

Standing alone, letter form of contracts between financier and merchant could have been interpreted as establishing either sale or loan, and therefore parol evidence should have been admitted, in financier's action for money had and received (wherein defense, and treble damages counterclaim, predicated upon alleged usurious nature of transaction were interposed), to establish real nature of contracts.

2. Usury ⇨113

Where contracts between financier and merchant were subject to two interpretations, under one of which contracts would be legal and under other of which they would be usurious, financier was entitled to presumption that contracts were legal.

3. Evidence ⇨443(1)

There being nothing in contracts between merchant and financier relative to allocation of payments, that matter was proper subject of separate and supplemental oral agreement and financier was entitled to prove, in his action against merchant for money had and received, such an agreement. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1479, subd. 1.

4. Usury ⇨137

Until a debtor has made payments of interest in excess of that permitted by usury statute, he cannot maintain an action against creditor under that statute. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1479, subd. 1.

5. Payment ⇨42

Payments made upon indebtedness will be applied to reduction of principal unless there is an express agreement to apply them to interest or such an application by creditor.

6. Usury ⇨117, 142(4)

In financier's action against merchant for money had and received, wherein merchant interposed defense, and treble damages counterclaim, predicated upon alleged usuriousness of transactions, evidence, on issue as to whether any portion of payments made to financier should be considered interest, would not sustain finding that there had been sixty-five separate transactions and established to contrary that financier's advances, which admittedly exceeded total amount repaid him, had all been made in accordance with single oral agreement. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1479, subd. 1.

7. Payment 42

Transaction between financier and merchant being a single one, although made up of separate advances, all payments received by financier and totaling less than total amount of advances would have to be allocated to principal rather than to interest.

David Welts, Los Angeles, for appellant.

George M. Wiener, Los Angeles, for respondents.

NOURSE, Justice pro tem.

The plaintiff and cross-defendant (hereinafter called Weiss) appeals from the judgment of the lower court in favor of the cross-complainant (hereinafter called Brandt) and against the cross-defendant upon the cross-complaint.

The complaint in this action is in the form of a common count for money had and received. By it Weiss alleged that Brandt and the defendant Arrousez were engaged as associates in the manufacturing, selling and renting of certain equipment and that they had agreed to share the profits of that business and that within two years last past the defendants and each of them became indebted to plaintiff in the sum of $3,877.75, for an account of money had and received by the defendants for the benefit of the plaintiff.

By their answer the defendants denied all of the allegations of the complaint and as a separate defense alleged that Weiss had undertaken and agreed to, and had, loaned to Brandt sums not to exceed 90% of the face amounts of a series of promissory notes executed by Brandt and that by the terms of the agreements and said promissory notes that it was agreed that Weiss should reserve and secure to himself interest upon the loans of said money in excess of that permitted by law and that Weiss had received $5,727.15, in excess of the amount which Weiss is entitled to receive by law.

By his cross-complaint Brandt alleged that on or about the 12th of October, 1951, he and Weiss entered into an oral contract whereby Brandt borrowed certain sums of money from Weiss and as security therefor covenanted and agreed that he would assign, transfer and set over to Weiss all his right, title and interest in certain purchase orders between Brandt and various of his customers, and that Brandt further agreed to set over and assign to Weiss all his right, title and interest in and to all monies and accounts receivable from said customers. It was further alleged that in addition to the assignment of said contracts and the payments due thereunder, Brandt agreed to execute written contracts guarantying the repayment of each of said loans and to further execute a promissory note in connection with each and every loan as additional evidence of the obligation; that Brandt had performed all that was required of him under the contract and had executed the required assignments, contracts of guaranty and promissory notes and that Weiss had collected from the customers of Brandt and from Brandt various sums of money, and that by reason of said payments to Weiss he had received $4,224.20, in excess of the amount to which he was entitled to by law; that said sum of $4,224.20 was received by Weiss within one year from the date of the cross-complaint and that Weiss was therefore indebted to Brandt in treble that amount.

The second cause of action alleges the receipt by Weiss of usurious payments in the sum of $1,502.95, received by him more than one year prior to the filing of the cross-complaint and alleges that Weiss is therefore indebted to Brandt in said amount.

Attached to the cross-complaint, and made a part thereof, is Exhibit A which is a schedule purporting to show the date and amount and date of repayment of sixty-five alleged loan transactions, together with the alleged interest involved in each.

By his answer to the cross-complaint, Weiss denied all of the allegations thereof as to loans and alleged that all of the transactions were transactions involving the sale of Brandt's contracts with his customers at a discount. The answer further alleged that the transactions were of a continuing nature and covered a period from October 12, 1951, to on or about April 7, 1953, and that Weiss had paid to Brandt on said transaction $3,877.75 in excess of the amounts that he had collected and received back on said transaction. There are other allegations of the answer by which Weiss attempts to plead facts estopping Brandt from asserting usury, but it is unnecessary to state those facts here.

The findings of fact made by the trial court may be summarized as follows:

The trial court found that the defendants were not associated in business, but that the defendant Arrousez was an employee of the defendant Brandt and his disclosed agent; that on or about October 12, 1951, Brandt and Weiss entered into an oral contract whereby Brandt borrowed certain sums of money from Weiss and as security therefor agreed that he would assign, transfer and set over unto Weiss all of his right, title and interest in certain contracts between himself and various customers, and all right, title and interest in and to all monies and accounts receivable from said customers, and that Weiss was authorized and instructed by the terms of said agreements to credit Brandt with the said sums borrowed by him when they were received by Weiss.

That in addition to the assignment of said contracts, Brandt had covenanted and agreed to execute written contracts guaranteeing repayment of each of said loans and further execute a promissory note as additional evidence of the obligation; that pursuant to the terms and provisions of the oral agreement, the parties entered into sixty-five separate and distinct loan transactions; that it was provided by said oral agreement that after Brandt had assigned his right, title and interest in and to the customer contracts and had executed the contracts and promissory notes as aforesaid, Weiss would loan to Brandt a sum not to exceed 90% of the amount which Brandt guaranteed and contracted to repay to Weiss and which had been assigned to Weiss and evidenced by the contracts and promissory notes.

That Brandt had done and performed all that was required of him under the agreement and that Weiss had collected and received, either from Brandt or from the customers of Brandt, all of the sums advanced by Weiss plus interest, except the sum of $3,552.02, and that amount remained due and owing from Brandt to Weiss, and that Weiss had waived any right to claim any further, different or additional offsets.

That during the one year immediately preceding the commencement of the action, Weiss had exacted and received from Brandt usurious interest in the sum of $3,368.77, and that by reason thereof Brandt was entitled to recover treble that amount.

That during the year immediately preceding the twelve months prior to the commencement of the action, Weiss had exacted the sum of $2,398.76 from Brandt, said sum being the amount of interest unlawfully paid during said period.

As conclusions of law from these facts, the court found that Brandt was entitled to judgment on his cross-complaint in the sum of $8,953.05, that being the difference between the amount which Brandt was entitled to under the findings on his cross-complaint and the amount which Weiss was entitled to on his complaint.

The transactions between the parties as shown by the evidence were very involved, but the following outline of them will suffice for the purposes of this opinion. The facts we state are established by the evidence without conflict. Prior to October 12, 1951, the defendant Robert Jay Brandt had been engaged in business under the fictitious name and style of Hollywood Scene, Dock and Prop Shop, and prior to that date had financed a portion of his business through transactions with the brother of the plaintiff. On the date mentioned defendant Arrousez, who acted as manager for the defendant Brandt, told Weiss that Brandt had some purchase orders that he wanted to sell and exhibited an order from a customers, whom we will hereinafter call Craig, for certain equipment, the purchase price of which totaled $1,800. Arrousez stated that they would sell the order for $1,500, and that the difference between the face amount of the order and that amount would be Weiss' profit. Weiss insisted upon some security that Brandt would manufacture and deliver the merchandise called for by the order. Weiss, at this time, agreed that he would invest in orders to the extent of about $10,000. There was no mention made of any loan. The parties then executed a letter form of contract, the terms of which, in substance, are as follows:

The letter was addressed to Weiss by Brandt. By the letter Brandt acknowledged the receipt from Weiss of the sum of $1,500, in payment for the assignment of the purchase order from Craig, which was then described, Brandt guarantying to deliver the merchandise called for by the order on or before December 31, 1951. Brandt agreed that in the event payment was made by Craig to him, he would turn the remittance over to Weiss properly endorsed. Brandt agreed that if Craig failed to make full payment on the order before January 30, 1952, that he, Brandt, would pay to Weiss any balance then due upon the order, it being agreed that Weiss was to receive $1,800, on or before January 30, 1952, in event of default by Craig. By the final paragraph of the letter Brandt handed to Weiss his promissory note for $1,800, "to evidence my guaranty above stated."

At the same time Brandt executed a promissory note in the sum of $1,800, payable 110 days after date (October 12, 1951) without interest. Weiss paid to Brandt $1,500.

After the consummation of this transaction, and prior to January 1, 1952, Brandt delivered to Weiss six other purchase orders on account of which Weiss paid to Brandt $4,491.40. Each transaction was handled in the same manner as that outlined as to the Craig transaction, that is to say, a similar letter contract was executed and a similar promissory note, the promissory note in each case being in the face amount of the purchase order delivered, and being payable on the date of payment specified in the purchase order. On account of these advances Weiss received in cash from the customers or directly from Brandt $3,301.78, and Brandt, in addition, received from the customers, and retained, $3,757.79, this amount being later credited upon a purchase order thereafter assigned to Weiss; that is, on May 8, 1952, Brandt assigned to Weiss purchase orders in the total face amount of $4,865.61, at a stated price of $4,379.05. On account of this purchase price Weiss was credited with the amounts which had theretofore been collected and retained by Brandt, and Weiss paid the difference, after certain other adjustments, to Brandt in cash.

No transactions were entered into between November 26, 1951, and March 8, 1952. On or about February 6, 1952, Weiss had a conversation with Arrousez in which he stated that he was then out-of-pocket over $4,300, and that he did not care to continue doing business with Brandt, unless some arrangements were made to turn over certain monies that Brandt had collected on accounts assigned to Weiss and something done to make up a part of the $4,300 plus, that he, Weiss, was out-of-pocket; that Arrousez agreed that Brandt would pay Weiss $292.50, the amount Brandt had collected on certain assigned accounts.

It was further agreed that Weiss would, from that date forward, on his books, debit Brandt with all amounts advanced, commencing with a debit of $4,300, the amount which Weiss was then out-of-pocket, and credit Brandt with all monies received, instead of allocating the monies received from a customer on one assignment to the amounts advanced on account of that assignment. From that time on Weiss' books were kept accordingly.

In 1952, between March 8 and the end of the year, there were forty-seven transactions entered into between the parties. On account of these Weiss advanced the further sum of $23,165.68, and on these transactions received back in cash $23,768.30. During the year 1953, there were eleven transactions on account of which Weiss advanced $4,388.25, and received in cash $2,896.07. In addition to the cash he received, during 1952 and 1953, he received credits on the assignments of other purchase orders, the face amounts of which were evidenced by the promissory notes of Brandt, as in the other transactions, in the total amount of $21,605.40, that being a part of the amount which Brandt had collected from the customers whose accounts had been assigned to Weiss.

The net result of the sixty-five transactions was that Weiss had paid to Brandt over $3,800 more than he had received either from Brandt or from collections upon the purchase orders which had been assigned to him.

We are of the opinion that the trial court committed prejudicial error in its rulings as to admissibility of evidence and are further of the opinion that its findings that Weiss received for the use of his money sums in excess of that permitted by law is contrary to the evidence.

While undoubtedly the evidence received in the court below is sufficient to uphold a finding that the transaction is one involving the loan of money and not one of sale, it does not compel such a finding, and Weiss was entitled to prove all of the surrounding circumstances and any relevant facts bearing upon the true nature of the transaction or the intent of the parties. This, the rulings of the trial court prevented him from doing.

At the outset of the trial, the learned trial judge announced that he had read the pleadings and the letter form of contract between the parties and that this letter form of contract must be classed as a loan contract and not as a sales contract and that it was therefore vulnerable to the provisions of the Usury Statute. Apparently the trial court based this ruling upon the decision of the Supreme Court in Milana v. Credit Discount Co., 27 Cal.2d 335, 163 P.2d 869, 165 A.L.R. 621. The facts in the Milana case are somewhat similar to those in the case at bar, but the Supreme Court did not there hold that they constituted a loan transaction as a matter of law, but only held that they were subject to that interpretation and that therefore the trial court there erred in holding that they were not subject to that construction, but only to the construction that they were contracts of sale, and in granting the defendant's motion for a judgment of nonsuit.

[1] In our opinion the letter form of contracts between the parties do not, standing alone, establish that the transactions here were in fact ones for the loan and repayment of money, but are subject not only to that interpretation but to the interpretation that they constituted a contract for the sale of a purchase order, with a guarantee that Brandt would manufacture and deliver the merchandise called for by the order, and a guarantee of the soundness of the credit of the purchaser.

This being true, the question of what the real nature of the contract was, was to be determined from all of the facts and circumstances surrounding the transactions and each party was entitled to introduce parol evidence to establish those circumstances and what the true intent of the parties was. Ewalt v. Mortgage Securities, Inc., 129 Cal.App. 559, 19 P.2d 60; Terry Trading Corp. v. Barsky, 210 Cal. 428, 432-433, 292 P. 474; Milana v. Credit Discount Co., supra, 27 Cal.2d 335, 341, 163 P.2d 869.

[2] The trial court, however, consistent with its ruling that the contracts were unambiguous and showed on their face a loan of money and not a sale, held that parol evidence was not admissible and that that which had been received without objection was of no importance whatsoever, but that the court would be controlled in its determination of the facts by the instruments alone. This was clearly error. The contracts being subject to two interpretations, under one of which the contracts would be legal, and under the other usurious, Weiss was entitled to the presumption that the contracts were ones of sale and not ones for the loan of money. Moore v. Dealy, 117 Cal.App.2d 89, 94, 254 P.2d 888; Hersum v. Latham, 120 Cal.App.2d 325, 328, 260 P.2d 988. He was not, however, required to merely stand upon the presumption, but was entitled to augment this indirect evidence by other evidence, either written or oral, to establish that the transaction was, in fact, one of sale.

The trial court was therefore obligated to give consideration not only to the written contracts, but to all of the facts and circumstances shown by the evidence or by the offers of proof to which we will hereafter refer; it is clear from the record that it did not do so.

At the conclusion of the taking of evidence, counsel for appellant advised the court that due to the court's ruling that the contracts introduced into evidence were usurious on their face and that those contracts were controlling, he desired to make certain offers of proof, rather than to attempt by devious means to circumvent the court's ruling that parol evidence was not admissible. He then made twelve offers of proof, to all of which respondents' objections were sustained. In certain of these rulings, we believe the court was in error, as the matters offered to be proved were relevant to the question of whether or not the transactions were ones of loan or ones of sale.

In substance, the first four offers of proof were to prove by the testimony of appellant and Arrousez that each of the sixty-five purchase orders assigned to appellant was offered for sale to him by Arrousez, and were in fact purchased by him. The objection to these offers of proof was that the evidence offered would violate the parol evidence rule. The sixth offer was to prove by Arrousez and by the books of Brandt that the transactions were set up on Brandt's books as transactions of sale and that the difference between the face value of the purchase orders sold and the price paid by Weiss was set up on Brandt's books as a discount. Each of the facts so sought to be proved by appellant were relevant to the question of intent of the parties and the nature of the transactions, and it was error to refuse to receive this evidence.

The ninth and tenth offers of proof were to prove by Adolph Weiss and his brother, Lewis Weiss, that on or about February 6, 1952, Weiss and Brandt entered into an oral agreement that appellant would debit Brandt for all monies paid to Brandt on the purchase of purchase orders, and as payment on purchase orders assigned to Weiss were received by him, he would credit the same against the total debits and would wait for his discount or profit until the respondent Brandt was in better financial condition and could afford to pay. That after said oral agreement was entered into that the parties transacted their business in that manner; that Weiss had not yet recouped the amount of his advances and was out-of-pocket at the time of the commencement of the action the sum of $3,877.75. To these offers of proof the objection that they violated the parol evidence rule was sustained. In these rulings the court clearly erred.

[3] There was nothing in the contracts which related to the allocation of payments. The contracts being silent as to the allocation of payments, that matter was the proper subject of a separate and supplemental oral agreement and Weiss was entitled to prove such an agreement. American Ind. Sales Corp. v. Airscope, Inc., 44 Cal.2d 393, 397, 282 P.2d 504.

There can be no doubt that the ruling upon this offer of proof was prejudicial. If the appellant had been permitted to prove the facts stated in his ninth and tenth offers of proof, those facts would have constituted a valid oral agreement that all money received by Weiss was to be applied to the repayment of the sum advanced by him until all such advances had been fully repaid. Such an agreement being proved, the court would have been bound to apply the monies received by Weiss in accordance with it, and could not apply them to the payment of interest and principal on individual transactions, as it did, Civ.Code, § 1479, paragraph One. Yet, it is only by applying the money received by Weiss to individual transactions that a finding that Weiss received anything for the use of his money can be sustained.

[4, 5] Until a debtor has made payments of interest in excess of that permitted by the Usury Statute he cannot maintain an action against the creditor under that Stat-utè, and payments made upon the indebtedness will be applied to the reduction of principal unless there is an express agreement to apply them to interest or such an actual application by the creditor. Penziner v. West American Finance Co., 10 Cal.2d 160, 179, 74 P.2d 252; Haines v. Commercial Mortgage Co., 200 Cal. 609, 618, 254 P. 956, 255 P. 805, 53 A.L.R. 725; Ames v. Occidental Life Ins. Co., 210 Cal. 271, 274, 291 P. 182; Grall v. San Diego Bldg. & Loan Ass'n, 127 Cal.App. 250, 257, 15 P.2d 797; Smith v. G. Cavaglieri Mortgage Co., 111 Cal.App. 136, 144, 295 P. 366; Courtney v. Tufeld, 128 Cal.App. 504, 507, 17 P.2d 1035; Connor v. Minier, 109 Cal.App.Supp. 770, 777, 288 P. 23.

Here the contract contained no stipulation for the payment of interest as such, and it is admitted that Weiss' total advances exceeded by over $3,500 the total amount repaid him, therefore, if the payments to Weiss were applied to the reduction of principal in accordance with the oral agreement which he offered to prove, a finding that he received interest could not be made and there could be no basis for the judgment rendered against him.

[6] The trial court found that there were sixty-five separate loan transactions; that Weiss collected upon these all amounts loaned except the sum of $3,552.02; that Weiss exacted from Brandt during the year immediately preceding the commencement of the action, the sum of $3,368.77 (which it trebled), and the further sum of $2,398.76, during the preceding year. A careful examination of the record here convinces us that the finding that there were sixty-five separate transactions is contrary to the evidence and that on the other hand the evidence establishes that the advances made by Weiss were all made in accordance with his single oral agreement to advance to Brandt not to exceed $10,000, on the security of the assigned purchase orders (we are assuming here that the transactions were as found by the trial court, one of loan, not of sale) and that therefore the further finding that Weiss received payments beyond the partial return of the principal he advanced cannot be sustained.

The trial court found as a fact that all assignments of purchase orders were made pursuant to an oral agreement between the parties entered into on October 12, 1951. The only evidence of an oral agreement between the parties prior to Weiss' first advance, is his testimony that he agreed to invest up to $10,000, in purchase orders offered him by Brandt. In view of the other evidence offered, the trial court was entitled to find that this was an agreement to loan up to that amount, but the other evidence received does not justify the finding that each assignment of a purchase order was a separate loan transaction, but on the contrary only establishes each as a part performance by Weiss of his oral agreement to loan up to $10,000.

Weiss advanced a total of $33,545.33. He received assignments of purchase orders of the face amount of $64,517.67, at a so-called purchase price of $57,459.00. He received a credit of $23,914.56, on this purchase price, this sum being a part of the amount which Brandt had collected on the purchase orders assigned to Weiss. Weiss was repaid a total of $29,966.15.

The manner in which the parties conducted their transactions which resulted in the totals we have just given was substantially as follows. Weiss would discount a purchase order. The collections from the purchase order would be made in part by Weiss and in part by Brandt. The money Weiss collected he re-advanced so that the new capital he had invested or loaned never greatly exceeded $10,000. The money collected by Brandt he, in most instances, retained, and in most of those instances he gave Weiss credit for the amount retained on the so-called purchase price of another purchase order—in other words, (assuming this to be a loan transaction) he gave Weiss another evidence of indebtedness and new security for the amounts collected by him.

Out of the sixty-five assignments made to Weiss, thirty-seven involved "charge backs" (so-called by the parties) such as we have described, thus all of the sixty-five advances and assignments were tied together and the end result was that Weiss received in repayment of the monies advanced by him $29,966.15, and held Brandt's promises to pay an additional amount (as nearly as we can determine from the record, approximately $25,000), secured by purchase orders upon which Brandt had either collected the entire balance due, or had failed to deliver the goods called for by them, thus rendering them worthless.

Examples of what actually occurred will demonstrate how these alleged sixty-five transactions were bound together. On the second assignment (Plaintiff's Exhibit 2) the face amount of the purchase order was $2,477.47. Upon this order Weiss advanced $2,105.85. From the purchaser, Weiss collected $389.31, and Brandt $2,088.16. Brandt gave credit for this amount on the fourteenth assignment (Plaintiff's Exhibit 14), which was of a purchase order in the face amount of $4,865.61, and Weiss advanced the further sum of $2,574.27 in cash (Weiss had other similar credits which were applied to this assignment). On this purchase order, Weiss collected $4,147.09, and Brandt $718.52, for which he gave Weiss credit on assignment twenty-eight (Plaintiff's Exhibit 28), which was a purchase order in the face amount of $1,227.60, which sum was collected by Weiss from the purchaser. There were three other assignments which were, in the manner we have described, tied into the one, which resulted in Weiss' collecting the entire amount of the purchase price on Order No. 28. Parenthetically, the record shows that as a result of the seven assignments which culminated in assignment No. 28 (Plaintiff's Exhibits 1, 2, 4, 5, 13, 14 and 28) Weiss advanced out-of-pocket $300 more than he received back. Yet an inspection of defendants' Exhibit C¹ (upon which the trial court based its finding and judgment as to the interest received by Weiss), we find Weiss charged with the total of $1,129.52, as interest, a portion of which was trebled in the judgment.

Another example of the manner in which these charge backs tied all advances into one loan transaction is shown by following through the transaction which commenced with the assignment of purchase order No. 19 (Plaintiff's Exhibit 19). Assignment No. 19 was made on May 19, 1952. This was a purchase order for $214.62, on account of which Weiss advanced $193.16. Brandt collected the full amount of the purchase order from the customer. He did not pay this amount over to Weiss, but gave him credit for that amount on the assignment to him on June 2nd of purchase order No. 22. On purchase order No. 22 Brandt again collected the entire amount from the customer but did not pay any portion of it to Weiss, but applied it to the credit of Weiss on succeeding assignments, winding up with the last assignment, No. 65, upon which Brandt collected and retained the entire payment.

Here again defendants' Exhibit C shows Weiss charged with interest which was trebled in the judgment, although he had in fact not received back a penny of his principal.

[7] The transaction, being, as we have held, a single one, although made up of separate advances, all payments received by Weiss were, as a matter of law, to be allocated to principal. Ames v. Occidental Life Ins. Co., supra; Connor v. Minier, supra; Wolf v. Aero Factors Corporation, 2 Cir., 221 F.2d 291; 39 Cal.L.Rev. 604.

Brandt not having repaid an amount equal to the advances he received, and there being no stipulation for interest nor any payments of interest, there is no basis for the findings we have mentioned, or the judgment on the cross-complaint.

Appellant asserts that the trial court erred in not holding the defendant Arrousez liable on the complaint. We have carefully examined the record and find no merit in this claim of error.

1. Exhibit C was offered as a summary of Weiss' book of account and the documents which make up the sixty-five assignment transactions. It is not in fact a true summary of those documents, but an argumentative reconstruction of the transactions in which payments are arbitrarily allocated to principal and interest in each individual transaction, and Weiss charged with receiving as interest amounts which were not in fact received by him, but received by Brandt.

The judgment in favor of defendant Arrousez is affirmed. The judgment that plaintiff take nothing upon his complaint as against the defendant Brandt, and the judgment upon the cross-complaint in favor of Brandt and against Weiss are, and each of them is, reversed; Weiss to recover his costs on appeal.

WHITE, P. J., and DORAN, J., concur.

137 Cal.App.2d 503

Paul C. SCHIRO, Plaintiff and Appellant,
v.

Lawton D. PARKER, Defendant and Respondent.
Civ. 16479.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 2, California.
Dec. 5, 1955.

First real estate broker brought action against second broker to recover commission allegedly due first broker for allegedly procuring purchaser of ranch. The Superior Court, County of Santa Clara, Edwin J. Owens, J., entered judgment in favor of second broker, and first broker appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Dooling, J., held that evidence sustained finding that first broker did not procure a purchaser ready, able, and willing to buy the ranch on terms acceptable to the vendors.

Judgment affirmed.

Brokers ⇨86(5)

In action by first real estate broker against second broker to recover commission allegedly due first broker for allegedly procuring purchaser of ranch, evidence sustained finding that first broker did not procure a purchaser ready, able, and willing to buy the ranch on terms acceptable to the vendors.

Machado & Machado, San Jose, for appellant.

Rich, Fuidge & Dawson, Marysville, for respondent.

DOOLING, Justice.

This is an appeal by plaintiff-appellant Schiro from a judgment of the superior court that he take nothing by reason of his complaint against defendant-respondent Parker. Appellant did recover the sum of $6,000 with 7 percent interest per annum from June 1, 1951, from Parker's codefendant Kallam. Kallam originally appealed from this judgment but upon his request the appeal as to him has been dismissed.

All the parties involved in this action are licensed real estate brokers. Appellant Schiro brought this action seeking to recover a commission allegedly due him as a result of the sale of property known as the Cheim ranch located near Marysville to one Boccardo. Neither the seller nor the purchaser is a party to this action.

In November of 1950 Mr. Cheim discussed the selling of his property with respondent Parker. At that time he gave respondent Parker an oral listing to sell the property for $366,000. Parker proceeded to show this property to prospective purchasers.

Appellant Schiro heard that the property was for sale. He inspected the property and a few days later he returned to Marysville in order to see Mr. Cheim, the owner. At that time appellant Schiro told Cheim that he had a party whom he thought he could interest in the property. Cheim replied that the listing was with respondent Parker and that appellant would have to see him. Appellant did see respondent Parker and discussed the possibility of working on the sale of the property with him. Respondent stated at that time that appellant could work with him on the sale. Sometime later, respondent Parker and appellant Schiro were in contact with Cheim and an authorization to sell the property was obtained from him. Respondent Parker testified that this authorization was given to him and that it gave him power to act on behalf of Cheim for himself (respondent).

ent) and for any other broker with whom he would wish to cooperate.

After respondent Parker had secured the written authorization to sell the property, he and appellant Schiro discussed the commission split in the event of such a sale by appellant Schiro. Respondent testified that he told appellant that he, respondent, would give appellant 60 percent of the commission providing appellant sold the property. Respondent then wrote a note to appellant to confirm this understanding to the effect:

"Dear Mr. Schiro:

"It is understood as per our verbal agreement that should your office procure a purchaser for the Cheim's property, you are to receive 60% of the commission collected on sale of same."

He testified that in using the term "procure a purchaser" in the note he meant "sell" the property as he had expressed in his oral understanding with appellant.

Mr. Boccardo, the purchaser, testified that he noted an advertisement placed in one of the San Jose papers by appellant Schiro relative to this property and that he called appellant about it. He discussed the property with appellant and authorized him to offer $300,000 for it giving him a deposit of $10,000 on this offer. Boccardo made this first offer on February 7, 1951. This $300,000 offer was refused by the seller and Boccardo verbally increased his offer to $320,000 through appellant Schiro. This offer was also refused. Boccardo at that time stated that this was his limit, and appellant told respondent that Boccardo would pay $320,000 "and that this was his top." Thereafter appellant was informed that Cheim would sell for $330,000 or $335,000. He conveyed this information to Boccardo but could not get a better offer from him. Appellant did not communicate further with respondent.

Boccardo further testified that after the above negotiations Kallam, a real estate broker with whom he had had previous dealings, came into his office. This was a matter of weeks or months after Boccardo had dealt with appellant relative to this property. At this time Boccardo stated that as far as he was concerned the deal on the Cheim property was off. Kallam described the Cheim property stating that he thought Boccardo might be interested in it. Boccardo stated that he had been introduced to this property through appellant Schiro but that the deal hadn't been consummated. Boccardo testified that he told Kallam he would deal with him on this matter "provided that Mr. Schiro was protected." It was his testimony that Kallam assured him that appellant "would be taken care of" and with this assurance he proceeded to deal with Kallam. The trial court interpreted this as a promise by Kallam to pay appellant Schiro a reasonable proportion of the commission which he himself might receive out of the transaction. The court found that appellant's reasonable share of the $8,250 received by Kallam was $6,000 and gave appellant judgment for this amount against Kallam. With the correctness of that judgment we are not here concerned. On April 23, 1951, Boccardo made a written offer of $320,000 through Kallam for the property. This was not accepted. On April 25, 1951, he made another written offer through Kallam at a price of $330,000 which was accepted by the seller.

After it was apparent that Kallam would be able to effect a sale of this property to Boccardo, respondent Parker made the suggestion that appellant "was entitled to something for what he had done." Respondent Parker and Kallam put $1,000 each into escrow to be paid appellant. However, when appellant wrote the escrow company demanding that 60 percent of the commission be paid to him both respondent and Kallam revoked their orders for the payment of the sum deposited to appellant. Respondent and Kallam split the $16,500 commission on the sale of the property evenly, $8,250 each.

The trial court found "that plaintiff did not himself procure a purchaser to Lawton D. Parker or H. J. Cheim and Lea M. Cheim, his wife, ready, able and willing to buy said property upon terms acceptable to the sellers being prevented from doing so by the intrusion of defendant Kallam into the transaction."

This finding is supported by the evidence. The best offer which appellant produced was $320,000 which the seller refused to accept. Appellant not only told respondent that this offer of $320,000 was Boccardo's top, but after learning that the seller would accept $330,000 or $335,000 he did not communicate to respondent Boccardo's reaction, if any, to these figures. As a matter of fact Boccardo refused to give appellant a better offer. When Kallam brought the same property to Boccardo's attention Boccardo said that as far as he was concerned the deal was off. It was through Kallam's efforts, not appellant's, that the acceptable offer was finally made.

The court said in Nelson v. Mayer, 122 Cal.App.2d 438, 440, 445, 265 P.2d 52, 53, where the contract was to pay a commission "if you can effect a sale":

"In order for plaintiff to recover, the evidence must show that Nelson's efforts were the procuring cause of the sale and not merely one in a chain of causes. [Citation.] As was said in Sessions v. Pacific Improvement Co., 57 Cal.App. 1, 17, 206 P. 653, 660:

"To constitute himself the causa causans, the predominating effective cause, it is not enough that the broker contributes indirectly or incidentally to the sale by imparting information which tends to arouse interest. He must set in motion a chain of events, which, without break in their continuity cause the buyer and seller to come to terms as the proximate result of his peculiar activities."

The court then quoted, 122 Cal.App.2d at page 446, 265 P.2d at page 56, from Cone v. Keil, 18 Cal.App. 675, 124 P. 548, 549, a case in which the contract called for the payment of a commission "in the event of his procuring a purchaser":

"Merely putting a prospective purchaser on the track of property which is on the market will not suffice to entitle the broker to the commission contracted for, and even though a broker opens negotiations for the sale of the property, he will not be entitled to a commission if he finally fails in his efforts, without fault or interference of the owner, to induce a prospective purchaser to buy or make an offer to buy, notwithstanding that the owner may subsequently, either personally or through the instrumentality of other brokers, sell the same property to the same individual at the price and upon the terms which the property was originally offered for sale." "

Since respondent did not give appellant an exclusive agency the court could reasonably conclude that after receiving an offer of $320,000 which appellant said was Boccardo's top, and when appellant failed to communicate with respondent for several weeks after being informed that the seller would take $330,000 or $335,000, respondent was free to believe that appellant was unable to procure an acceptable offer from Boccardo. Indeed both Boccardo's and appellant's testimony show that this was the fact. Under the authorities above cited respondent was then free to deal with Kallam, who did produce a higher and acceptable offer from Boccardo.

The fact that respondent suggested that appellant should get some compensation for his efforts does not compel a contrary finding. The court was entitled to conclude that this was an act of grace and not of obligation.

Appellant cites cases dealing with agreements for compensation between brokers. They are not in point since in none of them were the facts comparable. In none of them did the plaintiff transmit an unacceptable offer which he stated was the highest that his prospect would make and thereafter fail for a considerable period to communicate with the employing broker after being given a figure which the seller was willing to accept.

Judgment affirmed.

NOURSE, P. J., and KAUFMAN, J., concur.

Josephine PRIMM, Plaintiff and Appellant,
v.

Ernest J. PRIMM, Defendant and
Respondent.

Josephine PRIMM, Plaintiff and Respondent,
v.

Ernest J. PRIMM, Defendant and Appellant.*

Civ. 20671, 20931.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 3, California.

Dec. 13, 1955.

Rehearings Granted Jan. 3, 1956.

Proceeding brought by former wife for modification of provisions of divorce decree so as to increase amount of child support which husband was obligated to pay. Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Kurtz Kauffman, J., entered order adverse to former wife and she appealed. After entry of such order, former wife made application for order requiring to pay attorney's fees and costs of appeal. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Thurmond Clarke, J., entered order in favor of former wife, and former husband appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Nourse, J. pro tem., in disposing of both appeals, held that evidence compelled conclusion that during last calendar year prior to hearing, expenses incurred by former wife on account of children exceeded $11,000 specified in decree by more than $3,500, and that trial court's denial of increase in amount of child support was arbitrary and an abuse of discretion, and that inasmuch as children were real parties in interest to appeal, former husband was obligated to pay former wife's attorney's fees and costs, regardless of whether she had sufficient resources.

Order denying increased child support reversed. Order granting attorney's fees and costs affirmed.

1. Divorce ⇨309

Where order, in refusing increase in child support payable under divorce decree, exceeded bounds of reason because it was contrary to the evidence, it was an "abuse of discretion".

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Abuse of Discretion".

2. Evidence ⇨18

Court would take judicial notice that cost of living had increased more than 3.6 per cent between entry of interlocutory divorce decree in 1951 and hearing in 1954 on application of former wife for increase of amount of child support payable.

3. Parent and Child ⇨3(1)

Duty of child support is primarily that of father.

4. Divorce ⇨306

That divorced mother has property or income is immaterial to question of child support so long as father has ample income to support children.

5. Divorce ⇨308

Divorced wife may properly indirectly benefit from allowance for child support, even though she is not entitled to alimony.

6. Parent and Child ⇨3(1)

Father's duty to support children does not end with furnishing mere necessities of life if he is able to afford more, and children are entitled to be supported in style and condition consonant with position in society of their parents.

7. Divorce ⇨309

In proceeding to modify provisions of interlocutory divorce decree so as to increase amount which former husband was obligated to pay for support of five minor children, evidence compelled conclusion that during last calendar year prior to hearing, expenses incurred by former wife on account of children exceed $11,000 specified in decree by more than $3,500, and that trial court's denial of increase in amount of child support was arbitrary and an abuse of discretion.

8. Divorce ⇨308

In determining amount of child support payable by husband, court should consider children's station in life, manner in which they have lived, and ability of husband to pay.

9. Divorce ⇨308

Order for child support must always look not only to present but to foreseeable future as well.

10. Divorce ⇨309

Former wife in post decretal proceeding for increase in child support did not appear in individual capacity, but in representative one on behalf of children who were real parties in interest.

11. Divorce ⇨312½

Where former wife maintained post decretal proceeding against former husband for increase in child support, and trial court denied her request, she was properly entitled to recover from husband costs of her appeal regardless of whether she had sufficient funds to enable her to prosecute appeal.

* Opinion vacated 292 P.2d 240.

Willis Sargent, Syracuse, N. Y., and Sidney H. Wyse, Pasadena, for Josephine Primm.

Hanna & Morton, Los Angeles, for Ernest J. Primm.

NOURSE, Justice pro tem.

By the proceedings in the court below plaintiff sought to modify the provisions of the interlocutory decree of divorce between the parties so as to increase the amount which the defendant by the divorce decree was obligated to pay for the support of the five minor children of the parties. The trial court (Judge Kauffman, presiding, he also presided at the trial of the divorce action), entered its order denying plaintiff's application. No findings of fact were made. From this order plaintiff appeals.

After the entry of the aforementioned order plaintiff made application for an order requiring the defendant to pay her certain monies for attorney's fees and costs in order that she might prosecute her appeal. This application was granted (Judge Clarke presiding), and from the order requiring him to pay $1,000 attorney's fees and not to exceed $1,128 for plaintiff's costs on appeal, defendant appeals.

Each appeal is brought here on a separate record and briefs. Both appeals will be disposed of in this opinion.

Plaintiff's Appeal

The parties have five minor children, ranging in age (at the time of the order appealed from) from 11 to 16 years. The two youngest children, girls, are twins. In June of 1951, an interlocutory decree of divorce was entered, by the terms of which plaintiff was granted the custody of the minor children except for certain designated periods during each year, defendant being given custody during those periods, and defendant was ordered to pay plaintiff for the support of the minor children $11,000 annually, payable in installments of $1,000 on the first day of each month except the first day of July. On June 25, 1952, a final decree of divorce was entered which by reference incorporated the provisions of the interlocutory decree as to child support. The defendant has remarried, the plaintiff has not.

Plaintiff asserts that the trial court abused its discretion in refusing to grant any increase in the amount which defendant is obligated to pay for the support of his children.

[1] We have concluded that the trial court's order, being contrary to the undisputed facts, exceeds the bounds of reason and therefore was an abuse of the court's discretion. Kyne v. Kyne, 70 Cal.App.2d 80, 160 P.2d 910; Hall v. Hall, 42 Cal.2d 435, 442, 267 P.2d 249; Makzoume v. Makzoume, 50 Cal.App.2d 229, 123 P.2d 72; Berry v. Chaplin, 74 Cal.App.2d 669, 169 P.2d 453. There is no question here of conflicting evidence but only of the reasonableness of the order as based upon the unconflicting evidence.

The provisions of the decree of divorce, modification of which was sought in this proceeding, reads in part:

"That the custody of the children of the parties hereto, said Plaintiff and Defendant (hereinafter referred to as 'the parties hereto' or as 'the parties to this action'), to wit: Joan M. Primm, Gary E. Primm, Judith L. Primm and Janet J. Primm, and Joyce P. Primm, is awarded to the Plaintiff until further order of this Court, for the entire period of each year, except for the following periods:

"(a) Six weeks of each year, commencing on the 15th day of June, 1951, and on the 1st day of July each year thereafter;

"(b) One-half of the Christmas vacation period;

"(c) One-half of the Easter vacation period; one-half of Christmas Day; and one-half of Easter Sunday;

"(d) The first week-end of each calendar month, from Friday afternoon to the following Sunday evening, commencing with the first week-end after the entry of this Interlocutory Judgment; provided that if the first week-end of any calendar month should fall within the Easter vacation period, then the provisions with reference to such period, and with reference to Easter Sunday, shall prevail. * * *

"The custody of the said children is awarded to the Defendant for the following periods of each year:

"(a) Six weeks of each year, commencing on the 15th day of June, 1951, and on the 1st day of July each year thereafter;

"(b) One-half of the Christmas vacation period;

"(c) One-half of the Easter vacation period; One-half of Christmas Day; and One half of Easter Sunday;

"(d) The first week-end of each calendar month, from Friday afternoon to the following Sunday evening, commencing with the first week-end after the entry of this Interlocutory Judgment; provided that if the first week-end of any calendar month should fall within the Easter vacation period, then the provisions with reference to such period, and with reference to Easter Sunday, shall prevail. * * *

"The Defendant is ordered to pay directly to the Plaintiff the sum of $1,000.00 per month except for the month of July each year for the support and maintenance of said children until further order of the Court.

"The first of said payments shall be made on the first day of August following the entry of this Interlocutory Decree; and subsequent monthly payments shall be made on the first day of each succeeding month hereafter except during the month of July of each year.

"Said payments shall be used to provide the necessities of life for said minor children including food, clothing, transportation, laundry, utilities, rent, taxes, recreation, music lessons; salaries of cooks, maids, gardeners and nurses, if any; and related household expenses, and other incidental expenses attendant upon the support, education and maintenance of said minor children. * * *

"The defendant is ordered to pay, in the ordinary and usual course of business, all necessary dental and medical bills which may be contracted for the care or treatment of said minor children, or any of them, until further order of this Court. The term 'medical bills' is defined as including bills for the services of doctors of scientific medicine and bills for X-Ray or other laboratory work, or other supplemental facilities of such doctors, but does not include payment for services of Christian Science practitioners."

The evidence received in the court below we believe demonstrates beyond question that the trial court should have modified the interlocutory decree so as to increase the amount awarded thereby for child support. This evidence establishes either by stipulation or uncontradicted evidence these facts:

[2] The standard of living which the plaintiff has sought to maintain, and by this proceeding seeks to further maintain for the children is not above that which had been established prior to the divorce. This was the admission of defendant's counsel at the oral argument in this court. The defendant is financially able to pay any amount which the court might fix as reasonably necessary for the support of his children. He so stipulated and the evidence shows that his net income, after federal income taxes, exceeded $50,000 in both the years 1953 and 1954. Since the entry of the interlocutory decree of divorce there has been an appreciable increase in the cost of living and this court will take judicial notice that that increase at the time of the hearing in the court below exceeded 3.6 per cent. Federal Reserve Board Bulletin, Vol. 41, No. 9, Sept. 1955. The evidence as to the needs of the children and the amounts expended by her for their support was given by the plaintiff and substantiated by abstracts made by her accountant from her books of account (Plaintiff's Exhibits 1A and 1B).

The defendant offered no evidence to contradict the evidence offered by the plaintiff, either as to the needs of the children or the amounts expended by the plaintiff. His testimony was limited to certain brief statements as to his own income and his criticism of certain additional expenditures which the plaintiff desired to make, some of which were in the nature of luxuries.

In substance, plaintiff testified that as the children were at the time of the hearing more than three years older than at the time of the decree, their needs and activities had increased. All were healthy, active and well-adjusted children.

Following the divorce of the parties plaintiff attempted to rent an unfurnished house in San Marino, that being the place where the parties had resided for a number of years, and found that the rents for an unfurnished house would run from $300 to $350 a month, and even at those rentals found nothing satisfactory. She then purchased, out of her own funds, a home for herself and children, but this did not contain sufficient room to house the children satisfactorily, as it was necessary to house her son in a room built on as an addition to the garage where it was difficult to supervise his homework and his sleeping hours. This home did not contain any servants' quarters. In the spring of 1953, the plaintiff located a home on Chaucer Road in San Marino, which contained five bedrooms, three baths and a small maid's room and bath. This home she purchased for the sum of $40,000, utilizing her equity in the home first purchased and $19,000 realized from a loan secured by her on collateral, as she could secure a lower interest rate on such a loan than one secured by a purchase price mortgage or trust deed. She spent an additional $5,000 in improvements upon the house purchased. It has proved a satisfactory home for the family. She furnished the home with furniture which was her separate property. The payments of principal and interest on the collateral loan have been $150 a month since the purchase of the Chaucer Road property.

The plaintiff owns an automobile which she uses to a great extent for chauffeuring the children here and there. This automobile was purchased by turning in one which had been awarded to her by the interlocutory decree of divorce as her separate property, and she agreed to pay in addition, $2,200. The plaintiff has a net income, after federal taxes, of about $6,600 per year.

After the entry of the interlocutory decree the plaintiff opened a separate bank account which she entitled "Household Account." In this account she deposited all amounts received from the defendant, plus such additional amounts from her own income as were necessary to maintain the household of herself and children. From this account all the household expenses were paid but nothing was paid for the purely personal expenses of the plaintiff, such as beauty shop, clothing, jewelry and other personal items. The total expenditures from this account in the year 1953 amounted to $16,831.50. Of this amount defendant contributed the sum of $11,000 and plaintiff the balance. These expenditures are itemized in detail in plaintiff's exhibits and are summarized in plaintiff's brief, and as respondent makes no objection to that summary, we adopt it here. It is as follows:

Item No.

1	House Payments	$1474.00
2	House Upkeep	1084.05
3	Pool Upkeep	353.50
4	Public Utilities	879.73
5	Gardener	679.99
6	Maid	984.65
7	Car Expense	1151.03
8	Miscellaneous	808.13
9	School Expense	393.17
10	Food, including Milk	2463.77
11	Clothes	2568.98
12	Clothes Upkeep	578.77
13	Bookkeeping	130.00
14	Life insurance	1025.87
15	Encyclopedia and TV payments	446.05
16	Other insurance	256.09
17	Tutoring	114.50
18	Taxes	648.36
19	Balboa Bay Club Dues	150.00
20	Dancing	106.00
21	Entertainment	57.60
22	Miscellany	268.93
23	Camping Equipment	223.26
24	Christmas Expense	85.16

Total expenditures through household account, 1953

$16,831.50

(We have supplied the item numbers.)

While defendant does not dispute the accuracy of this account or the necessity for or reasonableness of the expenditures, he insists that as many of the items which go to make up the account include payments upon plaintiff's personal indebtedness, and others include expenditures for items which the plaintiff enjoyed as well as the children, without there being any allocation between the children and their mother, the evidence fails to establish the need of a further allowance for the support of the children.

Before examining respondent's contentions in detail, it seems to us proper to state certain principles that should have governed the trial court and must govern us in this matter.

[3-6] The duty of child support is primarily that of the father. Metson v. Metson, 56 Cal.App.2d 328, at page 333, 132 P.2d 513; Fox v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 194 Cal. 173, at pages 180-181, 228 P. 38. The fact that the mother has property or income is immaterial so long as the father has ample income to support the children. Dickens v. Dickens, 82 Cal.App.2d 717, at page 722, 187 P.2d 91. The wife may indirectly benefit from the allowance for the support of the children, even though she is not entitled to alimony. Bailey v. Superior Court, 215 Cal. 548, at page 554, 11 P.2d 865; Buchanan v. National Savings & Trust Co., 79 U.S.App.D.C. 278, 146 F.2d 13, at page 15. The father's duty to support the children does not end with furnishing the mere necessities of life if he is able to afford more. Children are entitled to be supported in a style and condition consonant with the position in society of their parents. Bailey v. Superior Court, supra; Kyne v. Kyne, supra, 70 Cal.App.2d 80, at page 83, 160 P.2d 910; Berry v. Chaplin, supra, 74 Cal.App.2d 669, 169 P.2d 453; Wong v. Wong Hing Young, 80 Cal.App. 2d 391, at page 395, 181 P.2d 741.

[7] With these principles in mind we will examine respondent's contentions in detail.

The first item of the account which defendant asserts shows an expenditure for the benefit of the plaintiff without any allocation of the amount between that which was for her benefit and that of the children is Item 7, Car Expense. This item, it is true, is the installment payments made upon the automobile which the plaintiff uses principally for the transportation of her five children. It is true that in 1953 she used this in an attempt to augment her income by engaging in the real estate business. This work she had abandoned at the time of the hearing. It is further true, however, that the down payment upon this automobile had been made by plaintiff by turning in an automobile which had been awarded to her as her separate property at a value of $1,500 by the interlocutory decree. (See Parcel 19, Finding 11.) It is further true that transportation was a necessary expense in the maintenance of the children according to their station in life, and is one of the specific items which the interlocutory decree provides should be borne by the plaintiff and which the court at that time took into consideration in fixing the amount which should be contributed by the defendant. There being no attack upon the reasonableness of the charges for transportation, the fact that the plaintiff used the amounts of the installment payments on the balance due on her car as the criterion for her charge can make no difference. What we have said also applies to the fact that plaintiff charged against the household account the insurance upon the automobile. If she was to have custody of the children and was obligated to care for them, including transporting them, she could not be expected to undertake that burden without the protection of insurance.

The next item under attack is Item 1, House Payments. Under the terms of the interlocutory decree the defendant was obligated for rent of the housing facilities which were to be furnished to the children. The plaintiff in her accounting did not claim anything for rent, as such, but charged against the household account the amounts which she was required to pay each month in reducing the personal loan that she had secured to pay the difference between the amount contributed by her in the purchase of the Chaucer Road property and the purchase price. This balance was less than the down payment on the purchase price, even though no consideration is given for the amounts expended by her for the improvements of the property. The court would have to close its mind to actual facts to treat this item of the account as a payment for the personal benefit of the plaintiff, in view of the admitted facts that in her account she made no charge for the rent as such and that if she had rented adequate premises to house the children the amount she would have had to expend would have been more than twice the charge she made. This item must be considered a charge for rent and its reasonableness is self-evident. It need not be allocated between the plaintiff and the children for two reasons. In the first place, as she was charged with the care of the children it is to be expected that she would live on the same premises as they and the fact that she receives an indirect benefit is no reason for charging her with a share of the rent. In the second place, plaintiff had invested in the premises more than $26,000 and for the use of this investment she made no charge but contributed it to the common fund. Certainly this is more than her fair portion of the rent.

What we have just said applies with equal force to Item 4, Public Utilities, and Item 5, Gardener.

The next item which defendant attacks is Item 10, Food, including Milk. The amount of this item for the year 1953 was $2,463.77, certainly a most reasonable amount to buy food to sustain seven people (including a part time maid), but defendant says that the plaintiff has not segregated that portion of the sum mentioned which paid for the food she ate, and that portion which paid for the food and milk consumed by the five children and the maid the plaintiff employed to aid her in the care of five children.¹ The account rendered by the plaintiff is surprisingly detailed, and this court cannot ignore nor should the trial court have ignored this item in determining the amounts necessary for the support of these children because of the lack of allocation of it between the plaintiff and the children. Certainly the trial court could have made a proper allocation, and it seems to us that that suggested by the plaintiff in her brief is a proper one, that is, one-sixth of the entire expenditure.

Defendant next attacks Item 13, Book-keeping. The present proceeding would seem to amply justify the plaintiff's need to employ a bookkeeper so that she might render to the father of the children a proper accounting for the moneys he has paid her.

Defendant also attacks Item 14, Life Insurance. This item, amounting to $1,025.87, is for insurance which plaintiff took on her life for the protection of the children after their father had remarried. Plaintiff concedes that this charge did not fall within the purview of the order made for support of the children.

The last item attacked by the defendant includes, we presume, although it is difficult from his brief to be certain, portions of the amounts included in Item 8, Miscellaneous, and Item 22, Miscellany, as well as Item 19, Balboa Bay Club Dues. With the exception of the Balboa Bay Club Dues, these expenditures were for flowers, newspapers, toiletries, Easter candy, and birthday gifts from one child to the other, and one related to "Father's Day." Respondent fails to point out why any of these were not proper expenditures "attendant upon the support, education and maintenance of these five children" and on their face they are proper ones.

The record shows, without conflict, that all five children are interested and proficient in swimming and other water sports. It further shows that defendant has purchased for their use at Balboa two small boats. It does not seem unreasonable that during the nearly eleven months of the year that they are with their mother they should have recreation similar to that furnished by the defendant during the summer. This plaintiff provided them by the club membership. The cost of recreation was one of the items specified in the interlocutory decree to be borne by the defendant.

1. It is well here to note that the defendant, during the period that he had the children in his custody during the summer vacation, expended an average of over $2,000 for house rent alone.

The schedule of expenditures set forth above is for the year 1953, which was the last full year before the hearing in the court below. The record shows that the expenses for 1954, up to the date of hearing, were, as to certain items and particularly that of household help, greater than in 1953. It is unnecessary for the purposes of our decision here to go into those details. It suffices to say that excluding the items of life insurance, club dues, and charging the plaintiff with a full one-half of the cost of food, the remaining expense which was properly incurred on account of the children exceeded the amounts paid for that purpose by the defendant under the provisions of the divorce decree by more than $3,500. This demonstrates to us that under the circumstances here the denial of any increase in the amount defendant is obligated to pay for the support of his minor children was arbitrary and an abuse of discretion. We do not mean to hold or direct that the order in question should be modified by increasing the amount of the child support by the sum of $3,500. We only hold that the trial court abused its discretion in not allowing some increase and it is for that court to determine on a rehearing whether the amount of that increase should be more or less than the sum mentioned.

Respondent asserts that the trial court was not bound by the uncontradicted testimony of Josephine Primm which was corroborated by her accounts. He cites Williams v. Williams, 80 Cal.App.2d 28, 181 P.2d 110, and Carson v. Vinding, 130 Cal. App.2d 652, 279 P.2d 604. These cases are not controlling here. The appellant's testimony was neither evasive, contradictory, equivocating nor inherently improbable, nor does respondent attempt to point out anything in her testimony which was of such a character as to cast doubt upon her veracity and thus warrant the trial court in putting aside all of her testimony, including that which was corroborated by the entries in her books.

There being no evidence to dispute or contradict the evidence offered by the plaintiff, that evidence could not be arbitrarily disregarded. Dobson v. Dobson, 86 Cal.App.2d 13, at page 14, 193 P.2d 794; Mantonya v. Bratlie, 33 Cal.2d 120, at page 127, 199 P.2d 677; Wirz v. Wirz, 96 Cal. App.2d 171, at page 176, 214 P.2d 839, 15 A.L.R.2d 1129.

A great deal of evidence was received at the trial concerning and the arguments in the briefs are addressed to, the claims of the plaintiff that the defendant should furnish in the future the funds necessary to enable her to maintain (not build) a swimming pool upon the premises where she and the children are housed, give them swimming lessons, purchase a horse for their use, take them on trips in connection with their participation in school athletics, etc.

[8] It is unnecessary for us to discuss this evidence other than to say that the trial court should, in reconsidering this matter, determine whether or not expenditures of the character we have indicated are proper ones, considering the children's station in life, the manner in which they have lived, and the ability of the defendant to pay.

[9] Orders of this kind must always look not only to the present but to the foreseeable future. Dimon v. Dimon, 40 Cal.2d 516, at pages 524-525, 254 P.2d 528. They can always be conditioned so that the father is not required to make payments for future needs until such time as it is necessary or proper to incur them.

Inasmuch as this matter must be remanded to the trial court for further proceedings, the conclusions we have reached make it unnecessary to examine the question raised by plaintiff as to whether or not findings of fact are required in a proceeding such as this.

Defendant's Appeal

Defendant appeals from the order of the trial court made as heretofore stated ordering him to pay $1,000 as attorney's fees on appeal; $628 costs on appeal which includes the actual cost of the Clerk's and Reporter's Transcripts on appeal and the actual cost of any briefs not to exceed $500.

Defendant does not question the reasonableness of the amounts fixed by the order of the trial court and raises no question as to his ability to pay them. His sole contention is that inasmuch as plaintiff had substantial resources of her own there was no necessity for the order in question. He relies on decisions which had to do with appeals in which decrees of divorce or grants of alimony were involved, and cites Dietrich v. Dietrich, 41 Cal.2d 497, 261 P.2d 269; Loeb v. Loeb, 84 Cal.App.2d 141, 190 P.2d 246, and Fallon v. Fallon, 86 Cal.App.2d 872, 195 P.2d 878. These cases are not in point here.

[10, 11] The plaintiff does not appear here in her individual capacity, but in a representative one on behalf of the children who are the real parties in interest. Metson v. Metson, supra, 56 Cal.App.2d 328, at page 331, 132 P.2d 513; Dickens v. Dickens, supra, 82 Cal.App.2d 717, at page 720, 187 P.2d 91. It is therefore immaterial whether the plaintiff had funds sufficient to enable her to prosecute the appeal. Defendant's obligation is not to the plaintiff but to his children and it is for their benefit that the appeal is prosecuted.

The order of the court awarding attorney's fees and costs is affirmed, plaintiff (respondent) to recover her costs on appeal. The order denying plaintiff's application for modification of the provisions of the interlocutory decree as to child support is reversed with directions to the trial court to determine, in accordance with the views hereinbefore expressed, such additional amounts as may be reasonably necessary for the support of the minor children of the parties and modify the interlocutory decree accordingly. Plaintiff (appellant) shall recover her costs on appeal, provided that any amounts received by her under the order made by the trial court as to the payment of those costs shall be applied pro tanto to the satisfaction of the judgment for costs, given herein.

SHINN, P. J., and VALLÉE, J., concur.

137 Cal.App.2d 686

The PEOPLE of the State of California,
Respondent,

v.

Robert Namura HAYASHIDA, Appellant.
Cr. 5420.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California.

Dec. 9, 1953.

Hearing Denied Jan. 5, 1954.

Defendant was convicted of kidnapping and robbery. The Superior Court, Clement D. Nye, J., rendered judgment and defendant appealed therefrom and from order denying motion for new trial. The District Court of Appeal, Doran, J., held that where defendant had denied prior felony conviction, it was proper to allow him to answer prosecutor's question of whether he had been convicted of burglary, without showing by prosecutor that conviction was for felony and not misdemeanor, since defendant, in admitting to conviction, could have shown it to be misdemeanor if it was, but where defendant did not so act, he could not on appeal successfully object to such questioning.

Judgment and order affirmed.

1. Criminal Law ⇨1170½(5)

Witnesses ⇨277(6)

In prosecution for robbery and kidnapping, cross-examination of defendant as to his bank account and certain checks was not beyond scope of direct examination of defendant who had then explained bank account and checks and was not prejudicial error.

2. Criminal Law ⇨1043(2)

Where defendant had denied prior felony conviction, it was proper to allow him to answer prosecutor's question of whether he had been convicted of burglary, without showing by prosecutor that conviction was for felony and not misdemeanor, since defendant, in admitting to conviction, could have shown it to be misdemeanor if it was, but where defendant did not so act, but merely made general objection, he could not on appeal successfully object to such questioning.

Minsky & Garber, Albert C. Garber, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., James C. Maupin, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

DORAN, Justice.

Appellant and two other defendants were charged with robbery in Count I and for kidnapping in Count II. The two other defendants pleaded guilty to Count I. The appellant was adjudged guilty by the jury of both counts. The appeal is from the judgment and order denying a motion for a new trial.

At the trial both of the co-defendants testified for the prosecution. Defendants' testimony in effect was a denial of any connection with the robbery.

As recited in appellant's brief:

"The trial court committed prejudicial and reversible error in

"(1) Permitting respondent to cross-examine defendant beyond the scope of the direct examination.

"(2) Permitting improper impeachment of appellant.

"(3) Permitting respondent's witnesses to testify as to conclusions of law.

"(4) Limiting appellant's cross-examination of respondent's witnesses.

"(5) Excluding competent and relevant evidence."

[1] Item 1 relates to defendant's bank account and certain checks. No prejudicial error resulted in connection with this examination. On the contrary, defendant explained the bank account and checks and the cross-examination was not "beyond the scope of the direct examination".

As to Item 2, the following occurred:

"Q. Have you ever been convicted of a felony?

"A. No, sir.

"Q. Isn't it a fact that on the 6th day of December, 1946, in the Superior Court of Oakland, you pleaded guilty to burglary?

"Mr. Garber: Objected to, your Honor, being incompetent, irrelevant, immaterial.

"The Court: Objection will be overruled. You may answer the question. A. Yes, sir."

Appellant argues, "In the instant appeal, appellant denied that he was ever convicted of a felony. No record to the contrary was ever produced. Nevertheless, the court permitted the District Attorney, over appellant's objection, to question appellant about a specific offense, without producing any evidence that such offense was a felony. It is submitted that such action on the part of the District Attorney was contrary to the law and was highly prejudicial and constituted prejudicial and reversible error."

The record does not reveal whether the burglary referred to was a felony or misdemeanor. The above, as copied from the reporter's transcript, is the only reference to the subject.

[2] Obviously the court's ruling on the objection was correct. If the burglary referred to was in fact a misdemeanor it was defendant's privilege to reveal it, in which circumstances a motion to strike and a request that the court instruct the jury to disregard the incident would have been in order. In the circumstances appellant is in no position to complain.

The other three contentions are highly technical. There is no merit to number 3, and as to number 4 the rules of cross-examination were not violated.

As to number 5, the exclusion of the check and so-called note. They were excluded because of the lack of an adequate foundation. The so-called note was in Japanese and was not translated. The record supports the trial judge's rulings with regard to these matters.

The record reveals no prejudicial errors. The judgment and order are affirmed.

WHITE, P. J., and ASHBURN, J. pro tem., concur.

137 Cal.App.2d 415

ALEX FOODS, Inc., Plaintiff and Respondent,
v.

Bill Woodson METCALFE and Lloyd Torgerson, Defendants and Appellants.
Civ. 5083.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District,
California.

Nov. 30, 1955.

Rehearing Denied Dec. 21, 1955.

Hearing Denied Jan. 25, 1956.

Former employer brought suit against former employee and his new employer to enjoin them from soliciting former employer's customers. The Superior Court of Orange County, Kenneth E. Morrison, J., entered orders granting temporary restraining orders and preliminary injunctions, and the former employee and new employer appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Griffin, J., held that evidence sustained Superior Court's finding that as to a small number of customers the necessary elements had been established to warrant conclusion that injunction should be issued precluding former employee and new employer from soliciting and selling to certain restaurants, delicatessen stores, etc., which as customers of former employer had been solicited by former employee, and which had quit taking former employer's products because of such solicitations, and to which former employee was selling his new employer's products, but such was not true as to wholesale buyers, which dealt in competitive lines, and which continued to remain customers of former employer, even though a portion of their business may have been solicited by former employee for new employer.

Order granting preliminary injunction modified and, as modified, affirmed.

1. Injunction ⇨56

Master and Servant ⇨60

A customer list built up by employer over period of years is the employer's property, and its use by a former employee for his own advantage will be enjoined. West's Ann.Labor Code, § 2860.

2. Injunction ⇨56

Equity will intervene to restrain an employee from divulging confidential information gained in course of his employment, or using such information to his employer's prejudice. West's Ann.Labor Code, § 2860.

3. Constitutional Law ⇨88

Every individual possesses a form of property, the right to pursue any calling, business or profession he may choose.

4. Master and Servant ⇨60

A former employee has right to engage in a competitive business for himself and to enter into competition with his former employer, even for the business of those who had formerly been the customers of his former employer, provided that such competition is fairly and legally conducted. West's Ann.Labor Code, § 2860.

5. Master and Servant ⇨60

Equity will, to the fullest extent, protect the property rights of employers in their trade secrets and otherwise, but public policy and natural justice require that equity should also be solicitous for the right inherent in all people, not fettered by negative covenants on their part to the contrary, to follow any of the common occupations of life. West's Ann.Labor Code, § 2860.

6. Injunction ⇨126

Former employer, to obtain injunctive relief against solicitation of its customers by a former employee, must show that information was confidential and not readily accessible to competitors, that former employee solicited customers of former employer with intent to injure him, that former employee sought out certain preferred customers, whose trade is particularly profitable, and whose identities are not generally known to the trade, and that business is such that a customer will ordinarily patronize only one concern, and that established business relationship between customer and former employer would normally continue unless interfered with. West's Ann.Labor Code, § 2860.

7. Injunction ⇨126

In suit by former employer against former employee and his new employer to restrain them from competing with former employer, it is not necessary for former employer to show that former employee actually used former employer's customer lists, if former employee carried such lists in his mind or memory. West's Ann.Labor Code, § 2860.

8. Master and Servant ⇨60

If continuance of employer's trade depends on keeping secret the names of customers or other valuable information known to employer, his employee, having gained knowledge of such secrets in course of employment, cannot thereafter utilize such knowledge to prejudice of employer. West's Ann.Labor Code, § 2860.

9. Injunction ⇨56

Independent of an express contract, equity will enjoin the disclosure by former employee of confidential knowledge of trade secrets which former employee learned in course of employment. West's Ann.Labor Code, § 2860.

10. Injunction ⇨56

Fact that former employee was employed by former employer for years during which he learned the names, addresses, and requirements of former employer's customers justifies injunctive relief, if former employee undertakes to use such information in unfair competition to detriment of former employer, since such knowledge is a part of the good will of the business of the former employer and is a trade secret, and for former employee to act on it is an improper use of confidential information and amounts to unfair competition. West's Ann.Labor Code, § 2860.

11. Master and Servant ⇨60

Equitable protection may be invoked by former employer against subsequent use by a former employee of knowledge of the peculiar likes and fancies and other characteristics of the former employer's customers, where such knowledge will aid him in securing and retaining their business, and such rule applies generally to trade route cases as well as others involving a knowledge of the customers desired for specialized information, their preferences for certain products, and their buying habits. West's Ann.Labor Code, § 2860.

12. Injunction ⇨128

In suit by former employer, against former employee and his new employer, evidence sustained finding that as to certain customers necessary elements had been established to warrant conclusion that injunction should be issued precluding former employee and new employer from soliciting and selling to certain restaurants, delicatessen stores, etc., which had been solicited by former employee and which had quit taking former employer's products because of such solicitations, but such was not true as to wholesale buyers, which dealt in competitive lines, and which continued to remain customers of former employer, even though a portion of their business may have been solicited by former employee for new employer. West's Ann.Labor Code, § 2860.

13. Injunction ⇨56

Generally, act of former employee in merely informing customers of former employer of change of employment, without more, is not "solicitation" which will be enjoined. West's Ann.Labor Code, § 2860.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Solicitation".

14. Injunction ⇨56

Equity will not enjoin a former employee from receiving business from customers of his former employer, even though the circumstances be such that former employee should be prohibited from soliciting such business. West's Ann.Labor Code, § 2860.

15. Injunction ⇨56

If customers of former employer added competing line of former employee's new employer without wrongful or unfair solicitation on part of former employee, former employee and new employer could not be enjoined from accepting such business and from making sales thereafter to such customers. West's Ann.Labor Code, § 2860.

16. Injunction ⇌ 189

Where, though former employee testified that he solicited most of customers of former employer to buy new employer's products, none of former employer's customers ever testified that former employee unfairly solicited, in any manner, any of the business that they turned over to the former employee and his new employer, and there was no evidence that former employee and new employer ever spoke disparagingly of former employer's food products, or that any of former employer's customers quit taking its products because of unfair solicitation, injunction should only restrain former employee and new employer from soliciting or selling or delivering to former employer's customers who may have been wrongfully or unfairly solicited by former employee. West's Ann.Labor Code, § 2860.

17. Injunction ⇌ 189

Injunction was too broad in its terms, if it was intended to restrain former employee and his new employer from selling to former employer's customers the new employer's products not handled by former employer. West's Ann.Labor Code, § 2860.

18. Injunction ⇌ 192

An injunction to restrain unfair solicitation of former employer's customers may run against former employee's new employer as well as against former employee. West's Ann.Labor Code, § 2860.

Albert Lee Stephens, Jr., Los Angeles, and Mize, Kroese, Larsh & Mize, Santa Ana, for appellants.

Stephen F. Gallagher, Anaheim, for respondent.

GRIFFIN, Justice.

Originally, on May 7, 1954, plaintiff and respondent brought this injunction proceeding against defendant and appellant Bill W. Metcalfe a former employee of plaintiff, and obtained a temporary order restraining him from competing with plaintiff company in the capacity of driver salesman in the sale of Spanish foods, salads, etc. Later, on May 19, 1954, by amendment to the complaint joining defendant and appellant Lloyd Torgerson, an independent dealer in such goods, and who employed Metcalfe as a driver salesman, Torgerson was, together with Metcalfe, restrained accordingly. Appeals were taken from these respective orders out of an abundance of precaution and fear that plaintiff might believe these temporary restraining orders were still effective, since they were somewhat broader in terms than the preliminary injunctive order subsequently issued. Later, after a hearing of the injunction matter, the court, by minute order entered May 22, 1954, granted a preliminary injunction against both defendants and a formal written order was signed on May 28, 1954, setting forth in detail the specific provisions of the injunction.

Without determining whether the temporary restraining orders are or were effective we will, for the purpose of deciding the real issues here involved, conclude that the temporary orders, if they did continue in existence without a special order dissolving them, were merged with the subsequent formal written order granting the preliminary injunction on May 28, 1954. Knight v. Cohen, 5 Cal.App. 296, 90 P. 145; 14 Cal.Jur. p. 186, sec. 11.

Plaintiff Alex Foods, Inc. (hereinafter referred to as Alex) manufactures perishable Spanish food products, and sells and distributes them throughout Southern California. Its principal place of business and plant are in Orange County. Its principal competitor in that district is XLNT Spanish Food Company (hereinafter referred to as XLNT), a Spanish food products company. Eight additional concerns with sizeable businesses compete with the named companies in the manufacture, sale, and distribution of such Spanish food products. Alex and XLNT manufacture and distribute Spanish foods of the same general nature and character, although XLNT does, and Alex does not, manufacture a line of canned goods in addition to its other Spanish food products. Alex distributes a certain cheese line and fish line which XLNT does not distribute.

Defendant and appellant Torgerson is a wholesale food distributor specializing in XLNT Spanish food products. He has sold them since 1929. When this action was commenced he was selling and distributing in Los Angeles County and parts of Orange County pursuant to an agreement with XLNT which allocated the territory to him and fixed its boundaries. At the time this action was filed Torgerson had set up five routes in the territory assigned to him, and these were served by three trucks, each of which worked a different route every day. Three of these routes were in Orange County and had a total of 75 customers.

Defendant Metcalfe is a salesman by occupation. For approximately six years prior to the hearing of this cause he had been a salesman of Spanish foods. From 1946 to 1948, he worked as delicatessen manager for another company and as such he became familiar with many elements of the delicatessen business, including the method of sale and character of food products sold in delicatessen stores including Spanish-American foods. During this time he purchased and merchandised the products of XLNT, Alex, and Superior Food Products Company. In 1948, he accepted employment as a route salesman for one Rothaermel, who was then a distributor of Spanish food products for Alex. He was then assigned a definite route in Rothaermel's territory around Pomona, and was issued a small list of markets and cafes within the area of his route and told to build up the route by calling on all the additional markets and cafes in that area. He remained on that route for about a year. In June of 1949, he was assigned a route in Orange County, and while working this route he serviced with Spanish foods some markets and stores who were customers of Alex when this action was commenced. Some time in 1950, Rothaermel's distributorship was terminated and he "merged" with Alex. Meanwhile, Metcalfe continued to work for Rothaermel on the Orange County route until the "merger" with Alex and was promoted to supervisor, continuing in that capacity for Alex after the merger until leaving their employ in 1954. Metcalfe's duties as supervisor for Alex included developing routes in new areas, serving as relief route driver when regular drivers went on vacation and at other times when relief was necessary, breaking in new men as route drivers, serving as liaison between the front office and the route drivers, and going along with the regular route drivers in order to smooth over any trouble which had developed at any stop on his route. When Metcalfe relieved a regular driver for Alex, he was given the driver's route list and served the stops thereon. He made no effort on such occasions to acquire new customers. The route lists contained the names and addresses of the customers, what they normally bought and the dates they were called upon. In developing new routes for Alex, Metcalfe was assigned a few stops from an existing route and a new area, and he was instructed to call on every market and cafe in that area. He was left to his own discretion in this pursuit and received no particular instructions from Alex, although Alex did furnish him with an appropriate price list of its products. After acquiring a sufficient number of stops in the new area, Metcalfe would turn the route over to a new driver and repeat the process in another area. In performing the duties of a supervisor and relief route man, Metcalfe operated in the counties of Orange, San Bernardino, San Diego, Riverside, Los Angeles, Ventura and Santa Barbara. As a consequence he became acquainted with the various routes established and operated by Alex in those counties. While Metcalfe was employed by Alex, the company prepared an addressograph system covering the customers on its various routes. Individual route salesmen submitted lists of customers from their routes and the addressograph lists and plates were taken from these salesmen's lists. Metcalfe assisted in the preparation of the lists and plates covering Orange and San Diego counties. In addition to assisting with the addressograph system, Metcalfe also helped manage routes for Alex. Metcalfe testified he did not keep any of the route books nor any records or memoranda of any information he acquired, when he left Alex. He testified that although he helped prepare these lists, he took none of them with him and did not need such lists because he could well remember the customers' names and places of business and the information contained thereon, without the use of them. As a result of his experience with Alex, Metcalfe became acquainted with the price of products, discount policy for quantity purchases, the type of its products, and difficulties encountered with respect to their perishability.

Toward the end of Metcalfe's employment by Alex, differences arose between Metcalfe and Alex's sales manager over certain matters and between Metcalfe and the company over his future status and duties. On March 20, 1954, Metcalfe wrote Alex a letter in which he stated that on Friday night, March 19th, he was informed that he had been relieved of his duties as supervisor by Rothaermel and that he wished to arrange a meeting with the company to present his side of the story and review any charges that may have been made against him. Apparently, as a consequence, on April 15th, Metcalfe gave the company two-weeks notice of his intention to quit, and on the following day Alex terminated his employment.

It appears from Metcalfe's testimony that on April 17th, Metcalfe telephoned defendant Torgerson and told him that he was no longer working for Alex and was looking for a job; that later that afternoon he met Torgerson at his place of business and Torgerson told him that he was reorganizing certain routes in Orange County for the purpose of covering that area more intensively, and they discussed the possibility of Metcalfe's employment to assist in this work, but that no understanding was then reached.

Torgerson testified that such reorganization was necessary because his driver who handled the Orange County route had diabetes and had to work closer to his home. Metcalfe further testified that during the next few days he had several telephone conversations with Torgerson concerning his employment and that on April 21, he saw Torgerson in person and he offered Metcalfe employment as route salesman and to assist in the reorganization of the Orange County routes, and that he then went to work on April 23rd for Mr. Torgerson. He further testified that in the discussions leading to his employment by Torgerson no mention was made of any information acquired by Metcalfe while in Alex' employment concerning its customers, their names and addresses, and which ones were or were not profitable, its routes, route lists, price and credit policies or any aspect of its business; and none was made thereafter prior to the filing of the complaint herein; that he never offered to show, produce or hand over to Torgerson any route books or lists of customers or other information which he used while with Alex; and that Torgerson never requested such information from him.

It appears that for a number of days after his employment by Torgerson, Metcalfe rode with Torgerson and one of his drivers on several of Torgerson's routes in Orange and Los Angeles counties. Metcalfe was assigned several routes in an area in Orange County which had formerly been serviced by one Atkinson, one of Torgerson's regular drivers. He was given a route list which Atkinson had used and a price list, and was instructed to arrange his own schedule in the area and to call on all businesses in the area which might sell XLNT merchandise such as markets, restaurants, schools and delicatessens, and he was left largely to his own discretion in developing the routes to their maximum capacity.

Metcalfe claimed that when he left Alex's employment he bore no ill will toward the company or his superiors there and his feelings toward them were friendly; and that in seeking new customers for Torgerson, while working on the Orange County territory, he did not seek in any manner to disparage the products of Alex or persuade markets or stores to stop purchasing its products and substitute those of XLNT.

Torgerson testified that he assigned Metcalfe to the routes in Orange County in order to achieve more economical operation of routes; that ordinarily, his route men loaded their trucks with merchandise each morning at his place of business before starting on their daily routes; that when they completed their routes they returned to Torgerson's to check in. Metcalfe worked for Torgerson on the routes in Orange County from May 3rd to May 7th, and during this period he obtained 35 new customers for him. When Metcalfe took over this territory all of these customers (some preferred) were handling Alex products, and none of them was handling XLNT products. Metcalfe had had business dealings with 33 of these 35 customers when he worked for Alex. But with the exception of four customers in Costa Mesa, all of these dealings had occurred more than six months prior to the time he commenced working for Torgerson. There is some evidence that a few did, but there is no evidence that the remainder of these customers quit the Alex products and substituted XLNT products. The evidence is that the great majority of them continued to sell both of these products along with other competing products.

On May 7, 1954, Torgerson dismissed Metcalfe because of the filing of this action and the issuance of a temporary restraining order against him, because Torgerson did not want to become involved in any trouble with Alex. Torgerson immediately took over the routes, including the customers obtained by Metcalfe, and when Torgerson was served with a temporary restraining order, these routes were turned over to the officers and employees of XLNT, under some arrangements with them. Apparently, Metcalfe was subsequently employed by XLNT in some other capacity. Included among the customers of plaintiff were a few restaurants, as well as cafeterias and grocery stores, but they were principally large volume food markets, and over 50 per cent of them handled a competing line of Spanish foods. There were a few stores, restaurants, and cafeterias (the number of them is not clear from the record), to which plaintiff formerly sold some of its products, which quit patronizing plaintiff, either in part or in whole, and started patronizing defendants. Defendants offered in evidence a route list of retail grocery stores in Orange County put out by the local newspaper. It showed the name of the store, address, name of manager or owner, rating, and buying connection. Similar route lists for neighboring counties were in evidence. These route lists were available to any salesman representing regional or nationally advertised products. The names of most of the customers to which plaintiff and defendants sold their goods were contained therein, excepting a restaurant or two and delicatessen stores which handled orders of chili con carne, salads, etc.

After hearing, the trial court adjudged and decreed, until further order of the court, that defendants be enjoined and restrained from, directly or indirectly (a) Seeking out or soliciting any of the customers of plaintiff or any routes of plaintiff for the purpose of selling, or offering to sell, to any of said customers, any of the food products hereinafter described, by or through the use of any confidential information of plaintiff secured by defendant Metcalfe during and in the course of his employment by plaintiff for any portion of the period of approximately six years ending on April 22, 1954. The food varieties mentioned are Spanish foods and other foods customarily sold in delicatessen stores and sold or distributed by either plaintiff or defendants in the counties of Orange or Los Angeles. The routes referred to are those developed by plaintiff for the sale and distribution of said food products within those counties which came to the knowledge of the defendant Metcalfe, during and in the course of his employment by plaintiff; (b) Seeking out or soliciting any of said customers of plaintiff with which defendant Metcalfe personally transacted business for or on behalf of plaintiff during the period of his employment by plaintiff for the purpose of selling or offering to sell any of said food products to any of said customers; (c) Selling or delivering any of said food products to (certain of plaintiff's customers hereinafter designated) who, since the employment of defendant Metcalfe by defendant Torgerson, have been solicited by defendant Metcalfe for the sale of any of said food products; provided that certain customers of plaintiff are those whose identity has been secured by defendant Metcalfe, from confidential information concerning the routes or customers of plaintiff while in the employment of plaintiff, and who were not customers of defendant Torgerson prior to the employment of Metcalfe by Torgerson; (d) Making use of any of the confidential information consisting of the names and addresses of plaintiff's customers, the types of said food products sold to plaintiff's customers, and the volume and price thereof, and their particular needs in connection with said food products, including also any commercial use of the friendly feeling secured or developed by defendant Metcalfe during and in the course of his employment by plaintiff. A writ of injunction was issued accordingly.

Defendants' claim is that the complaint does not state a cause of action, and that the evidence is not sufficient to support such an injunction. In this respect defendants rely principally upon the decisions in Aetna Bldg. Maintenance Co. v. West, 39 Cal.2d 198, 246 P.2d 11; and Avocado Sales Co. v. Wyse, 122 Cal.App. 627, 10 P.2d 485. They claim that proof of the five elements which are stated therein to be a prerequisite to the issuance of such injunction, were lacking, and it should be denied because (1) There was no confidential information not readily accessible to competitors; (2) The former employee did not solicit the customers of the former employer with intent to injure; (3) There were no preferred customers whose trade was particularly profitable and whose identities were not generally known to the trade which were sought out by the former employee; (4) The business is not such that a customer will ordinarily patronize only one concern; and (5) The business relationship between the customer and the former employee would normally continue unless interfered with because it depends on the quality of the product and the efficiency of the service.

It is further contended that no injunction should issue against defendant Torgerson in any event and that the restraints imposed are too broad in that they restrain defendants from the solicitation of and the sale to customers of plaintiff of products produced and distributed by defendants, or either of them, even though said products were not produced or distributed by plaintiff.

[1-5] Section 2860 of the Labor Code provides that everything which an employee acquires by virtue of his employment, except the compensation which is due to him from his employer, belongs to the employer, whether acquired lawfully or unlawfully, or during or after the expiration of the term of his employment. A customer list built up by the employer over a period of years is his property, and its use by a former employee for his own advantage will be enjoined. California Intelligence Bureau v. Cunningham, 83 Cal.App.2d 197, 188 P.2d 303. Equity will intervene to restrain an employee from divulging confidential information gained in the course of his employment or using such information to his employer's prejudice. On the other hand, every individual possesses a form of property, the right to pursue any calling, business or profession he may choose. A former employee has the right to engage in a competitive business for himself and to enter into competition with his former employer, even for the business of those who had formerly been the customers of his former employer, provided such competition is fairly and legally conducted. Equity will, to the fullest extent, protect the property rights of employers in their trade secrets and otherwise, but public policy and natural justice require that equity should also be solicitous for the right inherent in all people, not fettered by negative covenants upon their part to the contrary, to follow any of the common occupations of life. Continental Car-Na-Var Corp. v. Moseley, 24 Cal.2d 104, 148 P.2d 9.

The main question here presented is whether, under the facts of the instant case, defendants come within this latter class, are entitled to such protection, and were not guilty of unfair competition in soliciting the customers of plaintiff.

[6] The next question is whether the facts bring defendants within the principles set forth in the line of cases exemplified by George v. Burdusis, 21 Cal.2d 153, 130 P.2d 399; Empire Steam Laundry v. Lozier, 165 Cal. 95, 130 P. 1180, 44 L.R.A., N.S., 1159, and other cases cited in California Intelligence Bureau v. Cunningham, 83 Cal.App.2d 197, at page 202, 188 P.2d 303, pertaining to the so-called "route cases", or whether the facts bring the case within the line of decisions illustrated by Continental Car-Na-Var Corp. v. Moseley, 24 Cal.2d 104, 148 P.2d 9; Avocado Sales Co. v. Wyse, supra, and similar cases cited in California Intelligence Bureau v. Cunningham, supra, 83 Cal.App.2d at page 202, 188 P.2d 303. The elements necessary to be shown in the first class of cases are indicated therein. Aetna Building Maintenance Co. v. West, 39 Cal.2d 198, 246 P.2d 11, 15, re-adopts the statement that proof of these elements is necessary to justify the application of the principles giving rights of parties in connection with retail delivery routes, and lists them as follows:

"* * * to obtain relief against a former employee it must be shown: (1) The information was confidential and not readily accessible to competitors; (2) The former employee solicited the customers of his former employer with intent to injure him; (3) The former employee sought out certain preferred customers whose trade is particularly profitable and whose identities are not generally known to the trade; (4) The business is such that a customer will ordinarily patronize only one concern; (5) The established business relationship between the customer and the former employer would normally continue unless interfered with."

[7] Assuming that some of the facts here related might bring defendants within the principles applicable to the so-called route cases, the evidence produced in this respect, although capable of being otherwise interpreted, might be sufficient to support the trial court's conclusion as to element No. 1 above mentioned in the Aetna case that defendant Metcalfe did have knowledge and confidential information of the routes, route sheets, the types of food products sold to plaintiff's customers, the volume price, the particular needs of the customers which were not readily accessible to competitors, and had a friendly feeling secured or developed by defendant Metcalfe for said customers during and in the course of his employment by plaintiff. It is not necessary to show that the employee actually used such lists if he carried such lists in his mind or memory, George v. Burdusis, supra. As to the 2nd element, that he solicited the customers of plaintiff with intent to injure plaintiff might be reasonably inferred from the evidence. As to the 3rd, that he sought out certain preferred customers whose trade was particularly profitable and whose identities were not generally known to the trade may have been established. As to No. 4, it is clear that the requirement that the business be such that a customer will ordinarily patronize one concern is not established as to most of the customers in dispute. In fact the evidence shows that the great portion of these customers were food markets carrying competitive lines, and that they do not ordinarily patronize only one concern. As to the 5th element, although proof of a contrary finding might be supported, it does appear that plaintiff's business with only a few of these customers would have necessarily continued unless interfered with. Some distinction between retail delivery route cases and wholesale buyers is apparently made. George v. Burdusis, supra, 21 Cal.2d at page 159, 130 P.2d 399. Here, the plaintiff was a wholesaler and a great majority of the customers were wholesale buyers handling competing lines, and continued to handle plaintiff's line of goods.

As indicated in the West case and California Intelligence Bureau v. Cunningham, supra, the required elements related read in the conjunctive and not in the alternative. The question arises as to whether or not all of these elements must concur before injunction could properly issue in a so-called route case. (See interesting discussion on "Unfair Competition", in 41 Cal.Law Review p. 38.) If all of these elements must concur then plaintiff's injunction must fall as to those customers which do not qualify thereunder because of lack of proof of all of such elements.

In California Intelligence Bureau v. Cunningham, supra, 83 Cal.App.2d at page 202, 188 P.2d at page 306, a second group of cases is cited holding that equity will not enjoin a former employee from using knowledge or information gained while in the employ of a former employer if:

"* * * (1) the customers solicited (a) do not constitute a trade secret, or confidential information, or a confidential list in which a proprietary interest might be claimed, or (b) are commonly known to the trade and are called upon by salesmen for various companies, or are wholesale buyers whose names appear in directories and are so few in number that anyone might readily discover them, and the list of them is not secret or confidential; (2) the former employer is in open competition with others engaged in similar business, selling in an open, competitive market; (3) the former employee was a salesman of his former employer in a commercial field where there was no assurance of an order unless he could satisfy his customer that his product was better, cheaper, or more salable than that of his competitor, where the customer usually desired to examine, inspect and compare the product and prices offered to him and each sale was a distinct transaction, not necessarily implying that another will follow; (4) no secret or trust reposed in the former employee in the course of his employment is violated and no trade or business secret or confidential information is used by the former employee." (Italics ours.)

[8-11] Regardless of the classification into which the facts herein mentioned bring this case, it is clear that if the continuance of an employer's trade depends on keeping secret the names of customers or other valuable information known to such employer, his employee, having gained knowledge of such secrets in the course of his employment, cannot thereafter utilize such knowledge to the prejudice of his former employer. Independent of an express contract, equity will enjoin the disclosure of confidential knowledge of trade secrets which a former employee learned in the course of his employment. The fact that a defendant was employed by plaintiff for years during which he learned the names, addresses, and requirements of plaintiff's customers justifies injunctive relief where the defendant undertook to use such information in unfair competition to the detriment of plaintiff. Such knowledge is a part of the good will of the business and is a trade secret. A list of customers is a trade secret if there is confidential information as to such customers. To act upon it is an improper use of confidential information and amounts to unfair competition. "'* * * the additional influence of the friendly contact of the former employee with the persons whose business he would carry to his new connection brings the solicitation within the condemnation of unfair competition.'" Wallich v. Koren, 80 Cal.App.2d 223, 226, 181 P.2d 682, 685; Dairy Dale Co. v. Azevedo, 211 Cal. 344, 295 P. 10. Equitable protection may be invoked against the subsequent use by a former employee of knowledge of the "peculiar likes and fancies and other characteristics" of the former employer's customers where such knowledge will aid him in securing and retaining their business. This rule applies generally to trade route cases as well as others involving a knowledge of the customers desired for specialized information, their preferences for certain products, and their buying habits. Aetna Building Maintenance Co. v. West, supra, 39 Cal.2d at page 205, 246 P.2d 11.

[12] The trial court was justified in believing that as to a small number of the 33 customers the necessary elements had been established to warrant the conclusion that injunction should be issued against defendants precluding them from soliciting and selling to certain restaurants, delicatessen stores, etc., who as customers of plaintiff had been solicited by Metcalfe, and who quit taking plaintiff's products because of such solicitation, and to whom he was then selling his competitor's products. But this is not true as to those wholesale buyers, dealing in competitive lines, and who continued to remain customers of plaintiff, even though a portion of their business may have been solicited by defendants.

As to these wholesale buyers of Spanish food products, it is shown that almost every one carries more than one brand of such food products; that it is the present marketing custom, and firmly established, that every such market must furnish as wide a selection of named brand products as possible so that the consumer will be able to select any brand such consumer may particularly desire among food products of similar type. In this respect the sale and distribution of food products to retail markets, as wholesalers, bears no resemblance to the sale of ice, laundry service, or janitorial service, because items such as these are items which are not duplicated by one customer and therefore the sale of such items to a customer already using such an item from one source means displacement from that source to be supplanted by the new item sold. In the case of food products, the sale of an additional food product is not a displacement item as the sale of both products can continue at the same time and the proportion of sales of each product would be wholly dependent upon the quality and price and other factors of marketing ability which are strictly a matter of free and open competition. The customer's place of business is open to the public and is advertised by every medium at their command. Their existence is not a secret of any kind. They are classified in telephone directories and in booklets published by newspapers interested in encouraging business, and they provide plans and routes to serve grocery stores and markets according to their most economical operation.

[13-15] The general rule is stated in the Aetna case to be that merely informing customers of one's former employer of change of employment without more, is not solicitation, and that equity will not enjoin a former employee from receiving business from the customers of his former employer, even though the circumstances be such that he should be prohibited from soliciting such business. The order here involved does not indicate and (since the exhibit from which the witnesses were testifying was not brought up) the record does not show in detail which of the 33 customers may have quit taking plaintiff's products and took defendants' products as a result of defendants' solicitation. The testimony is that a great majority who carried plaintiff's line of food products also carried XLNT products. It does not show in particular which of these customers took XLNT products as a result of wrongful or unfair solicitation on the part of Metcalfe, or whether these customers voluntarily added the competing line without wrongful or unfair solicitation. It is clear that in the latter case defendants could not be enjoined from accepting this business and making sales thereafter to such customers. Golden State Milk Prod. Co. v. Brown, 217 Cal. 570, 20 P.2d 657.

It was held in the Aetna case that where the employee informed his former employer's customers that he was terminating his services and of his plans to go into competing business himself, that was not unfair solicitation since there was no suggestion that the customer cancel its contract with the former employer.

In Continental Car-Na-Var Corp. v. Moseley, supra, the employee sent out letters to certain customers of his former employer advising them of his severance of business relations with the former employer and that he was engaging in business for himself. This was held not to be unfair solicitation. See also Theodore v. Williams, 44 Cal.App. 34, 37, 185 P. 1014.

[16, 17] Although Metcalfe testified he solicited most of these customers to also buy XLNT products none of plaintiff's customers ever testified that defendant unfairly solicited, in any manner, any of the business they turned over to defendants, and there was no evidence that defendants ever spoke disparagingly of plaintiff's food products, or that any of plaintiff's customers quit taking its products because of such unfair solicitation. Accordingly, the injunction should only restrain defendants from soliciting or selling or delivering to the class of customers indicated who may have been wrongfully or unfairly solicited by Metcalfe, during the period in question. The injunction extended only to Orange and Los Angeles counties, as indicated by the order, and not to other neighboring counties, as contended by defendants. The injunction was too broad in its terms if it was intended thereby to restrain defendants from selling its products not handled by plaintiff.

[13] It is established that the injunction to this extent may also run against defendant's new employer as well. George v. Burdusis, supra; Santa Monica Ice & Cold Storage Co. v. Rossier, 42 Cal.App.2d 467, 109 P.2d 382. In the absence of a specific finding, the question as to which particular customers may have been so wrongfully and unfairly solicited would become a factual question to be determined upon any possible contempt proceedings.

Order granting preliminary injunction should be and is modified accordingly and affirmed as thus modified.

BARNARD, P. J., and MUSSELL, J.,
concur.

137 Cal.App.2d 573

Fred G. ROBINSON, Plaintiff, Cross-Defendant and Appellant,
v.

Stephen CUNEO, Defendant, Cross-Complainant and Respondent.
Civ. 8598.

District Court of Appeal, Third District,
California.
Dec. 6, 1955.

Rehearing Denied Jan. 3, 1956.

Action against adjoining landowner for interference with plaintiff's rightful use of water. Defendant cross-complained, seeking to quiet his title to an easement across plaintiff's land. The Superior Court, Merced County, R. R. Sischo, J., entered a judgment denying plaintiff any recovery on his complaint, and, responsive to cross-complaint, quieted defendant's title to an easement or right of way for an irrigation ditch across the land of the plaintiff. On plaintiff's appeal, the District Court of Appeal, Van Dyke, P. J., held that the evidence sustained the judgment that plaintiff take nothing but held that there was insufficient evidence to support the trial court's adjudication that plaintiff's right to use the water from ditch was subject to defendant's rights thereto.

Reversed in part and in part affirmed.

1. Waters and Water Courses ⇨158½(1)

In action against adjoining landowner for interference with plaintiff's rightful use of water, wherein defendant cross-complained, seeking to quiet his title to an easement across plaintiff's land, evidence sustained finding that defendant owned an easement or right of way for use, maintenance, repair and control of irrigation ditch across plaintiff's land and that such easement included, in addition to strip of land on which ditch was located, a strip of land for a distance of 10 feet in width from the bottom of the outside of each bank of said ditch.

2. Easements ⇨38

Owner of servient tenement still owns fee, even if a right of way be established across it, and as such owner he make any use of easement strip not inconsistent with full easement rights of easement owner, and such easement owner owns no part of land itself and has no right to exclude owner from use of any land, except in so far as use interferes with his easement rights.

3. Waters and Water Courses ⇨152(8)

In action against adjoining landowner for interference with plaintiff's rightful use of water, wherein defendant cross-complained, seeking to quiet his title to an easement across plaintiff's land, evidence would not sustain finding that such right as plaintiff had to use water from ditch was subject to prior and superior right of defendant.

4. Waters and Water Courses ⇨144½

One of two adjoining landowners for whose land water originating in river had been appropriated had no right to have ditch running across his land to his neighbor's land maintained in semi-full status merely because that status made it more convenient for him to take water therefrom, and the neighbor incurred no liability by restoring ditch to its original proportions, even though deepening of ditch lowered water level.

5. Waters and Water Courses $\Rightarrow$ 152(8)

In action against adjoining landowner for interference with plaintiff's rightful use of water, wherein defendant cross-complained, seeking to quiet his title to an easement across plaintiff's land, evidence supported judgment that plaintiff take nothing on his claim for crop damage.

C. Ray Robinson, Merced, for appellant.

Preston, Braucht & George, Merced, for respondent.

VAN DYKE, Presiding Justice.

This is an appeal from a judgment denying appellant any recovery on his complaint and, responsive to a cross-complaint, quieting respondent's title to an easement or right of way for an irrigation ditch across the land of appellant. The judgment further adjudicated the relative rights of the parties to use of water flowing in the ditch.

Appellant and respondent are owners of adjoining agricultural land. The respondent's land lies to the southwest of the land of appellant. The ditch crosses appellant's land, the flow of the water being from the east to the west. The water originates in the Merced River to the east and flows across intervening lands to the easterly boundary of appellant's property. At that point and adjacent to appellant's land is a sump or dredge pond into which the water from the ditch empties. The dredge pond was left when the land to the east of appellant's land was dredged. The dredging operation destroyed the old existing ditch but the testimony is that it was sufficiently restored as the dredging progressed so that the water still flows from the river in approximately the same way and along the same course as it did before the dredging was done. From the pond the water flows into the ditch, crosses appellant's land and goes on to the land of respondent where it is used for irrigation purposes. In 1951 appellant leased his land to a tenant for cotton cropping on shares, intending to irrigate the crop with water brought to his land by the old ditch from the river. He claimed that the respondent so interfered with his rightful use of water as to cause the loss of the cotton crop and he sued for the damages that ensued.

Respondent answered the complaint and though he did not deny that appellant had some right to the use of water, yet he claimed that he had not interfered with such right and for that and other reasons was not responsible for the loss of the cotton crop. He also cross-complained, seeking to quiet his title to an easement across appellant's land for maintaining the ditch and flowing water along it. At the close of the trial the trial court viewed the ditch and thereafter made findings to the following effect: That appellant's title to his land was subject to an easement over and across the same for the use, maintenance, repair and control of an irrigation ditch; that this easement for more than twenty years last past had been owned by and in the possession of respondent; that the right of way for the ditch included a strip of land for a distance of ten feet in width from the bottom "of the outside of each bank of said ditch"; that respondent had not prevented appellant from using his right to water; that respondent was not responsible for the loss of the cotton crop; that such right as appellant had to use water from the ditch was subject to the prior and superior right of respondent and limited to such water as might be flowing in the ditch in such quantities and at such time that its use by appellant would not interfere with or restrict the use of said ditch or the water therein by respondent.

[1-3] Appellant contends that the findings of the trial court as to the respective rights and interests of the parties in the irrigation ditch across the appellant's land and in the waters that might flow therein are not supported by the evidence. The decree itself is somewhat ambiguous. It adjudges that respondent, at the time the action was begun, was and still is the owner of and entitled to possession of an easement or right of way for the use, maintenance, repair and control of an irrigation ditch across appellant's land. We think this part of the decree was substantially supported by the evidence. We do not construe the decree in its use of the word "control" as indicating a control exclusive of the rights of appellant as owner of the fee or as exclusive of his rights in the use of the ditch and the water therein upon his own land, whatever those rights may be, but rather as a statement of the secondary easements that go with a primary easement over the property of another. The decree next declares that the easement includes a strip of land on which the ditch is located and in addition thereto a strip of land for a distance of ten feet in width "from the bottom of the outside of each bank of said ditch". There was no recorded description of the easement as it existed over the lands of appellant which used this specific description as to lateral extent. However, there were grants in evidence inferentially referring to the same ditch as it was located and maintained over other lands which support the trial court's finding that across the appellant's lands it had the same lateral extent. There was also evidence that in cleaning out the ditch the operator of the dragline had done no more than to restore it to its original dimensions, which, of course, included space on both banks whereon to deposit material which had accumulated in the ditch and was being removed therefrom. In view of the fact that the ditch was in some places excavated to dimensions of eight feet across the top, six feet across the bottom and a depth of four to six feet, it is a reasonable deduction by the trial court that spoil banks of the dimension fixed by the court were necessary to the proper exercise of the easement rights. In addition to the foregoing the trial court inspected the ditch and since the easement found to exist included the secondary easements of keeping the ditch cleaned and of piling the spoil on the banks thereof we think the whole record substantially supports the conclusion of the trial judge that the easement had the lateral extent adjudged. The decree further adjudged that the claim of appellant "in and to said easement and right of way is without any right whatsoever and that said cross-defendant, Fred G. Robinson, has no right, title, interest, claim or estate in or to said easement or right of way or any part thereof and that said Fred G. Robinson be and he is hereby enjoined and debarred from asserting any claim whatever in or to said right of way or easement across said land and premises adverse to defendant and cross-complainant." If by the foregoing it was intended to be adjudged that the appellant as owner of the servient tenement had no right, and was enjoined from claiming any right to the use of the easement strip in such way as not to interfere with the easement rights, then the decree would be against the law. The owner of the servient tenement still owns the fee, even if a right of way be established across it, and as such owner he may make any use of the easement strip not inconsistent with the full easement rights of the easement owner. Such easement owner owns no part of the land itself and has no right to exclude the owner from the use of any of the land, except in so far as a use interferes with his easement rights. However, we do not construe the decree as doing more than adjudging that the rights of the respondent as owner of the easement are not to be interfered with by the owner of the servient tenement. We hold that nothing more was intended and nothing more was adjudged. Hannah v. Pogue, 23 Cal. 2d 849, 856, 147 P.2d 572. The decree then proceeded to declare as follows: "provided, however, that without any obligation on the part of said defendant and cross-complainant to supply or maintain water therein and subject to the prior and superior right of said defendant and cross-complainant to the use of said water, plaintiff, Fred G. Robinson, shall have the use of such water as may be flowing in said ditch in such quantities, and at such times, and in such manner as not to interfere with or restrict the use of said ditch or the water therein by defendant, Stephen Cuneo." This is the only part of the decree which purports to adjudge the rights of the parties in the waters flowing in the ditch. Reference must be made to the evidence to ascertain whether or not this adjudication that respondent's rights in the water flowing in the ditch were superior to those of appellant may be sustained. Counsel on neither side made any special effort to ascertain what these rights of the respective parties were. There was introduced in evidence an abstract of title to appellant's land, a bulky document containing some 500 pages. We have examined this exhibit and from that examination think we understand why counsel have foreborne to enter upon a definitive examination as to the extent of water rights in the water flowing in the ditch. References to a ditch appear in many of the conveyances reflected in the abstract, the earliest references going back to 1855 and antedating the patents to the land. The ditch is referred to as the Hamlin Ditch, the Mill Ditch and by other names, and it appears from both the abstract and the testimony that the ditch takes water from the Merced River and carries it across intervening lands and across the lands of appellant and on to the lands of respondent. It appears that in early times the water was used to run a mill in addition to being devoted in part to irrigation of the lands it traversed and that after use at the mill it was conveyed back into the Merced River at a lower point. In none of the conveyance references that we have found in the abstract is there any description of the capacity of the ditch or its width or depth save only the provisions we have referred to as the spoil bank strip on either side of the excavation and while this in itself gives some idea as to the capacity of the ditch it is anything but accurate. The record does not anywhere show the amount of water received into the ditch at the point of appropriation from the waters of the Merced nor the amount transported by the ditch across the various properties traversed thereby, nor is there any evidence of record or otherwise herein as to how much water has been used on the various parcels of land traversed by the ditch nor as to how much acreage has been irrigated thereby. It does appear, however, as a fair inference from the record history of the ditch and from the testimony that various landowners have used the ditch in common to transport water for use upon their land. Appellant testified that of his own knowledge (he was 81 years old when he testified), he, and his father who owned the land before him, had made varied uses of the water brought down the ditch during the years since his childhood, and there was testimony that at least on some occasions considerable irrigation over a considerable area was obtained by using water thus brought to his land. The appropriation undoubtedly originated over 100 years ago and we think the record disclosed with certainty that the appropriation, whatever it may have been originally, has been exercised continuously from the first and, further, that this use of the appropriated water and of the ditch for the transportation of the same has never been singly owned by anyone, but has been, although a fluctuating, nevertheless a continuous, common use by the owners of the land across which the ditch has been maintained. One of the long-time employees of respondent testified that about the same time that the ditch was cleaned across appellant's land the drag-line used for that purpose was sent all the way to the Merced River to clean the ditch between the appellant's land and the river; and that, although the land immediately to the east of appellant's land and known as the Goldman Ranch had been dredged 10 or 12 years ago and although in the dredging the original ditch had been necessarily destroyed, yet the dredger had restored the ditch by depositing tailings for banks and sealing the banks and the bottom by the placement of "slickens" so that when the dredge left the dredging field the waterway was intact and usable. We cannot read this record otherwise than to say that it shows the water concerning which the parties were here contending was appropriated water originating in the river and carried to the contestants' lands by the ancient ditch. That being so, and nothing to the contrary appearing, there is no support for the trial court's adjudication that in respect to their several rights to the use of the water transported by the ditch respondent's rights therein are superior to those of appellant's. In so far as the decree purports to so adjudicate, it lacks support and must be reversed.

[4,5] Turning now to the appellant's contention that the evidence does not support that part of the judgment denying him relief for the loss of his cotton crop, we think his contention cannot be sustained. The evidence was conflicting, but the following appears which sufficiently supports the trial court's denial of relief to the appellant: For many years that portion of the ditch which crosses appellant's land has been cleaned from time to time by various methods which did not restore it to its original depth. In earlier times this cleaning had been done by a "Fresno" scraper drawn by teams. Later it had been done by what the witnesses described as a "V" dragged by a tractor running along the ditch. Notwithstanding such cleaning, the ditch had gradually silted up and just before time to irrigate appellant's crop the respondent had the ditch excavated by a dragline. There was testimony, including that of the dragline operator, that the excavation had done no more than to restore the ditch both in width and in depth to its original proportions. The dragline operator testified that he had been able to ascertain the old dimensions of the ditch by observing various markings of the original ditch limits manifested by soil colorings and soil texture and was thus able to confine his excavations to the material that had silted in. There is nothing in the record to justify a holding that respondent had in any way through the years lost the right to maintain the ditch in its original condition as to depth and width. Appellant complains that the deepening of the ditch served to lower the water level therein and thus to prevent him from obtaining a proper supply of water. If such lowering took place, it is shown by the record to have been caused by the restoring of the ditch to its original proportions and appellant had no right to have the ditch maintained in its semi-filled status merely because that status made it more convenient for him to take water therefrom. There is no evidence that respondent interfered with the flow of appropriated water from the river, nor, indeed, if the flow was insufficient, did appellant show that he did anything to increase the flow. In addition to the foregoing there was evidence that appellant's land, not having been leveled or in any way artificially prepared for irrigation, was not capable of such irrigation and would not have produced a crop except in limited areas. On the whole record we find substantial and, therefore, sufficient support for the trial court's judgment that appellant take nothing as against respondent.

That portion of the judgment appealed from which purports to declare the relative rights of the parties to the use of water brought to and across appellant's land by the irrigation ditch or their relative rights to the use of water from the river or which purports to regulate as between the parties the use of water in the ditch is reversed. Otherwise, the judgment is affirmed. Appellant to recover his costs.

PEEK and SCHOTTKY, JJ., concur.

137 Cal.App.2d 698

SONOMA COUNTY FLOOD CONTROL AND WATER CONSERVATION DISTRICT, a body corporate and politic, Petitioner,

v.

Jimmie ANDERSON, as County Treasurer of Sonoma County and ex officio Treasurer of Sonoma County Flood Control and Water Conservation District, Respondent, and

Walter M. Robbins and Jessie P. Robbins, Intervenor on behalf of themselves and all other taxpayers of the Sonoma County Flood Control and Water Conservation District, Intervenor.

District Court of Appeal, Third District,
California.

Dec. 9, 1955.

Rehearing Denied Jan. 5, 1956.

Proceeding on a petition for writ of mandate. The District Court of Appeal, Van Dyke, P. J., held that since it appeared that a pending appeal to Supreme Court from Superior Court's judgment dismissing suit to enjoin issuance and sale of bond furnished a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy to petitioner, District Court of Appeal would have to refuse to enter upon a consideration of the issues pending before Supreme Court.

Order accordingly.

Mandamus ☞5

Where it appeared that pending appeal to Supreme Court from Superior Court's judgment dismissing suit to enjoin issuance and sale of bond furnished a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy to petitioner, District Court of Appeal, wherein petition for writ of mandate had been filed, would refuse to enter upon a consideration of the issues pending before Supreme Court. Act Cong. May 17, 1950, 64 Stat. 170 et seq.

Joseph Maddux, Dist. Atty., Sonoma County, Santa Rosa, for petitioner.

F. L. Manker, Santa Rosa, for respondent Anderson.

Kasch & Cook, Ukiah, for intervenors Robbins et al.

VAN DYKE, Presiding Justice.

Petition for writ of mandate. Petitioner, a flood control and water conservation district, asks this court to command its treasurer to sign, execute and deliver to the buyer bonds of the district in the sum of $5,598,000. Its petition shows that the Congress of the United States has enacted Public Law 516, 81st Congress, Chapter 188, Second Session, approved by the President of the United States May 17, 1950, 64 Stat. 170 et seq., whereby a plan for flood control, water conservation and related purposes in the Russian River Basin in California was approved substantially in accordance with the recommendations of the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors and as recommended by the Chief of Engineers. By that legislation there was authorized to be appropriated by the Federal Government the sum of $11,522,000 for accomplishment of the initial stage of the plan, that is, the construction of Coyote Valley Dam to control and impound the flood waters of the East Fork of Russian River. The legislation carried a proviso that prior to starting construction local interests should contribute the sum of $5,598,000 in cash in full repayment of the conservation benefits to be derived from the work, the contribution to be transferred to the Secretary of the Army for application to the cost of construction. It is further stated in the petition that proceedings had been taken by petitioner to issue bonds in the required amount which should be a charge upon the properties in the district and that it had submitted that proposition to the qualified voters of the district, with the result that more than a two-thirds majority voted in favor of the bonds. Thereafter the proposed bonds were offered for sale and were bid in by the Bank of America National Trust and Savings Association, the bid containing a proviso that the bonds be delivered within sixty days and that they be delivered free of any litigation with respect thereto. It is further shown that three days before the bonds would have been executed and delivered and the money paid to the treasurer of petitioner and on November 14, 1955 a suit was filed in the Superior Court of the County of Sonoma by Walter M. and Jessie P. Robbins who, as plaintiffs in their own behalf and purporting to sue likewise for all other taxpayers of the petitioner district, brought action against the district, its board of directors and the treasurer of the district, who is respondent herein, seeking to enjoin the issuance and sale of the bonds upon various grounds; that the treasurer of the district is in doubt as to the legality of the proceedings taken by the petitioner district for the issuance of said bonds and of the legality of said bonds if issued for the reasons alleged by the plaintiffs in said superior court action. Notwithstanding the pendency of said action in the superior court petitioner urged this court to issue its alternative writ and ultimately its peremptory writ upon the ground that the public interest, welfare and necessity demanded that the Coyote Valley Dam be constructed without hindrance or delay since it was allegedly necessary to protect life and property in the district from disastrous floods and to provide water for domestic use in the City of Santa Rosa and elsewhere. In this connection it was alleged that the United States Army is now prepared to start construction, subject to the condition that prior to starting construction the said district shall contribute the sum of $5,598,000 in cash, failing which no work could be done upon the dam. This court issued an alternative writ and set the matter for hearing. That hearing was held. It now appears that the superior court in the action brought therein has sustained a demurrer without leave to amend and has entered its judgment dismissing said action; further that, following the entry of that judgment, plaintiffs in that action have appealed to the Supreme Court of this state and that the appeal is now pending therein.

We have concluded that it would be improper under all of the circumstances presented here for this court to take any other action at this time than to discharge the alternative writ heretofore issued and deny the peremptory writ requested without decision on the merits. It is apparent that the issues which the plaintiffs pose in the superior court action and in the appeal they have taken to the Supreme Court are exactly the same issues as this court must decide if it proceeds herein. Respondent in this proceeding, the treasurer of the district, was also a defendant in the superior court action and is now a respondent in the appeal to the Supreme Court. The district is a party to both proceedings. As to the plaintiffs and appellants in the action begun in the superior court, and now on appeal, they were not originally made parties herein, although the petition of the district stated it was willing to have them intervene. They have now filed herein a petition for intervention, and have raised the same points herein as were presented by them for adjudication in the other action. This court is, as it should be, sympathetic to the plea made by the petitioner that a speedy determination of the issues raised in these proceedings ought to be had in the public interest, but we conceive it to be our proper course to refuse to enter upon the decision of issues now pending before the Supreme Court by the appeal taken. We do not think that the necessary delay that will be occasioned by our refusal to go further in response to the petition herein will be in any sense vital to the interests of the district. Before a determination made by us could become final the limit of time within which under the bids the bonds were to be delivered to the bidder will have elapsed in any event, for it was a condition of the bid, subject, we understand, to a right in the bidder to waive the requirement, that the bonds be delivered by the 17th of January next. Speaking generally, courts are reluctant, and properly so, to enter upon the determination of issues already pending before other courts, even if they have the jurisdictional power to do so. But specifically it appears herein that the appellate procedure already invoked furnishes a plain, speedy and adequate remedy to the petitioner. Millett v. Association of Mare Island Employees, 44 Cal.App. 271, 274, 186 P. 378; McMullen v. Glenn-Colusa Irr. Dist., 17 Cal.App.2d 696, 62 P.2d 1083; People v. County of Tulare, 45 Cal.2d 317, 289 P.2d 11.

Both respondent and intervenors have demurred to the petition herein, urging the foregoing grounds for a denial of the relief requested.

Those demurrers are sustained. The alternative writ heretofore issued is discharged, and the peremptory writ is denied.

SCHOTTKY and PEEK, JJ., concur.

137 Cal.App.2d 430

Alcide COMASTRI, Plaintiff, Cross-Defendant, and Respondent,v.*Stanley BURKE, Special Administrator of the Estate of Jessie H. Paterson, Deceased, substituted for Jessie H. Paterson, Defendant, Cross-Complainant, and Appellant.*Civ. 16371.*District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.*Dec. 2, 1955.

Action to quiet title with respect to proceeds of home, the purchase of which was partly paid for by $19,000 drawn by deceased joint tenant of home from alleged joint tenancy bank account of claimant and deceased joint tenant. The Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, Frank T. Deasy, J., found respondent entitled to proceeds of sale with interest for period proceeds were out of his possession because of unfounded claim, and claimant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Nourse, P. J., held that fact that one party to joint tenancy bank account died did not conclusively vest title to such deposit in both of the survivors, and prevent a showing by one of the surviving joint tenants of the true intention as to the account and also held that, although respondent who was entitled to proceeds of sale of home, was out of possession of proceeds during pendency of claim, he was not entitled to interest for that period.

Partly affirmed and partly reversed with instructions.

1. Joint Tenancy ⚭3

Evidence warranted finding that funds which a sister deposited in joint bank account of three sisters were the property of the sister whose funds were initially deposited in the account.

2. Joint Tenancy ⚭3

Where funds of first sister were deposited in bank account which in form was joint account of three sisters and on death of third sister the funds were deposited in second account in form of joint account of first and second sisters and on marriage of first sister the funds were deposited in third account in same form, the death of third sister did not, by virtue of statute, give rise to any such conclusive presumption of intention as to disclose that second and third accounts were true joint tenancy accounts, but actual intention of first and second sisters, as proved by parol evidence, would determine true nature of second and third accounts. West's Ann.Financial Code, § 852.

3. Joint Tenancy ⚭3

Provision of Bank Act authorizing creation of joint tenancy bank accounts, and providing in part that the making of deposit in joint tenancy form shall, in the absence of fraud or undue influence, be conclusive evidence, in any action or proceeding to which either such bank or the surviving depositor or depositors may be party, of intention to vest title to such deposit in survivor or survivors is limited to situation where "surviving depositor or depositors" is the party on one side, whereas on the other side there is a party not a living depositor. West's Ann.Financial Code, § 852.

4. Jury ⚭14(9)

In quiet title action, defendant was not entitled to trial by jury as a matter of right.

5. Damages ⚭69

Interest ⚭51

In action to quiet title with respect to proceeds of home, the purchase of which was partly paid for by $19,000 withdrawn by deceased joint tenant of home from joint bank account of claimant and deceased joint tenant, the surviving joint tenant of home was not entitled to interest over the period that proceeds of sale of the home were held in escrow or in deposit in court pending litigation of the claimant's claim, on basis of section of Civil Code defining interest as compensation for use, forbearance, or detention of money, and in addition interest could not be granted as damages for wrongful prosecution of claim in absence of lack of probable cause and malice. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1915.

Stanley Burke, San Francisco, for appellant.

Davis & Barber, San Francisco, for respondent, Robert H. Kroninger, Oakland (of counsel).

NOURSE, Presiding Justice.

Jessie H. Paterson has appealed from an adverse judgment in a quiet title action, instituted by respondent Alcide Comastri, with respect to the proceeds of a home which had stood in the names of Mary D. Comastri, the deceased wife of said Alcide Comastri and said Alcide Comastri as joint tenants. Mary D. Comastri was the sister of Mrs. Paterson and will hereinafter be called sister Mary. Mrs. Paterson's claim was based on the contention that the home was bought by sister Mary with money taken from a joint account in which Mrs. Paterson had an equal interest, that the withdrawal by sister Mary of much more than half of the funds in said account invaded Mrs. Paterson's interest and that she could follow her joint tenancy interest in the home so bought. Respondent Comastri took the position that the account was not a true joint account but that sister Mary was the true owner with full right of disposition during her lifetime, which position was upheld by the trial court. Pending the appeal Mrs. Paterson died and Stanley Burke, special administrator of her estate, was substituted as appellant.

The following facts are undisputed.

[1] In May 1934 an account was opened at the San Francisco Bank in form payable to sister Mary, Mrs. Paterson or Agnes G. Nye, or to the survivor of them. Agnes G. Nye was a sister of the other two depositors and will further be called sister Agnes. The initial deposit of more than $12,000 was made from funds of sister Mary. Following the death of sister Agnes, sister Mary in July 1941 withdrew the increased balance of the account and placed it in the same bank in an account in form payable to sister Mary or Mrs. Paterson or to the survivor of them. In July 1945 sister Mary married respondent Comastri and in the following August she withdrew the increased balance of the second account and placed it in a third account in the same bank payable in the identical manner as the second one except that sister Mary was now named as Mary B. Comastri. From this account sister Mary withdrew on October 13, 1945 more than $19,000 which she applied to the purchase of the home the title to which was taken in the names of herself and her husband as joint tenants. She died on January 8, 1947. All withdrawals from the three successive accounts were made by sister Mary only, all deposits in these accounts over and above the transactions already stated were made by her from her own funds, except one deposit of $1,578.22 made by Mrs. Paterson on October 23, 1934. It was however found by the court that the funds then deposited were also the property of sister Mary and this finding, although attacked by appellant, must be sustained as a reasonable inference from the evidence. Sister Mary at all times until one day before her death retained possession of the passbooks of the successive accounts. Mrs. Paterson did not include any part of the interest accrued on said accounts in her income tax returns.

The court found and concluded further in substance that the three accounts were not true joint tenancy accounts; that it was agreed at the opening of the first and second account between the depositors that all moneys then or thereafter deposited in said accounts would remain the sole property of sister Mary and that it was never intended and that Mrs. Paterson never understood that she had any vested interest in any of the three accounts. Respondent Comastri was adjudged entitled to the proceeds of the sale of the house and moreover to interest during the period that he had been out of possession of said proceeds as a result of the unfounded claim of Mrs. Paterson.

Appellant's attack on these findings and conclusions is mainly a proposition of law based on section 15a of the Bank Act, Deering's General Laws Act 652 (now Financial Code, § 852) which read in part:

"When a deposit shall be made in any bank by any person or persons whether minor or adult in the names of such depositor or depositors and another person or persons, and in form to be paid to any of them or the survivor or survivors of them, such deposit and any additions thereto made by any such persons after the making thereof, shall become the property of such persons as joint tenants, and the deposit together with all dividends or interest thereon, shall be held for the exclusive use of such persons and may be paid to any of them during their lifetime or to the survivor or survivors after the death of one or more of them, and such payment and the receipt or acquittance of the person or persons to whom such payment is made shall be valid and sufficient release and discharge to such bank for all payments made on account of such deposit prior to the receipt by such bank of notice in writing not to pay such deposit in accordance with the terms thereof. The making of the deposit in such form shall, in the absence of fraud or undue influence, be conclusive evidence, in any action or proceeding to which either such bank or the surviving depositor or depositors may be a party, of the intention of such depositors to vest title to such deposit and the additions thereto in such survivor or survivors." St.1921, p. 1367, amended by St. 1925, p. 512, St.1929, p. 444.

It was held in Paterson v. Comastri, 39 Cal.2d 66, 244 P.2d 902 (a suit between the same parties concerning funds withdrawn from three other ostensible joint accounts in the names of sister Mary and Mrs. Paterson), that during the life of the codepositors, the presumption that the money deposited had become the property of the codepositors as joint tenants was rebuttable, and that such applied also to funds withdrawn by one codepositor during the life of the parties, even if one of the depositors had subsequently died. The presumption, conclusive in the absence of fraud or undue influence, that it was the intention to create a true joint tenancy, applied only after death of a codepositor in favor of the survivor to moneys remaining in the account at the time of death. The section was to be deemed a part of each contract creating a joint bank account and to permit parol evidence of the true intention of the parties contrary to the express terms of a written contract. "To hold otherwise 'would do violence to intention, for those who open such accounts have seldom any thought of restricting their enjoyment of the fund, their right to draw and spend, by the shackles of a formula. * * * It would foster litigation, for each of the two depositors, the one opening the deposit as fully as the other, would be subject to an accounting for moneys afterwards withdrawn, and forced to make division on the footing of equality.' Cardozo, Ch. J., in Moskowitz v. Marrow, 251 N.Y. 380, at page 397, 167 N.E. 506, at page 512, 66 A. L.R. 870." 39 Cal.2d at page 73, 244 P.2d at page 906. It was held that there was sufficient evidence to support the trial court's finding that Mary did not intend to create true joint tenancy accounts with Mrs. Paterson but that the funds withdrawn were her own property.

Appellant contends that in the case before us the death of sister Agnes caused the presumption of intention to create a true joint tenancy account to become conclusive and to exclude all reliance on true intention as to the account of which she was a codepositor. It is urged that therefore the funds with which the second account was opened were true joint tenancy funds of Mrs. Paterson and her sister Mary and that the finding that all funds in that account had always been the property of sister Mary alone was unjustified. It is contended that there was no evidence of any agreement changing the true joint tenancy character of the second account and that said character continued into the third account. Respondent's position is that under the rule of the prior Comastri case the true intention as to the character of the third account could be proved by parol evidence and that there was evidence to prove that independent of the character of the original deposit, it was not the intention and understanding of sister Mary and Mrs. Paterson that the third account should be a true joint account in which Mrs. Paterson had a present equal interest. However, respondent also urges that appellant's application of the rule of the prior Comastri case to the situation of the first account is unsound and that, although that rule prevented persons claiming against the survivors or the Bank to rely on a true intention of decedent contrary to survivorship, it did not govern the relation or evidence as between the two survivors themselves.

There is no doubt that the evidence, especially the testimony of Mrs. Paterson herself justified the inference that Mrs. Paterson did not understand that she had a present interest in any of the three accounts, but that she understood that her rights would commence only when she would be the survivor of the three sisters. However, she did not distinguish between the three accounts mentioned. She stressed that all three were joint accounts and she did not testify to any agreement expressly limiting her rights. Hence it seems doubtful whether an inference could reasonably be drawn that she had agreed to give up any present interest which the law might have granted her on the death of sister Agnes. Under these circumstances we prefer to base our decision on the limited character of the conclusive presumption of section 15a of the Bank Act, as to which we have concluded that respondent's position is sound.

[2,3] The previous cases were concerned with two joint depositors only; no case has been cited to or found by us in which the exact point here involved has been decided. However, we understand the principle of the earlier cases, particularly Paterson v. Comastri and Moskowitz v. Marrow, supra, to be that between living depositors and as to their relations during their joint lives, their actual intention must govern and may be proved by parol evidence to prevent results not contemplated by the parties, in particular by the one who actually furnished the money for the account. Logically this principle must then also be applied to the relation of two survivors among themselves, especially when one of them furnished all the money in the account. If a depositor has added to his account the names of two relatives for the purpose of making them beneficiaries after his death and agents during his life, it would be a most unreasonable and frustrating rule, which would necessarily terminate the real depositor's free right of disposition on the death of one of the intended agents. Such an undesirable result we should accept only if the words of the statute clearly indicated that it was intended by the Legislature. The words of section 15a, supra, do not necessitate said conclusion. They do not expressly provide for the conclusive character of the presumption in actions between surviving depositors. The expression "any action or proceeding to which * * * the surviving depositor or depositors may be a party," can well be construed as limited to a situation in which said "surviving depositor or depositors" is the party of the one side, whereas of the other side there is a party not a living depositor (ordinarily a party deriving his right from a deceased depositor). As this construction leads to a sensible result in line with the prior decisions and is not inconsistent with the language of the statute or with any apparent intention of the Legislature we shall adhere to it. Appellant's main contention is thereby necessarily decided adversely to him.

[4,5] Two additional grievances are developed by appellant. There is no merit in his contention that the court erred in denying his demand for a jury trial. We held in Daniels v. Baldwin, 115 Cal.App.2d 487, 489, 252 P.2d 351, 352, in proceedings of a similar character in equity that "the parties are not entitled to a trial by jury as a matter of right." However, we agree with his contention that there is no basis for the recovery of interest by respondent over the period that the proceeds of the sale of the home were held in escrow or in deposit in court pending the litigation of Mrs. Paterson's claim. Appellant does not owe interest on the basis of section 1915 of the Civil Code as compensation "for the use, or forbearance, or detention of money" as none of these three causes is present in this case. Neither can the interest be granted as damages for the wrongful prosecution of the claim of interest in the home as there is no finding or even contention of lack of probable cause and malice, without which the making of an unfounded claim is not tortious.

Insofar as the judgment appealed from grants respondent interest it is reversed with instructions to the trial court to amend the conclusions of law and the judgment in accordance with our holding; in all other respects the judgment is affirmed, each party to bear its own costs.

DOOLING and KAUFMAN, JJ., concur.

137 Cal.App.2d 626

The PEOPLE of the State of California,
Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Wilson Joseph MOFFETT, Defendant and Appellant.
Cr. 5445.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 3, California,
Dec. 8, 1955.

Defendant entered plea of guilty to burglary. The Superior Court of the County of Los Angeles, H. Burton Noble, J., entered judgment accordingly and order denying new trial and motion to withdraw guilty plea. Defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Vallée, J., held that evidence on defendant's contentions that he had not participated in burglary, he had not heard proceedings at time he had pleaded guilty, he had thought he was pleading guilty to misdemeanor, his plea was result of promise that two other charges would be dismissed and that counsel believed he was innocent showed no abuse of discretion of trial court's in denying withdrawal of guilty plea.

Appeal from order denying motion to withdraw plea dismissed; judgment and order denying new trial affirmed.

1. Criminal Law ⇨1023(3), 1134(10)

Motion to withdraw guilty plea made prior to judgment was reviewable on appeal from judgment, and order denying such motion was not appealable. Pen.Code, § 1018.

2. Criminal Law ⇨274, 1149

Granting or denial of motion for withdrawal of guilty plea rests in sound discretion of trial judge whose discretion will not be disturbed on review unless an abuse thereof is clearly shown. Pen.Code, § 1018.

3. Criminal Law ⇨274

While guilty plea may be withdrawn for good cause shown such as mistake, ignorance, inadvertence or any other factor overcoming defendant's exercise of free judgment, basis of application for relief must be established by clear and convincing evidence. Pen.Code, § 1018.

4. Criminal Law ⇨274

Evidence on defendant's contentions that he had not participated in burglary, he had not heard proceedings at time he had pleaded guilty, he had thought he was pleading guilty to misdemeanor, his plea was result of promise that two other charges would be dismissed and that counsel believed he was innocent showed no abuse of discretion in trial court's refusal to allow withdrawal of plea of guilty of burglary. Pen.Code, § 1018.

Ernest Best, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., and Elizabeth Miller, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

VALLÉE, Justice.

Defendant was charged with burglary. On March 28, 1955, being represented by counsel, he pleaded "not guilty" and his trial was set for May 5, 1955. On May 5, 1955, again represented by counsel, he withdrew his plea of "not guilty" and pleaded "guilty" as charged. The court found that the burglary was of the second degree. Defendant was granted leave to make application for probation and the hearing on the application was set for June 2, 1955. On June 2 defendant, by his counsel, moved the court for leave to withdraw his plea of "guilty." The motion was denied and hearing on the application for probation was continued to June 9, 1955. On that date defendant, by his counsel, renewed the motion for leave to withdraw his plea of "guilty." The motion was denied. He then made a motion for a new trial, which was denied. Probation was denied. Defendant was sentenced to state prison. At all times prior to June 2, 1955 he was on bail.

Defendant appeals from the judgment, from the order denying his motion for a new trial, and from the order denying his motion to withdraw his plea of guilty. His only point is that the court erred in denying his motion to withdraw his plea of guilty.

[1] The motion to withdraw his plea of guilty was made prior to the judgment and is reviewable on the appeal from the judgment. Hence the order denying that motion is not appealable and the appeal therefrom will be dismissed.

The following occurred at the time defendant withdrew his plea of not guilty and pleaded guilty:

"Mr. Umann [attorney for defendant]: At this time, your Honor, the defendant requests permission to withdraw his plea as to case No. 171688.

"The Court: Mr. Moffett, is it your desire to withdraw your plea of not guilty to Information 171688 for the purpose of entering a new and different plea?

"The Defendant: Yes, your Honor.

"The Court: You are doing that voluntarily, are you?

"The Defendant: Yes, your Honor.

"Mr. Amstutz [Deputy District Attorney]: Is Wilson Joseph Moffett your true name?

"The Defendant: Yes.

"Mr. Amstutz: Mr. Moffett, you are charged in Information 171688 with the crime of a felony, to wit, burglary, having been committed by you on or about the 4th day of March, 1955, at which time it is stated that you entered a market known as Ken's Market. The Court has granted you permission to withdraw your former plea of not guilty for the purpose of entering a new and different plea.

"You are doing this freely and voluntarily, are you, Mr. Moffett?

"The Defendant: Yes.

"Mr. Amstutz: You discussed this matter with your counsel?

"The Defendant: Yes.

"Mr. Amstutz: No one has made you any promises or offers of reward or lesser sentence to change your plea; is that right?

"The Defendant: No."

"Mr. Amstutz: How do you plead to Information 171688, guilty or not guilty?

"The Defendant: Guilty."

The motion to withdraw the plea of guilty was predicated on the mere statement of defendant's counsel that defendant denied his participation in the burglary, he did not hear the proceedings at the time he pleaded guilty, he thought he was pleading guilty to a misdemeanor, his plea was the result of a promise made to him that two other charges would be dismissed if he pleaded guilty, and that he (counsel) believed defendant "would be innocent under the Cahan case", People v. Cahan, 44 Cal. 2d 434, 282 P.2d 905. Counsel stated: "If the Court please, with respect to the Cahan case, in this particular case merchandise was found or taken out of an automobile, that is, according to the police officers." The court said: "As I recall the case, the man was found asleep in a car in the night time and the officers approached the car, which they have a right to do when they find anybody asleep on the public highway, and in the course of their investigation they used the key to open up the back and found some stolen merchandise in the back of his car. Is that approximately the situation?" To which counsel for defendant replied: "That is the situation."

[2-4] A defendant who seeks to withdraw a plea of guilty must show good cause therefor. Pen.Code, § 1018. The granting or denial of such an application rests in the sound discretion of the trial judge, and his decision will not be disturbed on review unless an abuse of that discretion is clearly shown. People v. Ottenstror, 127 Cal.App.2d 104, 109, 273 P.2d 289. While a plea of guilty may be withdrawn for good cause shown—that is, by reason of the mistake, ignorance, inadvertence, or any other factor which overcame the defendant's exercise of free judgment—and a plea of not guilty substituted, the basis of the application for relief must be established by clear and convincing evidence. People v. Cooper, 123 Cal.App.2d 353, 356, 266 P.2d 566. There was no such showing in the case at bar. There was not only no clear and convincing evidence of good cause for granting the application, there was no evidence at all. The record is not clear as to the basis of the statement of the trial judge with respect to the investigation made by police officers. Apparently it was predicated on the report of the probation officer. The source of the information of the probation officer does not appear. There is nothing in the judge's statement indicating defendant entered his plea of guilty by reason of mistake, ignorance, inadvertence, or any other factor which overcame his exercise of free judgment. Nor is there anything in the statement indicating defendant was not guilty of the burglary charged. He was represented by counsel and had more than a month while on bail in which to consider his change of plea from "not guilty" to "guilty." There is no basis whatever for a claim of an abuse of discretion.

The Cahan case, People v. Cahan, supra, 44 Cal.2d 434, 282 P.2d 905; had no bearing on the question before the trial judge. That case deals with the admissibility of evidence obtained in violation of constitutional guarantees against unreasonable searches and seizures. Here no question of the admissibility of evidence was before the court. The sole question was whether there was a sufficient showing that the plea of guilty had been entered under one of the circumstances stated.

The appeal from the order denying defendant's motion for leave to withdraw his plea of guilty is dismissed. The judgment and the order denying a new trial are affirmed.

SHINN, P. J., and PARKER WOOD, J., concur.

137 Cal.App.2d 555

Matter of the ESTATE of Emile H.
HOFFMAN, Deceased.

CITIZENS NATIONAL TRUST and SAVINGS BANK OF LOS ANGELES, Los Angeles Unit Shrine Crippled Children's Hospital, Inc., a corporation, Ernest L. Hurst, Recorder of Al Malaikah Temple of Shrine, Sarah Jane Shaffer, and Mr. and Mrs. Art McCooley, Proponents and Respondents,

v.

Gertrude BLANK and Bernard Hoffman,
Contestants and Appellants.

Civ. 21004.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California.

Dec. 6, 1955.

Rehearing Denied Dec. 30, 1955.

Hearing Denied Feb. 1, 1956.

Proceeding in the matter of the estate of deceased testator, wherein proponents sought to have lost will and lost codicil and second codicil admitted to probate. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Wm. P. Houghton, J., entered judgment in favor of proponents, and contestants appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Doran, J., held that where signing of document by testator and indication of desire and intention to have witnesses attest it as a will, shortly followed by actual signing by two witnesses, constituted but a single transaction, and, at most, witnesses and testator were separated by only a few feet and perhaps by a partly closed door, it was within "presence" of testator within meaning of provision of Probate Code requiring will to be executed by testator in "presence" of two attesting witnesses who shall sign will in "presence" of testator.

Judgment affirmed.

Nourse, J. pro tem., dissented in part.

1. Wills ⚡386

Where record disclosed substantial evidence in support of trial court's findings in proceeding to have lost will and codicils admitted to probate, District Court of Appeal on appeal would not draw conclusions and inferences contrary to those adopted by the trial court.

2. Wills ⚡386

Whether or not a will has been executed in accordance with statutory requirements is a question of fact, and trial court's determination on that issue cannot be overturned unless it is without support in the evidence. Probate Code, § 50.

3. Wills ⚡117

Requirement of the Probate Code that will be executed by testator in the "presence" of two attesting witnesses who shall sign will in presence of testator will be given a liberal and practical interpretation. Probate Code, § 50.

4. Wills ⚡117

The word "presence" as used in provision of the Probate Code requiring a will to be executed by testator in "presence" of two attesting witnesses, who shall sign will in "presence" of testator, means within the immediate nearness or vicinity of testator, and within his call or influence. Probate Code, § 50.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Presence".

5. Wills ⚡117

Where signing of document by testator and indication of desire and intention to have witnesses attest it as a will, shortly followed by actual signing by two witnesses, constituted but a single transaction, and, at most, witnesses and testator were separated by only a few feet and perhaps by a partly closed door, it was within "presence" of testator within meaning of provision of Probate Code requiring will to be executed by testator in "presence" of two attesting witnesses who shall sign will in "presence" of testator. Probate Code, § 50.

6. Wills ⚡302(8)

In contested proceeding for probate of lost will and lost codicil thereto, evidence sustained trial court's finding that lost will and lost codicil were in existence at time of death of testator and had either not been found or had been lost or destroyed by some person other than testator. Probate Code, § 350.

Adelman, Schwartz & Ferguson, Isaac E. Ferguson, Beverly Hills, for appellants, Gertrude Blank and Bernard Hoffman.

A. G. Ritter, Los Angeles, for respondent, Citizens Nat. Trust & Savings Bank.

Rollin L. McNitt, Los Angeles, for respondent, Sarah Jane Shaffer.

J. Marion Wright, Los Angeles, for respondents, Los Angeles Unit Shrine Crippled Children's Hospital, Inc., and Ernest L. Hurst, Recorder, etc.

Arnerich, DelValle & Sinatra, Los Angeles, for respondents, Art McCooley et ux.

DORAN, Justice.

This is an appeal by Gertrude Blank and Bernard Hoffman, children of the decedent, from a judgment admitting to probate a lost will and lost codicil thereto, and a second codicil to said will. The petition for probate, filed by the respondent Citizens Nat'l Trust & Savings Bank, named executor, alleges the due execution of the instruments in question; that same had become lost or destroyed and could not be found after diligent search, and the usual jurisdictional facts. It further alleges due execution of the second codicil and that said codicil expressly republishes and reaffirms the previous will and codicil.

Under the terms of the will and codicils, testator bequeathes $1,000 to each of the two children, $5,000 to friends, Mr. and Mrs. Art McCooley, $100 per month out of income to Sarah Jane Shaffer. The residue of the estate is given to the Los Angeles

Unit Shrine Crippled Children's Hospital Inc., and in case any part of the hospital bequest should lapse or fail, then to Ernest L. Hurst, Recorder of Al Malaikah Temple of the Shrine.

Objections were filed by the two children on the ground that the second codicil was not subscribed or acknowledged by decedent in the presence of the attesting witnesses, present at the same time, that decedent did not declare "that it was his will or a codicil to his will"; that the witnesses did not sign the instrument at decedent's request and in his presence; that "no exact date of purported subscription, acknowledgment or attestation appears in the instrument", the codicil being dated "June —, 1953); and that the second codicil is ineffective because the original will and first codicil are not admissible.

Contestants' objections to the admission of the original will and first codicil were and are that the same were "not entitled to be admitted to probate as lost or destroyed instruments pursuant to the provisions of section 350 of the Probate Code of California, since it does not appear that said will and codicil were actually in existence at the time of decedent's death, or destroyed fraudulently or by public calamity in the lifetime of the decedent".

After a three-day hearing, the trial court found that the contestants' material allegations were not true except that the second codicil "was executed in June 1953 on or about the 16th day thereof but that the exact date of said execution is not set forth in said codicil".

It was further found that the decedent had never revoked the will or first codicil "which came into the possession and custody of decedent at the respective dates thereof and remained in his possession and custody continuously thereafter until some time prior to his death; that it is true that no person other than decedent saw said will and first codicil at any time after March 28, 1950; that it is true that decedent rented a safe deposit box from Citizens National Trust and Savings Bank of Los Angeles and made nine entries into said safe deposit box in the year 1950, two entries in 1951, one entry in 1952, and one entry in February 2, 1953, and that upon decedent's death neither said will or codicil were found in said safe deposit box. The court finds that it is true that said will and first codicil were in existence at the time of decedent's death and have either not been found or have been lost or destroyed by some person other than decedent".

It is appellants' contention that "For lack of any evidence that the will of March 14, 1950 and codicil of March 28, 1950 were in existence when the maker died on November 27, 1953, these instruments were not admissible to probate under Section 350 of the Probate Code. The second codicil falls with the missing will and first codicil; or independently, because not executed in compliance with section 50 of the Probate Code. Accordingly, the judgment of the trial court should be reversed".

[1] The appellants' position is untenable. From a partisan consideration of the record appellants have sought to draw certain conclusions and inferences contrary to those adopted by the trial court. The rule of appellate review is, however, directly opposed to this procedure where the record discloses substantial evidence in support of the trial court's findings. That the record in the present litigation abundantly sustains the findings and judgment cannot well be doubted.

According to the testimony of Attorney Ritter, the testator, on March 10, 1950, went voluntarily to the Attorney's office and expressed a wish to leave the bulk of the property to the Shrine Crippled Children's Hospital. The testator mentioned the two children who are appellants herein, but not the fact that a former wife was still living. After conference with the attorney the will was drawn and executed by Hoffman on March 14, 1950.

On March 20, 1950, Hoffman again went to the attorney's office for advice as to the charitable bequests, and directed the drafting of a codicil which provided that if any part of the bequest to the Children's Hospital should fail, then the same should go to the Recorder of Shrine, Al Malaikah Temple as an individual. Such a codicil was drawn and executed by Hoffman on March 27, 1950. Both in the case of the will and this codicil, the decedent was given the original and a carbon copy, Attorney Ritter retaining another carbon copy. Neither Ritter nor the secretary, who were the witnesses, ever saw the executed copies after March 28, 1950.

On June 12, 1953, Attorney Ritter was requested to visit Hoffman, then a patient at La Vina Sanitarium in Altadena, and did so, taking along the office carbon copies of the will and first codicil. Ritter testified that Hoffman "wanted me to be sure and to promise him that I would see that the property was left and distributed in the way which his will indicated". The attorney mentioned each item in the will and Hoffman stated that no change was desired except that a $5,000 bequest Christ Mission of New York City should be stricken out and that sum given to "a couple of friends who have been very good to me by the name of McCooey". As to the rest of the will, Hoffman said: "I want that the way it is left". Likewise, as to the first codicil, decedent said: "That is just the way I want it and I'm counting on you to see that my wishes are carried out".

The second codicil, just mentioned, was found among the decedent's papers and on its face appears to be regular. There was no question as to the signatures of either the testator or the witnesses. The original will and first codicil were not found. The second codicil was not executed by Hoffman in the presence of the attorney, but was later signed by the testator on "June —, 1953", as the instrument states, and bears the signatures of two nurses as attesting witnesses. It is claimed by appellants that the two witnesses did not sign at the same time but separately entered the room for that purpose.

Grace L. Works, one of the nurses witnessing the codicil, testified that the decedent was in bed at the time and the codicil was on a cabinet nearby; that Hoffman "asked me if I would be willing to sign this. It was a codicil to his will"; that decedent then signed the paper in the witness' presence and that the other witness was not then present but came into the room two or three minutes later; that testator asked Mrs. Works to find another witness, whereupon, "I stepped to the door, Mrs. Krone was in the hallway, and I called to her and she came over to me and I said, 'Mr. Hoffman wants to see you; he wants you to sign a paper'".

Mrs. Krone then walked over to the decedent, and then returned to Mrs. Works and said, "It's a will—he wants me to sign his will. Is it all right?", whereupon Mrs. Works said, "Yes, it is all right. I have signed it". Mrs. Krone then witnessed the paper. At that time Mrs. Works was standing in the doorway which was then open, and Hoffman's bed was about five feet from the door.

The testimony of Mrs. Krone was substantially similar, but to the effect that the door "was just open a short distance", and that Mrs. Works "was about four or five feet from me down the hall, right 'catty-corner' from the door", or about 9 feet from the bed. Appellants contend that "the testimony of Mrs. Works and Mrs. Krone is replete with irreconcilable contradictions and inherent falsities", and that the evidence shows that the second codicil was not executed in compliance with the statutory requirements.

[2] As said in In re Estate of Emden, 87 Cal.App.2d 115, 120, 196 P.2d 627, 630, "Whether or not a will has been executed in accordance with the statutory requirements is a question of fact and the trial court's determination on that issue cannot be overturned unless it is without support in the evidence." Such is the situation in the instant case.

[3, 4] An examination of the cases dealing with the subject indicates judicial approval of a liberal and practical interpretation of the statutory provisions requiring a testamentary instrument to be executed by the testator in the "presence" of two attesting witnesses who shall sign the will in the "presence" of the testator. As stated in In re Estate of Tracy, 80 Cal. App.2d 782, 182 P.2d 336, 337, "'Presence' is defined in Webster's New International Dictionary, 2d Ed., 1939, page 1955 thus: 'The part of space within one's ken, call, influence, etc.; immediate nearness or vicinity of one; proximity.'” The same opinion notes that “In a number of decisions where the meaning of the word ‘presence’ has arisen in connection with the execution of wills, the courts have adopted what is known as the ‘conscious presence rule’”.

In Re Estate of Miner, 105 Cal.App. 593, 288 P. 120, quoting from the headnote, where “the first witness was in the same or an adjoining room with the door open during all the time the second witness was present, and heard and saw everything that was said or occurred between the testatrix and the second witness with the exception that she did not see the latter sign, the conduct of the testatrix could not be construed otherwise than as a declaration to the attesting witnesses, ‘present at the same time,’ that the instrument was her will.”

So, also, in In re Estate of Jacobs, 24 Cal.App.2d 649, 76 P.2d 128, a similar rule of liberal construction was followed, and “the trial court was justified in finding the due execution of the will; and * * * was not compelled to accept as true the testimony of one of the beneficiaries, which was slightly at variance with that of said other witness, as to where the latter was standing while the doctor was writing and reading the will.”

[5] From these and other cases, the so-called “one transaction” and “conscious presence” tests have been applied with salutary and practical results. In the present case, the testator’s signing of the document and indication of desire and intention to have the witnesses attest it as a will, shortly followed by the actual signing by the two witnesses, as hereinbefore set forth, constitute but a single transaction. At most, the witnesses and the testator were separated by only a few feet and perhaps by a partly closed door; this was nothing if not within the testator’s “conscious presence”.

Viewing the evidence as an entirety, and in the light most favorable to the trial court’s findings, it is true, as stated in respondents’ brief, that “testator at all times referred to his will as being in existence and at no time made any indication of a desire to revoke or destroy it. In his last codicil, which was executed by him in June, 1953, he declared over his signature that he expressly reaffirmed and republished the provisions of his previous will and codicil. * * * So also in October, 1953, shortly before his death, he again referred to his will and requested his attorney to see that his wishes should be carried out in that regard. There is nowhere in the record any evidence to the contrary”.

[6] It is not known what happened to the original, executed drafts of the will and first codicil, but the record affords substantial evidence in support of the trial court’s finding “that said will and first codicil were in existence at the time of decedent’s death and have either not been found or have been lost or destroyed by some person other than decedent”. To require more than this would be to demand the impossible. There is no question as to the authenticity of the carbon copies of these instruments, nor that, with the executed second codicil, these documents represent the testator’s testamentary wishes. Appellants’ contentions are without merit.

The judgment is affirmed.

WHITE, P. J., concurs.

NOURSE, Justice pro tem.

I dissent.

I concur in the majority opinion insofar as it holds that the so-called second codicil was executed and witnessed in the manner required by law.

I dissent from the majority opinion insofar as it holds that the evidence herein is sufficient to uphold a finding that the original will and first codicil were in existence at the time of the testator’s death, and I am further of the opinion that the findings of the trial court are so conflicting as not to constitute in fact a finding that said will and codicil were in existence at the time of the testator’s death.

There is little conflict in the evidence here and the evidence establishes the following pertinent facts:

The original will and first codicil were both drawn by decedent’s attorney and executed by decedent in March of 1950. By their terms the contestants, who are the children and natural objects of the testator's body, were each given legacies of $1,000, and the balance of the testator's substantial estate was devised and bequeathed to strangers to his blood.

The second codicil was executed in June, 1953. It referred to the original will and the first codicil and substituted two friends as legatees in place of one of the charities who were legatees under the original will and codicil.

At the time of the execution of the original will and at the time of the execution of the first codicil, the executed originals and the first carbon copies were handed by the attorney, who drafted them and who was one of the witnesses thereto, to the testator. After the date of the execution of the first codicil, the original will and copy thereof and the first codicil and the copy thereof remained in the possession of the testator and were never seen by any other person.

On October 1, 1953, the testator asked his attorney to be sure that the terms of his will were carried out. Between that date and the date of his death on the 26th of November, 1953, he made no mention of his will. After the testator's death a search was made for the original will and codicil, copies of which had been retained by the attorney who drew them, but although this search was very thorough, neither the will nor the first codicil nor the copies thereof, which had been retained by the testator, could be found. The second codicil and a copy thereof, together with numerous other papers relating to the decedent's business affairs, and the keys to his safe deposit box, were found in a satchel which the testator had in his possession at the time he drew the second codicil to his will (this was drawn in a sanitarium) and which he had kept with him from that time until his death.

The contestants were residents of an eastern state and at no time had any means or opportunity of securing possession of the will and first codicil or destroying them. The only persons who had the means or access to the will were persons who either had nothing to gain or lose by destruction of the original will or codicil, or who stood to benefit by their continued existence.

The evidence further shows that the decedent had divorced his wife, the mother of the contestants, many years before his death and had left his first wife to raise and care for the contestants; that much of the last year of his life was spent in sanitariums and hospitals and that during the nearly two months that elapsed between his last mention of his will and the time of his death, he was a very ill person and must have known that death was impending.

The respondents offered the first will and codicil for probate as lost wills and it was incumbent upon them to prove that these wills were in existence at the time of the testator's death, or that they had been destroyed fraudulently or by public calamity in the lifetime of the testator without his knowledge, Probate Code, § 350.

From the facts which were established by uncontradicted evidence that the wills in question were in the possession of the testator from the date of their execution; that they were never in the possession or seen by any other person and that they could not be found at his death, the presumption arises that they had been destroyed by the testator, In re Estate of Ronayne, 103 Cal.App.2d 852, 856, 230 P.2d 423; In re Estate of Bristol, 23 Cal.2d 221, 224, 143 P.2d 689; In re Estate of Johnston, 188 Cal. 336, 339-340, 206 P. 628. This presumption may be overcome by other evidence, direct or indirect. If there is evidence upon which an inference contrary to the presumption may reasonably be drawn, and the trial court draws that inference, then it is the duty of this court to uphold the findings of the trial court as to the existence of the will at the time of death. In re Estate of Ronayne, supra, 103 Cal.App.2d at page 857; 230 P.2d 423; In re Estate of Bristol, supra, 23 Cal.2d at pages 224-225, 143 P.2d 689; In re Estate of Moramarco, 86 Cal.App.2d 326, 334, 194 P.2d 740.

The inference that the will was in existence must, however, be based upon facts from which the inference can reasonably be drawn. It seems to me that the facts in this case do not furnish the basis for such an inference. The only facts which it is claimed furnish a basis for the inference are that the second codicil, which refers to the lost wills, was found among the testator's papers; that he had mentioned his will approximately two months before his death; that he had, on numerous occasions after the drafting of the original will, stated that he intended to leave the greater part of his estate to the charitable institution which is the chief beneficiary under the lost will and codicil, and had mentioned as recipients of his bounty the two persons who are made legatees by the second codicil; that he felt an animosity towards his children, the contestants, because of their failure to loan him money upon request, although this animosity was not expressed during the last year of his life. These facts do not, in my opinion, furnish any basis for the inference that the wills were in existence at the time of death, and therefore, cannot stand as evidence against the presumption that he had destroyed them. The most that can be said for them is that they constitute evidence that the wills were in existence as late as October 1, 1953, some two months before his death. If these facts are a sufficient foundation for the inference that the will and first codicil were in existence at the date of death, then mere proof of their execution would likewise furnish a basis for that inference. The only difference in the foundation is that of time. If the wills had been executed on October 1, 1953, and could not be found two months later, at the time of death, it certainly could not be contended that the provisions of section 350, Probate Code, had been met. Yet under these facts, the proof of their existence on October 1st, would have been conclusively established by direct evidence and that is the only fact which the indirect evidence offered here establishes. It is the law that the presumption declared by subdivision 32 of section 1963, Code Civ.Proc., that a thing once proved to exist continues to exist, will not aid one who seeks to prove a lost will. In re Estate of Ross, 199 Cal. 641, 647, 250 P. 676. How, then, can an inference be used to accomplish this same purpose? Yet that is exactly what has been done here, for, as I have pointed out, the evidence which is the alleged basis for the inference only proves the existence of the wills on October 1st, nearly two months prior to death.

When the facts depended upon here to establish the existence of the wills at the date of death are considered in the light of the further admitted facts that the testator was, during the approximately two months that elapsed since his last mention of his will and his death, faced with the knowledge of impending death, and the fact that his will and codicil, for all practical purposes, disinherited his natural children, whose care and maintenance he had left to their mother, they cannot constitute any basis for the inference mentioned, but support the inference or presumption, whichever it may be, that he himself had destroyed his will.

The present case seems to me to be distinguishable on the facts, from the cases relied upon by the proponents. In In re Estate of Bristol, supra, 23 Cal.2d 221, 143 P.2d 689, the lost will admitted to probate was a natural will and there was opportunity for, and motive for it to have been destroyed by a person adversely affected by it, and shortly before his death, the testator had taken actions from which it could be reasonably inferred that his will was then in existence. It was upon the basis of these facts that the Supreme Court held that the finding of the trial court that the will was in existence at the time of death would not be disturbed by the appellate court.

In In re Estate of Moramarco, supra, 86 Cal.App.2d 326, 194 P.2d 740, the will was a natural will and its destruction would have enabled the Italian government to expropriate a substantial portion of his estate, a situation which the testator had expressed himself as desiring to make impossible. The testator's papers had, shortly before his death, been moved from one place of safekeeping to another and it was probable that in the moving the will in question had been lost and the testator had within three days of his death mentioned his will as in existence.

In In re Estate of Ronayne, supra, 103 Cal.App.2d 852, 230 P.2d 423, the testatrix, two days before death, had stated that the alleged lost will was in her home but she was not sure where, and upon her death her husband, who was left but $100 by the will, took possession of the home and all its contents and made search for the will impossible.

In In re Estate of Reynolds, 94 Cal. App.2d 851, 211 P.2d 608, the testator had mentioned the will as in existence two days prior to death.

In In re Estate of Reid, 79 Cal.App.2d 34, 179 P.2d 353, there was evidence that the will had been destroyed by the testatrix' former husband after the date of death, and the trial court so found.

In In re Estate of Dean, 62 Cal.App. 2d 418, 144 P.2d 849, there was evidence that a person adversely affected by the alleged lost will had come into possession of it after the testator's death and destroyed it. There was also evidence that the testatrix had, within ten days of her death, twice stated that she had a will and that the same was in her safe deposit box to which box the person whom the court found had destroyed the will had access.

It is apparent that in each of the cited cases there was evidence that the will was in existence shortly before death and that, with the exception of the Moramarco case, someone other than the testator had the opportunity to and the motive to destroy the will. In the case at bar, none of these facts exist and on the contrary, we have the motivating facts that the will in question was unfair to the natural objects of the testator's bounty, and for two months after any mention of his will he was faced with this fact and the fact of impending death.

Assuming, however, that the facts here permit an inference that the wills were in existence at the time of death, the findings seem to me to be so in conflict as to destroy any basis for this inference as drawn by the trial court. The trial court's findings upon this issue are as follows:

"* * * that it is not true that decedent revoked said last will or codicil or first codicil at any time prior to his death, * * ; that it is true that said will and first codicil came into the possession and custody of decedent at the respective dates thereof and remained in his possession and custody continuously thereafter until some time prior to his death; that it is true that no person other than decedent saw said will and first codicil at any time after March 28, 1950; * * * that upon decedent's death neither said will or codicil were found * * * The court finds that it is true that said will and first codicil were in existence at the time of decedent's death and have either not been found or have been lost or destroyed by some person other than decedent." (Emphasis added.)

The findings that we have italicized are that the will and codicil were in the exclusive possession of the testator, that they never were seen by any other person and therefore were not in their possession, and that they went out of the possession of the testator prior to his death. These findings are only consistent with the inference or presumption that the wills had been destroyed by the testator, for if they had been misplaced by him they would still remain in his possession and as they were never seen by any other person they could not have been fraudulently destroyed by any such person. In face of these findings there is no basis for the finding of the ultimate fact of the existence of the wills at the time of death, and there is not one iota of evidence in the record to support the finding that the wills were lost or destroyed by some person other than the decedent. In fact the evidence is to the contrary and the finding that they were never seen by any other person is to the contrary.

I would reverse the judgment.

Hearing denied; TRAYNOR and McCOMB, JJ., dissenting.

137 Cal.App.2d 552

Florence J. WILSON, Vera May Marshall, Mary Lillian Elliott, Roy Emmet Wilson, Lester M. Wilson, J. Duval Wilson, Betty W. Brown, J. H. Wilson, James Otis Wilson and Vivian Fawcett, Plaintiffs and Appellants,

v.

KNUDSEN CREAMERY CO. OF CALIFORNIA, a corporation, and Harold Louis Vershaw, Defendants and Respondents.

Civ. 20994.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California.

Dec. 6, 1955.

Action for death of automobile driver in intersectional collision. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Allen W. Ashburn, J., rendered judgment on verdict for defendants, and plaintiffs appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Nourse, J., pro tem., held that where truck driver, proceeding at about 50 miles per hour on paved highway, saw object quarter of mile ahead to right of highway, and subsequently recognized it as automobile which had been partially concealed by trees and which was approaching highway at about 20 miles per hour on side road, but where, until automobile driver entered intersection, or got so close thereto that he could not in exercise of reasonable care have stopped and avoided collision, he was not in position of danger, and when he did reach such position, truck driver had no chance to avoid collision although he did everything reasonably possible to do so, there was no basis for application of last clear chance doctrine to establish liability of truck driver for death of automobile driver.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Negligence ⇨133(4)

In negligence action, evidence of plaintiff's negligence placing him in position of danger from which he could not escape by exercising ordinary care, whether because of physical impossibility or his total unawareness of danger, and evidence that defendant knew of plaintiff's dangerous situation and knew or in exercise of ordinary care should have known that plaintiff could not escape therefrom, that defendant had last clear chance to avoid accident by exercising such care, but failed to do so, and that plaintiff was injured as proximate result of such failure, is necessary to justify instruction stating last clear chance doctrine.

2. Automobiles ⇨227(3)

Where truck driver, proceeding at about 50 miles per hour on paved highway, saw object quarter of mile ahead to right of highway and subsequently recognized it as automobile which had been partially concealed by trees and which was approaching highway at about 20 miles per hour on side road, but where, until automobile driver entered intersection, or got so close thereto that he could not in exercise of reasonable care have stopped and avoided collision, he was not in position of danger, and when he did reach such position, truck driver had no chance to avoid collision although he did everything reasonably possible to do so, there was no basis for application of last clear chance doctrine to establish liability of truck driver for death of automobile driver.

Harry G. McMahon, Dave Bach, Jr.,
Arcadia, for appellants.

Veatch & Thomas, Henry F. Walker,
Los Angeles, for respondents.

NOURSE, Justice pro tem.

This is an action for wrongful death. The plaintiffs, the wife and children of the deceased, appeal from a verdict and judgment in favor of the defendants.

The appellants make but one assignment of error, to wit: That the trial court erred in refusing appellants' request to instruct the jury on the doctrine of last clear chance. We have concluded that the action of the trial court in refusing the requested instruction was proper.

Appellants, in their opening brief, in order to establish a factual basis for their claim of error, have somewhat tortured the evidence.

The evidence, viewed in the light most favorable to the appellants, establishes the following facts and circumstances:

The accident occurred at the intersection of State Highway 138 and 121st Street, near Pear Blossom on the Mojave Desert. Highway 138, which runs generally west and east, is a two-lane paved highway 23 feet in width plus 5-foot gravel shoulders. For some distance before it intersects 121st Street from the right, it is on a descending downgrade. 121st Street is a sand and gravel road 20 feet in width, running north and south, intersecting Highway 138 from the south and dead ending there. Along the west side of 121st Street, and for some distance south of the intersection, there is a row of small trees, the most northerly of these trees being approximately 25 feet from the southerly line of Highway 138. This row of trees only partially obscures the view of traffic north bound on 121st Street, as an automobile so travelling could be seen as it passed the gaps between the trees. The defendants' truck and semi-trailer were travelling east on Highway 138, and the decedent, Wilson, north on 121st Street. Wilson was travelling at a speed of 15 to 20 miles an hour, according to the testimony of the driver of defendants' equipment, the defendant Vershaw, who was the only eyewitness of the accident, and did not change his speed from the time he was first seen by Vershaw until the time of impact. Defendants' equipment was travelling at a speed of 45 to 50 miles an hour up to the time of the application of its brakes. When the defendant Vershaw was approximately one-quarter of a mile west of the intersection he saw an object just north of the southerly end of the row of trees. He could not then recognize it as the Ford automobile with which he was later involved. He could not and did not see the driver until the Ford emerged from the row of trees and at that time he, Vershaw, saw that Wilson was looking straight ahead. When Wilson entered the intersection, Vershaw applied his brakes and attempted to swerve to his left. The impact between the cars occurred 11 feet north of the south edge of the paving on Highway 138, and 14 feet west of the westerly boundary of 121st Street, it thus being apparent that as Wilson entered the intersection he turned to the left. Defendants' truck left skid marks of 142 feet west of the point of impact and of 138 feet east of the point of impact to the point where it jack-knifed and stopped at the northerly edge of Highway 138. Wilson's Model "T" Ford was demolished and came to rest 127 feet east of the point of impact. Wilson was decapitated.

These facts do not establish a basis for the application of the doctrine of last clear chance, and it would have been error to instruct the jury upon that doctrine.

[1] In order for an instruction stating that doctrine to be proper there must be substantial evidence to show, "(1) That plaintiff has been negligent and, as a result thereof, is in a position of danger from which he cannot escape by the exercise of ordinary care; and this includes not only where it is physically impossible for him to escape, but also in cases where he is totally unaware of his danger and for that reason unable to escape; (2) that defendant has knowledge that the plaintiff is in such a situation, and knows, or in the exercise of ordinary care should know, that plaintiff cannot escape from such situation, and (3) has the last clear chance to avoid the accident by exercising ordinary care, and fails to exercise the same, and the accident results thereby, and plaintiff is injured as the proximate result of such failure.'" Daniels v. City & County of San Francisco, 40 Cal.2d 614, 619, 255 P.2d 785, 788.

[2] The evidence here fails to establish the third element above mentioned. Until Wilson entered the intersection or got so close thereto that he could not, in the exercise of reasonable care, have stopped and avoided the accident, he was not in a position of danger. It is clear, under the facts here, that when he did reach such a position the defendant driver did not have a clear chance, or any chance to avoid the accident, and it is further clear that the defendant driver, from the time Wilson reached a position of danger, did everything reasonably possible to avoid the accident.

Appellants rely upon Daniels v. City & County of San Francisco, supra, and Sills v. Los Angeles Transit Lines, 40 Cal.2d 630, 255 P.2d 795. These cases are clearly distinguishable from the one at bar upon their facts. In each of them the plaintiff's car had come to a stop in the path of the defendant's vehicle, and after it so came to a stop the defendant had a clear opportunity to avoid the accident by the exercise of reasonable care. The case at bar, on the other hand, is analogous to and governed by the decisions in Rodabaugh v. Tekus, 39 Cal.2d 290, 294, 246 P.2d 663; Poncino v. Reid-Murdock & Co., 136 Cal. App. 223, 232, 28 P.2d 932; Johnson v. Sacramento Northern Ry., 54 Cal.App.2d 528, 532, 129 P.2d 503; Dalley v. Williams, 73 Cal.App.2d 427, 436, 166 P.2d 595; Folger v. Richfield Oil Corp., 80 Cal.App.2d 655, 660, 182 P.2d 337; Berton v. Cochran, 81 Cal.App.2d 776, 781, 185 P.2d 349; Allin v. Snavelly, 100 Cal.App.2d 411, 415, 224 P.2d 113.

The judgment is affirmed.

WHITE, P. J., and DORAN, J., concur.

137 Cal.App.2d Supp. 884

Michael W. LEAHY, a Minor, by his Guardian ad litem, Mary Patricia Leahy, Plaintiff and Appellant,

v.

Donald C. SMITH, etc., Defendant and Respondent.

C. A. 8776.

Appellate Department, Superior Court,
Los Angeles County, California.

Nov. 28, 1955.

by a judgment of the Municipal Court of the Los Angeles Judicial District, Joseph Marchetti, J., and appealed. The Superior Court, Appellate Department, held that if a collective bargaining agreement purports to be made for the benefit of all employees, both members and nonmembers of the union, an action for its breach may be maintained by one who is not a member of the union.

Judgment reversed.

1. Labor Relations ⇐777

If collective bargaining contract purports to be made for benefit of all employees, both members and nonmembers of the union, an action for its breach may be maintained by one who is not a member of the union.

2. Contracts ⇐187(1)

Third party may recover directly on contract to which he is not a party (1) when terms of contract are expressly broad enough to include third party either by name or as one of a specified class, and (2) third party was evidently within intent of terms so used, if (3) the promisee had, in fact, a substantial and articulate interest in the welfare of third party in respect to the subject of the contract.

3. Labor Relations ⇐262, 777

Where collective bargaining agreements contained provision for trust fund for benefits "to the employees of the employers, members of the Union" and in all other cases the agreements designated the persons for whose benefit they were intended by words "employees" or "employee" or by other words merely stating nature of position held, without, in any case, anything limiting the designations to persons who were members of the union, purpose of agreement was to make provisions for benefit of all employees, whether union or nonunion, and nonunion employee was entitled to sue thereon.

Action by nonunion employee of defendant to enforce rights as third-party beneficiary under collective bargaining agreement. The employee was nonsuited

Jones & Jones, Long Beach, for appellant.

Gordon P. Shallenberger, San Pedro, for respondent.

Before SHAW, P. J., and BISHOP and PATROSSO, JJ.

BY THE COURT.

The sole question presented by this appeal by the plaintiff from the judgment of nonsuit is whether the plaintiff, a non-union employee of defendant, is entitled to rights as a third-party beneficiary under two collective bargaining agreements entered into between the Union and the defendant employer. Plaintiff does not claim to be a union member and holds only a "work permit" card issued by the Union.

The right of a union member to recover as a third-party beneficiary under such an agreement has been recognized in California, Sublett v. Henry's, etc., Lunch, 1942, 21 Cal.2d 273, 275, 131 P.2d 369; Division of Labor Law Enforcement, Department of Industrial Relations v. Dennis, 1947, 81 Cal.App.2d 306, 308, 183 P.2d 932; MacKay v. Loew's, Inc., 9 Cir., 1950, 182 F.2d 170, 172, 18 A.L.R.2d 348, certiorari denied 340 U.S. 828, 71 S.Ct. 65, 95 L.Ed. 608. But whether a non-union employee is such an intended beneficiary has not been decided.

[1,2] "If the contract purports to be made for the benefit of all employees, both members and nonmembers of the union, an action for its breach may be maintained by one who is not a member of the union." 56 C.J.S., Master and Servant, § 28(83) b, p. 270. And in 18 A.L.R.2d at page 370, appears the statement: "It has been generally held that a collective labor agreement between an employee and a labor union for the benefit of all the employees, or a class of employees, may be enforced by an individual employee, within the scope of the agreement, even though he is not a member of the contracting union." This same criterion is laid down by the cases from other jurisdictions which have discussed the problem. Yazoo & M. V. R. Co. v. Webb, 5 Cir., 1933, 64 F.2d 902, 904; Yazoo & M. V. R. Co. v. Sideboard, 1931, 161 Miss. 4, 133 So. 669; Gregg v. Starks, 1920, 188 Ky. 834, 224 S.W. 459; Coyle v. Erie R. Co., 1948, 142 N.J.Eq. 306, 59

A.2d 817, reversed on other grounds 1 N.J. 350, 63 A.2d 702. As said in Yazoo & M. V. R. Co. v. Sideboard, supra, 133 So. at page 671: A non-union member may recover "(1) When the terms of the contract are expressly broad enough to include the third party either by name as one of a specified class, and (2) the said third party was evidently within the intent of the terms so used, the said third party will be within its benefits, if (3) the promisee had, in fact, a substantial and articulate interest in the welfare of the said third party in respect to the subject of the contract."

[3] The two collective bargaining agreements in this case cover two different periods of time, and plaintiff was employed by defendant in parts of each period. The contracts are attached as exhibits to the complaint, and their execution is admitted by the answer, so no question of proof arises in regard to them. The two agreements are substantially alike. On reviewing them, we conclude that the plaintiff was within the class of persons for whose benefit they were intended.

In the first paragraph of each agreement is a provision requiring new employees who are not members of the Union to join it within a limited period of time, but such non-union persons may continue to work on union permits. This provision is for the benefit of the Union and does not affect the plaintiff here. MacKay v. Loew's, Inc., supra, 182 F.2d 170, 172.

One paragraph of each agreement provides that concessionaires of defendant shall enter into "collective bargaining agreements with the union in behalf of the employees in such stores, markets or establishments." This appears to be a statement of the general purpose of the agreement.

In a following paragraph there is provision for a trust fund to be contributed by the employer to provide benefits "to the Employees of the Employers, members of the Union."

In all other cases the agreements designate the persons for whose benefits they are intended by the words "employees" or

"employee" or by other words merely stating the nature of the position held, without, in any case, anything limiting these designations to persons who are members of the Union.

Construing these provisions together, we conclude that the general purpose of the agreements is to make provisions for the benefit of all employees of the defendant, and that in any case to which such intent does not extend words of express limitation are to be found.

Plaintiff is therefore entitled to sue on the agreements. He gave testimony which need not be reviewed here, from which it could be inferred that he was entitled to recover some amount of money in excess of what he had been paid. The nonsuit was erroneous.

The judgment is reversed.

45 Cal.2d 710

CITY OF VERNON, a municipal corporation, Plaintiff and Appellant,
v.

CITY OF LOS ANGELES, a municipal corporation, Defendant and Respondent.

L. A. 22911.

Supreme Court of California.
In Bank.

Dec. 6, 1955.

Rehearing Denied Jan. 5, 1956.

Action by plaintiff-city for declaratory relief and injunction and determination that it was entitled to discharge sewage into defendant-city's sewage system. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, William J. Palmer, J., rendered judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appealed. The Supreme Court, Schauer, J., held that where, due to judgment in action to abate nuisance, defendant-city was required to build sewage disposal facilities much more expensive than those contemplated by parties at time defendant-city contracted to dispose of plaintiff-city's sewage, the contract, on its original terms, become impossible of performance, and plaintiff-city was not entitled to specific performance.

Judgment affirmed.

Carter and Traynor, JJ., dissented.

Opinion, 275 P.2d 72, vacated.

1. Judgment ⇨704

Where first city, which, with second city, was defendant in action to abate nuisance arising from second city's disposal of both cities' sewage, contended that, under contracts, sewage disposal was sole responsibility of second city, but trial court heard no evidence on issue of contracts, and stated that each city had responsibility for disposal of its own sewage, judgment of abatement against both cities was not a determination of first city's rights under contract, and was not res judicata as to first city's action to obtain specific performance of contracts.

2. Contracts ⇨309(1)

A thing is impossible in legal contemplation when it can only be done at an excessive and unreasonable cost.

290 P.2d—53½

3. Municipal Corporations ⇨712

That contract whereunder defendant-city agreed to dispose of plaintiff-city's sewage became impossible of performance due to requirement that much more expensive disposal facilities be constructed by defendant-city did not require determination that contracts were altogether abrogated, regardless of what performances had already been rendered by either party, and permitted salvaging of some terms of contracts.

4. Specific Performance ⇨13

Where, due to judgment in action to abate nuisance, defendant-city was required to build sewage disposal facilities much more expensive than those contemplated by parties at time defendant-city contracted to dispose of plaintiff-city's sewage, the contract, on its original terms, became impossible of performance, and plaintiff-city was not entitled to specific performance.

5. Municipal Corporations ⇨712

Where defendant-city's performance of contract for disposal of plaintiff-city's sewage was excused because of conditions which arose subsequent to enactment of statute ratifying and confirming previous contracts between municipalities for, inter alia, joint use of sewage disposal systems, this statute did not operate to render the contract enforceable. St.1939, p. 37.

6. Municipal Corporations ⇨712

Where defendant-city's performance of contract to dispose of plaintiff-city's sewage was excused due to impossibility, defendant-city was not liable to plaintiff-city for damages plaintiff-city had been required to pay as a result of defendant-city's alleged negligent disposition of sewage.

Carson B. Hubbard, City Atty., Huntington Park, Edward R. Young, John F. O'Hara and John W. Shenk, III, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Roger Arnebergh, City Atty., Bourke Jones and John L. Flynn, Asst. City Attys., and Weldon L. Weber, Deputy City Atty., Los Angeles, for respondent.

SCHAUER, Justice.

The City of Vernon by its complaint for declaratory relief and injunction seeks a determination that under contracts entered into between it and defendant City of Los Angeles in 1909, 1925, 1931, and 1938 it is entitled to discharge a certain amount of its sewage through the sewer system of Los Angeles without payment to Los Angeles; Vernon also seeks injunctive enforcement of the contracts and damages in the amount which Vernon is required to pay by the judgment in People v. City of Los Angeles (1948), 83 Cal.App.2d 627, 189 P.2d 489 (an action in which the State obtained judgment against the parties to this action and others to abate the nuisance caused by their discharge of sewage into Santa Monica Bay). By its answer Los Angeles seeks determinations that the contracts are without effect; that Vernon be required to finance its share of the cost of new sewage disposal facilities built by Los Angeles in accordance with the decision for the State in People v. City of Los Angeles (1948), supra, 83 Cal.App.2d 627, 189 P.2d 489, and that Vernon has no right to use the sewage system of Los Angeles except on payment of its share of the cost of the facilities used.

After trial the superior court decreed that Vernon is not entitled to the relief sought; that the contracts between Vernon and Los Angeles (except for certain salvageable elements) are terminated and "have been invalid and unenforceable since a time not later than the entry of * * * judgment in the State Abatement Action"; and that Vernon is entitled to use the new facilities only on payment of its share of their cost. Vernon has appealed. It contends that the decision of the superior court is based upon the erroneous determination that the decree in the abatement action (People v. City of Los Angeles (1948), supra, 83 Cal. App.2d 627, 189 P.2d 489) decided against Vernon the issues raised in this action as to its contracts with Los Angeles. We have concluded that although such determination of the trial court is erroneous, its judgment can and should be upheld on the basis of its further determination that the performance of the contracts was excused and the contracts were discharged because performance became impossible except at impractical, excessive, unreasonable expense not contemplated by the parties when the contracts were made.

The Effect of the Abatement Decree

The determination of the trial court in this action that the essential issues herein were finally decided against Vernon in the abatement action is a serious error which, as is hereinafter explained, involves an attempt to re-write or disregard a substantial portion of a final judgment of the superior court and opinions of a District Court of Appeal and of this court. Although this error does not require reversal, discussion of it in connection with the background of this action will aid understanding of the present controversy.

The factual background of this litigation and the abatement action is as follows: Years ago cities (including Vernon) other than Los Angeles and sanitation districts in the Los Angeles area which subsequently became defendants in the abatement action found themselves financially unable to construct adequate sewage disposal facilities. The City of Los Angeles had constructed an outfall sewer system with a capacity which exceeded its then expected needs. Beginning in 1909 with Vernon, the cities other than Los Angeles and the sanitation districts made contracts with Los Angeles by which Los Angeles agreed to dispose of their sewage. "[T]he contracts between the city of Los Angeles and the other municipalities and sanitation districts under discussion were for an indefinite period, or, in some instances, for the life of the outfall sewer system itself, and in no instance carried any provision permitting the contracts to be cancelled when or if the city of Los Angeles required the use of that portion of the capacity of its outfall sewer system covered by the above-mentioned contracts" (at page 631 of 83 Cal.App.2d, at page 429 of 189 P.2d).

Sewage was originally disposed of by Los Angeles under its 1909 contract with Vernon by transporting it through an outfall sewer to Hyperion and discharging it raw into Santa Monica Bay about 900 feet offshore. In 1922, pursuant to requirements of the State Department of Public Health, Los Angeles commenced construction of new facilities, including a screening plant and a submarine tube extending about a mile offshore at Hyperion. These facilities were operated under a permit issued to Los Angeles in 1923.

In 1940, because Los Angeles had violated the terms of the 1923 permit and created a nuisance, the State suspended the permit; however, it granted a temporary permit on condition that Los Angeles at once prepare plans for the construction and financing of adequate sewage disposal works. Los Angeles did not comply with the terms of the temporary permit and the State revoked such permit. It also revoked permits of other defendants, including Vernon. Thus all rights of the contracting parties to dispose of sewage through the existing facilities were terminated.

In 1943 the State brought the abatement action. Judgment for the State was entered on February 1, 1946, and affirmed in People v. City of Los Angeles (1948), supra, 83 Cal.App.2d 627, 189 P.2d 489. This court denied a hearing, and the United States Supreme Court denied certiorari (335 U.S. 852, 69 S.Ct. 80, 93 L.Ed. 400).

Both before and after the institution of the abatement action Los Angeles attempted to work out means, alone or in cooperation with the other cities, whereby the sewage could be adequately disposed of by methods conforming with health and safety laws. Vernon did not make similar efforts; it sat by, resting on its claim that all its responsibility for disposition of its sewage, including its responsibility to the People of the State of California, had been assumed by Los Angeles. Through the years the pressing need for continued and improved disposition of sewage increased with the increase of the volume of sewage originating in the cities which used the Los Angeles facilities, including, as found by the trial court, "the enormous increase in volume of sewage originating in the City of Vernon as a result of the greatly increased industrial activity within its boundaries."

After certiorari to review the abatement injunction was denied, Vernon, having elected to use the Los Angeles system, did not, as required by the injunction, report what steps it had taken to comply with the portion of the injunction which required it to arrange to finance its share of the cost of the new plant; instead, it reported its reasons for having taken no steps to comply with that portion of the injunction. It claimed that it was unable to understand the decree, although other cities had been able to understand and comply with its terms.

In the abatement action the trial court determined that Los Angeles had plans for an acceptable new plant to be built at Hyperion; that it would be to the best interests of all defendants to dispose of their sewage through such new plant although it would be possible for some of the defendants other than Los Angeles, including Vernon, to make arrangements at great expense to dispose of their sewage without using the facilities of Los Angeles. The judgment ordered that Los Angeles build a new plant of sufficient capacity to abate the nuisance; that each other defendant either provide its own facilities for disposing of its sewage in a safe and sanitary manner or arrange to finance its share of the cost of the new plant proportionate to gallonage allotted to it; that such other defendants notify the court of the manner in which they elected to comply with the abatement injunction. The decree provided for continuing supervision by the court. Vernon elected to dispose of its sewage through the new facilities to be built by Los Angeles but did not make arrangements to finance its share of the cost of such facilities until it was compelled to do so by contempt proceedings (see City of Vernon v. Superior Court (1952), 38 Cal. 2d 509, 241 P.2d 243).

As previously indicated, in the present action defendant Los Angeles takes the position and the trial court determined that it had been decided in the abatement action that Vernon has no rights against Los Angeles under the sewage disposal contracts which are the subject of the present action. The answer filed by Vernon in the abatement action denied the allegations against Vernon of the State's complaint, set forth the contracts of 1909, 1925, 1931, and 1938 with Los Angeles, and alleged Vernon's position that under the contracts Los Angeles agreed to keep its sewer system in good condition; that upon delivery of Vernon sewage into the Los Angeles system Los Angeles had sole responsibility for its sanitary disposal; that Los Angeles alone was responsible for the nuisance and for the construction at its sole expense of facilities to abate it.

The superior court in its findings of fact in the present action purports to determine "that the issues created by the denials and affirmative allegations set forth in the answer of the City of Vernon [in the abatement case] were unavoidably and unequivocally before the court in said case * * * and, by the judgment entered in that case, were judicially determined by the court against the City of Vernon." The relevant facts are, however, that at the trial of the abatement action the court refused to admit the contracts between Vernon and Los Angeles in evidence, and the findings and judgment in the abatement action did not refer to the particular issues there and here raised by Vernon as to its rights under the contracts. The conclusions of law in the abatement action contained the following statements which relate to the contracts: Each city has the primary duty to dispose of its sewage in a safe and sanitary manner; none of the defendants is released from such duty by any permission or right created by contract, ordinance, or otherwise; "regardless of past relationships or contractual or other rights, privileges or obligations between the various defendants," the State is entitled to an injunction restraining defendants from maintaining sewage works without a permit and from discharging sewage into the bay in a manner which would create a nuisance.

It is apparent from the findings, conclusions, and judgment in the abatement action that the trial court there decided that Vernon's contracts with Los Angeles were no defense in that action but that it did not purport to decide what contractual rights Vernon might have against Los Angeles apart from the abatement action. On the appeal of Vernon and others in the abatement action the District Court of Appeal made it clear that such was the effect of the abatement injunction so far as Vernon's rights against Los Angeles were concerned. It said (at page 648 of 83 Cal.App.2d, at page 501 of 189 P.2d), "the court rightfully refrained from passing upon any of the rights, obligations or liabilities affecting the various defendants by reason of their contractual relations with each other, and left those matters open for future adjudication in a proper proceeding. Although the aforesaid contracts concerned the disposal of sewage, the court would not be justified in this action to adjudicate the rights existing between the various appellants by reason of their contracts one with the other. Insofar as the judgment herein is concerned, if any of the appellants have any rights against the city of Los Angeles, or vice versa, by reason of any existing contract, such rights have been preserved and may be enforced in a proper action."

After the affirmance of the abatement injunction and the denial of a hearing and of certiorari, Vernon instituted the present action. It did not take steps, by levy of taxes or issuance of bonds or imposition of charges, to raise funds for payment of its share of the cost of the new sewage plant, and it was found guilty of contempt for failing to comply with the abatement injunction. It sought review of the contempt judgment, contending, among other things, that bringing the present action was compliance with the injunction. This court rejected that contention and affirmed the contempt judgment. (City of Vernon v. Superior Court (1952), supra, 38 Cal.2d 509, 518, 241 P.2d 243.) We said, "The obvious purpose of the injunction was to get the nuisance promptly abated and to that end to get the new plant built and paid for without the delay attendant on independent or later ensuing litigation to determine the validity and effect of the old contracts of Vernon and other corporate defendants."

This court then quoted the language of the District Court of Appeal which is quoted in the preceding paragraph and said of that language and of the superior court ruling there under discussion, "This ruling preserves to petitioners all contractual rights they may possess under the mentioned contracts but likewise it requires them to settle or litigate those rights independently of compliance with the injunction decree" (at page 519 of 38 Cal.2d, at pages 248, 249 of 241 P.2d).

[1] It therefore appears that the determination of the trial court in the present action that the abatement injunction decided adversely to Vernon the questions of its contractual rights against Los Angeles is erroneous and contrary to the clear language of the District Court of Appeal in affirming the injunction and of this court in upholding the determination that Vernon was in contempt.

Legal Impossibility

As a further ground of decision the trial court determined that there was available to Los Angeles the defense of impossibility—not literal impossibility, but impracticability due to excessive and unreasonable expense. (See Mineral Park Land Co. v. Howard (1916), 172 Cal. 289, 293, 156 P. 458, L.R.A.1916F, 1; Restatement, Contracts, § 454.) For the reasons hereinafter stated, we conclude that this determination of the trial court is tenable.

Pursuant to the 1909 agreement Los Angeles built within Vernon and connected to the Los Angeles disposal system a main sewer and a lateral sewer for the joint use of the two cities. By that contract Los Angeles agrees to operate and maintain the joint sewers and Vernon agrees to pay five per cent of the cost of operation and maintenance. Each city agrees to operate and maintain its own sewer system at its own expense, "other than those portions which are constructed and used by them jointly. * * * [I]n consideration of the construction of the [joint] sewers above named, by the City of Los Angeles at its own cost and expense, and of the connection of said sewers with the outfall sewer also constructed by the said City of Los Angeles [for discharge of sewage into the bay] and of the privilege of connecting the sewer system to be constructed hereafter by the said City of Vernon with said sewers, and of discharging the sewage of said City of Vernon with said sewers," Vernon shall pay Los Angeles fifty per cent of the cost of the main sewer, not to exceed $12,000, and twenty per cent of the cost of the lateral sewer, not to exceed $1,300. The agreement contains no provision as to its termination.

As previously stated (p. 4), pursuant to a state permit issued in 1923, Los Angeles built a screening plant and submarine tube at Hyperion. These facilities were used in performance of the 1909 contract.

By the 1925 contract Vernon agrees in its use of sewers to abide by the rules which Los Angeles prescribes for the use of its sewers.

The 1931 agreement (which was never carried out but rather became the subject of much controversy between the parties) provides that Vernon shall be permitted to discharge not more than 11.7 cubic feet of sewage per second¹ into the Los Angeles sewer system pursuant to the 1909 contract; for this right Vernon is not required to pay anything; upon the execution of the agreement Vernon shall pay $234,220 for the right to discharge additional amounts of sewage in excess of 11.7 cubic feet per second and $36,200 as its share of the cost of construction by Los Angeles in Vernon of a relief sewer; for sewage in excess of 11.7 cubic feet per second Vernon shall pay Los Angeles such proportion of the annual cost of operation, maintenance, replacement, and repair of the sewage disposal facilities of Los Angeles used by Vernon as the additional quantity of sewage discharged by Vernon bears to the total amount of sewage discharged through the Los Angeles system. "Los Angeles shall operate, maintain and keep in good condition and repair said sewage system, outfall sewers, treatment plant and ocean outlet therefrom for the term of this agreement." The term of the

1. The amount of sewage discharged by Vernon has always been and now is less than 11.7 cubic feet per second.

agreement shall be the life of the North Outfall Sewer. (As indicated above, Los Angeles had completed construction of this sewer in 1924; its permit to use this sewer was suspended in 1940 and revoked in 1943.)

Vernon did not perform its promises to pay $234,220 and $36,200 under the 1931 agreement. In 1937 Los Angeles filed two actions against Vernon, one for payments under the 1931 agreement and one for an injunction against discharging sewage into the Los Angeles system.

The 1938 agreement states that Los Angeles and Vernon desire to settle all controversies as to the prior agreements and to provide for future operation and maintenance of sewage disposal facilities. The right of Vernon to dispose of 11.7 cubic feet of sewage per second through the Los Angeles outfall sewers is acknowledged. Los Angeles agrees to sell and Vernon agrees to buy the right to dispose of an additional 4.3 cubic feet per second; for this right to dispose of additional sewage Vernon agrees to pay $112,885.45 by April 1, 1939, together with specified annual payments, until 1965, totaling $135,356.60; "in lieu of such annual payments, Vernon may * * * pay the then current worth of unpaid future annual payments, discounted at the rate of 3% per annum compounded annually." Vernon further agrees that if it exercises its right to dispose of sewage in excess of 11.7 cubic feet per second, it will pay its proportionate share, measured by the ratio of its sewage in excess of 11.7 cubic feet per second to the total flow of sewage through the Los Angeles outfall sewers and treatment plant, of the cost to Los Angeles of operation, repair, replacement, construction and reconstruction of the Los Angeles outfall sewers and treatment plant. The contract provides for dismissal of the 1937 actions instituted by Los Angeles. There are additional provisions as to gauging stations, a relief sewer, and other matters which need not be set out. The agreement contains no provision as to its termination.

Vernon made the $112,885.45 payment provided for by the 1938 contract after it was due, with interest to compensate for the delay; it prepaid the annual payments as the contract provided it might do; Los Angeles accepted the payments in discharge of the obligations for which they were tendered.

The trial court in the present action determined that pursuant to the abatement injunction the lawful existence of the screening plant and the tube built pursuant to the 1923 permit has expired; that Los Angeles is required to build a new plant and tube at a cost of approximately $41,000,000; that the cost of operating and maintaining the new plant and tube will be approximately $500,000 per annum; that Los Angeles cannot continue performance under its contracts with Vernon "except at an excessive and unreasonable cost; that it is not practicable for the City of Los Angeles to continue the performance under the terms of the contracts * * * with the use of the new * * * plant and * * tube."

The trial court in the present action further determined "That it was not intended by the plaintiff and defendant herein that the City of Los Angeles was obligating itself, under the terms * * * of the contracts heretofore entered into between said parties, to build * * * and operate large and extensive facilities or treatment works for the purification of sewage * * *; that neither nor all [sic] of said contracts provide for, nor was it contemplated by either of the parties hereto in entering into said contracts, that the City of Los Angeles was or would be required under said contracts to erect * * * and operate a * * * treatment plant costing approximately $41,000,000 for the treatment of sewage arising within the boundaries of the City of Vernon."

The foregoing determinations of the trial court support the position of Los Angeles, succinctly stated in its brief, that "since further use of the facilities contemplated by the parties would be unlawful and the use of new facilities (ordered by the Court [in the abatement action]) would be unreasonably excessive in cost, further performance under said contracts by Los Angeles is excused."

[2] The controlling principles as to legal impossibility excusing performance have been long recognized in this state and are stated in Mineral Park Land Co. v. Howard (1916), supra, 172 Cal. 289, 293, 156 P. 458, L.R.A.1916F, 1, where defendants contracted to take gravel from plaintiff's land at a certain price, and it was subsequently found that the gravel, although present, could be taken only at prohibitive cost: "'A thing is impossible in legal contemplation when it is not practicable; and a thing is impracticable when it can only be done at an excessive and unreasonable cost.'" (1 Beach on Contracts, sec. 216.) We do not mean to intimate that the defendants could excuse themselves by showing the existence of conditions which would make the performance of their obligation more expensive than they had anticipated, or which would entail a loss upon them. But where the difference in cost is so great as here, and has the effect, as found, of making performance impracticable, the situation is not different from that of a total absence of earth and gravel."

As we understand the composite contracts of the parties, and as is implicit in the trial court's findings, the parties contemplated that there would be available for legal use disposal facilities, whether those in existence or to be constructed, the cost of which would not be completely disproportionate to the costs expressly referred to in those contracts. Therefore, the case is not like the cases relied upon by Vernon where it was held that unforeseen hardship or unexpected expense did not excuse performance. (Western Industries Co. v. Mason M. etc. Co. (1922), 56 Cal.App. 355, 360, 205 P. 466; Orr v. Forde (1929), 101 Cal. App. 694, 702, 282 P. 429; see also Lloyd v. Murphy (1944), 25 Cal.2d 48, 55, 153 P.2d 47 ["laws or other governmental acts that make performance unprofitable or more difficult or expensive do not excuse the duty to perform a contractual obligation"].)

Vernon points to undisputed evidence that both before and after the parties entered into the 1938 contract officials of Los Angeles were concerned with and attempting to arrange for financing and construction of new sewage disposal facilities; such evidence, it says, shows that Los Angeles at the time of the making of the contract recognized and assumed the risk of the possibility that it would have to build expensive new facilities. Such a conclusional finding is not impelled as a matter of law. It is reasonable to believe that what was in the contemplation of the parties when they negotiated the 1938 contract was not the radical development of the 1943 abatement action but the working out of past and then existing difficulties without expense running into many millions.

Vernon asserts that "Plaintiff is entitled to an answer to the questions: 'If the contracts are invalid, when were they invalid? By what manner did they become invalid?' These are the issues raised by the complaint and the answer—material issues—and should be answered one way or the other." The findings, conclusions, and judgment herein sufficiently resolve these "issues" by the determination that conditions were such, by the time the abatement judgment was entered, that performance of the contracts had become impracticable.

[3,4] Despite the language that the contracts are "terminated" and "invalid," the effect of the judgment herein is not to determine that when performance by one party became impracticable the contracts were altogether abrogated, regardless of what performances had already been rendered by either party. Such a determination would be incorrect. (See Ogren v. Inner Harbor Land Co. (1927), 83 Cal. App. 197, 199, 256 P. 607.) More accurately, the judgment determines that certain described "facilities and rights" created under the contracts (such as the gauging stations and relief sewer provided for by the 1938 contract) can and should be salvaged, and although the case was not tried in such a way that all obligations between the parties could be precisely adjusted by the judgment herein, such judgment expressly contemplates an adjustment of those obligations; it decrees that Vernon is liable to Los Angeles for any monetary obligations accrued under the contracts prior to the entry of judgment in the abatement action,² "provided, however, that if all the benefits received by her from the City of Los Angeles under all said agreements prior to the entry of said judgment in said State Abatement Action have had a fair value less than the total payments made by her and those now owing to the City of Los Angeles, she, Vernon, shall be credited with such excess of payments over such value of benefits received."³

Other Contentions

[5] Vernon urges that the contracts were validated by the Municipal Sewer District Act of 1939 (Stats.1939, ch. 24; Deering's Laws, 1939 Supp., Act 5192a). Section 4 of that act provided, "All contracts made prior to the adoption and passage of this act between any two or more municipal corporations * * * providing for the joint construction, use or operation of sewer systems, or sewage disposal systems, are hereby ratified and confirmed * * *" Since further performance of the contracts is excused because of conditions which arose subsequent to the 1939 act, we need not discuss the effect of that act or of other, previous laws as to sewage disposal contracts which are cited by Vernon.

[6] Vernon's second cause of action is for damages in the amount which it is required to pay under the abatement judgment in return for its use of the Los Angeles disposal facilities. This cause of action is based on the theory that the negligent failure of Los Angeles to perform its contractual duty to keep its sewage disposal facilities in good condition and carry away the sewage of Vernon was the proximate cause of the abatement judgment against Vernon. Since performance of such duty was excused, the cause of action cannot be maintained.

Vernon asserts that the trial court's adjudication that it is not entitled to specific performance may be based upon determinations, which Vernon claims are erroneous, that it suffered no detriment commensurate with the benefits granted it under the contracts and that the consideration paid by it was disproportionately small as compared with the value of the obligations assumed by Los Angeles. The determination that further performance is excused is independent of determinations as to adequacy of consideration, and the latter subject need not be discussed.

In its petition for hearing by this court after decision of the District Court of Appeal Vernon asserted for the first time that the judgment of the trial court, if it is affirmed, will deprive Vernon of property without due process of law. This contention is but a variant of the argument, hereinbefore discussed and rejected, that since the making of the contracts there have been no developments which can excuse their further performance.

For the reasons above stated, the judgment is affirmed.

GIBSON, C. J., SPENCE, J., and BRAY, J. pro tem., concur.

CARTER, Justice (dissenting).

I dissent.

I agree with the majority opinion that the trial court erred in concluding that the

2. As stated supra, p. 13, Vernon made and Los Angeles accepted payments which discharged the two principal monetary obligations under the 1938 contract. Whether Vernon made all other, lesser payments for various facilities and rights under such contract cannot be determined from the record herein.

3. Concerning the subject of this declaration the trial court made the following statement in a memorandum opinion:

"The case [for declaratory relief] was not tried by either side on a theory that required presentation of evidence which would have enabled the court to make a financial adjustment between the parties. Hence, the court presently can only suggest a program that seems to be just, doing so with the understanding that the parties are free to work out an amicable adjustment at variance with the court's suggestions. In any such adjustment Vernon, it seems, should be charged with all payments accrued under the composite agreement up to the entry of judgment in the State Abatement Action, and, if up to that time the benefits received by her under the agreements had a fair value less than the total cost to her, she should be credited with the difference."

decree in the abatement action determined the issues raised in this action. I am further convinced, however, that the trial court erred also in concluding that Los Angeles is excused from performing its contractual obligations by reason of impossibility.

It is the general rule, so well established that it requires but token citation of authority, that the mere fact that performance of a promise is made more difficult and expensive than the parties anticipated when the contract was made, will not excuse the promisor from his obligation to perform his part of the contract. Metzler v. Thye, 163 Cal. 95, 124 P. 721; Coulter v. Sausalito Bay Water Co., 122 Cal.App. 480, 10 P.2d 780; Williston on Contracts (Rev. Ed.), Vol. 6, § 1963; Rest., Contracts, § 467. "Parties should be careful about making contracts, for once made the courts will not relieve them for light or trivial reasons. Public policy is subserved by leaving the parties and their rights to be measured by the terms of their engagements. California Cured Fruit Ass'n v. Stelling, 141 Cal. 713 [75 P. 320]. They may have made an unfortunate arrangement, but when they have entered into it voluntarily, they are bound by it in the absence of equitable grounds for avoidance. Cook v. Snyder, 16 Cal.App.2d 587 [61 P.2d 53]. They must be presumed to have contracted with reference to existing conditions known to them. Dore v. Southern Pac. Co., 163 Cal. 182 [124 P. 817]. A person contracting with eyes open and aware of the facts is presumed to undertake performance at the risk of interference from agencies not expressly provided against. McCulloch v. Liguori, 88 Cal.App.2d 366 [199 P.2d 25]. Moreover, contracting parties cannot escape performance of their undertakings because of unforeseen hardship. Metzler v. Thye, 163 Cal. 95 [124 P. 721]." (12 Cal.Jur.2d Contracts, § 226.) Applied to factual situations analogous to that presented here, the rule has been stated that laws or other governmental acts that make performance unprofitable or more difficult or expensive do not excuse the duty to perform a contractual obligation. Aristocrat Highway Displays v. Stricklen, 68 Cal.App.2d 788, 157 P.2d 880; Western Industries Co. v. Mason M. etc. Co., 56 Cal.App. 355, 205 P. 466; McCulloch v. Liguori, 88 Cal.App.2d 366, 199 P.2d 25; Lloyd v. Murphy, 25 Cal.2d 48, 153 P.2d 47; Sample v. Fresno Flume etc. Co., 129 Cal. 222, 61 P. 1085; Klauber v. San Diego St.-Car Co., 95 Cal. 353, 30 P. 555.

Looking at the present factual situation, we note that a governmental act—the abatement action—has caused Los Angeles to make certain expenditures, and has made performance by Los Angeles of its contractual obligations more expensive. Applying the general rule to this factual situation, we would conclude that Los Angeles is not excused from performing its contractual obligations, and that Los Angeles therefore has no right to retain all of the payment made by Vernon under court order to help finance the construction of a facility whereby Los Angeles may legally perform its contractual obligation.

The rule has developed in modern times that supervening impossibility will, in proper cases, excuse a promisor's failure to perform. Unusual or unexpected expense does not establish impossibility of performance. Metzler v. Thye, 163 Cal. 95, 124 P. 721; Glens Falls Indem. Co. v. Perscallo, 96 Cal. App.2d 799, 216 P.2d 567. Failure to perform may be excused, however, when the added cost is so great as to have the effect of making performance impracticable. In legal contemplation a thing is impossible when not practicable, and a thing is impracticable when it can be done only at an excessive and unreasonable cost. Mineral Park Land Co. v. Howard, 172 Cal. 289, 156 P. 458, L.R.A.1916F, 1.

The following characteristics should be particularly noted in regard to this defense of legal impossibility: First, it operates to excuse a non-performing obligor from liability for his failure to perform. Second, it operates only when performance of the obligor's part of the contract is impracticable. Third, the unanticipated expense which will render performance impracticable must be very much greater (in the Mineral Park case it was 10 or 12 times greater) than the expected or usual cost of performance. With these characteristics in mind, it is evident that the majority opinion has erred in supporting the trial court's judgment on the basis of legal impossibility.

Among the contractual obligations of Los Angeles, which the majority opinion says are excused, is a duty to accept at designated places, and to dispose of a specified quantity (up to 16 cubic feet per second) of sewage from Vernon. It should be noted that this duty was performed by Los Angeles up until the time of commencement of this action; it is presumably being performed by Los Angeles while this case is pending in the courts; and it will assuredly be performed in the future, after a decision is rendered in this case. It is obvious, then, that the doctrine of legal impossibility as here applied by the majority does not excuse an obligor from liability for failure to perform a contractual duty; instead that doctrine is employed by the majority to rewrite the contract between these parties. Los Angeles will continue to perform the services which it undertook to perform by this contract; Vernon will continue to dispose of its sewage at designated points on the Los Angeles outfall sewer; but Vernon, the obligee, will be required to pay more money, now and in the future, for this continuation of performance of the contractual obligations of Los Angeles.

I am aware of no prior decision of this or any other court in which the doctrine of legal impossibility has been applied to increase the consideration to be paid by the promisee while recognizing that the promisor will continue to perform as before. By the same token, I can find neither law nor logic to support a decision which terms "impracticable" or "impossible" of performance, a contract which both parties and this court recognize as having been performed and is expected to be performed for an indefinite period in the future. This situation comes as near approaching a legal paradox as any which has come under my observation.

As an additional matter, careful examination of the record in this case raises a question as to whether the cost of performing the contract, using the new facilities, is substantially disproportionate to the anticipated cost of performance. The majority opinion refers to certain payments made by Vernon to Los Angeles. The total sum which Vernon had paid up to the time of trial for the use of the facilities of the Los Angeles sewer system was $296,801.50, in addition to the granting of flowage rights through Vernon. The majority opinion then refers to the trial court's finding that Los Angeles is required to build a new treatment plant and tube at a cost of about $41,000,000, and that operation and maintenance of these facilities will cost about $500,000 per year. But these figures, juxtaposed in the majority opinion, are misleading. The figures "$41,000,000" and "$500,000" have but slight bearing on the cost to Los Angeles of performing its contractual obligation to Vernon.

If this were a proper case for application of the doctrine of legal impossibility (if Vernon were seeking damages for a refusal by Los Angeles to accept any sewage from Vernon), the figure which would be computed to determine whether performance was unreasonably or excessively expensive would be the increased cost of performing this contract. Presumably the cost of performance before the advent of the abatement action was not disproportionate to the approximately $300,000 consideration paid by Vernon. To compute the increase in cost, one must recognize the additional facts that Los Angeles is building a sewage disposal plant with capacity for 260 million gallons per day; that 10 million gallons per day of this capacity is allotted to Vernon. If the plant were designed and constructed without allotment of gallonage to Vernon, it would still have capacity for 250 million gallons per day. The increased cost of performing the contract is the difference in cost of construction between a 260 million gallon per day plant and a 250 million gallon per day plant. What this difference would be is impossible to determine from the record before us. It requires no engineer, however, to deduce that the cost of construction would not increase in direct proportion to the increase in capacity; the structural differences between a 250 million gallon per day plant and a 260 million gallon per day plant would presumably be slight. It is clear, at any rate, that the increase in cost attributable to making the plant large enough to take care of Vernon's sewage, and thus the increased cost of performing the Vernon sewage contract, would not be 10 or 12 times as great as the approximately $300,000 which it would have cost to perform the contract if the abatement action had not intervened.

Another point on which I am convinced the majority opinion is in error relates to Vernon's second cause of action, on the theory of negligence. The majority opinion states: "Vernon's second cause of action is for damages in the amount which it is required to pay under the abatement judgment in return for its use of the Los Angeles disposal facilities. This cause of action is based on the theory that the negligent failure of Los Angeles to perform its contractual duty to keep its sewage disposal facilities in good condition and carry away the sewage of Vernon was the proximate cause of the abatement judgment against Vernon. Since performance of such duty was excused, the cause of action cannot be maintained." (Italics added.)

On this point the majority opinion appears to be inconsistent with itself. It is beyond dispute that a negligence action may be predicated on the breach of a duty arising out of contract. L. B. Laboratories, Inc., v. Mitchell, 39 Cal.2d 56, 244 P.2d 385. If the breach which causes the damage and gives rise to the cause of action occurs while the contractual duty is subsisting, can plaintiff's right to maintain a cause of action for that breach be destroyed by the later occurrence of events which are held to excuse the performance of the duty? Obviously not.

The main theory of the majority opinion is that Los Angeles' performance of duties under the contracts is excused because of excessive or unreasonable expense occasioned by the decree in the abatement action. But Vernon seeks relief by way of damages for the alleged negligent operation of the sewage disposal facilities which brought about the abatement action. In other words, Vernon alleges a breach of contractual duties by Los Angeles before the existence of the conditions which are held in the majority opinion to excuse performance of those duties. Clearly the breach of duty alleged by Vernon in its second cause of action is a sufficient basis for maintenance of that cause of action even if the majority opinion were correct in holding the duty to be later excused. In other words, it was a breach of duty on the part of Los Angeles which brought about the condition on which its defense of impossibility of performance is predicated.

The pleadings relating to the second cause of action raised the issues (1) whether Los Angeles owed a contractual duty to maintain the old treatment plant and ocean outlet in good repair; (2) whether Los Angeles breached that duty by negligence, carelessness and mismanagement in the operation and maintenance of the treatment plant and ocean outlet; and (3) whether such breach, if any, was the direct and proximate cause of damage to Vernon. Much of the testimony in the trial court related to these issues. The failure of the trial court to make direct findings on these issues was prejudicial error. Baggs v. Smith, 53 Cal. 88; Taylor v. Taylor, 192 Cal. 71, 218 P. 756, 51 A.L.R. 1074; Strong v. Strong, 22 Cal.2d 540, 140 P.2d 386; Elliott v. Bertsch, 59 Cal.App.2d 543, 139 P.2d 332; Mayer v. Beondo, 83 Cal.App.2d 665, 189 P.2d 327, 190 P.2d 23; Chamberlain v. Abeles, 88 Cal.App.2d 291, 198 P.2d 927; Flenbaugh v. Heinrich, 89 Cal.App.2d 214, 200 P.2d 580.

The trial court's finding of fact relative to the second cause of action reads as follows: "Insofar as the allegations of paragraphs III, IV, V and VI of said second cause of action purport to assert any present obligation of the City of Los Angeles, or any present right of the City of Vernon, arising from any or all of the aforesaid contracts and/or from any conduct on the part of the City of Los Angeles, each of said allegations is untrue. It is not true that any negligence and/or carelessness or other conduct of the defendant was the proximate cause of the judgment entered against Vernon in said State Abatement Action, or of the order of the court which, in effect, required Vernon to pay the sum of $901,250 or any other sum as its proportionate share of the new treatment plant and/or submarine outfall and/or any other facility for sewage disposal, which said judgment required the City of Los Angeles to construct; and it is not true that plaintiff will be damaged in said or any sum by compliance with the orders or any order of said judgment. To the contrary, plaintiff has been benefited by the compliance with said judgment on the part of the defendant, and plaintiff has been and will be benefited by said compliance to an extent greater in fair monetary value than the total of all sums which she, Vernon, has been or will be required by said judgment to pay."

This finding does not purport to deal with the issue of a contractual duty owed by Los Angeles to Vernon during the period prior to the judgment in the abatement action. There is no finding on the factual question whether Los Angeles breached its contractual duty. The finding that Vernon will not be damaged by compliance with the abatement judgment, but will instead be benefited, is obviously based on the trial court's erroneous conclusion that Los Angeles is excused from performing the contract. If Vernon is required to pay for a service which Los Angeles is contractually bound to render, obviously Vernon will be damaged to the extent of the value of the service, which damage was suffered by Vernon as the result of the failure of Los Angeles to perform its contractual duty by operating its sewage disposal facilities in such a manner as to create a public nuisance which necessitated the abatement action. It should be noted that Vernon had no power to control the manner of operation of the disposal facilities.

In my opinion Los Angeles should be held to the terms of the contract which it made with Vernon. Vernon's contractual right to flow 11.7 cubic feet per second of sewage into the Los Angeles sewer system without further payment should be upheld. Vernon should have the further right to flow an additional 4.3 cubic feet per second of sewage into the Los Angeles sewer system, subject to payment of a proportionate share of the sewage disposal cost as provided in the contract. Los Angeles should be ordered to return to Vernon so much of the payment made by Vernon pursuant to the decree in the abatement action as is attributable to the 16 cubic feet per second flow which Los Angeles is contractually bound to accept.

For the reasons above stated I would reverse the judgment.

TRAYNOR, J., concurs.

Rehearing denied. McCOMB, J., not participating. BRAY, J., pro tem., participating in place of SHENK, J.

CARTER and TRAYNOR, JJ., dissenting.

45 Cal.2d 751

The PEOPLE of the State of California,
Plaintiff and Appellant,

v.

Beverly MICHAEL, Defendant and
Respondent
Cr. 5764.

Supreme Court of California.
In Bank.
Dec. 9, 1955.

Prosecution for violation of narcotics laws. Defendant moved to set aside information. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, David Coleman, J., set aside information, and the people appealed. The Supreme Court, Traynor, J., held that where defendant sought to set aside information on ground that evidence had been obtained by illegal search and seizure, evidence adduced before magistrate that entry into defendant's house and subsequent discoveries there were made with consent of defendant and her mother justified admission and use of evidence at preliminary hearing to establish probable cause for holding defendant to answer.

Order reversed.

I. Searches and Seizures ¶7(28)

To protect his right to object to an unreasonable search or seizure, a defendant need not forcibly resist an officer's assertion of authority to enter his home or search it or his person, but if he freely consents to an entry or search, or voluntarily produces evidence against himself, his constitutional rights are not violated in any search or taking of evidence pursuant to his consent if not unreasonable.

2. Searches and Seizures ⇨7(28)

Whether in a particular case an apparent consent was in fact voluntarily given to a search or seizure, or was in submission to an expressly implied assertion of authority, is a question of fact to be determined in light of all circumstances.

3. Criminal Law ⇨234

In narcotics prosecution, wherein defendant sought to set aside information on ground that evidence had been obtained by illegal search and seizure, evidence adduced before magistrate that entry into defendant's house and subsequent discoveries there were made with consent of defendant and her mother justified admission and use of evidence at preliminary hearing to establish probable cause for holding defendant to answer. Pen.Code § 995; West's Ann.Health and Safety Code § 11500.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., William E. James, Deputy Atty. Gen., S. Ernest Roll, Dist. Atty., Jere J. Sullivan and Lewis Watnick, Deputy Dist. Attys., Los Angeles, for appellant.

Forno & Umann and Harry M. Umann, Los Angeles, for respondent.

A. L. Wirin and Fred Okrand, Los Angeles, as amici curiae on behalf of respondent.

TRAYNOR, Justice.

By information defendant was charged with four counts of possessing narcotics in violation of Health and Safety Code section 11500 and one prior felony conviction of violating the same section. Her motion to set the information aside (see Penal Code § 995) was granted on the ground that all of the evidence against her had been obtained by an illegal search and seizure in violation of her constitutional rights. The People appeal.

At the time of her arrest defendant was living at her mother's home. Two state narcotics inspectors, an investigator from the Los Angeles District Attorney's office, and a Los Angeles police officer went to defendant's residence. They knocked on the door, identified themselves as officers, and were admitted by defendant's mother. They did not have a search warrant. One of the officers identified himself to defendant and asked her if she had any narcotics in the house. Defendant's mother then left the room and returned with a bottle containing a narcotic, which the officer took from her. She told the officers that "This is all she has." Defendant told the officer she knew the bottle contained a narcotic, and on being asked whether she had any more narcotics, she produced a box from her bedroom containing other narcotics and hypodermic equipment, which she handed to the officer. Defendant was arrested, the evidence was taken to police headquarters and analyzed, and four narcotics were identified.

The Attorney General contends that the evidence in this case was voluntarily produced by defendant and her mother and was therefore not illegally obtained. Defendant, on the other hand, contends that the admission of the officers into her home and the production of the narcotics were in submission to authority and without effective consent. Accordingly, she contends that anything the officers heard and any physical evidence they obtained after the entry without a warrant was inadmissible.

[1-3] To protect his right to object to an unreasonable search or seizure a defendant need not forcibly resist an officer's assertion of authority to enter his home or search it or his person, United States v. Di Re, 332 U.S. 581, 594, 68 S.Ct. 222, 92 L.Ed. 210; Amos v. United States, 255 U.S. 313, 317, 41 S.Ct. 266, 65 L.Ed. 654, but if he freely consents to an entry or search, or voluntarily produces evidence against himself, his constitutional rights are not violated and any search or taking of evidence pursuant to his consent is not unreasonable. Zap v. United States, 328 U.S. 624, 628, 66 S.Ct. 1277, 90 L.Ed. 1477; Davis v. United States, 328 U.S. 582, 593-594, 66 S.Ct. 1256, 90 L.Ed. 1453; In re Dixon, 41 Cal.2d 756, 761, 264 P.2d 513. Whether in a particular case an apparent consent was in fact voluntarily given or was in submission to an express or implied assertion of authority, is a question of fact to be determined in the light of all the circumstances. Since the cases that have determined this question under varying factual circumstances are difficult if not impossible to reconcile (compare e. g., Davis v. United States, supra, 328 U.S. 582, 593-594, 66 S.Ct. 1256, with Johnson v. United States, 333 U.S. 10, 12-13, 68 S.Ct. 367, 92 L.Ed. 436; Waxman v. United States, 9 Cir., 12 F.2d 775, with Pritchett v. State, 78 Okl.Cr. 67, 143 P.2d 622, 623-625; Smuk v. People, 72 Colo. 97, 209 P. 636, 637, with Salata v. United States, 6 Cir., 286 F. 125, 127, and may reflect imperfectly the factual situations before the courts that decided them, they point to no compelling solution in the present case. On the record before us, we have concluded that the officer's testimony before the magistrate constituted sufficient evidence that the entry into the house and subsequent discoveries were made with the consent of defendant and her mother to justify the admission and use of the evidence at the preliminary hearing to establish probable cause for holding defendant to answer.

This is not a case in which entry was made pursuant to the supposed authority of an invalid search warrant. (See, United States v. Kelih, D.C., 272 F. 484, 490; Salata v. United States, supra, 286 F. 125, 127; Hernandez v. State, 137 Tex.Cr.R. 343, 129 S.W.2d 301, 305.) Nor is it a case in which the officers entered without the permission or knowledge of the occupants (see Dukes v. United States, 4 Cir., 275 F. 142, 144-145; Farris v. United States, 9 Cir., 24 F.2d 639, 639-640), or demanded the right to search without a warrant. (See, Amos v. United States, supra, 255 U.S. 313, 317, 41 S.Ct. 266; United States v. Slusser, D.C., 270 F. 818, 819.) All that appears is that four officers went to defendant's home, identified themselves, and were admitted by defendant's mother. Within approximately a minute of their arrival they asked defendant if she had any narcotics, and all of the evidence was then voluntarily produced by the two women. Under these circumstances, to hold as a matter of law that the evidence was produced in response to an unlawful assertion of authority would seriously hamper officers in the reasonable performance of their duties. Thus, it is not unreasonable for officers to seek interviews with suspects or witnesses or to call upon them at their homes for such purposes. Such inquiries, although courteously made and not accompanied with any assertion of a right to enter or search or secure answers, would permit the criminal to defeat his prosecution by voluntarily revealing all of the evidence against him and then contending that he acted only in response to an implied assertion of unlawful authority.

We are not unmindful of the fact that the appearance of four officers at the door may be a disturbing experience, and that a request to enter made to a distraught or timid woman might under certain circumstances carry with it an implied assertion of authority that the occupant should not be expected to resist. (See, State v. Lindway, 131 Ohio St. 166, 2 N.E.2d 490, 493; People v. Lind, 370 Ill. 131, 18 N.E.2d 189, 192; Petition of Shoemaker, D.C., 9 F.2d 170, 171.) Neither defendant nor her mother testified at the preliminary hearing, however, and the testimony that was given indicates only that the evidence was voluntarily produced in response to a reasonable inquiry. (See, In re Dixon, supra, 41 Cal. 2d 756, 761, 264 P.2d 513; Gray v. State, 243 Wis. 57, 63, 9 N.W.2d 68; United States v. Pugliese, 2 Cir., 153 F.2d 497, 498-499; United States v. Sferas, 7 Cir., 210 F.2d 69, 73-74; State v. Hagan, 47 Idaho 315, 274 P. 628, 629; Hernandez v. State, supra, 137 Tex.Cr.R. 343, 129 S.W.2d 301, 305; Clark v. State, 78 Okl.Cr. 423, 149 P.2d 994, 996-997.)

The order is reversed.

GIBSON, C. J., SHENK, CARTER, SCHAUER and SPENCE, JJ., and McCOMB, J. pro tem., concur.

45 Cal.2d 755

The PEOPLE of the State of California,
Plaintiff and Appellant,

v.

James MARTIN, Defendant and Respondent.
Cr. 5767.

Supreme Court of California,
In Bank.

Dec. 9, 1955.

Prosecution for horse race bookmaking and occupying and keeping premises for purpose of bookmaking. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, David Coleman, J., set aside information, and the people appealed. The Supreme Court, Traynor, J., held that where officers, upon identification, were admitted to defendant's office, where they found paraphernalia used for bookmaking, they were reasonably justified in concluding that defendant was occupying premises for illegal purpose, and defendant's arrest, and the seizure of paraphernalia before his arrest, were lawful.

Order reversed.

1. Criminal Law 6394

Purpose of rule excluding illegally obtained evidence, is not to provide redress or punishment for a past wrong, but to deter unlawful enforcement of the law.

2. Criminal Law 6394

Illegally obtained evidence is inadmissible whether or not it was obtained in violation of the particular defendant's constitutional rights.

3. Arrest 63(3), 71

Where officers, upon identification, were admitted to defendant's office, where they found paraphernalia used for bookmaking, they were reasonably justified in concluding that defendant was occupying premises for illegal purpose, and defendant's arrest, and the seizure of paraphernalia before his arrest, were lawful. Pen. Code, § 337a, subd. 2; § 836, subd. 1.

4. Searches and Seizures 7(1)

Looking through a window does not constitute an unreasonable search.

5. Arrest 63(3)

Officers who, looking through defendant's office window, saw gambling paraphernalia, were entitled to act upon what they saw and arrest defendant. Pen.Code, § 836, subd. 1; § 844.

6. Arrest 68

Where officer had arrested defendant six days before under similar circumstances, and defendant again appeared to be committing offense of bookmaking in officer's presence, it was unnecessary for officer expressly to inform defendant of intention to make arrest before officer was justified in entering defendant's office through window. Pen.Code, §§ 841, 844.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., William E. James, Deputy Atty. Gen., S. Ernest Roll, Dist. Atty., Jere J. Sullivan and Lewis Watnick, Deputy Dist. Attys., Los Angeles, for appellant.

John J. Bradley and Max Solomon, Los Angeles, for respondent.

A. L. Wirin and Fred Okrand, Los Angeles, as amici curiae on behalf of respondent.

TRAYNOR, Justice.

By information defendant was charged with two counts of horse-race bookmaking, Penal Code § 337a(1) and two counts of keeping and occupying premises for the purposes of such bookmaking. Penal Code § 337a(2). The trial court granted defendant's motion to set the information aside (see Penal Code § 995) on the ground that all of the evidence against him had been obtained by illegal searches and seizures in violation of his constitutional rights. The People appeal.

Two of the counts were based on defendant's activities that were discovered by the arresting officers on April 20, 1955, at an office on Ventura Boulevard in Los Angeles. About 11:30 in the morning three police officers went to the premises, a small one-story office building. One testified that on arriving, "I went to the front door of the office at this address and I looked through the door through a mail chute into the door into the small office. At first I didn't see anything. The room appeared to be empty. I knocked on the door and nobody answered. Nobody came to the door or answered; so I looked through again and I could see the defendant inside the room. He was on the telephone standing off to the left from the door using the telephone, at which time I knocked again and identified myself, and the defendant came and opened the door and let the three of us in." Inside the room the officers found two small tables, two telephones, two blackboards, a box of chalk, a wet rag, and a scratch sheet for the day. Part of one of the blackboards was wet as if it had just been wiped. There were also two two-by-twelve planks on the floor near the door. The officers stayed in the room for approximately an hour and answered the telephones, which rang frequently. Telephone callers, who identified themselves by numbers, called in bets on various races during this period. As an expert on the practice of bookmakers in Los Angeles County, one of the officers testified that in his opinion the room was a relay spot, a place where either betters or the handbooks that take bets from betters telephone their bets. At a relay spot the bets are either recorded temporarily until they can be telephoned on to a "phone spot or office" or are passed on directly to the phone spot by mechanically relaying the telephone calls.

The other two counts were based on defendant's activities that were discovered by the arresting officers six days later at another small office building on Ventura Boulevard. The same three officers went to the premises about 11:30 in the morning. While they were looking the place over, a woman came from a house in the rear, questioned them, and they identified themselves. After talking to her the officers looked through the rear window of the building. One of them testified: "In the inside I could see two two-by-twelve planks barricading the door. I could see a blackboard laying on the floor, a box of chalk on it, a wet rag or a rag. I opened the window. I smelled cigarette smoke in the room. I could see what turned out to be the defendant moving around inside the room. I identified myself, called for the defendant to open the door, which he didn't do, so I entered through the window. * * * In the front room I found the defendant, two telephones on a card table, a pile of warm ashes in the corner." While the officers were present the phones rang frequently, and although many of the callers hung up when the officers answered, one attempted to place bets. It was the officer's opinion that this room was also a relay spot.

At the time of the first arrest defendant told the officers that a man had offered him $2 to go in and watch the place in case any salesman came around, and at the time of the second arrest defendant told the officers that a man on Ventura Boulevard had offered him a day's wages to sit in the place. The officers did not have a search warrant on either occasion.

The Attorney General contends that since defendant disclaimed any interest in the premises searched and the property seized, his constitutional rights could not have been violated and that therefore he has no standing to challenge the legality of the searches and seizures. (See, Casey v. United States, 9 Cir., 191 F.2d 1, 3; Mello v. United States, 3 Cir., 66 F.2d 135, 136; Connolly v. Medalie, 2 Cir., 58 F.2d 629, 630.) We cannot agree with this contention.

It is true that in Goldstein v. United States, 316 U.S. 114, 62 S.Ct. 1000, 86 L.Ed. 1312, the United States Supreme Court recognized that the rule is well established in the lower federal courts that only those whose constitutional rights have been violated may object to the introduction of illegally obtained evidence against them. In the light of that rule it held that the federal wire-tapping statute should not be interpreted as forbidding the use of wire-tap evidence against a person not a party to the conversation. It was careful to point out, however, that it had never decided that the rule applied in the lower federal courts with respect to unconstitutionally obtained evidence was correct. There are several United States Supreme Court decisions cited below, however, that are logically inconsistent with the rule applied in the lower federal courts, and it is impossible to reconcile that rule with the reasons that compel the exclusion of the evidence.

Thus, the rule of the lower federal courts is based on the theory that the evidence is excluded to provide a remedy for a wrong done to the defendant, and that accordingly, if the defendant has not been wronged he is entitled to no remedy. Connolly v. Medalie, supra, 58 F.2d 629, 630. In adopting the exclusionary rule, however, this court recognized that it could not be justified on that theory, People v. Cahan, 44 Cal. 2d 434, 443, 282 P.2d 905, and based its decision on the ground that "other remedies have completely failed to secure compliance with the constitutional provisions on the part of police officers with the attendant result that the courts under the old rule have been constantly required to participate in, and in effect condone, the lawless activities of law enforcement officers." 44 Cal. 2d at page 445, 282 P.2d at page 911. This result occurs whenever the government is allowed to profit by its own wrong by basing a conviction on illegally obtained evidence, and if law enforcement officers are allowed to evade the exclusionary rule by obtaining evidence in violation of the rights of third parties, its deterrent effect is to that extent nullified. Moreover, such a limitation virtually invites law enforcement officers to violate the rights of third parties and to trade the escape of a criminal whose rights are violated for the conviction of others by the use of the evidence illegally obtained against them.

[1] The United States Supreme Court has clearly recognized that the purpose of the exclusionary rule is not to provide redress or punishment for a past wrong, but to deter lawless enforcement of the law. "The Government cannot violate the Fourth Amendment * * * and use the fruits of such unlawful conduct to secure a conviction. [Citation.] Nor can the Government make indirect use of such evidence for its case [citation], or support a conviction on evidence obtained through leads from the unlawfully obtained evidence. [Citation.] All these methods are outlawed, and convictions obtained by means of them are invalidated, because they encourage the kind of society that is obnoxious to free men." Walder v. United States, 347 U.S. 62, 64-65, 74 S.Ct. 354, 356, 98 L.Ed. 503; see also, United States v. Mitchell, 322 U.S. 65, 70-71, 64 S.Ct. 896, 88 L.Ed. 1140. In McDonald v. United States, 335 U.S. 451, 456, 69 S.Ct. 191, 93 L.Ed. 153, it gave effect to this policy by reversing the conviction of both defendants although only the rights of one had been violated. It pointed out that had the evidence been returned to the defendant from whom it was illegally taken, it would not have been available for use against the other defendant, and held therefore that its admission was prejudicial as to both. (See also, Anderson v. United States, 318 U.S. 350, 356-357, 63 S.Ct. 599, 87 L.Ed. 829; Silverthorne Lumber Co. v. United States, 251 U.S. 385, 392, 40 S.Ct. 182, 64 L.Ed. 319; United States v. Thomson, 7 Cir., 113 F.2d 643, 646, 129 A.L.R. 1291; United States v. Haupt, 7 Cir., 136 F.2d 661, 672.) It is true that in the McDonald case a pretrial motion for the return of the evidence by the defendant whose rights were violated had been erroneously denied. There is no basis for concluding, however, that a defendant whose rights have not been violated should have standing to challenge a pretrial ruling against his codefendant, if he has no standing to challenge the legality of the original seizure. In either situation his right to object to the use of the evidence must rest, not on a violation of his own constitutional rights, but on the ground that the government must not be allowed to profit by its own wrong and thus encouraged in the lawless enforcement of the law.

[2] Since all of the reasons that compelled us to adopt the exclusionary rule are applicable whenever evidence is obtained in violation of constitutional guarantees, such evidence is inadmissible whether or not it was obtained in violation of the particular defendant's constitutional rights. Accordingly, it must be determined whether the evidence was illegally obtained in this case.

Defendant contends that on each occasion the officers' entry into the premises was illegal and therefore the officers cannot justify the arrests, searches, or seizures by any observations made by them thereafter. (See Johnson v. United States, 333 U.S. 10, 16-17, 68 S.Ct. 367, 92 L.Ed. 436.)

[3] On the first occasion one of the officers looked through a mail chute in the door and determined that defendant was inside. He then knocked and identified himself, "and the defendant came and opened the door and let the three of us in." In this case, as in People v. Michael, Cal.Sup., 290 P.2d 852, there is no evidence that the officers demanded that the door be opened or that they be admitted, and as we pointed out in that case, "it is not unreasonable for officers to seek interviews with suspects or witnesses or to call upon them at their homes for such purposes." Similarly, it is not unreasonable for officers to make such calls at business premises, and on the record before us, the officer's testimony before the magistrate supports the conclusion that the entry into the office was made with defendant's consent. Once the officers had gained admittance to the office, they had reasonable cause to believe that a public offense was being committed by defendant in their presence. The telephones, tables, blackboards, chalk, scratch sheet, and the wet rag are all innocent when considered separately. Together, however, they constituted the usual paraphernalia of a "relay spot," and the officers were reasonably justified in concluding that defendant was occupying the premises for the purposes of bookmaking in violation of Penal Code section 337a(2). Defendant's arrest was therefore lawful under subdivision 1 of Penal Code section 836, Coverstone v. Davies, 38 Cal.2d 315, 320-321, 239 P.2d 876, and cases cited, and it is immaterial that the seizure of the paraphernalia used in the commission of the crime may have preceded rather than followed the arrest. People v. Simon, Cal. Sup., 290 P.2d 531.

On the second occasion, six days later, the same officers looked through the rear window of another small office building. A blackboard, chalk, and a rag were visible, and the door was barricaded by two two-by-twelve planks. Although it does not appear that the officers observed telephones or a scratch sheet from the window, the presence of the other paraphernalia together with barricades similar to those found at the time of the first arrest justified their conclusion that these premises were also a "relay spot." Moreover, since the barricades were in place, they could reasonably infer that someone was present and that an offense was therefore being committed in their presence.

[4, 5] Since looking through a window does not constitute an unreasonable search, Safarik v. United States, 8 Cir., 62 F.2d 892, 895; Smith v. United States, 4 Cir., 2 F.2d 715, 716; United States v. Strickland, D.C., 62 F.Supp. 468, 471; State v. Hawkins, 362 Mo. 152, 240 S.W.2d 688, 692-693; People v. Exum, 382 Ill. 204, 47 N.E.2d 56, 59; see also, United States v. Lee, 274 U.S. 559, 563, 47 S.Ct. 746, 71 L.Ed. 1202, the officers were entitled to act upon what they saw and arrest defendant. Penal Code § 836(1); Coverstone v. Davies, supra, 38 Cal.2d 315, 320-321, 239 P.2d 876.

[6] Defendant contends, however, that the officer's entry through the window was unlawful and that any evidence obtained thereafter is therefore inadmissible. Section 844 of the Penal Code provides that "To make an arrest, a private person, if the offense be a felony, and in all cases a peace-officer, may break open the door or window of the house in which the person to be arrested is, or in which they have reasonable grounds for believing him to be, after having demanded admittance and explained the purpose for which admittance is desired." This section was substantially complied with in this case. The officer identified himself and asked defendant to open the door. Since he had arrested defendant six days before under similar circumstances and since defendant appeared to be committing an offense in his presence, "the purpose for which admittance [was] desired" was reasonably apparent, and it was unnecessary expressly to inform defendant of the intention to make an arrest. People v. Pool, 27 Cal. 572, 576-580; People v. Young, 136 Cal.App. 699, 705, 29 P.2d 440; Allen v. McCoy, 135 Cal.App. 500, 508-509, 27 P.2d 423, 28 P.2d 56; Penal Code § 841; see, Restatement, Torts, § 128, comment f. Moreover, even if it is assumed that raising the window was unlawful, on the ground that it occurred before the request for admittance, such illegality, if any, is immaterial in this case. Before the window was opened the officers had grounds for making an arrest, and once their demand for admittance was refused, they were entitled to enter through the window. Under these circumstances, the fact that one of the officers opened the window and then spoke to defendant rather than shouting through it or the door, was entirely unrelated and collateral to the entry and to the securing of the evidence to which defendant objects, and it could not therefore render that evidence inadmissible. People v. Boyles, Cal.Sup., 290 P.2d 535 and cases cited.

The order is reversed.

GIBSON, C. J., and SHENK, CARTER, SCHAUER and SPENCE, JJ., and McCOMB, J. pro tem., concur.

45 Cal.2d 729

CITY OF OXNARD, a municipal corporation, Petitioner,
v.

Ethel DALE, as City Clerk of the City of Oxnard, California, and Wm. H. Groff, as City Treasurer of the City of Oxnard, California, Respondents.

L. A. 23700.

Supreme Court of California.
In Bank.

Dec. 9, 1955.

Petition for writ of mandamus to compel issuance of municipal revenue bonds. The Supreme Court, Gibson, C. J., held that where bond proceeds were to be used to expand existing sewer system and bonds pledged all revenues from such system for payment of interest and principal, such bonds did not violate constitutional provision prohibiting municipality from incurring indebtedness in any year in excess of income without a vote of two-thirds of the electors.

Peremptory writ of mandate issued as prayed.

Opinion, 286 P.2d 491, vacated.

1. Mandamus ⇨103

Mandamus is an appropriate remedy to compel officers of municipal corporation to sign revenue bonds, if proposed bond issue meets the requirements of the law, since acts demanded are ministerial duties. West's Ann.Gov.Code, § 54300 et seq.

2. Municipal Corporations ⇨864(4)

A constitutional provision prohibiting municipality from incurring any indebtedness in any year in excess of its revenue for such period without vote of two-thirds of the electors is not violated by revenue bonds or other obligations which are payable solely from a special fund, provided that governmental body is not liable to maintain the special fund out of its general revenue, or by tax levies should special fund prove insufficient. West's Ann.Const. art. 11, § 18.

3. Municipal Corporations ⇨864(4)

Where city planned to expand existing sewer system through issuance of bonds which would be serviced by entire revenue from such system, fact that city formerly used such revenue to service general bonds was immaterial on question of whether new bond issue payable from said revenue in priority to general bonds would violate constitutional provision respecting debt limitation. West's Ann.Const. art. 11, § 18.

4. Municipal Corporations ⇨864(4)

Revenue bonds authorized by electors and city council resolution, and which were to be serviced and redeemed solely from sewer system revenues, did not constitute an indebtedness or liability within constitutional limitation and were valid. West's Ann.Gov.Code, §§ 54300 et seq., 54386; West's Ann.Const. art. 11, § 18.

Joseph W. Goss, City Atty., Oxnard, O'Melveny & Myers, James L. Beebe and James W. Beebe, Los Angeles, for petitioner.

William A. Reppy and F. Gile Tiffany, Jr., Oxnard, for respondents.

GIBSON, Chief Justice.

[1] Petitioner, a municipal corporation of the sixth class, seeks a writ of mandate requiring respondent city treasurer to sign, and respondent city clerk to countersign, certain revenue bonds which the city proposes to issue pursuant to the Revenue Bond Law of 1941. Gov.Code, § 54300 et seq. Mandamus is, of course, an appropriate remedy to compel respondents to sign the bonds, if the proposed issue meets the requirements of the law, since the acts demanded are ministerial duties. Cf. City of Fairfield v. Hutcheon, 33 Cal.2d 475, 202 P.2d 745; California Toll Bridge Authority v. Kelly, 218 Cal. 7, 21 P.2d 425.

The sole question presented is whether the proposed bonds, and the statute under which they were authorized by the voters and the city council, are contrary to section 18 of article XI of the California Constitution, which provides, insofar as pertinent here: "No county, city, town, township, board of education, or school district, shall incur any indebtedness or liability in any manner or for any purpose exceeding in any year the income and revenue provided for such year, without the assent of two-thirds of the qualified electors thereof, voting at an election to be held for that purpose, nor unless before or at the time of incurring such indebtedness provision shall be made for the collection of an annual tax sufficient to pay the interest on such indebtedness as it falls due, and also provision to constitute a sinking fund for the payment of the principal thereof * * *."

The city has owned a sanitary sewer system since 1905. The system and its additions and improvements were financed largely by the issuance of general obligation bonds, of which a total amounting to $795,200 remains outstanding and unpaid. Charges for use of the sewer system were first imposed in 1946, and since that time all expenses of operation and maintenance have been paid from sewer revenues. The revenues have been used, further, to pay part of the interest and principal on general obligation sewer bonds issued in 1949, but the city does not presently intend to continue to apply sewer revenues toward the retirement of these bonds.

A treatment plant, financed by a portion of the general obligation bonds referred to above, is now being constructed, and the city proposes to construct interceptor sewers to transport sewage to the treatment plant. Pursuant to the Revenue Bond Law of 1941 the city council, in March 1954, called a special election to submit to the voters the issuance of sewer revenue bonds in the amount of $450,000 to finance the construction of the interceptor sewers. It was specified that the bonds were to be payable exclusively from the revenues of the entire sewer system of the city, together with all additions and improvements thereafter made, and that the bonds were not to be secured by the taxing power of the city. The Revenue Bond Law of 1941 requires authorization of such bonds by a majority vote, Gov.Code, § 54386, and, since the election was called pursuant to that statute, it may be inferred that the bond measure was submitted to the voters upon the theory that only a majority vote was required. The bonds were approved at the ensuing election.

Subsequently the city council adopted a resolution authorizing the proposed bonds in accordance with the measure submitted to the voters. The resolution recites that issuance of the bonds was approved by more than a majority of the voters; that they are to be issued pursuant to the Revenue Bond Law of 1941 and are to be secured by a pledge and lien upon, and payable solely from, the gross revenues of the entire sewer system, including extensions later constructed; that the bonds are not a debt of the city; and that the bondholders cannot compel the exercise of the taxing power of the city or the forfeiture of any of its property.

The resolution further provides that the city is to covenant, among other things, that it will operate the system in an efficient manner and will prescribe sufficient charges for the services of the system to pay interest and principal on the bonds and the expenses of operation. Revenues are to be used, first, for payment of principal and interest on the bonds and then for current expenses of the system. Surplus funds can be invested or used to redeem the proposed bonds and, under some circumstances, may be used for other sewer purposes, including payment of principal and interest of general obligation bonds of the city issued for sewer purposes. No claim is made that the proposed bonds will in any way vary from the requirements of the Revenue Bond Law of 1941. Although it is not specifically alleged that the issuance of the proposed bonds, if considered as a debt of the city, will create an indebtedness in any year in excess of the income of the city for such year within the meaning of section 18 of article XI, this appears to be conceded and, further, may be inferred from the recital in the resolution authorizing the bonds that funds must be provided for the purpose of constructing the interceptor sewers.

[2] It is settled in California and recognized in almost all of the other states that, as a general rule, a constitutional provision such as section 18 of article XI is not violated by revenue bonds or other obligations which are payable solely from a special fund, provided the governmental body is not liable to maintain the special fund out of its general funds, or by tax levies, should the special fund prove insufficient. Department of Water and Power of City of Los Angeles v. Vroman, 218 Cal. 206, 216 et seq., 22 P.2d 698; California Toll Bridge Authority v. Kelly, 218 Cal. 7, 10 et seq., 21 P.2d 425; California Toll Bridge Authority v. Wentworth, 212 Cal. 298, 302 et seq., 298 P. 485 (discussing many cases from other jurisdictions); Shelton v. City of Los Angeles, 206 Cal. 544, 548 et seq., 275 P. 421; see Garrett v. Swanton, 216 Cal. 220, 227 et seq., 13 P. 2d 725; 38 Am.Jur. 150 et seq. As pointed out in the case of California Toll Bridge Authority v. Wentworth, supra, 212 Cal. at page 302, 298 P. at page 486, such an obligation is not considered to be an indebtedness or liability of the political subdivision or agency issuing the bonds, within the meaning of the constitutional limitation.

The cases in California are not entirely clear as to the extent of the operation of the special fund doctrine, and there is a conflict of authority on the subject in other states. Some of the courts in other jurisdictions have held that revenue bonds payable solely from a special fund will not be free from the constitutional limitation unless the fund is restricted to the revenues from the particular improvement which is to be constructed out of the proceeds of the bonds in question, but under the prevailing view the doctrine may be applicable where the revenues of the entire existing system, as well as those of the proposed improvement, are pledged. See Joint Report of Committees of the American Society of Civil Engineers, the Section of Municipal Law of the American Bar Association and others (1951), 12 Ohio State L.J. 147, 182 et seq.; 38 Am.Jur. 155-156.

The first case in California discussing this problem is Garrett v. Swanton, 216 Cal. 220, 13 P.2d 725, where a city agreed to purchase a pumping plant on a conditional sales plan, with payments to be in installments over a period of years out of a special fund maintained by profits from the entire water system. There, as here, the city had previously issued general obligation bonds to finance the system, and, by ordinance, water revenues were being used for the payments on the bonds. It was held that the special fund doctrine was inapplicable under the facts of the case and that the contract was in violation of section 18 of article XI. The court said that the contract indirectly created a general liability of the city, and it reasoned that any deficiency of revenue would require the taxpayers to contribute to the water fund, from which both the contract and the bonds were being paid, in order to make the payments on the bonds. The court also stated, in effect, that the possibility of a forfeiture under the conditional sales contract might make it necessary for the city, if it wished to protect its investment, to pay contract installments from general funds and that the creation of this inducement amounted to a violation of the Constitution. Cf. In re City and County of San Francisco, 195 Cal. 426, 438-442, 233 P. 965; Chester v. Carmichael, 187 Cal. 287, 291-294, 201 P. 925. In the present case, however, the resolution authorizing the proposed revenue bonds specifies that the bondholders shall have no right to cause the forfeiture of any property of the city.

Two subsequent decisions of this court, while distinguishing the Garrett case on its facts, have departed from its reasoning insofar as it may be applicable here. Department of Water and Power of City of Los Angeles v. Vroman, 218 Cal. 206, 22 P.2d 698; California Toll Bridge Authority v. Kelly, 218 Cal. 7, 21 P.2d 425; see also City of Glendale v. Chapman, 108 Cal.App. 2d 74, 80 et seq., 238 P.2d 162; cf. Board of State Harbor Com'rs for San Francisco Harbor v. Dean, 118 Cal.App.2d 628, 632 et seq., 258 P.2d 590. The Kelly case involved revenue bonds authorized by the toll bridge authority and payable out of a special fund consisting of revenues from the operation of a bridge to be built from the proceeds of the bonds. The director of public works refused to sign the bonds upon the theory that they were rendered invalid by certain legislation adopted after they had been judicially approved. This legislation contemplated the appropriation of money, for purposes of building approaches and maintaining and operating the bridge, from existing special funds for highway construction and maintenance. 218 Cal. at page 14, 21 P.2d at page 427. In holding that the plan did not violate section 1 of article XVI of the Constitution, prohibiting creation by the state of debts or liabilities in excess of $300,000 without a vote of the people, this court rejected contentions that the practical and ultimate result of the legislation would be to convert the bonds into general obligations of the state and that the state, in effect, would be compelled to protect its property by general fund expenditures. After pointing out that payment of the bonds was secured only by the revenues collected from the particular bridge for which the bonds were issued, the court said, "While it may be to the interests of the state, in the event of necessity, to make contribution for the preservation of the bridge, the better to conserve the amount of funds it has spent in assisting the consummation of the enterprise, it does not follow that the bonds themselves will be thereby converted into a liability against the general funds of the state." 218 Cal. at page 13, 21 P.2d at page 427. Further, the court said that even if the statutes had purported to pledge the construction and maintenance funds for operation and maintenance of the bridge, such action would not constitute the pledging of the credit of the state because the construction and maintenance funds were special funds. 218 Cal. at page 14, 21 P.2d at page 427.

The language in the Kelly case, 218 Cal. 7, 13-14, 21 P.2d 425, appears to be inconsistent with the position taken in the Garrett case, 216 Cal. 220, 13 P.2d 725, to the effect that the Constitution was violated because an economic or practical necessity might arise which would require the taxpayers to contribute money in order to protect the city's investment if the special fund should prove to be inadequate. Moreover, there is nothing in section 18 of article XI which suggests that the economic advisability of making such an expenditure is tantamount to an "indebtedness or liability." The quoted words obviously refer only to a legally enforceable obligation, and where, as here, the terms of the bonds expressly limit liability to the revenues of the system; there can be no such obligation to the bondholders upon the part of the city or its taxpayers, because the bonds provide in effect that the bondholders assume the risk that the system may prove unable to produce sufficient revenue. The covenant of the city to impose charges for sewer services adequate to cover bond payments and expenses of the system does not amount to a guarantee that the system will be successful, and the covenant is not contrary to section 18 of article XI because it does not create a financial liability, measurable in terms of the city's annual income. City of Glendale v. Chapman, 108 Cal.App.2d 74, 80, 238 P.2d 162; cf. Shelton v. City of Los Angeles, 206 Cal. 544, 551-552, 275 P. 421.

In the Vroman case, 218 Cal. 206, 22 P. 2d 698, the Department of Water and Power of the City of Los Angeles proposed to enter into a contract with the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to borrow money to finance the construction of lines and other facilities to transmit electricity from the Colorado River, and, under the contract, the loan was to be repaid solely from the revenues of the entire electric system of the city. General obligation bonds had previously been issued by the city, and, as in the present case, the revenues of the system had been used to meet payments of interest and principal due on the general bonds. It was held that the contract was valid and that the loan was in no sense an obligation of the city within the meaning of section 18 of article XI. The objecting party urged that the loan was to be repaid out of revenues from the existing electrical system as well as out of revenues from the proposed transmission lines and that for this reason the Constitution was violated. The court, however, stated that it attached no particular significance to the objection and added that if the argument had any importance it was in connection with another objection to the effect that the fund might prove to be inadequate and the taxpayers might be required to meet the sums to become due on the general bonds theretofore issued. 218 Cal. at pages 218-219, 22 P.2d at page 704. With respect to the latter contention the court stated that if the funds of the department should become depleted, the taxpayers might be called upon to provide revenues to make payments on the general bonds, but that "the electors in authorizing those bonds bound the taxpayers constitutionally to meet those payments, and nothing has occurred since the issuance thereof which would relieve them of that burden * * *."

[3] It follows that, in the present case, the former practice of the city to use the revenues from the sewer system to make payments on the general obligation bonds has no bearing upon the question whether the incurring of a subsequent obligation to be paid solely from those revenues, in priority to the general bonds, will violate section 18 of article XI. It may be noted, in this connection, that in the absence of some specific statutory or contractual provision the city could properly reduce or discontinue the imposition of charges for use of its sewer system and arrange for the assessment of taxes to make the payments on its general bonds. Since the city may terminate use of sewer revenues as a means of servicing the general bonds, it is, of course, immaterial that the city, at the same time, pledges the revenues for the payments to be made on an issue of revenue bonds.

[4] As we have seen, an obligation which is payable out of a special fund is not an "indebtedness or liability" of a governmental body within the meaning of section 18 of article XI of the Constitution if the governmental body is not required to pay the obligation from its general funds, or by exercise of its powers of taxation, should the special fund prove insufficient. Respondents concede, as they must, that the special fund doctrine would be applicable and controlling here if the revenues pledged to secure the proposed bonds were secured by the revenues to be produced from the interceptor lines alone. Insofar as concerns the constitutional limitation, we can see no sound reason to distinguish between that situation and the one presented here where the pledge consists of the revenues of the entire system and where those revenues had formerly been used to make payments on the city's general obligation bonds. Garrett v. Swanton, 216 Cal. 220, 13 P.2d 725, is overruled to the extent that it is inconsistent with the views expressed herein. Accordingly, the proposed bonds, and the statutes under which they were authorized, are valid, and respondents are required to sign the bonds as demanded by petitioner.

It is ordered that a peremptory writ of mandate issue as prayed.

SHENK, CARTER, TRAYNOR,
SCHAUER and SPENCE, JJ., and McCOMB, J. pro tem., concur.

Jesse R. HUDSON, Plaintiff and Appellant,
v.

Patricia Y. RAINVILLE, Defendant and
Respondent.*

Civ. 8580.

District Court of Appeal, Third District,
California.

Dec. 8, 1955.

Rehearing Denied Jan. 6, 1956.

Hearing Granted Feb. 1, 1956.

Action by pedestrian against motorist for injuries sustained when he was struck by her automobile while walking along road pulling a toy wagon loaded with a bale of hay. The Superior Court, Sutter County, Arthur Coats, J., after a jury verdict for motorist entered judgment for her and pedestrian appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Van Dyke, P. J., held, inter alia, that evidence established as a matter of law that motorist was negligent in looking down road and not seeing pedestrian who was in plain sight, and that such negligence was a proximate cause of accident.

Judgment reversed.

1. Automobiles ⇨160(3), 201(1)

Where motorist looked down road, but did not see pedestrian who was in plain sight walking along the road pulling a toy wagon loaded with a bale of hay, and struck him, she was negligent, and such negligence was a proximate cause of the accident.

2. Automobiles ⇨160(1), 218

Where pedestrian assumed a position, and was progressing along a proper part of a street in a residence zone, he was not compelled to give way to automobile traffic, it was duty of vehicular traffic to recognize his right to be on and progress along the street and failure to do so was a violation of law.

3. Automobiles ⇨218

Municipal Corporations ⇨705(10)

The law does not set arbitrary standards as to what constitutes due care for his own concern for a pedestrian walking along a street and does not say pedestrian must look back, nor that he need never do so, but it requires him to exercise due care and this means that he must use his faculties of sight and hearing for that purpose whenever a reasonably prudent man would do so.

4. Automobiles ⇨206, 218

Municipal Corporations ⇨705(10)

Pedestrian who assumed a position on, and progressed along, a proper part of a street in a residence zone had a right to be where he was and to travel as he traveled, and he had a right to assume, until circumstances indicated otherwise, that vehicular traffic upon the street would respect his right.

5. Automobiles ⇨245(72)

Municipal Corporations ⇨706(7)

A pedestrian may go upon the street, but whether or not, under the circumstances then existing, his conduct evinces a proper care for his own safety is generally a question of fact for the jury to determine.

6. Automobiles ⇨245(72)

In action by pedestrian against motorist for injuries sustained when he was struck by her automobile while walking along road pulling a toy wagon loaded with a bale of hay, evidence presented a question for the jury as to whether pedestrian was negligent in proceeding on the part of the street used for vehicular traffic and traversing it without looking back for a length of time sufficient for traffic coming from his rear to arrive at point where he was struck.

Clewe & Blade, Oroville, for appellant.
Peters & Peters, Chico, for respondent.

VAN DYKE, Presiding Justice.

Plaintiff-appellant brought this action to recover damages for personal injuries which he claimed to have suffered as a result of respondent's negligence. A jury returned a verdict in favor of respondent and from the judgment which followed this appeal is taken.

The accident occurred on one of the main streets in Yuba City which runs generally east and west. Appellant lives on the north side of the street about 300 feet east of the point on the street where the accident occurred. The accident occurred in a residential zone as defined in the Vehicle Code, § 90. The street past appellant's house is paved with concrete and is 56½ feet wide from curb to curb. Two hundred sixty-six and one-half feet west of the path which leads from appellant's house to the sidewalk the concrete pavement abruptly narrows down to twenty-five feet in width with earth and rock shoulders on either side of the strip. There is a concrete sidewalk on the north side of the street from a point east of appellant's home to a point about sixty feet west of it. The accident occurred a few minutes after 5 o'clock on the afternoon of the 6th of March. It had been a cloudy day with intermittent rain and sunshine and the street pavement was wet. At about 5 o'clock the sun was low on the horizon to the west, its elevation being slightly over eleven degrees above horizontal. For several years before the accident appellant had kept horses in a fenced pasture just west of his home and on his side of the street. It had been his custom to take baled hay down to the pasture to feed his horses and he hauled the hay on a little toy red wagon that belonged to his small son. On the day of the accident, and shortly before 5 o'clock P.M., he took a bale of hay out of his garage, put it on the little wagon and started for the pasture, pulling the wagon behind him. He followed the sidewalk on the north side of the street to the end thereof, and then went onto the street and proceeded along near the curb for about 200 feet to the point where the street pavement narrowed. Here he turned left and followed the pavement edge to the point where the narrow pavement began. There he looked in both directions. He saw a car approaching from the west several hundred feet away but saw nothing coming from the east. He turned right and proceeded to walk west, all four wheels of the wagon on the north edge of the 25-foot pavement. When he had gone about 33 feet west from the beginning of the narrow pavement he was struck from the rear by the automobile driven by respondent. As he walked along the narrow pavement he had not looked back. Respondent had entered the street at a point east of appellant's home and proceeded west. Opposite appellant's home she saw two automobiles double parked along the curb. She was driving about 30 miles an hour. As she came up to the two parked cars she saw a car coming from the west. She swerved left to go around the parked cars and then pulled her car back to her own side of the road to avoid the oncoming car. During the moments preceding the accident the only vehicles moving on the street were the car coming from the west and the car driven by respondent. The car coming from the west was so far west of the point of the accident that its driver was able to see the collision as it happened. As respondent came close to the point where the pavement narrowed the sun suddenly emerged from behind the clouds and its direct light and its reflected light from the wet pavement blinded her. She immediately "slammed" on her brakes because she could not see and threw her hand up in front of her face. At nearly the same time she struck the appellant. She had not seen him until the moment she struck him. At the time of the impact she was still traveling about 30 miles per hour. We think it best at this point to quote her testimony. It was as follows:

* Opinion vacated 297 P.2d 434.

"Q. * * * In addition to looking at this other car [the car coming from the west], whatever position it was, you then say that after you got on to your side of the street, you looked in the direction of your path? A. That's right.

"Q. Did you continue to look in that direction at all times from the time you got back to your side until the accident occurred? A. That's right.

"Q. You didn't look off to the right? A. No, there is nothing to see off to the right.

"Q. And you didn't look off to the left? A. No.

"Q. You didn't look at anything inside your car? A. No.

"Q. Nothing distracted your attention inside the car that made you take your eyes from the road? A. Not a bit.

"Q. And I understood you to say that as you got up to the point where Mr. Hudson has marked, or perhaps a few feet back, from the point where the accident occurred, the events that took place were like this, the sun came out from behind a cloud and had a blinding effect on your eyes? A. That's right.

"Q. You threw up your hand, applied the brakes and then you saw Mr. Hudson and your car struck him, and in that order? A. Yes.

"Q. And almost as fast as I have said it, is that right, or perhaps faster? A. Faster.

"Q. So that before the sun came out, the condition that it cause of tending to blind you was not in that condition until it did come out, was it? A. Didn't seem so.

"Q. Well, so that your ability to see was impaired because the sun came out, is that right? A. It seemed that way, yes.

"Q. And yet after the sun came out, you didn't see Mr. Hudson? A. Oh, when I was right on top of him. * * *

"Q. As you drove along that day, Miss Rainville, were you conscious of any obstruction in your windshield as far as any water or dirt or anything to impair your sight? A. No, I don't remember it being that way."

[1-2] Appellant asked the court to give the following instruction: "You are instructed that the evidence in this case has established as a matter of law that the defendant was guilty of negligence and that such negligence was the proximate cause of the accident here in question." The court refused, and on the contrary and under appropriate instructions submitted the issue of respondent's negligence to the jury. This was error. The accident occurred in a residence zone. Appellant had a right to be where he was. He was not compelled to give way to automobile traffic when he had assumed a position on, and was progressing along, a proper part of the street. On the contrary, it was the duty of vehicular traffic to recognize his right to be where he was and to progress as he did and the failure to do so was a violation of law.

We are not for the moment concerned with the contention of respondent that appellant was guilty of contributory negligence. We are concerned only with the conduct of respondent. Her own testimony discloses her negligence as a matter of law. For about 250 feet as she went westerly on the street toward appellant at 30 miles per hour, she was looking toward him with nothing to interfere with her vision. She saw the automobile approaching from the west farther down the street. She did not see the eye-catching spectacle of appellant drawing a toy red wagon loaded with a bale of hay, although these objects were all clearly visible to her. She continued on her unheeding way without diminution of her speed and without seeing these objects until so close thereto that, whether or not the sun came out and blinded her, she could not have stopped without running appellant down. Respondent's being blinded by the sudden emergence of the sun from behind the clouds is clearly shown by respondent's own testimony to have had nothing to do, as a causative factor, with the happening of the accident. She had not seen appellant up to that time, although he had been plainly within the range of her vision for 250 feet or thereabouts. When the sun blinded her she slammed on her brakes, as she put it, and she stopped, but not because she had seen the appellant. She did not see him until the very moment she struck him. If she had seen him when the sun blinded her she could not have stopped any more than she was able to stop when she put on her brakes because of the emergence of the sun. At that moment respondent was within less than one second of the point of impact. Perhaps if the sun had not blinded her she might have seen the appellant before she hit him and might have taken some evasive action even though she could not stop. But it was her neglect which placed her in that position, and if the sun's rays prevented her from taking evasive action, that does not excuse her from bringing herself into a point where such action became necessary. The jury should have been instructed by the court that the negligence of respondent had been shown as a matter of law, and that equally as a matter of law it had been shown that such negligence was a proximate cause of the accident. Huetter v. Andrews, 91 Cal. App.2d 142, 204 P.2d 655.

[3-6] Appellant contends that it appeared from the evidence as a matter of law that he had not been guilty of contributory negligence, and that therefore this court should so declare and return the cause for further trial upon the issue of damages alone. We cannot agree with this contention. To be sure, since he was in a residence zone, appellant had a right to be on the street, where he was, and to travel as he traveled and he had a right to assume, until circumstances indicated otherwise, that other vehicular traffic upon the street would respect his right. But it appears that, although, according to his own testimony which is not in dispute, he looked behind him before going onto the narrow pavement, and though he could elect to travel there rather than on the shoulder, and though when he looked back there was no vehicular traffic approaching him from the east which was visible, nevertheless it equally appears that he knew he was going on a part of the street used for vehicular traffic, and that at that hour of the day traffic was generally heavy there, even though at that particular moment of time only one car to his knowledge was using that part of the street, which car was coming from the west. The jury could conclude that in entering upon the bottleneck of the narrow pavement and traversing it without looking back for a length of time sufficient for traffic coming from the east to arrive where he was, he was negligent in failing to exercise proper care for his own safety. The law does not set arbitrary standards as to what constitutes due care for his own concern when a pedestrian is situated as was appellant. It does not say he must look back, nor that he need never do so. It requires him to exercise due care, and this means that he must use his faculties of sight and hearing for that purpose whenever a reasonably prudent man would do so. He may go upon the street, but whether or not, under the circumstances then existing, his conduct evinces a proper care for his own safety is generally a question of fact for the jury to determine and we think it was in this case.

The judgment appealed from is reversed, with instructions to the trial court to retry the case upon the issues of contributory negligence and of damages.

PEEK and SCHOTTKY, JJ., concur.

137 Cal.App.2d 636

Ward CHARTER and Joseph R. Schleich, Plaintiffs and Appellants,

v.

Joseph Lawrence OLSON and Birdelle
Olson, Defendants and Respondents.

Civ. 8644.

District Court of Appeal, Third District,
California.

Dec. 8, 1955.

'Action for wrongful death and for damage to automobile arising from intersectional collision between deceased motorist who was traveling on inferior road and driver traveling on arterial highway during fog. The Superior Court, Sonoma County, Arthur Coats, J., entered judgment for driver and deceased's husband and vehicle owner appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Schottky, J., held that there was sufficient evidence to create a conflict with presumption of due care on part of deceased so as to make an issue of her contributory negligence for the jury, and evidence presented jury issues as to deceased's contributory negligence and alleged negligence of motorist as to speed, lookout and failure to sound horn or to avoid accident.

Affirmed.

1. Automobiles Ⓒ245(67)

In action for wrongful death of automobile driver, evidence of deceased's conduct which is sufficient to support a finding of contributory negligence, creates a conflict with the presumption of due care on part of deceased, and determination of contributory negligence issue is for the jury.

2. Automobiles ⇨245(80)

In action for wrongful death of deceased arising from intersectional collision between deceased who was traveling on inferior road and motorist who was traveling on arterial highway during fog, evidence was sufficient to create a conflict with presumption of due care on part of deceased and to present a jury issue as to deceased's contributory negligence. Vehicle Code, §§ 510, 552.

3. Appeal and Error ⇨930(1)

Every favorable inference and presumption which may fairly be deduced from the evidence should be resolved in favor of the prevailing party on appeal.

4. Automobiles ⇨245(39, 44, 80)

In action for wrongful death of deceased and for damage to automobile arising from intersectional collision between deceased who was traveling on inferior road and motorist traveling on arterial highway during fog, evidence presented jury issues as to deceased's contributory negligence and as to alleged negligence of motorist as to lookout, speed, failure to sound horn or avoid accident.

5. Appeal and Error ⇨1060(1)

In action for wrongful death of deceased motorist, statement of defendant's counsel in his argument to jury referring to fact that plaintiff's insurance adjuster had taken a statement from defendant, did not constitute prejudicial misconduct, where plaintiff's counsel first brought out the fact of insurance adjuster's statement on cross-examination of defendant.

Cooney & Littlejohn, Colusa, for appellants.

Russell A. Harris, Sacramento, for respondents.

SCHOTTKY, Justice.

Plaintiff Ward Charter filed an action to recover damages for the death of his wife, Maud M. Charter, and plaintiff Joseph R. Schleich joined in said action to recover $200 for the destruction of his automobile which was being operated by the deceased at the time of the accident upon which the complaint was based. Plaintiffs' complaint alleged the negligence of the defendants in the operation of the defendants' automobile, and the answer of the defendants denied negligence and damage and alleged contributory negligence on the part of the decedent. Judgment was entered in favor of defendants in accordance with the verdict of the jury, plaintiffs' motion for a new trial was denied, and they have appealed from the judgment.

Appellants make two major contentions upon this appeal: Insufficiency of the evidence as a matter of law to sustain the verdict, and prejudicial misconduct on the part of defendants' counsel.

Before discussing these contentions we deem it proper to quote what we said in Scott v. Nevis, 120 Cal.App.2d 619, at page 621, 261 P.2d 797, at page 798:

"It is a rule too well established to require the citation of authorities that before an appellate tribunal is justified in reversing a judgment upon the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence, it must appear from the record that, accepting the full force of the evidence adduced, together with every inference favorable to the prevailing party which may be drawn therefrom, and excluding all evidence in conflict therewith, it still appears that the law precludes such prevailing party from recovering a judgment. The evidence must be construed most strongly against the losing party. Every favorable inference and presumption which may fairly be deduced from the evidence should be resolved in favor of the prevailing party. The prevailing party's evidence must ordinarily be accepted as true, and evidence which is contradictory must be disregarded.

"* * * [T]his familiar rule, * * * we are constrained to state, is too often disregarded by counsel who pay lip service to the rule and then proceed to argue the weight of conflicting evidence before an appellate tribunal * * *."

end of the 35-mile zone for southbound traffic.

The record shows that at the time this accident occurred, the respondents were traveling south on U. S. Highway 99W, a through highway, in their 1952 Mercury coupe, accompanied by Lawrence W. Maginnis and Darlene Maginnis, husband and wife, and David R. Lewis, en route from Milwaukie, Oregon, to El Cajon, California. They left Milwaukie about 7:00 p. m. on February 2, 1953. Respondent Olson drove 200 miles to Roseburg, Oregon, and then another passenger took the wheel and drove to Ashland, Oregon, where another passenger took over and drove to a point between Dunsmuir and Redding. Then Olson again took the wheel in the morning of February 3rd and drove to the scene of the accident which occurred about 9:45 a. m. There is testimony that while not driving during the night Olson sat on the right hand side of the front seat and dozed part of the time. There is also testimony that Olson slept in the back seat.

The accident occurred on a foggy day; estimates as to the limit of visibility vary from a minimum of 150 feet up to a maximum of 1,000 feet, and the witness who originally estimated the distance at 1,000 feet modified his opinion as to visibility the day after the accident to 600 feet.

Olson was just picking up speed after leaving the end of the 35-mile zone south of Arbuckle, and was traveling approximately 40 to 50 miles per hour when he first observed the 1937 Chevrolet driven by Mrs. Charter. The Chevrolet was just pulling onto the east edge of the pavement of Highway 99W; the front of the car was on the east edge of the pavement and the rear of the car was on the gravel, and was 60 to 75 feet away. Mr. Olson did not see the Chevrolet approach the highway as he was watching the road ahead. He did not notice the crossroad at this intersection. There was no sign warning him of the fact that he was approaching an intersection. He did not observe the Union Oil plant on his left until after the accident.

The accident occurred at the intersection of U. S. Highway 99W, a north-south through highway, with College City Road, a county road running generally east and west; the intersecting road with U. S. Highway 99W is known as College City Road east of Highway 99W and as Hillgate Road west of Highway 99W. This intersection is located south of the town of Arbuckle. A Union Oil plant is located on the northeast corner of the intersection which obstructs cars traveling west on College City Road from the vision of a driver traveling south on Highway 99W for a point until within 30 or 40 feet of the highway. There is a very slight curve in 99W from the point of the intersection to the north. The visibility is not marred by anything for at least 700 feet north of the intersection. There is a stop sign on College City Road, just east of 99W and it was customary in this community to stop at the east edge of Highway 99W before going across that highway in a westerly direction towards Hillgate Road. Along the west side of Highway 99W, 220 feet north of the center of the intersection, there is a speed limit sign indicating the

Mrs. Charter was driving appellant Schleich's car to the beauty parlor in Arbuckle, and traveled east on College City Road to Highway 99W. It was apparently her intention to cross Highway 99W and continue on down Hillgate Road to the next northbound and southbound street and make a right turn there. She was driving 10 to 15 miles per hour at the time she entered the highway and crossed in front of the approaching Olson automobile.

Upon seeing the Charter car, Olson immediately applied his brakes and his car continued straight ahead and he was still applying his brakes when the front end of the Olson car struck the right portion of the Chevrolet in the vicinity of the gas tank, just behind the right door and between that point and the rear wheel. At the time of the impact the Chevrolet car was across the southbound lane, with the front end of the Chevrolet extending west onto the gravel and Hillgate Road, and the rest of her car was occupying the southbound lane. The Mercury automobile made 60 feet of skidmarks that started north of the point of collision and extended to the point of collision and veered off in a south-westerly or westerly direction. The Charter car caught fire and was spun completely around, and then moved east along the south side of Hillgate Road a few feet and came to a stop on the southwest corner. After the impact, the rear of the Olson car swerved east and stopped, facing generally west, straddling the white center line of 99W.

Mrs. Maginnis testified that just before the accident occurred there were north-bound cars proceeding north on Highway 99W south of the intersection, and that she could see their headlights coming towards her.

The headlights of the Charter car and the parking lights of the Olson car were burning immediately after the accident. Olson did not sound his horn before the accident. He had his windshield wipers working in the fog before the accident but could not remember whether they were on and working at the time of the accident.

Mrs. Charter died three days after the accident as the result of personal injuries.

The only eyewitnesses to the accident were the occupants of the Olson automobile, although there were several arriving witnesses.

Appellants contend that Olson was negligent as a matter of law because, say appellants, he was driving at an excessive rate of speed while still within a town and while driving in fog and with limited vision, he failed to maintain a reasonable or proper lookout for approaching vehicles, he failed to keep his car under proper control while driving in fog and with limited vision, he failed to avoid the accident by turning off the highway to the left, he failed to sound his horn, and he had driven too many hours and miles without rest and was not in physical condition to be driving a car under the existing conditions.

In support of their contentions, appellants cite 6 Cal.Jur.2d, pages 665, 666, which states:

"It is the duty of a motorist to anticipate the presence of other drivers and travelers at any point in the street or highway and to keep his automobile under such control as will enable him to avoid a collision with persons using ordinary care. He must keep a proper lookout for them and, if the situation requires, slow and stop his vehicle. Where the situation so requires, he must apply his brakes or change the course of his car. He has no right to assume that the road is clear, but must at all times anticipate and expect the presence of others on the highway."

Appellants also cite Hill v. Peres, 136 Cal.App. 132, at page 137, 28 P.2d 946, at page 948, where the court said:

"* * * The driver of an automobile is bound to use reasonable care to anticipate the presence on the highway of others who have equal right to be there and the fact that his vision is temporarily interfered with, either by the glaring sun or headlights, does not relieve him from that duty."

Appellant also quotes the following from Dalzell v. County of Los Angeles, 88 Cal. App.2d 271, at page 276, 198 P.2d 554, at page 556:

"* * * In driving an automobile in fog, the driver is required to exercise a degree of care that is to be expected of an ordinarily prudent person under the same or similar circumstances. In the case of Salera v. Schroeder, 183 Minn. 478 at page 480, 237 N.W. 180, wherein the defendant was driving in fog, the court said: 'Extreme caution was required by the circumstance of the moment—a degree of caution commensurate to the danger, which was great. * * * It is but ordinary prudence to exercise a high degree of care in the presence of imminent danger, when casualty is apt to come unless much care is exerted to avoid it.' In Devoto v. United Auto Transportation Co., 128 Wash. 604, at pages 609-610, 223 P. 1050, 1052, it was said: '(T)hat in driving through a fog bank each driver must do so in a careful and prudent manner, with due regard for the safety of others, and what is careful and prudent under the partical conditions shown will usually be a question for the jury.’”

Appellants argue that accepting the facts as being true, including the testimony of Olson that visibility was 600 feet, the Charter car must have been in Olson’s direct line of vision for 600 feet in approaching the intersection, and that Olson’s failure to keep a lookout and his failure to see Mrs. Charter under the circumstances constituted negligence as a matter of law.

Appellants argue further that if Olson’s statement taken two days after the accident by an adjuster to the effect that the visibility was only 150 feet and Olson’s testimony that he was driving between 40 and 50 miles per hour is accepted, then Olson could not have seen Mrs. Charter approach Highway 99W until the last second before the accident, and he could not have stopped his car in less than 188 feet, and was, therefore, under the circumstances of visibility, violating the basic speed law of the state. Vehicle Code, sec. 510. Likewise, if his statement of visibility as being 150 feet is accepted, Mrs. Charter could not have seen him except in the last second before the accident occurred.

Appellants argue further that in the present case the record reveals that it was very foggy, yet Olson was picking up speed as he left town, and under the circumstances respondent Olson was negligent as a matter of law in picking up speed and driving at 40 to 50 miles an hour.

Respondents, in reply, cite Scott v. Nevis, supra, and discuss at length the well recognized principles as to the power of the appellate court on appeal and point out that in order for the appellants to obtain a reversal of the judgment on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence, they must show that viewing the evidence most favorably to the respondents, the respondents were negligent as a matter of law; that Mrs. Charter was free from contributory negligence as a matter of law.

Respondents argue that the evidence viewed most favorably to the respondents showed that this accident occurred approximately 220 feet south of the 35 mile per hour speed zone; that the respondents’ car was just picking up speed and traveling 40 to 50 miles per hour when Olson first observed Mrs. Charter’s car just entering the east edge of the highway, 60 to 75 feet away; that Olson then applied his brakes as hard as he could; and that the visibility was 600 feet. They contend that whether Olson was negligent under these circumstances was a question of fact which the jury decided in respondents’ favor. Furuta v. Randall, 17 Cal.App.2d 384, 62 P.2d 157; Mitchell v. Southern California Gas Co., 122 Cal.App.2d 692, 697, 265 P.2d 118.

Respondents maintain that it is a factual question for the jury as to whether Mr. Olson looked with proper care, and as to whether the Chevrolet was clearly visible so that he could have and should have seen it sooner than he did in order to have avoided the accident. They argue that the evidence warranted a finding that Mr. Olson was not negligent in failing to observe the Chevrolet sooner because of the fact that in the fog he was required to keep a careful lookout down the highway ahead; because the Union Oil plant blocked his vision of cars approaching the highway from the east until they got to a point near the easterly edge; and because there was no sign along the west edge of the highway warning Mr. Olson of a crossroad ahead, and he was unfamiliar with the fact that there was a crossroad at this point.

Respondents point out that there was testimony that there was oncoming traffic in the northbound lane, and argue that it was a question of fact whether Mr. Olson was negligent in failing to turn his car to the left to avoid this accident, and that it was also a question of fact whether Olson was too tired to be driving.

Respondents argue also that in considering section 552 of the California Vehicle Code, which regulates the conduct of drivers crossing a through highway and the conduct of drivers on a through highway approaching an intersection, the question as to whether Mrs. Charter negligently entered the highway when the respondents were approaching so closely as to constitute an immediate hazard, so that she should have yielded the right of way to the respondents, or whether the respondents should have yielded the right of way to Mrs. Charter, is not a question of law, but was a question of fact for the jury to decide.

Respondents argue further that even if it could be held that the evidence is insufficient to support the implied finding of the jury that respondents were not negligent, the verdict can still be supported on the theory that the evidence is sufficient to support the implied finding of the jury that Mrs. Charter's contributory negligence proximately caused the accident. The question then arises whether the deceased, Mrs. Charter, was free of contributory negligence as a matter of law.

Appellants, however, contend that they were entitled to the benefit of the presumption that Mrs. Charter took all necessary precautions for her own safety and that there was no evidence produced at the trial to support a finding that Mrs. Charter was guilty of contributory negligence, nor was there any evidence produced that could be weighed against the presumption of care on her part.

[1] Appellants and respondents agree that it is the law of this state that in an action for the wrongful death of an automobile driver, evidence of the decedent's conduct which is sufficient to support a finding of contributory negligence, creates a conflict with the presumption of due care on the part of the decedent, the determination of which is for the jury.

[2] We are satisfied that there is sufficient evidence in the record to create a conflict with the presumption of due care on the part of Mrs. Charter and to make the issue of contributory negligence on her part one for the jury to determine. There was evidence that the Chevrolet Mrs. Charter was driving started onto and across through Highway 99W when respondents' automobile was from 60 to 75 feet north and approaching at a rate of speed between 40 and 50 miles per hour; that the respondent Joseph Lawrence Olson then applied his brakes as hard as he could, but struck the Chevrolet just behind the right door on the right side, when that part of the Chevrolet was in the center of Olson's southbound lane. The evidence also showed that the Mercury, driven by Olson, made 60 feet of skidmarks leading up to the point of impact, and that the Chevrolet, driven by Mrs. Charter, was traveling from 10 to 15 miles per hour as it started onto and across Highway 99W. As against the presumption that Mrs. Charter exercised due care there is evidence that when the front of the Chevrolet was at the east edge of the pavement it was going 10 to 15 miles per hour; that the Chevrolet was a 1937 model automobile, with the old style gearshift; and that cars stopping to cross Highway 99W generally stopped at the east edge of the pavement. The jury could have inferred that because an automobile, especially an older one, does not start from a standing position and immediately accelerate to a speed of 10 to 15 miles per hour in a matter of a few feet, Mrs. Charter did not stop at the stop sign on the day of the accident. The jury could also have inferred from the evidence that Mrs. Charter misjudged the speed and distance of the Mercury, or that she didn't see it at all, or she would not have started onto the highway at a time when she would have to wait only a second for the Mercury to pass; that she violated section 552 of the California Vehicle Code in that she started onto the highway when the Mercury was so close as to constitute an immediate hazard; that she failed to exercise ordinary care in watching the Mercury or in looking back to the north as she got onto Highway 99W, or in stopping, swerving, or accelerating her car in order to avoid the accident.

[3,4] As hereinbefore pointed out, "every favorable inference and presumption which may fairly be deduced from the evidence should be resolved in favor of the prevailing party," and because of the evidence hereinbefore referred to and other evidence in the record, we are convinced that the questions of the negligence of respondents and the contributory negligence of the decedent were proper questions for determination by the jury. The jury was fully and correctly instructed as to the law applicable to these issues and their implied findings in favor of respondents on these issues find substantial support in the record. Appellants have made an earnest and able argument in their effort to prove their contention that the record does not sustain the judgment. If the verdict of the jury had been in favor of appellants their argument would be very helpful in pointing evidence in support of such verdict, but in view of the adverse verdict of the jury upon the issues, the testimony relied upon by appellants merely accentuates the conflict in the testimony.

Appellants' second major contention is that the statements of defendants' counsel in his argument to the jury in reference to insurance constitute prejudicial misconduct.

Upon cross-examination of Olson, appellants introduced the extrajudicial signed statement of Olson as to the condition of visibility, which was prepared by the insurance adjuster representing the insurance company for the appellant Schleich. Olson testified: "Q. Did you make the statements that are set forth in the first two paragraphs? A. Yes, I did. That is the adjusters for the other insurance." No motion was made to strike this testimony. On redirect, counsel for respondents asked the following questions: "Q. And this statement that Mr. Cooney has introduced into evidence, where was that prepared? A. Where was that prepared? Q. Yes. A. In C. C. Thompson, Adjusters, office in Sacramento. Q. And did they hold themselves out to be the insurance investigators—" Whereupon appellants' objection was sustained as to that question.

Respondents' counsel was able to bring out the fact that the persons who took this statement persuaded Olson to accompany them back to their office in Sacramento where the statement was made. The insurance point was discussed with the court in the absence of the jury twice, and the court warned that any undue attempt to emphasize insurance would be error.

In his oral argument to the jury, referring to Olson's truthfulness in testimony, respondents' counsel stated:

"And to try to refute that, ladies and gentlemen, they bring in a statement prepared by an insurance adjuster representing Mr. Schleich that was taken in Sacramento. He went all the way to Woodland and then took him back to Sacramento for the sole purpose of trying to lay a foundation so that the liability insurance carrier would not have to pay him for the damages to that automobile."

Whereupon appellants' objection was sustained and the jury was instructed to disregard the statement.

Appellants quote from Fleming v. Flick, 140 Cal.App. 14, at page 31, 35 P.2d 210, at page 218, as follows:

"The courts have frowned upon the unnecessary developing of the interest of a surety company in the trial of a damage case when the company is not a party to the suit. This is especially true when the question of negligence is so doubtful as to leave the reasonable inference that the evidence of the interest of the insurance company is likely to have prejudiced the jury, or when it appears that counsel for the plaintiff is not in good faith in presenting the evidence."

They also quote from Freeman v. Nickerson, 77 Cal.App.2d 40, at page 54, 174 P.2d 688, at page 696:

"It is well settled in California that gratuitous references, either in the evidence or the argument, to the fact that a defendant carries liability insurance is prejudicial misconduct justifying a reversal."

In the instant case it is to be noted that the first mention of insurance was brought out when appellants' counsel produced a written statement and, before introducing it in evidence, asked respondent Joseph Lawrence Olson if he had made it. Mr. Olson's response was: "Yes, I did. That is the adjuster for the other insurance." On redirect examination respondents' counsel asked where the statement was prepared, and after being told asked if the adjuster named had "held themselves out to be insurance investigators." Appellants' objection to the last question was sustained. In his argument to the jury respondents' counsel referred to this testimony in the language hereinbefore quoted.

[5] We do not believe that upon the record here it can be held that respondents' counsel went beyond the bounds of legitimate argument, and certainly there is no indication that he was seeking to inject the issue of insurance into the case gratuitously or in bad faith.

In the case of Walter v. England, 133 Cal.App. 676, 24 P.2d 930, 934, cited with approval in Freeman v. Nickerson, supra, the patient of a dentist, who subsequently was sued in a malpractice action, went to the dentist and suggested that, inasmuch as all that plaintiff wanted was reimbursement for expenses, the dentist go to the insurance company, tell them he had made a mistake, and get the insurance company to make the desired reimbursement. Evidence that the defendant thanked the plaintiff and then stated, "I'll go down to my insurance company when I am in San Francisco and will tell them that I have made a mistake * * *" was held to be proper evidence. The court said, 133 Cal.App. at pages 688-689, 24 P.2d at page 935:

"It is a general rule that in this class of cases reference to the fact that a defendant is indemnified by a policy of insurance is prejudicial error, and the evil effect upon the jury of such a reference cannot be cured by striking out the testimony, nor by an admonition to the jury not to consider it in any way. Rising v. Veatch, supra [117 Cal.App. 404, 3 P.2d 1023]; Squires v. Riffe, 211 Cal. 370, 295 P. 517; Citti v. Bava, 204 Cal. 136, 266 P. 954. This rule, however, does not prevent such evidence being proper where the conversation involves an admission of responsibility. King v. Wilson, 116 Cal.App. 191, 2 P. 2d 833; Harju v. Market St. Ry. Co., 114 Cal.App. 138, 299 P. 788; McPhee v. Lavin, 183 Cal. 264, 191 P. 23; Lahti v. McMenamin, 204 Cal. 415, 268 P. 644. In the case before us the conversation amounted to an admission that the appellant had made a mistake. We have heretofore held that this admission, when considered with all the testimony in the case, is subject to interpretation as an admission of negligence, and the jury were the judges of its effect.

"The evidence having been properly admitted, we find no prejudicial error in referring to it in the argument to the jury."

In Dullanty v. Smith, 203 Cal. 621, at page 625, 265 P. 814, at page 816, the court said:

"The fact that this testimony contained, in addition to unobjectionable matter, references to the insurance of defendant did not necessarily make it inadmissible for all purposes. It is true that the court frowns upon any attempt to show that a defendant carries indemnity insurance, but where, as here, there is an entire absence of any indication whatsoever of lack of good faith on the part of plaintiff, evidence of this character, as an admission against interest, or for certain other purposes, may be received, notwithstanding the fact that it contains material which under other circumstances would be objectionable."

It appears from the record that appellants made the same contention as to misconduct on the part of respondents' counsel in support of their motion for a new trial, and the denial of said motion is an implied finding that respondents' counsel acted in good faith and that no prejudice resulted. It also appears that the court gave the following instruction:

"In the trial of this action questions have been asked and answers given in which a casualty insurance company is mentioned. No insurance company is a party to this action and whether any party is insured has no bearing whatsoever on any issue that you must decide. Therefore, the oath you took as jurors requires that you refrain from any inference, speculation or discussion about insurance."

We are unable to agree with appellants' contention that there was misconduct on the part of respondents' counsel but we are also of the opinion that upon the record as a whole, and in view of the court's instructions, no prejudice resulted to appellants from the portion of the argument complained of.

The judgment is affirmed.

VAN DYKE, P. J., and PEEK, J., concur.

137 Cal.App.2d 610

Lloyd A. FREDERICK, doing business as Lloyd A. Frederick Company, Plaintiff and Appellant,
v.

George A. CURTRIGHT, Customcraft Chinchilla Equipment Corporation, a California corporation, and Customcraft Industries, Inc., a California corporation, Defendants and Respondents.

Civ. 20921.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 3, California.

Dec. 8, 1955.

Action to recover broker's commission. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, James G. Whyte, J., sustained a demurrer to fifth amended complaint without leave to amend and entered a judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Shinn, P. J., held that by producing a buyer, ready, willing and able to purchase substantially different property, broker could not earn commission which sellers by special contract had agreed to pay for sale of corporate stock and other personal property specifically described therein.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Brokers ⇨82(1)

Complaint failed to state a cause of action for recovery of commissions under contract giving business opportunity and securities broker exclusive right to sell specified corporate stock within stated period of time, in absence of allegation that broker had procured any person ready, able and willing to purchase the property within the time specified in employment agreement or that term of broker's employment had been extended.

2. Corporations ⇨116

Sales ⇨23(1)

Written offer to purchase specified corporate stock and personal property subject to acceptance by buyers on or before specified date of further agreement to be drawn by sellers covering transfer of such property was conditional and not a firm offer to purchase the property and acceptance of offer by sellers did not preclude them from stipulating any terms they might seek to impose by the further agreement to be prepared and submitted to buyer.

3. Brokers ⇨60

Written agreement for purchase and sale of specified corporate stock and personal property, whereby sellers agreed to pay named business opportunity and securities broker specified commission, was a "special contract" in that it related solely to negotiations between sellers and buyer named therein, and broker's right to compensation thereunder depended upon a consummation of purchase by named buyer of the property described in contract upon terms and conditions substantially the same as those specified therein.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Special Contract".

4. Brokers ⇨49(1)

Execution of special contract for purchase and sale of corporate stock and personal property specifically described therein did not entitle business opportunity and securities broker to commission specified in contract for sale of such property, where contract expressly made sale of such property subject to acceptance by buyer of further agreement to be prepared by sellers covering numerous terms and conditions of sale.

5. Brokers ⇨56(3)

Business and securities broker was not entitled to commission on sale of corporate stock and other personal property under special contract for sale of substantially different property by which sellers had agreed to pay broker specified commission for sale of such property.

6. Brokers ⇨56(3)

Where owner, having agreed to pay broker a commission for selling property specifically described in agreement, contracts to sell or sells substantially different property to buyer procured by broker, broker does not thereby earn commission under agreement.

7. Brokers ⇨46

In order to earn a commission, broker must render the service which is the sole consideration for the promise of compensation.

8. Pleading ⇨225(1)

Where amended complaint alleged that property sold was substantially different from that specifically described in special contract by which sellers had agreed to pay specified commission for sale of corporate stock and other personal property, it affirmatively appeared that complaint could not be further amended to state a cause of action for recovery of broker's commission, and demurrer to complaint was properly sustained without leave to amend.

William Strong, Beverly Hills, for appellant.

Sylvester Hoffmann, Los Angeles, for respondents.

SHINN, Presiding Justice.

Plaintiff brought this action against defendant Curtright and two corporations to recover the sum of $6,000 allegedly earned as a licensed business opportunity and securities broker for negotiating the sale of certain property of the defendants. To plaintiff's fifth amended complaint a demurrer was sustained without leave to amend; judgment was entered for defendants and plaintiff appeals.

The complaint set out as exhibits three contracts. The first was dated May 8, 1953. It gave plaintiff the exclusive right to sell "stock as listed above, for the 60 day period from May 8, 1953 to July 8, 1953 and within 30 days thereafter to parties with whom said Broker negotiated during said period, provided said Broker notifies me in writing of said negotiation." It provided "If a sale or exchange is effected during their agency for the above described stock, I agree to pay them 10 per cent of the selling price, as commission for their services, and to furnish satisfactory title to said stock." Typed on the face of the writing was "This Exclusive Extended to August 8, 1953." Above was written "Price $60,000, Terms Cash." The second agreement was dated September 30, 1953 and was in the form of an offer by Robert A. Rub to defendants, accepted by them, to purchase all stock of the two corporations owned by Curtright "plus all of the machinery and equipment used in connection with said businesses now owned by George A. Curtright * * *." 1 The named price was $60,000 of which $25,000 was down payment, $5,000 to be paid within a year plus $1,000 per month or more until paid. It provided "This purchase and sale agreement is contingent upon the following conditions: 1. An agreement shall be drawn by Axelrod & Sevilla * * * Attorneys at Law, covering the transfer of stock and all assets, patents, beneficial business agreements now in use and owned by Customcraft Chinchilla Equipment Corporation and Customcraft Industries, Inc., and/or George A. Curtright. 2. This aforementioned agreement to be drawn by Stanley Sevilla is subject to acceptance by the purchasers on or before October 5, 1953. Furthermore, in the event that the aforementioned Agreement is not approved by the purchaser, it is expressly understood that the One Thousand Dollars ($1,000.00) listed in this agreement will be returned to the purchaser forthwith by the LLOYD A. FREDERICK COMPANY." Over the signatures of defendant corporations was the following: "I hereby agree to pay to LLOYD A. FREDERICK COMPANY as commission ten percent (10%) of the selling price for the sale of the above stock." The third agreement was between defendants and Robert A. Rub and Saul Rub; it was signed by them and by defendants October 22, 1953. It was a contract for the sale of other property of the defendants, as hereinafter explained. It contained no provision for the payment of a commission to plaintiff. It was alleged in the earlier complaints, but not in the fifth amended complaint, that the sale was never consummated.

1. The "stock" was the stock of Curtright in the two corporations.

[1] It was not alleged in the complaint that plaintiff procured Rub or any other person ready, able and willing to purchase the property within the time specified in the employment agreement nor was it alleged there was any extension of the term of plaintiff's employment. In the absence of such allegations the complaint failed to state a cause of action on the contract of employment. Augustine v. Trucco, 124 Cal.App. 2d 229, 237, 268 P.2d 780; Ford v. Palisades Corp., 101 Cal.App.2d 491, 497, 225 P.2d 545; Lisle v. E. B. & A. L. Stone Co., 103 Cal.App. 409, 284 P. 680; 9 Cal.Jur.2d 256, 267.

If plaintiff earned a commission it was under the second contract which provided for the payment of a commission for a sale of the property. It was alleged that although the term of the agreement of employment had expired, plaintiff procured Robert A. Rub to purchase the shares of stock and other personal property by the agreement of September 30 and that Rub continued ready, able and willing to purchase in accordance with the October 22nd agreement, but that defendants refused to consummate the sale or to pay a commission.

[2] As we have seen, the offer made by Rub September 30th was conditional: It provided for a further agreement to be drawn and accepted by the purchaser by October 5th and it left it optional with him to approve or disapprove the contract when it should be drawn. It was not a firm offer to purchase the property and it did not preclude defendants from stipulating any terms they sought to impose by the agreement which they were to prepare and submit to Rub. It was an agreement to enter into an agreement by October 5th if there should be a meeting of the minds of the parties as to all matters that had not been settled. Inspection of the October 22nd agreement discloses that there were many conditions imposed by each of the parties as to which the September 30th agreement was silent. The deferred payments were to bear 6 per cent interest; accounts receivable were to be assigned to the sellers as security; promissory notes were to be given by the sellers to the purchasers in adjustment of income tax liabilities; the purchasers assumed a liability of the corporations to Curtright, to be included in their promissory note; certain other liabilities of the sellers were to be assumed in an amount shown on a balance sheet, and any excess thereof was to be credited on the purchase money note. The agreement referred to schedules of accounts and assets as shown upon certain attached exhibits but the agreement pleaded had no such exhibits attached and the same were not identified in any manner. An inventory was to be taken of accounts receivable, physical assets and cash which must show a value of not less than 80 per cent of the book value of the inventory; there were certain warranties by the sellers with respect to assets and liabilities and the verity of balance sheets, and a provision for offsets against the purchase price; leases held by the defendants were to be assigned; there were provisions for the purchase of certain accounts receivable and a guarantee of the payment of 95 per cent of the amount of all accounts receivable within 120 days after close of escrow; there was a license to exclusive use of the custom-craft trademark by the purchasers for 10 years with certain exceptions, and also for the use of the corporate names of defendant corporations; the sellers were to cause certain third parties to continue to do business with the purchasers at prices no greater than defendants had been charged; defendants were to refrain for 5 years from engaging in any competing business; defendants were not to induce any employees to leave their employment and Curtright was to assist the purchasers in the business for two weeks, without compensation.

In addition to the mentioned terms and conditions which were not stated in the September 30th agreement, it was alleged in the complaint that by the October 22nd agreement defendants agreed to sell and Rub to buy "substantially different assets and personal property belonging to said defendants than those mentioned in the agreement cited hereinabove as Exhibits 'A' and 'B'" (the May 8th and the September 30th agreements). Plaintiff does not mention in what respects the assets and personal property were "substantially different" but it may be noted that the first agreement referred only to corporate stock, the second was for the purchase of stock "plus all of the machinery and equipment used in connection with said businesses now owned by George A. Curtright individually" and the October 22nd agreement, as pleaded, did not contain a complete description of the property to which it related.

[3-5]. The contract of September 30th to which plaintiff was not a party was a special contract in that it related solely to the negotiations between defendants and Rub. Plaintiff's claim to compensation depended upon a consummation of a purchase by Rub of the property described in the contract upon terms and conditions substantially the same as those specified in the agreement. If such a sale was not made the agreement to pay a commission was of no efficacy and created no obligation on the part of defendants. Plaintiff cannot claim that the September 30th contract established that the minds of the parties had met with respect to the property to be sold, the price and terms and conditions of the sale; in fact he does not make that claim. It is clear from the agreement that it was only a memorandum covering the general features of the negotiations and leaving to future arrangement phases of the transaction upon which the parties might or might not agree. They could very well have been in disagreement as to many of the particulars covered by the October 22nd agreement. Manifestly, inasmuch as there were numerous terms and conditions left to future agreement plaintiff did not earn a commission even if he brought the parties together and induced them to sign the September 30th agreement. It may not be doubted that if it had been a firm, enforceable agreement a commission would have been earned even if the sellers had wrongfully refused to perform it, but such is not the case. Plaintiff did not produce a buyer ready, able and willing to buy on terms and conditions specified by the seller. In material respects the terms and conditions of a sale were not specified nor agreed to. Plaintiff does not contend that he earned a commission by producing a buyer ready, able and willing to purchase the property described in the September 30th agreement upon the terms and conditions therein stated, yet he relies upon the promise of that agreement to pay him a commission for producing purchasers for property under the October 22nd agreement, in which there was no promise to pay a commission. If the property covered by the latter agreement had been the same as that described in the September 30th agreement, and if the terms had been substantially the same, a different question respecting plaintiff's right to a commission would have been presented; but far from alleging that it was the same property it was alleged that the agreement related to "substantially different assets and personal property belonging to said defendants."

[6] It seems self-evident that if an owner by special contract promises to pay a broker a commission for selling property specifically described in the agreement, and if the owner contracts to sell or sells substantially different property to one produced by the broker, a commission has not been earned. Plaintiff's brief makes no mention of the allegation of the complaint that the property was substantially different from that mentioned in the first and second agreements and he advances no theory under which a broker employed to effect the sale of one property would earn a commission by producing a buyer for entirely different property.

[7,8] It is elementary that in order to earn a commission, a broker must render the service which is the sole consideration for the promise of compensation. Backman v. Guadalupe Realty Co., 78 Cal.App. 347, 248 P. 296. Since it affirmatively appears from the fifth amended complaint that it could not be further amended to state a cause of action, it was not error to sustain the demurrer without leave to amend.

The judgment is affirmed.

PARKER WOOD, J., and NOURSE,
Justice pro tem., concur.

137 Cal.App.2d 684

The PEOPLE of the State of California,
Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Harry William COGHLAN, Defendant and Appellant.

Cr. 5406.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California.
Dec. 9, 1955.

Defendant was convicted of abortion. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Clement D. Nye, J., after trial without jury entered judgment and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Doran, J., held that evidence was sufficient to sustain judgment, and no prejudicial error occurred during trial.

Judgment and order affirmed.

1. Criminal Law Ⓒ260(11)

It is a function of trial judge to interpret testimony of witnesses.

2. Arrest Ⓒ63(4), 71

Where defendant, in prosecution for abortion, was visited by officer who arrested defendant and searched his office for instruments, after defendant had admitted a "treatment," such arrest and search was proper. Pen.Code, § 836.

3. Abortion Ⓒ11

Evidence was sufficient to corroborate testimony of prosecuting witness, to show corpus delicti, and to sustain conviction for abortion. Pen.Code, § 274.

Walter Gould Lincoln, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Elizabeth Miller, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

DORAN, Justice.

Defendant was charged by information with the violation of Section 274 of the Penal Code. The abortion was performed on Dorothy Kwiatt. A jury was duly waived and following the trial defendant was adjudged guilty. Sentence was suspended and defendant placed on probation for five years, the first six months thereof to be served in the county jail.

It is contended on appeal that the corpus delicti was not proven; that the testimony of the complaining witness was not corroborated; that "the decision is against law for the reason that no intent on the part of the defendant was proven".

It is also contended that "Search of defendant's house was made without any warrant having been issued. An arrest was made by a peace officer who neither saw the offense committed, nor could then have had reasonable cause for believing the person arrested to have committed it. Penal Code 836".

Other contentions relate to the trial court's rulings on objections and motions relating to the admissibility or inadmissibility of evidence.

As recited in respondent's brief, "On August 5, 1954, after she had missed two periods, but was in the best of health, she talked to the appellant at his office, which was in his home on Rimpau. She gave the name 'Judy Steele', which was a pet name and her maiden name. She told the appellant that she was pregnant and wanted him to help her." Appellant quoted a price of $25 for an examination and $10 for each treatment. From August 9 to the 14th inclusive the alleged victim visited appellant's office daily and received treatments. "On Sunday, the 15th, Mrs. Kwiatt went to the appellant's house on South Rimpau and was shown into the treatment room by the receptionist. Mrs. Kwiatt showed the appellant that her dress was soaking wet. She felt as though she was running a very high fever. The appellant said, "Don't become panicky now. If you have any pains or undue or excess cramps, take a shot of brandy," and told her if she bled excessively, to drink jello. Then the appellant gave her a treatment which was the same in every respect, and was with the same instruments, as those she had received on the previous six days. * * * "On Monday she called another physician, who prescribed terramycin, but she did not order it. She was bleeding from her vagina. She was taken to the Los Angeles County General Hospital on Monday at about 8:00 p. m." There the miscarriage occurred.

On August 19th Officer Zander visited appellant. "There he told the appellant that his name was Fletcher Longstaff and that he wanted to talk to him about his girl friend."

[1] In the conversation that followed appellant admitted the "treatment" but did not admit literally that any violation of the law was involved. However, from a reading of Officer Zander's testimony it is evident that the trial judge reached the conclusion that appellant, in effect, admitted to the officer the true purpose of the treatments. It is the function of the trial judge to interpret the testimony of the witness and in the light of the record the conclusion of the trial judge as noted above was not unwarranted as a matter of law. The record therefore supports appellant's contention that the testimony of Mrs. Kwiatt was corroborated.

[2] Other contentions of appellant, as above noted, lack support in the record. That the corpus delicti was proven there is no question and the contention that Officer Zander's search of appellant's house is also without merit. As the record discloses at the time the officer visited appellant and following the conversation with appellant as above noted, appellant was placed under arrest. The officer then searched the office for instruments, etc. These articles were introduced in evidence and incidentally there was no objection to their introduction.

Without going into detail it is sufficient that no prejudice resulted from the court's rulings with regard to the admission and exclusion of evidence or the examination of the witnesses.

[3] A review of the record reveals that the evidence is sufficient as a matter of law to support the judgment and that no prejudicial errors occurred during the trial. The judgment and order are therefore affirmed.

WHITE, P. J., and ASHBURN, J. pro tem., concur.

187 CalApp.2d 633

C. R. OLLER and Alleen Oiler, his wife,
Plaintiffs and Appellants,

v.

SONOMA COUNTY LAND TITLE COMPANY, a corporation, Angelo Pieroni, a widower, John Chalmers and Edna Chalmers, his wife, Defendants and Respondents.

Civ. 8626.

District Court of Appeal, Third District,
California.

Dec. 8, 1955.

Action to set aside sale under trust deed. The Superior Court, Sonoma County, McGoldrick, J., rendered judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Peek, J., held, inter alia, that where foreclosure sale under trust deed was not irregular, and there was no unfairness on part of trustee or injury to trustors by wrongful act of trustee, and trustee, under terms of trust, was under a duty to sell property upon default, inadequacy of sale price, if any, was no ground for setting aside the sale.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Mortgages ⇐357

Where trust deed authorized trustee to postpone sale by oral proclamation, oral proclamation of postponement was sufficient, and no other notice of postponed sale was necessary. West's Ann.Code Civ. Proc. § 694.

2. Mortgages ⇨357

Where six months had elapsed from date of notice of default to date of final sale under trust deed, and trustor had requested prior continuances and, at time of last request, admitted that he did not know whether he could produce money or not, trustee's refusal to continue sale upon trustor's assurance that he would have sufficient money within a couple of days to pay indebtedness did not constitute bad faith.

3. Mortgages ⇨369(3)

Inadequacy of price, however gross, is not in itself a sufficient ground for setting aside a trustee's sale legally made, and there must be additional proof of some element of fraud, unfairness or oppression accounting for and bringing about the inadequacy.

4. Mortgages ⇨369(3)

Where foreclosure sale under trust deed was not irregular, and there was no unfairness on part of trustee or injury to trustors by wrongful act of trustee, and trustee, under terms of trust, was under a duty to sell property upon default, inadequacy of sale price, if any, was no ground for setting aside the sale.

George E. Dilley, Santa Rosa, for appellants.

Edward T. Koford, Santa Rosa, for respondent John Chalmers.

Barrett & McConnell, Santa Rosa, for respondent Sonoma County Land Title Co.

PEEK, Justice.

Plaintiffs instituted this action to set aside a sale under a deed of trust. By the terms of the instrument, plaintiffs as trustors transferred to defendant Sonoma County Land Title Company, as trustee, certain land in Sonoma County to secure money loaned to plaintiffs by defendant Pieroni, the beneficiary. The defendant John Chalmers was the purchaser at the sale. Defendant Edna Chalmers filed a disclaimer and the defendant Pieroni was not served with process. From a judgment in favor of defendants the plaintiffs now appeal, contending that the foreclosure proceedings were improper; that the trustee was guilty of bad faith; and that the property was sold for a grossly inadequate price. We conclude that none of such contentions can be sustained.

[1] Plaintiffs first attack the foreclosure proceedings under the deed of trust, arguing that they were irregular in that the oral announcement of postponement made by an officer of the trustee was made when no one was present and hence was insufficient notice of the time and place of the postponed sale. The record however discloses additional evidence that the defendants Chalmers and one Poulsen were present and heard the announcement, and that the plaintiff C. R. Oller was not present. Here the deed of trust expressly authorized the trustee to postpone the sale by oral proclamation. Thus when the defendants' officer, at the time and place fixed in the original notice of sale and without further publication and posting by oral proclamation, postponed the sale to a definite future date, he was acting validly within the express provisions of the deed of trust. Mack v. Golino, 95 Cal.App.2d 731, 734, 213 P.2d 760. "No other notice of postponed sale need be given." Code of Civil Procedure, § 694. Since the rule in this state is so well established, any discussion of the cases from other jurisdictions cited and relied upon by plaintiffs' counsel would appear unnecessary.

[2] Plaintiffs' second contention is that the defendant trustee was guilty of bad faith in refusing plaintiffs' request for a continuance of the sale. From the record it appears that such request was predicated upon the assurance of plaintiff C. R. Oller that he would have sufficient money within "a couple of days" to pay the amount of the indebtedness. Under like circumstances the court, in Galusha v. Meserve, 58 Cal.App. 174, 178, 208 P. 348, 350, held that,

"The fact that at the time of the sale appellant informed the trustee that he was making arrangements to obtain money with which to pay the debt did not obligate the trustee to grant a further postponement of the sale. The creditor having become entitled to enforce payment of the note, the debtor has no valid ground on which to attack the validity of the sale merely because he was not allowed further time in which to pay his debt."

The record in the present case shows that the notice of default was filed and a copy mailed to plaintiffs by registered mail on March 31, 1952; that notice of sale was published on August 5, 1952; that on September 18, 1952, the sale was continued to September 30, 1952. In other words, six months elapsed from the date of notice of default to the date of final sale. Additionally it appears from the testimony of Oller himself that he had requested prior continuances from the trustee and at the time the trustee refused his final request for a continuance stated, "* * * he didn't know whether I could produce the money or not." The case of Winbigler v. Sherman, 175 Cal. 270, 165 P. 943, upon which plaintiffs place sole reliance, is not in point. There the debtor had no actual notice of the sale, and a letter written by the creditor to the debtor was couched in such terms as to convey the meaning that proceedings had not been commenced, although the date for the sale had actually been set. In addition, the machinery for which the debt was incurred was not operating satisfactorily, and lastly the debt was only approximately 10 per cent of the value of the property.

[3, 4] The final contention of the plaintiffs is that the property was sold for a grossly inadequate consideration. However, even assuming that the price was inadequate, that fact standing alone would not justify setting aside the trustee's sale. "In California, it is a settled rule that inadequacy of price, however gross, is not in itself a sufficient ground for setting aside a trustee's sale legally made; there must be in addition proof of some element of fraud, unfairness, or oppression as accounts for and brings about the inadequacy of price." Stevens v. Plumas Eureka Annex Mining Co., 2 Cal.2d 493, 496, 41 P.2d 927, 928; see also Engelbertson v. Loan & Bldg. Ass'n, 6 Cal.2d 477, 479, 58 P.2d 647, 648. The record in this regard shows that at the time of trial and before submission of the cause, the trial court allowed plaintiffs to amend their first amended complaint which was verified by changing the allegation as to value from $16,000 to $25,000; that at the hearing conflicting testimony was given as to the value as follows: Oller testified to $25,000; a witness for plaintiffs testified to $16,000; and the defendant Chalmers testified that if he had been buying the property direct from plaintiffs he would have been willing to have paid $6,250. At the sale after 24 bids were made by three bidders, the property was sold to defendant Chalmers, the highest bidder, for $5,025. The surplus proceeds of the sale in the sum of $384.48 were ultimately transferred to plaintiffs some months after the sale. As the court noted in the Engelbertson case, "Since inadequacy of price is not alone ground for setting aside the sale, the failure of the court to find upon the value of the property is immaterial." Necessarily, therefore, since the record discloses no irregularity in the foreclosure sale nor any unfairness on the part of the trustee or injury to plaintiffs by any wrongful act of the trustee; and since under the terms of the trust, the trustee was under a duty to sell the property, the alleged inadequacy in the selling price, if any, could not have resulted from any irregularity in the conduct of the sale or unfairness on the part of the trustee.

The judgment is affirmed.

VAN DYKE, P. J., and SCHOTTKY, J., concur.

137 Cal.App.2d 681

Kenneth M. KIRK, Plaintiff and Appellant,
v.

Bert A. RUTHERFORD, Ronald B. Rutherford, by his Guardian ad litem, Richard P. B. Tyson, Defendants and Respondents.
Civ. 21223.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California.

Dec. 9, 1955.

Rehearing Denied Dec. 30, 1955.

Hearing Denied Feb. 1, 1956.

Action against father and guardian ad litem of minor son for personal injuries and property damage sustained in automobile collision with automobile driven by minor son. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Kurtz Kauffman, J., entered judgment and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, White, P. J., held that where plaintiff relied upon minute order of trial court, requiring plaintiff to pay fee of guardian ad litem appointed for minor defendant at plaintiff's request, as a basis for procuring inclusion in his cost bill and judgment of a recognition of a right to collect guardian's fee from defendant, plaintiff was estopped from thereafter taking an inconsistent position and denying his obligation to pay fee of guardian ad litem.

Appeal dismissed.

1. Estoppel §91(1)

Where plaintiff relied upon minute order of trial court, requiring plaintiff to pay fee of guardian ad litem appointed for minor defendant at plaintiff's request, as a basis for procuring inclusion in his cost bill and judgment of a recognition of a right to collect guardian's fee from defendant, plaintiff was estopped from thereafter taking an inconsistent position and denying his obligation to pay fee of guardian ad litem.

2. Election of Remedies §3(1)

One to whom two inconsistent courses of action are open and who elects to pursue one of them, is afterward precluded from pursuing the other.

3. Appeal and Error §153

Where plaintiff moved to have fee of guardian ad litem included in plaintiff's memorandum of costs and in judgment as corrected, plaintiff effectively waived his right to appeal from minute order of trial court requiring him to pay the fee of guardian ad litem.

Snyder & Fletcher, Owen E. O'Neil, So. Pasadena, for appellant.

Robert M. Fisk, Pasadena, for respondents.

WHITE, Presiding Justice.

Plaintiff was awarded judgment for personal injuries and property damages incurred in a collision of plaintiff's automobile with one owned by one of the defendants and driven by the other defendant, his minor son. After service of summons on the minor defendant, who was then over 14 years old, and no appearance by him, on plaintiff's motion Richard P. B. Tyson was appointed guardian ad litem of said minor defendant. Tyson's motion to be relieved of the guardianship was opposed by plaintiff and denied by the court. He appeared and defended. No appeal has been taken from the judgment. It is not in the record on the instant appeal, nor does the date of its entry appear.

A minute order, made February 24, entered February 28, 1955, and reading as follows: "In the matter of the manner or method of paying the fee of the Guardian ad Litem herein, heretofore fixed in the sum of $225.00 on January 20, 1955, plaintiff is ordered to pay said fees as follows: $50.00 forthwith, $50.00 on March 15, 1955, and the balance on or before April 1, 1955". is the order from which the instant appeal was taken.

On March 4, 1955, the guardian ad litem's motion to tax costs was heard and, pursuant to stipulation between the parties in open court, a $25 fee for an expert witness was stricken therefrom and "fees of Guardian ad Litem in the sum of $225.00" was added to plaintiff's cost bill. The court then made its order to that effect and correcting the judgment theretofore entered so that plaintiff's costs taxed therein be $283.20 instead of $83.20. Written order was made and filed March 9, 1955 and entered March 28, 1955. No appeal has been taken from that order.

Respondent's contention is that, when plaintiff moved on March 4th that his cost bill and the judgment be amended to include the fee required to be paid by him under the provisions of the minute order of February 24th, he sought and accepted the only benefit that could accrue to him under that order, and thereby he waived his right to appeal therefrom. There having been no appeal from the judgment as corrected to include the amount of such fee, it is obvious that, if the minute order from which the instant appeal was taken should be reversed, plaintiff's said judgment would then include $225 costs not paid by him.

[1-3] We agree, for slightly different reasons, that appellant has estopped himself to appeal from the order of February 24th. When he relied upon it as a basis for procuring the inclusion in his cost bill and judgment of a recognition of a right to collect the guardian's fee from defendant he precluded himself from thereafter taking an inconsistent position and denying his obligation to pay the taxed item. To quote Schulze v. Schulze, 121 Cal.App.2d 75, 83, 262 P.2d 646, 650: "The defendant may not play fast and loose with the court in this fashion. He cannot in one breath say the judgment is valid,—obtain relief thereby; and in the next, say it is invalid. * * * One to whom two inconsistent courses of action are open and who elects to pursue one of them, is afterward precluded from pursuing the other." And to quote from Alexander v. Hammarberg, 103 Cal.App.2d 872, 879, 230 P.2d 399, 404: "These two positions are entirely inconsistent. The courts will not recognize or tolerate such tactics. A party cannot thus 'blow both hot and cold.' McDanels v. General Ins. Co., 1 Cal.App.2d 454, 459, 36 P. 2d 829, 832; Chaquette v. Ortet, 60 Cal. 594, 600. The courts would be impotent indeed if they were compelled to approve such duplicity. Under elementary principles, even if the point were sound which it is not, Hammarberg has waived or is estopped from successfully urging it." By his motion to have the $225 included in his memorandum of costs and in the judgment as corrected, plaintiff effectively waived his right to appeal from the minute order requiring him to pay the fee of the guardian ad litem.

Appellant's statement in his Reply Brief that "* * * if the court's order should be reversed * * * he would not even hope to support any attempt to collect it from respondent" does not alter the situation. Schubert v. Reich, 36 Cal.2d 298, 300, 223 P.2d 242.

Because appellant's right to prosecute this appeal had been waived, we have not considered the questions raised by him as to the court's right to assess the fees due the guardian ad litem of a minor defendant (possibly insolvent and whereabouts unknown) against a successful plaintiff, at whose instance the guardian was appointed and retained.

The appeal is dismissed.

DORAN, J., and ASHBURN, J., pro tem., concur.

137 Cal.App.2d 725

Dorothy B. TUTTLE, Administratrix of the Estate of Florence Evelyn Powell, Deceased, Plaintiff and Appellant,

v.

Francis Marion BESSEY and Pearl Bessey, Defendants and Respondents.

Civ. 8656.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Dec. 12, 1955.

Action by administratrix against decedent's son and his wife to set aside deed from decedent to herself and son as joint tenants, and deed from decedent and son to son and wife as joint tenants on grounds that decedent was of unsound mind at time of execution of the deeds, that son and wife did not pay consideration therefor, and that execution had been procured by fraud and undue influence. The Superior Court, Sacramento County, John Quincy Brown, J., entered judgment for son and wife, and administratrix appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Peek, J., held that evidence was sufficient to sustain judgment.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Deeds §§210, 211(1, 3, 4)

In action by administratrix against decedent's son and his wife to set aside deed from decedent to herself and her son as joint tenants and deed from decedent and son to son and wife as joint tenants on grounds that decedent was of unsound mind at time of execution of the deeds, that son and wife did not pay consideration therefor, and that execution had been procured by fraud and undue influence, evidence was sufficient to sustain judgment for son and wife.

2. Deeds §§68(1½)

Rules governing capacity to execute a deed are, in general, the same as those governing testamentary capacity.

Otis D. Babcock, Sacramento, for appellant.

Frank H. McAuliffe and Walter C. Frame, Sacramento, for respondents.

PEEK, Justice.

[1] The present controversy arises out of two deeds; the first from the decedent to herself and her son, Francis Marion Bessey, as joint tenants; and the second from herself and her son to himself and his wife, Pearl Bessey, as joint tenants. The plaintiff administratrix, who is a granddaughter of the deceased, filed her action to set aside both deeds upon the ground that decedent was of unsound mind at the time of the execution thereof; that defendants paid no consideration therefor; and that the execution was procured by fraud and undue influence. Defendants denied generally the specific allegations of plaintiff's complaint. At the conclusion of the trial on the issues so joined, the court found in favor of defendants. Plaintiff's appeal from the judgment is essentially an attack upon the sufficiency of the evidence and appears to be without merit.

The record shows that when the deeds were executed, the decedent was 85 years of age. Her eyesight was poor, and she wore a hearing aid. She remembered anniversaries and birthdays, wrote letters to friends and relatives until her last illness, kept her appointments, was active and attended church regularly. A neighbor, Rior-dan Hayer, testified that decedent visited him about once a month; that her memory was better than average for her age; that in his opinion she knew the effect of a deed; and that she told him in 1942 that the property in question was to go to her son, Francis, when she died. A grandnephew, Richard Bessey, testified he saw her for several hours at a time once or twice a week; that her memory was good and that she knew the effect of a deed; that she had told him on several occasions that she was going to arrange matters so that the property in question would not be willed, because wills could be broken, and that the property would go to her son. A neighbor, Mrs. Russell, testified that decedent was alert to her last illness and she believed her to be competent. Mrs. Russell's husband, LeRoy, testified that he had known her for several years, saw her daily and talked with her approximately twice a week. To him her memory seemed about the same as that of many older persons, and in his opinion she knew what she was doing. She told him that she originally owned 10 acres; that a daughter, Mrs. Cory, had received five acres; that a stepson, Jimmy, had received three acres; and on several occasions she had told him that the defendant, her son, would get the house and the two acres which were left. The witness further testified that decedent asked him if he knew where a deed could be prepared, and together they went to a realtor's office where the second deed was prepared and signed; that the realtor asked decedent, following the preparation of the deed, if that was what she wanted, and she replied that it was.

The plaintiff now argues that the summarized evidence is insufficient to support the judgment, because defendants failed to sustain the burden imposed upon them to prove good faith, adequate consideration and independent advice in procuring the property.

[2] As the court noted in Brunoni v. Brunoni, 93 Cal.App.2d 215, 218, 208 P.2d 1028, 1030, "The rules governing capacity to execute a deed are in general the same as those governing testamentary capacity." Examining the record in light of this rule, we find no evidence other than the conflicting evidence given by plaintiff that the decedent at the time of executing the conveyances was not of sufficient mental capacity to understand the nature of her act, the extent and character of her property and the relationship to persons who were the natural objects of her bounty. She had stated on numerous occasions that she intended to give the property in question to her son, the defendant; she knew the extent of her property; she did convey this property to her son and his wife; she asked of a neighbor where the deed could be prepared, and when asked by the realtor if that was what she wanted, she replied in the affirmative; she had recognized her other children; she knew what she was doing and she knew the effect of a deed. This evidence was more than ample to sustain the findings of the trial court.

Although the complaint alleged that defendants procured the execution of the deeds with the intention of cheating and defrauding Francis' brothers and sisters, it does not appear from the settled statement that any brother or sister was in fact excluded or was in any way injured by defendants receiving the deeds in question from Francis' mother. All of them had previously received property from her. Even if the facts were as plaintiff contends, the record shows no evidence of solicitation, inducement or influence to support an inference of undue influence on the part of defendants in obtaining the deeds from decedent. No showing is made that respondents exercised any pressure whatsoever on the mind of decedent; in fact all of the evidence is to the contrary. The voluntary character of her acts in executing the deeds is amply shown by the statements made by her to her neighbors and to her grandnephew. Goldman v. Goldman, 116 Cal.App.2d 227, 253 P.2d 474.

The judgment is affirmed.

VAN DYKE, P. J., and SCHOTTKY, J., concur.

137 Cal.App.2d 786

Josephine I. MOWREY, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

MARINA CORPORATION, Defendant and Appellant.

Civ. 5219.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District,
California.

Dec. 14, 1955.

Action by waitress against employer for damages for burns allegedly sustained while assisting fellow waitress in carrying a large tray of steaming lobster. The employer was not covered by workmen's compensation insurance. The Superior Court, Orange County, Raymond Thompson, J., entered judgment for defendant, but granted plaintiff's motion for new trial. Defendant appealed from this order. The District Court of Appeal, Griffin, J., held that where waitress' counsel offered his own affidavit to effect that fellow waitress, who had denied incident at trial, had testified in contradiction of statements she had previously made to him, and contrary to understanding of parties during hearing before Industrial Commission, and at time of pretrial conference, and, in view of statutory presumption of negligence of employer, trial court did not abuse its discretion in granting a new trial.

Order affirmed.

1. New Trial ⇨163(2)

Where motion for new trial was made on all statutory grounds, and trial court entered minute order granting motion upon ground of insufficiency of evidence to support judgment, and later, court signed written order reciting the fact of insufficiency of evidence, though somewhat vague, order was construed to grant new trial on the statutory grounds, including the insufficiency of the evidence to support the judgment. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 657, subd. 7.

2. New Trial ⇨90

In action by waitress against employer for damages for burns allegedly sustained while assisting fellow waitress in carrying a large tray of steaming lobster, where, upon motion for new trial, waitress' counsel offered his own affidavit to effect that fellow waitress, who had denied incident at trial, had testified in contradiction of statements she had previously made to him, and contrary to understanding of parties during hearing before Industrial Commission, and at time of pretrial conference, and, in view of statutory presumption of negligence of employer, trial court did not abuse its discretion in granting a new trial. West's Ann.Labor Code, § 3708; West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 657, subd. 7.

3. Appeal and Error ⇨977(3)

The granting of new trial rests so completely within the discretion of the trial judge that an appellate court will not ordinarily interfere with his action unless a manifest and unmistakable abuse of discretion clearly appears. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 657, subd. 7.

Hurwitz & Hurwitz, by Robert R. Hurwitz, Newport Beach, for appellant.

Otto K. Paulus, Laguna Beach, for respondent.

GRIFFIN, Justice.

Josephine I. Mowrey, a waitress for defendant and appellant, Marina Corporation, brought this action for damages against defendant alleging that she was injured on December 14, 1952, while waiting on customers; that one Mildred Stockton, another waitress, was carrying a heavy tray in the dining room and she called plaintiff to assist her because the tray was too heavy and she was afraid she would drop it. The complaint further alleged that plaintiff immediately placed her hands under the edge of the tray to keep it from falling or tipping; that Mildred negligently and carelessly permitted the tray to tip and caused the casserole thereon to skid; and that by reason of the careless act of Mildred the steaming liquid from the casserole, containing steaming lobster, spilled over and upon the hands of plaintiff and badly scalded and burned them, to her detriment and damage in the sum of $10,000. Special damage in the sum of $2,811.95 was also claimed. Defendant corporation appeared by answer and denied generally these allegations, admitted that plaintiff sustained injuries while employed by it; alleged that her injuries were the result of an unavoidable accident; and that she was adequately compensated therefor by virtue of an award by the Industrial Accident Commission in the sum of $796.80, plus medical expenses, etc.

It appears that a pretrial conference was held on May 12, 1954, and as a result of an order of the judge, approved by counsel for the several parties, it was "agreed" that plaintiff "was asked to assist another employee to prevent a tray containing food from tipping while the other employee was carrying. Thereafter, the tray did tip and the food thereon was upset and spilled over and upon the hands of the plaintiff causing the injuries complained of * * that at the time of this injury the defendant was not covered by Workmen's Compensation Insurance * * *"; that the satisfaction of the award received in evidence sets forth the items of such award; that "It is admitted by the defendant that the plaintiff was an employee, that at the time of the injury she was acting in the scope of her employment, that she was injured, and that the defendant was not covered by Industrial Accident Insurance"; "that there is a presumption that the injury sustained by the plaintiff was proximately caused by the negligence of the defendant"; and that the principal issues will be: "1. Whether or not there was any negligence on the part of the defendant. 2. Whether or not it was an avoidable accident. 3. Nature and extent of the plaintiff's injuries. 4. Amount of plaintiff's damages, if any, including loss of earnings. 5. The extent to which any award made to the plaintiff by the Industrial Accident Commission shall be credited to any judgment recovered in this action. 6. Amount of plaintiff's attorney's fees, if any."

Subsequently, on September 15, 1954, the case came on for trial. At that time counsel for defendant stated to the court that he did not agree with a part of the statement in the pretrial order because his evidence would show that the alleged accident did not happen in the manner set forth and that he did not believe it amounted to a stipulation as to that fact. The court stated it would relieve him from the effect of it, if it did amount to a stipulation. Counsel for plaintiff stated he expected to show that plaintiff was called to the rescue of Mildred Stockton when a tray containing a heavy tureen of lobster began to tip and slide and endanger the safety of certain patrons, and that as plaintiff reached for the tray the contents of the tureen spilled over and the hot liquid from the lobster spilled upon her hands and seriously burned her.

Medical testimony was then presented as to the extent of the injuries and plaintiff testified that Mildred Stockton (now Donovan) was carrying a very heavy tray on this Sunday; that it started to slip and Mildred asked for help so she reached up under the tray to help her when the tray tilted, causing the liquid to splash on her hands.

Mildred testified for the defendant that she was carrying the tray and asked plaintiff to help her lower the tray to the serving stand and she did; that plaintiff grasped the edge of the tray and helped her lower it; that no food spilled or dropped from it; that neither the tray nor any of the dishes dropped or skidded, and no containers thereon lost any of their contents at any time; that she completed serving the customers and took the tray back to the kitchen; that she believed plaintiff touched a silver serving dish in which broiled lobster was served and which had been heated in the oven; that there were no juices on the broiled lobster except the melted butter; and that plaintiff continued working that day and worked other days thereafter with her hand bandaged. She testified that the day before this occasion she noticed plaintiff already had a bad-looking burn on the palm of one of her hands; that they discussed it at that time and plaintiff told her she knew about it; and that she got it at home and hated to work with such an unsightly burn.

By way of impeachment plaintiff testified that Mildred said in the hall at the Industrial Accident Commission hearing that juice did spill out of the tray and the tray tipped because it was too heavy. It was subsequently stipulated that at the hearing before the Industrial Accident Commission the following took place, according to the report of the hearing officer:

"Mildred Stockham Donovan was called as a witness by employer and it was stipulated that if she were called she would testify that before this injury she saw a burn on the palm of one of applicant's hands and she suggested that applicant go to the doctor. That later she saw applicant with 'new skin' on it. That later applicant got the lobster burn on her hand. That she does not know just when applicant got the lobster burns. That she believed applicant worked some after she got the burns from the lobster. That they served lobster and all types of dinners from noon on. That she believes the lobster did not spill out of the tray but only the juice."

The witness said she did not testify at the hearing and this was only the attorneys' stipulation as to what her testimony would be. The case was submitted on this evidence and judgment was rendered for the defendant. On the motion for new trial, on all statutory grounds, plaintiff's counsel filed an affidavit reciting that before the Industrial Accident Commission hearing he talked with Mildred about the accident; that she stated to him that the tray she was carrying tipped and spilled hot liquid on the fingers and hands of the plaintiff; that the reason the tray slipped was because it was too heavy for her to carry; that she underestimated her ability and strength to carry it; that if a new trial was granted he would so testify; that a doctor, who examined plaintiff's hand shortly after the incident, found the burns appeared to be the result of scalds which were greatest between her fingers and on the back of her fingers and hands; that he would so testify at a new trial; that this evidence was now proffered because of "surprise" when Mildred testified as she did at the trial; and that he was without previous notice of such change of testimony.

An affidavit of the doctor was filed in support of the motion. The court took the matter under advisement and by minute order of December 8th the motion was "granted upon grounds of insufficiency of the evidence to support the judgment". Subsequently the judge signed a written order reciting that the motion had been submitted to the court "And it appearing to the Court that there is insufficient evidence to sustain or justify the Court's decision, it is therefore ordered and adjudged that the judgment heretofore entered in the above entitled matter be vacated and set aside, and that a new trial be granted to plaintiff."

[1] Defendant's counsel first contends that the orders are confusing as to whether the court granted the motion on all grounds stated in the notice or only on the one ground of insufficiency of the evidence, and also contends that the written order is not sufficient because the ground of insufficiency of the evidence is only contained in the recital of the order and not in the body of the order granting the new trial and therefore insufficiency of the evidence cannot be considered as one of the grounds.

Section 657, subd. 7, Code Civ.Proc. There is some merit to the argument as to the confusion but, construed as a whole, we believe the manifest intent of the order was that a new trial was granted on the grounds stated, including insufficiency of the evidence.

In considering the motion for new trial the trial judge signed a memorandum opinion in which he recites that after more thought he was brought to the conclusion that perhaps the evidence was not sufficient to dispel the presumption of negligence on the part of defendant, and if it was true that liquid was spilled on both of plaintiff's hands, and since it was assumed and almost agreed at the Industrial Accident Commission hearing and also at the time of the pretrial that it was so spilled, no doubt the plaintiff was surprised when defendant took a contrary position at the time of trial. He stated that this evidence might well be a turning point in another trial.

Appellant argues that there was no substantial conflict in the evidence which would authorize the granting of a new trial by the court; that the evidence, when considered as a whole, would not support a verdict for plaintiff; that the trial court abused its discretion in ordering a new trial and that there was no evidence of any error authorizing a new trial on any other ground set forth in the notice of motion.

[2, 3] It does appear that there was a substantial conflict between the testimony of plaintiff and that of the witness Mildred Donovan. Plaintiff's evidence, when considered in conjunction with the presumption afforded by Labor Code, § 3708, if believed by the trier of fact, might well support a contrary judgment. Accordingly, the order granting a new trial was authorized. The granting of a motion for new trial rests so completely within the discretion of the trial judge that an appellate court will not ordinarily interfere with his action unless manifest and unmistakable abuse of discretion clearly appears. Quinn v. Oil Fields Trucking Co., 130 Cal. App.2d 720, 279 P.2d 775; Kroiss v. Butler, 129 Cal.App.2d 550, 277 P.2d 873. It is true that very little showing was made by plaintiff as to why a continuance could not have been sought in the original trial to produce the evidence indicated, if necessary, or why counsel for plaintiff could not have testified at that time as to the facts indicated in his affidavit. Since the granting of a new trial was otherwise authorized we will not labor this question.

Order granting new trial affirmed.

BARNARD, P. J., and MUSSELL, J.,
concur.

137 Cal.App.2d 733

James Alexander TRINGHAM, Petitioner
and Appellant,
v.

STATE BOARD OF EDUCATION et al.,
Respondents.
Civ. 5206.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District,
California.
Dec. 12, 1955.

Mandamus proceeding to compel State Board of Education to set aside its revocation of petitioner's school credentials. The Superior Court, Orange County, Kenneth E. Morrison, J., entered order denying peremptory writ of mandate. Petitioner appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Griffin, J., held that there was no apparent reason why the petition could not be amended to set forth sufficient facts, if true, to fully state a ground for relief, and hence it was an abuse of discretion to sustain demurrer without leave to amend.

Reversed and attempted appeal from order sustaining demurrer without leave to amend dismissed.

1. Appeal and Error $\S$ 78(3), 870(5)

Order sustaining demurrer without leave to amend was not appealable but was reviewable on appeal from final judgment. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. $\S$ 963.

2. Mandamus $\S$ 187(7)

Where demurrer to mandamus petition to compel State Board of Education to set aside order revoking petitioner's school credentials was sustained without leave to amend and transcript of proceedings before Board was not made a part of record on appeal, the contents of transcript were not before District Court of Appeal, and therefore the Court would examine allegations of the petition and demurrer thereto and test it under general rules applicable, to see if trial court was justified in sustaining demurrer without leave to amend.

3. Mandamus $\S$ 167

As a general rule, in a hearing upon a verified mandamus petition which respondent has failed to answer, the truth of all facts alleged must be conceded, excluding conclusions of the pleader. West's Ann. Code Civ.Proc. $\S$ 1094.

4. Mandamus $\S$ 154(10)

In mandamus proceeding to compel State Board of Education to set aside order revoking petitioner's school credentials, if transcript of proceeding before Board had not been made a part of the petition, the petition could be amended to include transcript or to set forth substance of evidence received by Board and to aver in particular wherein such evidence, considered in light of petitioner's contentions, supported conclusion that Board abused its discretion. West's Ann. Education Code, $\S$ 12752.

5. Mandamus $\S$ 168(3)

In mandamus proceeding to compel State Board of Education to set aside order revoking petitioner's school credentials, court may admit relevant evidence which was not produced at hearing before Board if court finds that such evidence could not have been produced in exercise of due diligence. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., $\S$ 1094.5(d, e).

6. Mandamus $\S$ 173

If credibility of witnesses before State Board of Education is brought into question at mandamus proceeding to compel Board to set aside order revoking petitioner's school credentials, opportunity to contradict or impeach their testimony is to be afforded at the trial. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 1094.5(d).

7. Mandamus ☞ 163

To sustain without leave to amend a demurrer to mandamus petition is an abuse of discretion unless petition shows on its face that it is incapable of amendment.

8. Mandamus ☞ 163

When ruling upon an issue of pleading raised by demurrer to mandamus petition, it is error to make written findings of fact and conclusions of law and to enter judgment on the merits.

Joseph Scott, A. H. Risse, and G. L. McFarland, Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Donald D. Stoker, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

GRIFFIN, Justice.

An accusation and also an amended accusation were filed by respondent State Board of Education, charging this petitioner with certain acts alleged to constitute immoral conduct. After hearing, his credentials consisting of a General Elementary Credential, an Elementary School Administration Credential, and a General Secondary School Credential, were revoked.

[1] Petitioner and appellant herein brought this petition in mandate to compel respondents to cancel and set aside the order revoking his credentials above mentioned, and sought an order to show cause why such writ of mandate should not issue. He asked that a hearing be had before the court to adjudicate the issues according to the court's independent judgment and in accordance with the proceedings described in Dare v. Board of Medical Examiners, 21 Cal.2d 790, 136 P.2d 304. Petitioner filed therewith a copy of the accusation and amended accusation, referred to therein as Exhibits A and B. It was alleged as part of the petition "That a copy of the reporter's transcript of the proceedings had, including the pleadings filed and the testimony taken at the hearings before said aforementioned Hearing Officer will be filed concurrently with the filing of this petition." Apparently a complete transcript of the proceedings at the hearing before the Board of Education was left with or filed with the court at the time of the filing of the petition or subsequent to that time. By ex parte application, an alternative writ was issued returnable on July 9, 1954. Respondents filed a demurrer, both general and special, to the petition and therewith filed points and authorities. On July 30, the demurrer came on for hearing, and after argument the ruling thereon was taken under advisement and on August 19th it was sustained without leave to amend. On December 10th the court signed voluminous findings reciting generally that "after careful consideration of all the evidence and in the exercise of its independent judgment on said evidence, finds that the weight of the evidence in the light of the whole record sustains the finding of the State Board of Education that Petitioner herein had violated the provisions of Section 12752 of the Education Code", and described in particular the acts charged, which were found to be true; that the allegations of the petition that are in "conflict with these findings of fact" are not true; that the board did not act arbitrarily or commit any abuse of discretion; that there was no additional relevant evidence that could not have been produced or was improperly excluded at the hearing before the state board; and that its order should not be set aside. Judgment was entered accordingly. The appeal is taken from the order sustaining the demurrer without leave to amend and from the order denying the peremptory writ of mandate and quashing the alternative writ theretofore issued. Since there is no appeal from an order sustaining a demurrer without leave to amend, the attempted appeal from such order must be dismissed. Evans v. Dabney, 37 Cal.2d 758, 235 P.2d 604; Goodwill Industries v. County of Los Angeles, 117 Cal.App.2d 19, 28, 254 P.2d 877; Code Civ.Proc. § 963. However, this order is reviewable on appeal from the final judgment. Smith v. City of Los Angeles, 84 Cal.App.2d 297, 190 P.2d 943.

[2] On this appeal the petitioner makes the following contentions: that the court erred (1) In making the transcript of the proceedings before the administrative agency a part of the record in said cause for the purpose of passing upon the respondents' demurrer; (2) In considering and passing upon matters contained in the transcript in ruling upon the demurrer; (3) In sustaining the demurrer without leave to amend; and (4) In making written findings of fact, conclusions of law, and a judgment upon the merits of the case in ruling upon an issue of pleading raised by the demurrer.

A close question presents itself as to whether or not the complete transcript of the proceedings taken before the State Board of Education was made a part of petitioner's petition for mandate. The transcript was not made a part of the record on this appeal and accordingly its contents are not before us. We will therefore examine the allegations of the petition and the demurrer thereto and test it under the general rules applicable, to see if the trial court was justified in sustaining it without leave to amend. Kleiner v. Garrison, 82 Cal.App.2d 442, 187 P.2d 57.

[3] The general rule is that in a hearing upon a verified petition which respondent has failed to answer, the truth of all the facts alleged must be conceded. However, this does not include conclusions of the pleader. Town of Hayward v. Pimental, 107 Cal. 386, 40 P. 545; Kleiner v. Garrison, supra; 16 Cal.Jur. 870, sec. 68.

Section 1094 of the Code of Civil Procedure requires that if no answer be made, the case must be heard on the papers of the applicant; and Section 1094.5 recites that where the writ is issued for the purpose of inquiring into the validity of any final administrative order or decision made as the result of a proceeding in which by law a hearing is required to be given, evidence is required to be taken and discretion in the determination of facts is vested in the inferior tribunal or board, the case shall be heard by the court sitting without a jury; and that all or part of the record of the proceedings before the inferior board may be filed with the petition, may be filed with respondent's points and authorities, or may be ordered to be filed by the court.

It further provides that the inquiry in such a case shall extend to questions whether respondent has proceeded without or in excess of jurisdiction; whether there was a fair trial; and whether there was any prejudicial abuse of discretion. Abuse of discretion is established if the respondent has not proceeded in the manner required by law, the order or decision is not supported by the findings, or the findings are not supported by the evidence. Where the court finds that there is relevant evidence which in the exercise of reasonable diligence could not have been produced or which was improperly excluded at the hearing before respondent, it may enter judgment as provided in subdivision (e) thereof.

In Kleiner v. Garrison, supra, the proceedings before the administrative agency could not be considered for the purpose of passing on the demurrer when the court ordered it to be prepared and filed.

In Faulkner v. California Toll Bridge Authority, 40 Cal.2d 317, 329, 253 P.2d 659, the court said that in reviewing the acts of a State Board it has been held that a petition which alleges an abuse of discretion and also incorporates a transcript by reference will be examined in the light of the evidence contained in the transcript to determine whether a cause of action is stated.

[4] It rather appears from the petition here in question that petitioner did make sufficient reference to those proceedings permitting the court to consider it in respect to its ruling on the demurrer as to some of the claims presented. However, since we are not in possession of that record, we have no way of reviewing the correctness of the ruling. Assuming, however, that we may be in error in this conclusion, it is quite apparent from the record and the allegations of the petition that the trial court erred in sustaining the demurrer without leave to amend. It is true that naked conclusions of such averments add nothing to their force. If the transcript could not be considered a part of the petition for this purpose there is no reason why the petition could not be amended to include it or to set forth the substance of all the evidence received by the Board and aver in particular wherein such evidence, considered in the light of petitioner's contentions, supports the conclusion that the Board abused its discretion. However, there is no indication that the petition could not be accordingly amended. It has been held that where the petition does not properly incorporate the transcript as a part of the petition the transcript thus filed may not be considered as contradicting any of the repugnant allegations of the petition in ruling on a demurrer. Kleiner v. Garrison, supra.

We will therefore set forth generally some of the allegations of the petition. It alleged that petitioner was mailed a copy of the amended accusation which copy was undated, unsigned, and not verified by a public officer authorized to act; that the amended accusation was not thus executed or so signed until the middle of the proceedings had before the hearing officer of the Board on December 14, 1953, at which time, over objection of petitioner, and due to the death of the administrative advisor, the name of the dead man was signed to the original by one Malcolm Peattie, Assistant Administrative Advisor, on suggestion of the hearing officer. It is therefore claimed that the subsequent proceedings had on the amended accusation, as well as any order based thereon, were null, void and of no effect. It is then alleged that the judgment rendered was harsh, arbitrary and unreasonable, not sustained by the evidence, contrary to law, and in violation of the due process clause; that respondents were without jurisdiction to take the proceedings; that evidence was admitted which was inadmissible as a matter of law; that competent evidence was offered during the hearing which the hearing officer refused to admit, thereby preventing petitioner from having a fair and impartial hearing; that there was no substantial evidence received to support the finding of the Board; and that petitioner is possessed of additional relevant evidence by way of defense, which in the exercise of reasonable diligence could not have been discovered and introduced at the hearing before the Board, and which he desired to introduce at the trial de novo.

[5, 6] Under Section 1094.5 of the Code of Civil Procedure the court may admit relevant evidence at the trial which was not produced at the administrative hearing if it finds that such evidence could not have been produced in the exercise of reasonable diligence. Additional evidence may be admitted if the showing required by subdivision (d) thereof is made. If the credibility of witnesses before the Board is brought into question at the mandamus proceeding, opportunity to contradict or impeach their testimony is to be afforded at the trial. Sautter v. Contractors' State License Board, 124 Cal.App.2d 149, 154, 268 P.2d 139.

In Ashdown v. Department of Employment, State of California, 135 Cal.App.2d 291, 297, 287 P.2d 176, 180, it was said, quoting from Dare v. Board of Medical Examiners, supra, that "* * * 'the court is not confined to the record of the proceedings before the board. * * * Since the record before the board is competent evidence it should be considered and weighed along with other evidence in the cause'; that 'If it should appear from that record that incompetent evidence had been received by the board, the complaining party should not be foreclosed from objecting on the trial to its admissibility. Also if the board had improperly refused to entertain admissible evidence the litigant should not be foreclosed from offering it at the trial'; and 'that the trial court is authorized to exercise its independent judgment on the evidence.'"

[7] While many of the allegations mentioned in the petition may well constitute conclusions of the pleader, we see no apparent reason why the petition could not be amended to set forth sufficient facts, if true, to fully state a ground for relief, to entitle petitioner to a review of the evidence taken before the Board and to authorize the trial court to consider any claimed competent evidence subsequently discovered and to review all of these claims on their merit. The cases well establish the general rule that it is an abuse of discretion to sustain without leave to amend a demurrer to the original petition unless the petition shows on its face that it is incapable of amendment. Temescal Water Co. v. Department of Public Works, 44 Cal.2d 90, 280 P.2d 1; King v. Mortimer, 83 Cal.App.2d 153, 158, 188 P.2d 502.

[8] We must conclude, on the record before us, that the trial court thus erred in sustaining the demurrer without leave to amend, in making written findings of fact and conclusions of law, and in entering judgment upon the merits of the case when ruling upon an issue of pleading raised by demurrer. Flynn v. Flynn, 103 Cal.App.2d 91, 229 P.2d 5.

The orders denying peremptory writ of mandate, quashing alternative writ, and sustaining demurrer without leave to amend are reversed. The attempted appeal from order sustaining demurrer without leave to amend is dismissed.

BARNARD, P. J., and MUSSELL, J.,
concur.

137 Cal.App.2d 589

Evelyn B. SHERMAN, Plaintiff and Appellant,

v.

Rodney B. HARTMAN and John K. Taylor, individually and doing business as San Rafael General Hospital, Defendants and Respondents.

No. 16461.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 1, California.

Dec. 8, 1955.

Hearing Denied Feb. 1, 1956.

Malpractice action by patient against doctor and hospital operator for alleged negligence in permitting infusion of blood into patient's arm during a blood transfusion. The Superior Court, Marin County, Thomas F. Keating, J., entered judgment of nonsuit as to operator and judgment on verdict for doctor, and patient appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Bray, J., held that, where exclusive control of patient and of blood transfusion apparatus was in nurse and orderly, both of whom were hospital employees, and, while such control existed there occurred in patient condition which ordinarily did not occur unless someone was negligent, there was sufficient evidence of negligence to go to jury under doctrine of res ipsa loquitur and to require hospital to explain how patient's condition occurred without negligence on hospital's part.

Judgment in favor of doctor affirmed, and that in favor of operator reversed.

1. Physicians and Surgeons ⇨18(6)

Negligence on part of a physician or surgeon will not be presumed but must be affirmatively proved.

2. Physicians and Surgeons ⇨18(6)

Doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is applied in malpractice cases if it appears, either as matter of common experience or from evidence in the case, that accident is of a type which probably would not happen unless someone was negligent.

3. Negligence ⇨121(2)

For doctrine of res ipsa loquitur to be applicable, accident must be one which ordinarily does not occur in the absence of someone's negligence, must not be due to any voluntary action or contribution on part of plaintiff, and must be caused by agency or instrumentality within defendant's exclusive control.

4. Physicians and Surgeons ⇨18(6)

In malpractice action by patient against doctor and another for alleged negligence in permitting infusion of blood into patient's arm during blood transfusion, doctrine of res ipsa loquitur was not applicable as against doctor, in view of fact that, at time doctor left patient in hands of registered nurse provided by hospital, transfusion was working properly in accordance with good medical practice.

5. Physicians and Surgeons ⇨16

Doctor was in charge of patient and generally of nurses who attended her at hospital but would not be held responsible for routine matters performed in his absence by a nurse not selected by him but provided by the hospital.

6. Physicians and Surgeons ⇨16

Physician is not liable for negligence of hospital or other nurses, attendants, or interns who are not his employees if physician does not have knowledge of such negligence or connection therewith or if such negligence is not discoverable by him in exercise of ordinary care, unless physician is negligent in permitting such persons to attend patient, but surgeon is liable, under doctrine of respondeat superior, for negligence of hospital nurse, who, although not in regular employ of surgeon, is under his special supervision and control during the operation.

7. Negligence ⇨121(2)

Generally, doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is not applicable unless negligence is pleaded generally.

8. Negligence ⇨108(1), 111(1)

Test between allegations of general and specific negligence seems to be whether the allegations show that plaintiff knows the specific or underlying cause of the accident or is ignorant thereof, and, if plaintiff is ignorant of the specific cause of the accident, allegations are held to allege general negligence even though they may refer to specific matters in connection with the accident.

9. Negligence ⇨121(2)

If defendant is advised by the pleading that he must meet an inference of negligence (res ipsa loquitur) whatever may be the acts or omissions charged, charge is general enough to allow application of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur.

10. Hospitals ⇨8

Physicians and Surgeons ⇨18(6)

Complaint, which alleged that needle was inserted in plaintiff's arm for purpose of blood transfusion, that doctor and hospital operator carelessly and negligently left plaintiff alone and unattended, and that, because of negligent manner in which needle was inserted, needle became disengaged while plaintiff was unconscious and unattended and discharged blood into tissues of plaintiff's arm, thereby causing plaintiff's injuries, was sufficient to permit application of doctrine of res ipsa loquitur.

11. Negligence ⇨121(2)

Where complaint contained sufficient allegations of general negligence to make doctrine of res ipsa loquitur applicable, fact that plaintiff proved specific acts of negligence did not prevent application of the doctrine.

12. Negligence ⇨121(2)

Proof of specific acts of negligence does not preclude application of doctrine of res ipsa loquitur except where proof dispels the inference of negligence as a matter of law.

13. Appeal and Error ⇨927(3)

Where nonsuit has been granted, evidence must be viewed by the District Court of Appeal in light of rule that nonsuit or directed verdict may be granted only when, disregarding conflicting evidence and giving plaintiff's evidence all value to which it is legally entitled, and indulging in every legitimate inference which may be drawn from such evidence, result is a determination that there is not evidence of sufficient substantiality to support verdict in favor of plaintiff if such verdict were given.

14. Hospitals ⇨8

Where exclusive control of patient and of blood transfusion apparatus was in nurse and orderly, both of whom were hospital employees, and, while such control existed, condition of patient resulted which ordinarily did not occur unless someone was negligent, there was sufficient evidence of negligence to go to jury under doctrine of res ipsa loquitur and to require hospital to explain how patient's condition occurred without negligence on hospital's part.

15. Trial ⇨105(2)

In malpractice action by patient against doctor and hospital operator for alleged negligence in permitting infusion of blood into patient's arm during blood transfusion, patient's testimony that doctor had stated to her that her injury was due to pure carelessness was hearsay and would not have been binding upon hospital had it objected or moved to strike out such testimony, but, upon hospital's failure to do so, such testimony was binding upon hospital for whatever the statement might have been worth.

Carroll F. Jacoby, Jack Flinn, San Francisco, for appellant.

George A. Smith, Peart, Baraty & Harsard, San Francisco, for respondent Hartman.

Lamb, Hoge & Killion, San Francisco, for respondent Taylor.

BRAY, Justice.

In a malpractice action, defendant Taylor, individually and doing business as San Rafael General Hospital,¹ was granted a judgment of nonsuit. The jury rendered a verdict in favor of defendant Hartman,² and judgment was entered thereon. Plaintiff appeals from both judgments.

Questions Presented.

1. Should the court have instructed the jury on res ipsa loquitur (a) under the facts; (b) under the pleadings?

2. Was there evidence of the hospital's negligence to go to the jury? Included in this question is that of whether res ipsa loquitur applies.

Evidence.

February 18, 1953, plaintiff entered the hospital for the purpose of a hysterectomy, an abdominal operation to be performed by defendant, a physician and surgeon. She had been under his care for some time. The next morning defendant operated. He was assisted by Dr. Robinson, Dr. Miller (anesthetist) and the usual scrub and surgical nurses. The pulse, blood pressure and general condition of the patient were in charge of Dr. Miller, who administered the anesthetic. Because of blood loss and shock Dr. Miller started transfusion of one pint of whole blood (500 c.c.'s). To do this he inserted a needle into the vein of the right arm, fixed it in place by pieces of adhesive tape, then placed the arm on a board and held it there by use of adhesive tape or a towel. The operation started about 10:20 a. m. and about 12 noon plaintiff was moved to her room, defendant and Dr. Miller accompanying her. Dr. Miller in defendant's presence checked and found the transfusion still running. The two doctors then went to change their clothes. On returning to her room defendant "didn't care too much for her condition." He brought Dr. Miller into the room, and after checking the transfusion the latter assured him her paleness and clamminess was the condition she had been in for some time, and he was not alarmed; her blood pressure came back up and her pulse was good and "we both felt a whole lot better about it." Dr. Miller testified that the reason he checked the transfusion twice was "We felt she was in a state of shock and we were concerned about her." Defendant instructed the nurse whom they left in charge "to watch the blood pressure as I was a little worried about her condition." Defendant expected the nurse to remain there as long as the blood was dripping, although plaintiff's condition was not critical and she could have been left alone as he did not expect her to come out of the anesthetic for a couple of hours. At this time she probably had received about half of the blood in the bottle. Defendant did not specifically tell the nurse to remain. He took it for granted that she would, as that was normal hospital procedure. The doctors left. From then on plaintiff was under the care of hospital personnel. According to the hospital records the needle came out of the vein about 12:30 p. m. According to a Mrs. Barker, a patient in the same room, after the doctor (which one does not appear) had put up the bottle after bringing plaintiff in the room, and saw that it was working, and had left, the nurse said it was dripping slowly, almost stopped, and she shook it a couple of times. Plaintiff started coming out of the anesthetic "a little bit" and started moving her head "a little bit" and was vomiting "a little bit." The nurse stayed about half an hour and then a male nurse or orderly came in. The female nurse said that she had to go to lunch and asked him to watch plaintiff until she came back. She asked him if he was a registered nurse. He replied "uh-huh, or kind of shook his head, kind of mumbled. She said, 'You know about the blood transfusion, watch her for me' * * *" He watched plaintiff a couple of times; she got restless "a little bit" and he told her to keep quiet. After he had watched her about a half hour he said, "The needle seems to be coming out," and asked the witness to ring the bell. She rang twice and called once, and it seemed a long time before a nurse came. The male nurse said, "Look, look it is coming out." A little while afterwards one of the doctors came and they started the dripping again. All the time that plaintiff was in the room someone was watching her, first the female and then the male nurse. Defendant was not called when the needle came out. He returned about 3 p. m. and found that plaintiff's arm was "swollen and discolored from needle getting out of vein probably when she began to arise and come to." She had a "Painful infusion of blood into right arm from leaking blood." These were his entries in the hospital record, although he testified it never was determined how the needle happened to come out of the vein. The needle coming out of the vein caused about 200 c.c.'s of blood to go into the soft tissues.

1. Hereafter referred to as "the hospital."

2. Defendant Hartman will be referred to as "defendant."

Plaintiff testified that after coming out of the anesthetic her arm was black, swollen and painful. The condition started at the wrist and went up her arm. When she asked defendant what happened he said that "the blood from the transfusion had gone into the tissues and that as far as he was concerned, it was pure carelessness." He did not say who was careless. Defendant denied this conversation.

1. Instruction on Res Ipsa Loquitur.

(a) Under the facts.

This action is solely for the injury to plaintiff's arm caused by the alleged negligence in connection with the transfusion. Should the court have given plaintiff's offered instruction on res ipsa loquitur?⁴

Defendant, Dr. Miller and Dr. Goddard testified that it was standard practice for the surgeon to leave a patient with blood transfusion running and in charge of a nurse. All three doctors testified that it is a frequent occurrence for a needle to come out of the vein during a transfusion. They had seen it occur on many occasions. Dr. Miller testified it can occur even though the patient is getting the best of care. Usually when the needle comes out of the vein the blood does not flow into the tissues. It is rare when it does so and then it only flows from 10 to 25 c.c.'s. Defendant testified that in his 15 years of experience, although the needle had come out of the vein in transfusions many times, this was the first time there was any residual; the blood in the tissues generally left in two or three days. There is no testimony to the contrary of these statements of the three doctors.

[1-5] Negligence on the part of a physician or surgeon will not be presumed; it must be affirmatively proved. However, the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is applied in malpractice cases if it appears "either as a matter of common experience or from evidence in the case, that the accident is of a type which probably would not happen unless someone was negligent." Costa v. Regents of Univ. of California, 116 Cal. App.2d 445, 254 P.2d 85, 97. It is unnecessary to determine here whether the common experience of a layman in blood transfusion cases is that the results here do not occur without negligence, for the reason that the expert testimony of all the doctors, in addition to plaintiff's testimony that defendant told her someone had been negligent, was that, while in transfusions the needle frequently comes out of the vein causing a small amount of blood to get into the soft tissues, it does not cause the condition of plaintiff's arm. Thus, the first element required for the application of the doctrine was present, namely, the accident is one which ordinarily does not occur in the absence of someone's negligence. See Milias v. Wheeler Hospital, 109 Cal. App.2d 759, 764, 241 P.2d 684, for this requirement. Two other elements are necessary: (1) that the accident is not due to any voluntary action or contribution on plaintiff's part. This element was present as plaintiff was under the influence of the anesthetic administered by direction of defendant and her involuntary movements while coming out were usual and expected. (2) The accident was caused by an agency or instrumentality within the exclusive control of defendant. This is the missing element. Defendant, finding that the transfusion was working properly in accordance with good medical practice, left the patient in the hands of a registered nurse provided by the hospital. He had the right to assume that being a registered nurse and provided by the hospital she had the requisite training and knowledge to perform the simple act of watching the transfusion and seeing that if the needle slipped as needles frequently did, the dripping of blood was stopped and a doctor called to again insert the needle.⁵ Thus, at the time of the injury, defendant did not have exclusive or any control of the instrumentality. It is true that defendant was in charge of the patient and generally of the nurses who attended her, but not to the extent of responsibility for routine matters performed in his absence by a nurse not selected by him but provided by the hospital. To hold him so responsible would require him to remain with the patient until the transfusion was complete in order to make sure that the nurse, whom he did not select, properly performed her duties. To require a surgeon to do this, a matter which did not require the skill of a physician or surgeon, would be so time-consuming as to make the already burdensome cost of medical treatment almost prohibitive.

4. The doctrine as applicable to the case against the hospital will be discussed later.

Plaintiff contends that defendant is responsible for the acts of the nurse, basing her contention on the following language from Ales v. Ryan, 8 Cal.2d 82, 105, 64 P.2d 409, 420: "A physician is answerable for the acts of another, operating jointly, for the acts and omissions of the other which, exercising reasonable diligence, he should have observed. Wynne v. Harvey, supra [96 Wash. 379, 165 P. 67]. The same rule would apply to nurses working under his direction." There, however, the failure of the nurses to count the sponges was during the operation and in the very presence of the surgeon operating. Certainly the operator has exclusive control of the nurses in the surgery and while he is there. The same is true while the nurses are with the patient in his presence. In Ybarra v. Spangard, 25 Cal.2d 486, at page 492, 154 P.2d 687, at page 690, 162 A.L.R. 1258, the court refers to the Ales case, supra, and states that the nurses "become the temporary servants or agents of the surgeon in charge while the operation is in progress * * *." (Emphasis added.)

[6] The true rule in this respect is set forth in Hallinan v. Prindle, 17 Cal.App.2d 656, 661-662, 62 P.2d 1075, 1077: "The rule is thus laid down in 48 Corpus Juris, Physicians and Surgeons, § 144, page 1137: 'A physician is not liable for the negligence of hospital or other nurses, attendants or internes who are not his employees if he has no knowledge thereof, or has no connection therewith, or if it is not discoverable by him in the exercise of ordinary care, or unless he is negligent in permitting them to attend the patient.' [Citations.] 'But it has been held that where a hospital nurse, although not in the regular employ of an operating surgeon, is under his special supervision and control during the operation the relation of master and servant exists, and that the surgeon is liable under the doctrine of respondeat superior for the nurse's negligence.' Citing Aderhold v. Bishop, 94 Okl. 203, 221 P. 752, 60 A.L.R. 137."

The latter exception to the general rule is the one which was applied in the Ales case. In the Hallinan case the nurse in charge of the hospital operating room had been requested by the defendant surgeon to prepare the room for a minor operation and to prepare a 1 per cent solution of novocaine which the surgeon intended to use as a local anesthetic. By mistake, she

5. That this watching of the patient does not require great skill is attested by the uncontradicted testimony that on occasion a patient's husband or friend does it rather than a nurse.

placed on the tray to be used at the operation a 4 per cent solution of formalin, which the surgeon injected in the patient, assuming it to be the novocaine he had ordered. The court held that the evidence showed that it was the custom of physicians and surgeons to accept from graduate trained nurses medicines, instruments and drugs without making an examination thereof themselves, and that the nurse in preparing the tray's contents for the operation was not the servant, employee or agent of the doctor and that he was not liable for her negligence.

The court properly refused to instruct on res ipsa loquitur.

(b) Under the pleadings.⁶

The complaint alleged the insertion of the needle in plaintiff's arm for the purpose of blood transfusion, that then defendants carelessly and negligently left plaintiff alone and unattended; that by reason of the negligent manner in which the needle was inserted, and while plaintiff was unconscious, alone and unattended the needle became disengaged discharging blood into the tissues of plaintiff's arm, and that the aforesaid negligence caused plaintiff's injuries.

[7] The general rule is that unless negligence is pleaded generally the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is not applicable. See Leet v. Union Pac. R. R. Co., 25 Cal.2d 605, 617, 155 P.2d 42, 158 A.L.R. 1008, and the many cases there cited. However, there is considerable confusion in the cases as to what constitutes the pleading of special acts of negligence so as to deny the application of the doctrine. See Freitas v. Peerless Stages, Inc., 108 Cal.App.2d 749, 239 P.2d 671, 33 A.L.R.2d 778 and cases collected by Prosser, Res Ipsa Loquitur in California, 37 Cal.L.Rev. 183, 214. In the following cases it was claimed that the complaint pleaded specific rather than general acts of negligence and that therefore the doctrine was not applicable, yet the court held that it was: Jianou v. Pickwick Stages System, 111 Cal.App. 754, at page 757, 296 P. 108, at page 109, where the complaint alleged that the defendant

"so carelessly and negligently operated and conducted its said automobile stage that a wheel broke or collapsed thereon." Lawrence v. Pickwick Stages, N.D., 68 Cal. App. 494, at page 497, 229 P. 885, at page 886, where the complaint alleged that the defendant "so carelessly and negligently operated said bus thereby causing said bus to leave the highway and turn into a ditch with great force and violence". Damgaard v. Oakland High School Dist., 212 Cal. 316, at page 319, 298 P. 983, where the complaint at considerable length specified the defendant's acts of negligence. In fact, the court referred to the complaint as "unnecessarily prolix." Radisich v. Franco-Italian Packing Co., 68 Cal.App.2d 825, at page 838, 158 P.2d 435, at page 441, where the complaint pleaded negligence both generally and specifically. There the court said that the allegation that the plaintiff's "'apron was caught * * * and drawn into the drum of the ship's winch throwing * * * [him] against the deck of said vessel * * *'" is but a general allegation of negligence on the part of the defendant for it does not attempt to set out or explain in any manner the 'underlying cause' of the accident or the specific manner in which it occurred. [Citing cases.]" Vertson v. City of Los Angeles, 116 Cal.App. 114, at page 122, 2 P.2d 411, at page 414, where the complaint alleged that the defendant "'carelessly * * * constructed and maintained said power line and the fastenings of the wires thereto to the cross-bars, and the cross-bars to the poles upon which the said power line was suspended, and * * * the wires thereof, a short distance from the cross-bars on the said described Pole 3, broke and fell on,'" the plaintiff. Mintzer v. Wilson, 21 Cal.App.2d 85, at page 89, 68 P.2d 370, at page 373, where the complaint alleged that the ceiling which fell on the plaintiff "'was of a faulty construction and its condition had been allowed to become defective and unsafe by the defendants through their failure to properly operate, manage, control and maintain said building in which said hotel was conducted.'" The court said: "As will be noted, the foregoing allegations do not attempt to explain or set out in detail wherein the construction of the ceiling was faulty, nor to state specifically the reason why it fell. The allegations are therefore nothing more than general allegations of negligence." In Freitas v. Peerless Stages, Inc., supra, 108 Cal.App.2d 749, at page 753, 239 P.2d 671, at page 674, the complaint charged that the defendant "so negligently and carelessly drove and operated said Peerless bus that the same was caused suddenly and violently to jerk, bump and stop; that as the proximate result of the negligent and careless operation of said bus by defendant" the plaintiff was knocked to the floor. We there held that such an allegation within the meaning of the cases there cited was either a general allegation or a mixture of general and specific, and that in either event the doctrine was applicable. Ybarra v. Spangard, supra, 25 Cal.2d 486, 493, 154 P.2d 687, 691, pointed out that there has been a liberalization of the tests for res ipsa loquitur and that the doctrine "of res ipsa loquitur 'should apply with equal force in cases wherein medical and nursing staffs take the place of machinery and may, through carelessness or lack of skill, inflict, or permit the infliction of injury upon a patient who is thereafter in no position to say how he received his injuries.'"

6. This question applies to the cases against both defendant and the hospital.

[8-10] The test between allegations of general and specific negligence seems to be whether the allegations show that the plaintiff knows the specific or underlying cause of the accident or is ignorant thereof. In the latter event the allegations, although they may refer to specific matters in connection with the accident, are held to allege general negligence. Another way of stating the test appears in Leet v. Union Pac. R. R. Co., supra, 25 Cal.2d 605, at page 618, 155 P.2d 42, at page 49, 158 A.L.R. 1008, where after citing cases in this state which hold that the doctrine may be invoked "even though plaintiff specifically pleads the acts of negligence and does not allege negligence generally" the court said that if the defendant is advised by the pleading that he must meet an inference of negligence (res ipsa loquitur) whatever may be the acts or omissions charged, then the charge is general enough to allow the application of the doctrine. The court further stated that allegations in the complaint of facts from which it appeared that the defendant was in a better position to explain what occurred than the plaintiff, such allegations were a factor in determining whether the doctrine should be available or would be one of the reasons for applying it. 25 Cal.2d at page 619, 155 P.2d 42. All of the elements of these tests are present in our case.

In our case the complaint, like the complaint in Radisich v. Franco-Italian Packing Co., supra, 68 Cal.App.2d 825, 838, 158 P.2d 435, does not attempt to set out or explain in any manner the "underlying cause" of the accident or the specific manner in which it occurred. Here, too, the language in Jianou v. Pickwick Stages System, 111 Cal.App. 754, 757, 296 P. 108, 109, is applicable: "It is inferred from the language employed that the plaintiff was ignorant of the specific acts of negligence which caused the accident." It is alleged that while she was unconscious and due to negligence the needle came out causing the injury; thus the plaintiff was unaware of the specific cause of the accident. There were sufficient allegations of general negligence to make the doctrine applicable.

[11,12] Nor did the fact that plaintiff proved specific acts of negligence prevent the application of the doctrine. "The more recent and better reasoned cases hold that proof of specific acts of negligence does not preclude the application of the doctrine except where the proof dispels the inference of negligence as a matter of law." Freitas v. Peerless Stages, Inc., supra, 108 Cal.App.2d at page 756, 239 P.2d at page 676; see also Leet v. Union Pac. R. R. Co., supra, 25 Cal.2d 605, 621, 155 P.2d 42.

2. Hospital's Negligence.

[13] A different situation from that in the case against defendant is found in that against the hospital because (a) the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur would apply against it and (b) there was evidence of negligence on the part of its employees.⁷

(a) Res ipsa loquitur.

[14] What we have said before concerning the presence of two of the elements of the doctrine applies to the hospital's case. The third element, that of exclusive control, is also present. At the time the nonsuit was granted neither Dr. Miller nor Dr. Goddard had testified. However, the before mentioned testimony of defendant and of plaintiff and Mrs. Barker had been given. From it there was evidence that the exclusive control of the patient and the transfusion apparatus was in the nurse and then the orderly, both of whom were employees of the hospital. The hospital would be liable of course under the doctrine of respondeat superior for their negligence, if any. See Ware v. Culp, 24 Cal.App.2d 22, 74 P.2d 283. While that control existed a condition of the patient resulted which ordinarily does not occur unless someone was negligent. Thus there was sufficient evidence of negligence to go to the jury and to require the hospital to explain how the condition of the plaintiff's arm occurred without any negligence on its part. In our case, as in Ybarra v. Spangard, supra, 25 Cal.2d 486, 154 P.2d 687, the patient on recovering consciousness finds herself injured in a manner which ordinarily would not occur unless those in charge of her at the time were negligent. She, of course, does not and could not know what happened. An explanation is due from those who knew or should have known what occurred. As said in the Ybarra case, quoting from Maki v. Murray Hospital, 91 Mont. 251, 7 P.2d 228, 231 (25 Cal.2d at page 490, 154 P.2d at page 689): " * * * without the doctrine the maxim that for every wrong there is a remedy would be rendered nugatory, 'by denying one, patently entitled to damages, satisfaction merely because he is ignorant of facts peculiarly within the knowledge of the party who should, in all justice, pay them.' "

(b) Negligence.

Moreover, at this point there was direct evidence of negligence on the part of the nurse. Mrs. Barker testified that the nurse, after the doctors left, felt that the blood was flowing too slowly so the nurse shook the bottle a couple of times to make it flow faster. As no explanation was given of this action a reasonable inference therefrom could be that this was the reason such an unusual quantity of blood entered the soft tissue after the needle came out of the vein. Again, when the needle came out, the orderly requested Mrs. Barker to ring the bell as he hated to ring. There was considerable delay and Mrs. Barker had to ring twice, the orderly saying he wished they would hurry. Mrs. Barker in addition to ringing twice had to call also. Finally a nurse arrived and a little while afterwards a doctor came. A reasonable inference is that during this long delay the blood was continuing to drip into the soft tissue causing the unusual damage, and that the delay was a negligent one. The hospital takes the position that because it is quite a common occurrence for transfusion needles to come out of the veins, res ipsa loquitur cannot apply here. Such contention overlooks the evidence that such a common occurrence does not result in the condition of plaintiff's arm. It is that unusual result that causes the doctrine to apply and to require explanation, an explanation which does not appear in the case. At least, these matters were for the determination of the jury. It cannot be said as a matter of law that there was no evidence of negligence.

[15] While it is true that the statement which plaintiff testified defendant made to her to the effect that her injury was

7. A nonsuit having been granted, we must view the evidence in the light of the rule stated in Thomsen v. Burgeson, 26 Cal. App.2d 235, 239, 79 P.2d 136, 138: "A nonsuit or a directed verdict may be granted 'only when, disregarding conflicting evidence and giving to plaintiff's evidence all the value to which it is legally entitled, herein indulging in every legitimate inference which may be drawn from that evidence, the result is a determination that there is no evidence of sufficient substantiality to support a verdict in favor of plaintiff if such a verdict were given.' " (Emphasis omitted.)

due to pure carelessness was hearsay, see People v. One 1950 Mercury Sedan, 116 Cal.App.2d 746, 751, 254 P.2d 666, and therefore would not be binding on the hospital had it objected or moved to strike it out, the hospital's failure to do it makes it binding on it for whatever the statement may be worth. (See 19 Cal.Jur.2d 123.) However, the results herein set forth would not be changed even though the statement were completely disregarded.

The judgment in favor of defendant Hartman is affirmed; that in favor of defendant Taylor individually and doing business as San Rafael General Hospital is reversed.

PETERS, P. J., and FRED B. WOOD, J., concur.

137 Cal.App.2d 615

The PEOPLE of the State of California,
Plaintiff and Respondent,
v.

Paul George HORNER et al., Defendants,
Paul George Horner, Betty Butler and Jean Lewis, Defendants and Appellants.
Cr. 5381.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 3, California.
Dec. 8, 1955.

Rehearing Denied Dec. 23, 1955.

Hearing Denied Jan. 5, 1956.

Defendants were convicted of pandering, conspiracy to pander, and rape. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Thomas L. Ambrose, J., rendered judgments and denied motions for new trial, and defendants appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Shinn, P. J., held that evidence sustained convictions.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Indictment and Information ⇨176

Where defendant in rape prosecution denied that he had ever had intercourse with victim, that there allegedly was no evidence that act took place on date alleged in information was not a fatal variance.

2. Indictment and Information ⇨171

A variance is not regarded as material unless it is of such a substantive character as to mislead accused in preparing his defense, or is likely to place him in second jeopardy for the same offense.

3. Criminal Law ⇨553

Alleged inconsistencies or contradictions in testimony of victim in rape prosecution did not require that her testimony be rejected as unworthy of belief.

4. Statutes ⇨118(1)

That act penalizing pandering was entitled an act relating to "crimes and the punishment thereof", satisfied constitutional requirement that subject of each act be expressed in its title. Pen.Code, § 266i; West's Ann.Const. art. 4, § 24.

5. Statutes ⇨109.3

Constitution does not demand that title of an act be a catalogue or abstract of its provisions, but merely that it contain a reasonably intelligent reference to subject of legislation. West's Ann.Const. art. 4, § 24.

6. Criminal Law ⇨422(6), 427(5)

In prosecution for pandering and conspiracy to pander, testimony that one defendant had asked another to permit victim to go to work as a prostitute in home of codefendant, followed by codefendant's transporting victim to her home without purpose, established a prima facie conspiracy between defendants to place victim in a house of prostitution, and warranted admission, as against codefendant, of acts and conversations of other defendants outside codefendant's presence.

7. Criminal Law ⇨421(1)

Where conspiracy is established prima facie, additional evidence of acts and statements of parties made thereafter during life of conspiracy is admissible against all conspirators.

8. Criminal Law ⇨1169(2)

In prosecution for pandering and conspiracy to pander, wherein there was convincing and uncontradicted evidence that one defendant's home was a house of prostitution, admission of testimony as to conditions in home when officers forced door was, if error, harmless.

9. Conspiracy ⚡47

Prostitution ⚡4

Evidence sustained conviction for pandering and conspiracy to pander. Pen. Code, § 266i.

Paul K. Duffy, Los Angeles, for appellant Horner.

Alexander H. Schullman and Abe Mutchnik, Los Angeles, for appellant Butler.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Norman H. Sokolow, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

SHINN, Presiding Justice.

Paul George Horner, Harry Jackson Legge, Betty Butler and Jean Lewis were charged with the offense of pandering, § 266i Pen.Code, for procuring for Bonnie, a female, a place as an inmate in a house of prostitution and, separately, of conspiring to commit the crime of pandering by procuring for said Bonnie a place as an inmate of a house of prostitution. Horner was separately charged with rape of said Bonnie, a female, 16 years of age; the defendants waived trial by jury and the case was submitted on testimony taken at the preliminary hearing and additional evidence taken at the trial. Defendants were found guilty as charged. Horner was sentenced to state prison upon the conviction of pandering and conspiracy to commit pandering, the sentences to run concurrently, and upon a conviction of rape, to the county jail, the sentence to run concurrently with the other two sentences. Horner and Betty Butler made motions for new trial which were denied. They appeal from the judgments and the orders.

Pursuant to leave granted at the time of the argument when Horner's attorney failed to appear, new counsel was engaged and a supplemental brief has been filed by Mr. Duffy.

[1,2] We will consider first the appeal of Horner and the conviction of rape. Bonnie's age was established by competent evidence at 16 years. She testified that she had been employed by appellant and had had sexual intercourse with him 6 or 7 times during the preceding two years. Phillip Barnes, Los Angeles city police officer, testified to a conversation had with Horner at the police station in which Horner stated that Bonnie had worked for him, he loaned her $5; that she allowed him to have intercourse with her as a courtesy for the loan of the money; thereafter there were 3 or 4 similar occasions. Horner testified that Bonnie had worked for him and that he had known her for about a year and one-half. He denied having had intercourse with her.

It is contended that the information charged the commission of the offense on or about July 7, 1954 and that there was no evidence that the act took place on or about that date or on any other specific date. The prosecutrix testified that she probably saw appellant on or about July 7, 1954; she had intercourse with him 6 or 7 times over a period of two years and one of the times may have been on July 7. Appellant admitted having been with her on that date. His defense was that he had never had intercourse with her. In view of his denial, the date July 7, or any other specific date, was of no significance. "Under the generally accepted rule in criminal law a variance is not regarded as material unless it is of such a substantive character as to mislead the accused in preparing his defense, or is likely to place him in second jeopardy for the same offense." People v. Williams, 27 Cal.2d 220, 226, 163 P.2d 692, 695. In addition to the testimony of the prosecutrix and the testimony as to Horner's admissions to Officer Barnes, there was evidence of the close relationship between Bonnie and appellant, to be hereinafter related, which rendered it highly improbable that there was any truth in appellant's denials. From the entire evidence the trial court was fully justified in finding that the offense was committed on or about July 7, 1954.

The following is a summary of the evidence addressed to the charges of pandering and conspiracy to commit pandering. Bonnie testified that she asked Horner to help her and Legge, her paramour, raise money in order that they might get married. Horner called a person he addressed as "Jean" and asked her to call some of her friends in an effort to help Bonnie and Legge. Later, after a second telephone call, Horner told Bonnie that Jean Lewis had suggested that she might go out to "Betty's" to work and make some money. The "Betty" was defendant Betty Butler. The matter discussed was that Bonnie would work as a prostitute and receive $10 or more per customer. Horner drove Bonnie to a drive-in restaurant where they waited until Betty Butler came. Bonnie was driven by Butler to the latter's home. Butler made a telephone call, a man came in, was introduced to Bonnie, Butler directed Bonnie where to take him; they went into a bedroom, had an act of sexual intercourse and the man paid Bonnie $20. Two other men came in, another woman in the house took one of the men to a bedroom and Bonnie took the other. She spent the night in the bedroom with the man and engaged in sexual intercourse; Butler gave her $15. The following morning Bonnie told Horner of these occurrences. She asked Horner to arrange with Jean for her to return to Butler's which Horner promised to do. Later Horner told her she could not return that night because all the girls who worked for Butler were there. The next day Bonnie asked Horner to arrange for her to return to Butler's. Horner called Jean who came to Horner's apartment with a woman known as "Connie." Horner told Bonnie that Connie would pick her up, which she did, and drove her to the Butler house where she engaged in intercourse with another man. Another witness, Bonita Holetz, an employee of Horner's, testified to having heard Jean make an arrangement with Betty for a little girl to go to work. Connie Armstrong testified to a statement made either by or in the presence of Horner to Bonnie that she should go to work at Betty's in prostitution. Police officers visited the Butler house, forced a door open and found Bonnie and another girl there; forcing open another door they found a man and a woman on a bed in compromising attire. The officers had extensive conversations with Butler in which she admitted two previous arrests by one of the officers and asked him not to arrest the girls. Another officer testified she told him she was going to send Bonnie home, that it was no kind of a place for her. Horner testified that he knew that Bonnie had been in trouble, was on probation and was only 16 years old. He had introduced her to Harry Legge. Horner admitted on the stand there was a discussion with Legge and Bonnie as to Bonnie's working as a prostitute in the home of Betty Butler; there was a discussion about his calling Jean Lewis to contact Butler; shortly thereafter there was a conversation between himself, Jean, Legge and Bonnie concerning Bonnie's working for Butler; that Bonnie told him that she had earned $35 and asked him to arrange with Butler for her to work another night. Upon cross-examination Horner admitted that he had discussed with Jean Lewis something to the effect that the latter would ask Butler to provide work for Bonnie. He testified that he had never met Butler.

Officer Kalkiewicz of the Juvenile Division testified that he talked with Horner who admitted that Legge and Bonnie were present at his residence one evening when they discussed Bonnie's working as a prostitute; that he called Jean and when she and Connie came to his residence that evening they arranged that Bonnie should go to a drive-in where she would be picked up.

[3] When first questioned by the People, Bonnie was a reluctant witness. She testified to the principal facts above related but omitted some of the important details of her conduct. It is claimed that on the second day of her testimony, after she had spent a night at Juvenile Hall, she testified more freely and in greater detail than on the previous day, having spoken with the deputy district attorney before resuming the stand. It is argued that she was in some manner discredited as a witness because there were inconsistencies in her testimony and there was more willingness to testify on the second day. We find no such inconsistencies or contradictions as would have justified the trial court in rejecting her testimony as unworthy of belief. Upon the contrary her reluctance to go into details is understandable and although there were some contradictions in minor particulars there were none with respect to the acts and statements of the defendants which, if proved, were sufficient to establish commission of the offenses charged. The trial court believed her testimony as to the material facts and since her testimony, if true, was sufficient to establish those facts it is futile to ask a reviewing court to rejudge her credibility and reweigh her testimony.

[4,5] It is argued in Horner's supplemental brief that the title of the act by which § 266i of the Penal Code was enacted was defective for noncompliance with the mandate of § 24 of Article IV of the Constitution that "Every act shall embrace but one subject, which subject shall be expressed in its title." The title, Stats.1953, Ch. 32, p. 633, reads as set out in the margin.¹ The subject of the act, not only in the title, but in the body, is "crimes and the punishment thereof". That is a sufficient title. "The constitution does not demand that the title of an act be a catalogue or abstract of its provisions, but merely that it contain a reasonably intelligent reference to the subject of the legislation." Ikuta v. Ikuta. 97 Cal.App.2d 787, 218 P.2d 854, 857.

The appeal of Betty Butler.

On behalf of this defendant it is argued that as to each count "there is no substantial evidence beyond a reasonable doubt" that Bonnie did commit an act of prostitution or that the house of this appellant was a house of prostitution. With respect to the sufficiency of the evidence to prove the offense of pandering, appellant argues, as we have related, that the testimony of Bonnie was unworthy of belief. It is insinuated that the witness was coached by the deputy district attorney before she resumed the stand on the second day. The testimony of the witness was to the contrary and the insinuation is unjustified. Her account of her conduct in the Butler home was contradicted.

It was a reasonable inference that Horner, through the intermediary Jean Lewis, prevailed upon defendant Butler to receive Bonnie into her house for the purpose of earning money which she needed. There was evidence that telephone calls were made and that thereafter Butler picked up Bonnie and took her to her home. Upon her visit to the house Bonnie received $20 from one man and $15 from Butler, who presumably had made a collection from another customer whom Bonnie entertained. Defendant Butler did not take the stand. There was ample evidence that the premises were used for the purposes of prostitution.

[6,7] Appellant argues that the testimony concerning the telephone calls made through Jean Lewis and the conversations respecting the scheme between Bonnie and the other defendants were hearsay and inadmissible against her, for the reason that no evidence had been introduced of the existence of a conspiracy at the time the conversations were had and statements made. The testimony as to the initial request by telephone to Lewis that Bonnie be permitted to go to work as a prostitute in the home of Butler, followed by Butler's transporting Bonnie to her home for that purpose, established prima facie a conspiracy between Horner, Lewis and Butler to place Bonnie in a house of prostitution. Additional evidence of the acts and statements of these parties made thereafter during the life of the conspiracy was admissible against all the conspirators. People v. Griffin, 98 Cal. App.2d 1-44, 219 P.2d 519; 11 Cal.Jur.2d 258. The contention that the evidence as to the acts and conversations of Horner and Lewis outside the presence of Butler was hearsay and inadmissible against her is untenable.

[8] It is contended further that the testimony of the police officers respecting conditions found in the Butler home when the officers forced the door of the house and later the bedroom door was inadmissible under

1. "An act to codify certain acts, relating to crimes and the punishment thereof, by amending Section 182 of, by adding Chapter 12 to Title 13 of Part 1 of, by adding Article 4 to Chapter 3 of Title 1 of Part 4 of, by adding Article 5 to Chapter 3 of Title 1 of Part 4 of, and by adding Sections 217.1, 266h, 266i, 310, 337h, 487b, 487c, 487d, 597k, 643, 643a, 643b, 646, 649, 649a, and 650a to, the Penal Code, and by repealing certain statutes specified herein."

the doctrine of People v. Cahan, 44 Cal.2d 434, 282 P.2d 905. No objection was made to this testimony, but in disposing of the point reliance need not be placed on this omission. Without the testimony of the officers there was convincing and uncontradicted evidence that the Butler home was a house of prostitution. If there was error it was harmless.

[9] The evidence to which we have alluded was sufficient to establish defendant Butler's guilt not only of the offense of procuring for Bonnie a place as an inmate of a house of prostitution but also of conspiracy with the other defendants to commit the offense of pandering. Defendants were accorded a fair trial; there was convincing evidence of their guilt and no reason appears for disturbing the judgments or orders.

The judgments and orders denying motions for new trial are affirmed.

PARKER WOOD, J., and NOURSE,
Justice pro tem., concur.

137 Cal.App.2d 623

The PEOPLE of the State of California,
Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Mrs. Mildred Frances MASSEY and Paul
George Horner, Defendants,

Paul George Horner, Defendant and Appellant.

Cr. 5394.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 3, California.

Dec. 8, 1955.

Rehearing Denied Dec. 23, 1955.

Hearing Denied Jan. 5, 1956.

Defendants were convicted of violations of Penal Code, § 288a, and conspiracy to violate this statute. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Thomas L. Ambrose, J., rendered judgments and denied motion for new trial, and a defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Shinn, P. J., held that evidence supported finding that acts charged had been committed with criminal intent in violation of Section 288a, rather than for sole purpose of obtaining photographs, and sustained convictions.

Judgments and order affirmed.

1. Conspiracy $\hookrightarrow$ 47 Sodomy $\hookrightarrow$ 6

Evidence in criminal prosecution supported finding that acts charged had been committed with criminal intent in violation of Penal Code, § 288a, rather than for sole purpose of obtaining photographs, and sustained convictions for violation of section and for conspiracy to violate section. Pen.Code, § 288a.

2. Sodomy $\hookrightarrow$ 1

"Copulating", within Penal Code, § 288a, means "coupling".

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Copulating".

3. Attorney and Client $\hookrightarrow$ 76(1)

An attorney for defendant in a criminal case must continue with his services until he is released by client or by court for good cause shown, and he may not abandon his representation at will, nor for considerations personal to himself. West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, § 6068.

Paul K. Duffy, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Norman H. Sokolow, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

SHINN, Presiding Justice.

Paul George Horner appeals from judgments adjudging him guilty of several felonies and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

The charges were (1) participating with one Mildred, a co-defendant, in violation of section 288a of the Penal Code on June 15, 1954, (2) participating with said Mildred, a co-defendant, in another violation of the section on the same day, (3) violation of the section committed with one Bonnie on the same day, and (4) conspiracy with said Mildred to commit violations of said section.

The case of Horner and his co-defendant was tried upon testimony given at the preliminary examination and additional testimony received at the trial. Both defendants were convicted of the first three offenses charged and acquitted of the fourth. On behalf of Horner an opening brief was filed by Mr. Dunham, who represented Horner at the trial. He did not appear when the appeal was set for argument. In that brief the only ground urged for reversal was that there was "no competent or substantial evidence beyond a reasonable doubt to establish the crime." And the entire argument of the point reads as follows: "With respect to the charges set forth in the aforementioned three Counts of the second case, the entire record of the Trial evidences conclusively that the essential elements of the crime alleged were not committed (Reporter's Transcript pp. 111-163; 178). Here again the attention of the Court is directed to the Case of People v. Kennedy, 21 Cal.App.2d 185 [69 P.2d 224]." At the time of the argument Horner was given leave to obtain new counsel and to file an additional brief. This has been done; a brief has been filed by Mr. Duffy.

[1] As to charges 1 and 3 above, appellant on the stand admitted acts of physical contact which were elements of the offenses charged. Bonnie testified to similar acts committed by appellant as evidence of the commission of the second offense above mentioned. In addition there were photographs received in evidence taken at the time of the commission of the several acts charged. These were explained by the witnesses; the subjects of the pictures, appellant and Mildred, were identified and the acts were described. Understandably, it has not been suggested by the appellant that these pictures be brought up and considered as a part of the record on appeal. Defendant's explanation on the stand was that the acts were committed for the sole purpose of obtaining the pictures, but this, even if true, would not necessarily have constituted a valid defense. There was ample evidence of physical contact as a means of committing the offenses, and even if the trial court could have believed it was not the purpose of the participants to gratify sexual desires, that was not a conclusion which the court was required to reach as the only reasonable deduction from the evidence. From the evidence given concerning the actions of the parties and the nature of the pictures we have no reason to doubt that the evidence justified the court in determining that the offenses charged had been committed. It does not appear from the record, as a matter of law, that defendant had no criminal intent.

Cal.Rep. 289-290 P.2d-65

The arrangements which preceded the taking of the pictures, together with the carrying out of the plan, amounted to a conspiracy to violate the law, as charged.

[2] Appellant argues that the acts proven are not embraced within a correct definition of "copulating" and that the meaning of the word as used in the statute is obscure and uncertain. If the word is understood as implying "coupling," which is permissible, there is no uncertainty as to the legislative intent. The word as used in the statute has a well understood meaning. People v. Harris, 108 Cal.App.2d 84, 238 P.2d 158. A further contention is that the acts denounced are not such deviations from ordinary human behavior as to warrant their proscription. The arguments are based upon writings of students of the psychology of sex and are for the lawmakers, not the courts. The judgments are not subject to any of the infirmities urged by appellant.

[3] When the cause was called for argument and the attorney who represented appellant at the trial and filed a brief did not appear we permitted argument by appellant. We feel impelled to remark upon the failure of the attorney to make an appearance or to offer any excuse for his absence. Desertion of a client is inexcusable. As long as the relationship exists it is the duty of an attorney to speak for his client at every stage of the proceedings and not leave him to his own devices and helpless in a maze of legal procedure. Having undertaken the defense of a criminal case an attorney must continue with his services until he is released by the client or by the court. He may apply to the court for release from further service and for good cause shown may be released, but he may not abandon his representation at will, nor for considerations personal to himself. Bus. & Prof. Code § 6058. He is an officer of the court and as such owes a duty of respect for the court as well as fidelity to his client. When an appeal is calendared for argument the court expects counsel to make an appearance or to advise the court of a reason for nonappearance.

The judgments and order appealed from are affirmed.

PARKER WOOD, J., and NOURSE, Justice pro tem., concur.

137 Cal.App.2d 808

A. PIVARDIERE and Marle Pivardiere, husband and wife, Alyce Galloway, doing business as Galloway Company, and Liberty Escrow Company, Plaintiffs and Respondents,

v.

Ruby MERCURIO, Defendant and Appellant.
Civ. 21140.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California.

Dec. 16, 1955.

Rehearing Denied Jan. 11, 1956.

Hearing Denied Feb. 8, 1956.

Action for specific performance of agreement and escrow instructions to exchange plaintiffs' property for defendant's property, wherein defendant filed cross-complaint for fraud, money had and received, cancellation and damages, and defendant named escrow holder and real estate broker as cross-defendants. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Jerold E. Weil, J., rendered judgment for plaintiffs, and appeal was taken. The District Court of Appeal, Doran, J., held that failure of real estate broker to deliver copy of exchange agreement to defendant at time her signature was obtained, as required by Business and Professions Code, did not render agreement invalid and unenforceable where there was no showing that defendant was misled or prejudiced in any way by such failure, and where neither plaintiffs nor defendant asked broker for copy of such agreement until defendant decided to attempt to rescind, at which time broker promptly delivered copies.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Appeal and Error ☞169

Appellate court would not consider issue raised for first time on appeal.

2. Exchange of Property ☞3(1)

Failure of real estate broker in property exchange transaction to deliver copy of exchange agreement to one of parties at time her signature was obtained, as required by Business and Professions Code, did not render agreement invalid and unenforceable where there was no showing that such party was misled or prejudiced in any way by such failure and where neither of parties asked broker for copy of such agreement until one of them decided to attempt to rescind, at which time broker promptly delivered copies. West's Ann. Bus. & Prof. Code, § 10142.

3. Appeal and Error ☞991, 1010(1)

Issues of fact are for trier of fact to decide, and unless there is lack of evidence to support them, appellate court is without power to intervene.

Albert A. Albeck, Max Albeck, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Frye & Yudelsohn, North Hollywood, for respondents.

DORAN, Justice.

This is an appeal from the judgment.

As recited in appellant's brief, "Plaintiffs brought an action against defendant for specific performance of an agreement and escrow instructions to exchange their property for defendant's property.

"The complaint alleged the execution of the exchange agreement on September 17, 1953, and the exchange escrow instructions on the following day.

"The exchange agreement provided for the exchange of plaintiffs' 4-unit apartment house located on Riverside Drive, North Hollywood, California, together with certain furnishings, for defendant's 20-unit motel, known as the Santa Fe Motel, located on Firestone Boulevard in South Gate, California, together with all furnishings except for those in the manager's apartment. The agreement further provided that plaintiffs' property was priced at $37,900.00 and was subject to a trust deed in the sum of $13,704.39, payable $145.00 per month 'at 5½%', leaving an equity of $24,195.61 as of September 1, 1953; that defendant's property was priced at $95,000.00 subject to a loan of record of $47,150.00 (a superimposed figure) payable $530.00 per month at 6% interest, leaving an equity of '$47,150.00' (also a corrected figure). In addition to the exchange of these properties, the agreement further provided for the transfer by plaintiffs to defendant of a trust deed on a parcel of property in Laguna Beach in the sum of $19,474.00 payable $125.00 per month at 5% interest and for the payment of $3,480.00 (a superimposed figure) by plaintiffs to defendant. Provision was made for termite clearance to be furnished by both parties and payment of real estate commissions in the sum of $1,895.00 by plaintiffs and $2,850.00 by defendant.

"The exchange escrow instructions executed the following day similarly provided for the exchange of the properties and transfer of the Laguna Beach trust deed. However, in this document it was provided that defendant was to pay to plaintiffs $4,180.39 in addition to the transfer of her motel to them, and that the assignment of the Laguna Beach trust deed was to be 'without recourse.'

"Plaintiffs alleged that the escrow instruction carried out the exchange agreement.

"The complaint further alleged performance of the agreement and escrow instructions by plaintiffs except for the deposit of $1,680.39 in the escrow. As an excuse for such default in performance, it was alleged that the deposit of this sum was not required 'except upon a certain date and pursuant to the performance of certain conditions by defendant Ruby Mercurio', and that prior to the time 'of said performance by the plaintiffs', defendant rescinded and repudiated the agreement. It was further alleged that the value of defendant's equity in her property was substantially equal to the value of the property to be transferred to her by plaintiffs, that the agreement and escrow instructions were fair, just and reasonable to each of the parties and that defendant's repudiation of the agreement was without justification."

The $1,680.39 above mentioned was paid later. Other incidental questions such as real estate commissions, accounting, etc., referred to in other causes of actions need not be detailed.

"Plaintiffs prayed for specific performance of both, the exchange agreement and the exchange escrow instructions, or in the alternative, for the damages alleged in the Second Cause of Action, and for an accounting of the rents as set forth in the Third Cause of Action."

As recited in appellant's opening brief, "An answer and cross-complaint was filed by defendant. In her answer, defendant alleged general and specific denials of the allegations of the complaint except that she admitted the execution of the exchange agreement and the exchange escrow instructions, but alleged that they were procured by mistake, fraud and misrepresentation, that she rescinded and repudiated the agreements on those grounds, and that she has continuously remained in possession of the motel and collected the rents therefrom. As a second defense, defendant alleged the lack of plaintiffs' right to maintain the action by reason of their default.

"Defendant's cross-complaint was for fraud, money had and received, cancellation and damages. In addition to the plaintiffs, the escrow holder Liberty Escrow Company and the real estate broker Alyce Galloway, doing business as Galloway Company, were named as cross-defendants."

The trial judge following a lengthy trial, rendered judgment in favor of plaintiff.

It is contended on appeal,

"(1) That the exchange agreement and exchange escrow instructions are not sufficiently certain to warrant specific performance;

"(2) That the failure of intervenor to deliver a copy of the exchange agreement to defendant at the time her signature was obtained as required by Section 10142 of the Business and Professions Code, rendered the agreement invalid and unenforceable;

"(3) That defendant had no mutually enforceable remedy of specific performance against the plaintiffs;

"(4) That the findings of fact are insufficient to support the judgment;

"(5) That the finding that plaintiffs and defendant entered into the exchange agreement and exchange escrow agreement is contradictory and inconsistent with the finding that plaintiffs were required to pay defendant the sum of $4,180.39;

"(6) That there is no substantial evidence to support certain specified findings of fact;

"(7) That the exclusion and admission of evidence as specified was error;

"(8) That there was a fatal variance between the pleading, proof and the judgment;

"(9) That the complaint for specific performance does not state a cause of action."

With regard to Item I, respondent points out that, "The pleadings of the defendant and the transcript of the lengthy trial had in this matter are completely devoid of any contention by the defendant that her contract with plaintiffs was uncertain in any particular as to the price to be paid or which of the parties was to pay to the other the $4,180.39."

[1] Appellant's reply is as follows: "Respondents then argue that defendant never raised the question of the uncertainty of the contract in the pleadings or at the trial. The answer to this argument is that if the contract pleaded is uncertain then the complaint fails to state a cause of action for specific performance." Thus this issue is raised for the first time on appeal. The record supports respondents' contention with relation to this issue.

[2] With regard to Item II, this contention is highly technical. As pointed out by respondent, "there is no evidence that defendant was misled or prejudiced in any way by the failure to give defendant a copy of the Exchange Agreement. Said Exchange Agreement was signed by defendant the evening of September 15, 1953, the very next morning, all of the parties met and the escrow instructions were prepared and executed. Certainly, the terms of the Agreement were at that time still fresh in the minds of all of the parties. Also, neither plaintiffs nor the defendant asked intervenor for a copy of said Exchange Agreement until defendant decided to attempt to rescind, at which time intervenor promptly delivered copies."

As to Item IV, it too is technical. The argument on this subject relates to the insufficiency of the findings. Without going into detail, it is noted that a review of the record reveals no prejudicial error in this regard.

Intervenor respondent, the broker in the transaction, points out that, "After the Exchange Agreement was signed, it was agreed between the parties that they would go to escrow the following morning. It was Appellant who suggested the Liberty Escrow Company. The parties all met again the following morning at the Liberty Escrow Company. Each of the parties brought numerous documents, which were subsequently introduced in evidence, and which were left with the escrow. The escrow instructions were signed after being prepared by June Connelly, the Escrow Clerk, and after each of the parties had an opportunity to read them.

"Subsequent to the escrow, there appeared to be no dissatisfaction with this transaction until shortly before September 30, 1953, when Mrs. Mercurio had a conversation with Intervenor in which Appellant stated that she could not go through with the deal if she had to pay the termite bill which was approximately $1,200.00. Thereafter, Mrs. Mercurio, accompanied by a woman then unknown to the parties but identified as a Mrs. Gellerman, a broker, spoke with the Intervenor and stated, in Mrs. Mercurio's presence, that she, Mrs. Gellerman, thought that this was a bad deal, and that she could sell Appellant's property and that her sale would be a better transaction. After this conversation, Appellant sent a Notice of Rescission and Cancellation on September 30, 1953.

"Subsequently, Respondents brought this action."

[3] The issues are largely questions of fact. These issues of course are for the trial judge to decide. Unless there is a lack of evidence to support them the appellate court is without power to intervene. A review of record reveals that the evidence is sufficient to support the findings.

The record reveals no prejudice as to the court's rulings on the admissibility and inadmissibility of evidence and appellant's contention "that there was a fatal variance between the pleadings, proof and the judgment", lacks support in the record.

A review of the record reveals no prejudicial errors. The judgment is affirmed.

WHITE, P. J., and NOURSE, Justice pro tem., concur.

137 Cal.App.2d 547

Kaylin Teresa HARLOW et al., Plaintiffs and Respondents,

v.

Max VAN DUSEN et al., Defendants.

Gladys Oxford, Administratrix, etc.,
Appellant.

Civ. 20976.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California.

Dec. 6, 1955.

Rehearing Denied Dec. 30, 1955.

Action against administratrix of estate of automobile host and driver of other automobile for death of guests. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Wilbur C. Curtis, J., granted nonsuit to driver of other automobile and entered judgment in favor of plaintiffs, and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Doran, J., held that where deceased host was approaching a curve and hill crest on slippery, wet, dark night and passed another automobile at speed between 65 and 70 miles per hour, heedless of warning signs and oncoming automobile, host was guilty of wilful misconduct.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Automobiles ⇨181(1)

The terms "reckless driving" and "wilful misconduct" as used in automobile guest statute are synonymous. Vehicle Code, § 403.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Reckless Driving" and "Wilful Misconduct".

2. Automobiles ⇨245(24)

Question of reckless driving or wilful misconduct within automobile guest statute is essentially one of fact for determination by fact finder. Vehicle Code, § 403.

3. Automobiles ⇨181(7)

Excessive speed alone is not necessarily wilful misconduct within automobile guest statute, nevertheless speed is an important element to be considered since it, coupled with other circumstances, may constitute wilful misconduct. Vehicle Code, § 403.

4. Appeal and Error ⇨989

Where a verdict is attacked as being unsupported, power of appellate court begins and ends with a determination as to whether there is any substantial evidence, contradicted or uncontradicted, which will support conclusion reached by jury.

5. Automobiles ⇨244(20)

In action against administratrix of estate of automobile host for death of guests, evidence that host was approaching a curve and hill crest on slippery, wet, dark night and passed another automobile at a speed of between 65 to 70 miles per hour, heedless of warning signs and oncoming automobile, supported finding of wilful misconduct of host. Vehicle Code, § 403.

6. Automobiles ⇨181(1)

One who, while driving an automobile, knowingly flirts with danger and, without necessity or emergency compelling him, takes a chance on killing or injuring himself and others, who may be so unfortunate as to be riding with him, is guilty of wilful misconduct, within automobile guest statute. Vehicle Code, § 403.

7. Trial ⇨252(8)

In action against administratrix of estate of host driver for death of guests, where there was no evidence to support affirmative defense of contributory negligence or assumption of risk, trial court properly refused to instruct jury on those subjects. Vehicle Code, § 403; West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 1963, subd. 4.

8. Trial ⇨252(1)

It is not error to refuse to give a proposed instruction where there is no evidence to support the theory upon which it is drawn.

Early, Maslach, Foran & Williams, Los Angeles, and Victor E. Williams and Donald J. Pierr, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Toxey H. Smith, Los Angeles, for respondents.

DORAN, Justice.

The administratrix of the Estate of Neal Calvin Oxford, Deceased, is here appealing from a judgment, after trial by jury, in favor of the respondents, awarding damages for the deaths of respondents' husbands and fathers, respectively, which occurred while the latter were riding as guests in a Studebaker automobile driven by Neal Oxford, deceased. The action herein is based upon the theory of wilful misconduct on the part of Neal Oxford who, along with the two guests Francis Harlow and Marco Piscitelli, died as a result of the accident.

The accident happened when the car, of which the three decedents were the sole occupants, traveling west along Highway 99 near Pomona, went into a spinning skid onto the wrong side of the highway, colliding with another car traveling in the opposite direction. Max Van Dusen, driver of the other car, named as a defendant, is not a party to this appeal, a nonsuit having been granted at the conclusion of the plaintiffs' case.

Francis Harlow, Marco Piscitelli and Neal Calvin Oxford were friends working together at the Pomona Convair plant, and on the afternoon of March 19, 1953, Harlow and Piscitelli, accompanied by several other men, "played a few games of ping pong at the plant, and then, as they had done on previous occasions, set out on an evening of social relaxation", to quote from appellant's brief. "They first went to a place called the French Village, where they were joined by Neal Oxford * * *. At the French Village they had a few beers and played shuffle board. Later on, five of them went to another resort called the Alibi Supper Club * * * (where) the men conversed and listened to the orchestra and apparently had one or more drinks. According to Wesley West, one of those on the party, no one was intoxicated when he left the Alibi at about midnight. * * * West, * * * was the last of the party to see his three friends alive.

As disclosed by the record, the three decedents, Oxford, Harlow and Piscitelli, were next observed after midnight riding in Oxford's car, with Oxford driving, a few seconds before the crash. The three men were sitting in the front seat. The Oxford car was proceeding west on United States Highway 99, in an area known as Kellogg Hill. Witness Gerald Murphy, who was also proceeding west, by means of the rear view mirror, observed the Oxford car directly behind and in the righthand lane, just before Oxford passed Murphy's car.

According to Murphy's testimony, summarized in respondents' brief, "The night was dark, a light rain or mist was falling and the highway was slick all over. Murphy's car was traveling about 50 miles an hour when Oxford's car swung into the left lane to pass him. * * * a conservative estimate of its speed would be 65 to 70 miles an hour. About two or three seconds after Oxford passed Murphy, his car went into a spin, swung around twice in a clockwise direction, crossed over the double line and crashed into the eastbound Van Dusen automobile on the other side of the road. At no time before the accident did the red brake lights of Oxford's car go on."

It appears that the Kellogg Hill, a four-lane highway, proceeds in a series of 3 to 4 curves to the crest of the hill towards which the Oxford car was proceeding. State Highway Patrol Officer McArthur roughly estimated the grade at "from 5 to 7 percent, maybe 10 percent", and testified, "We consider them rather sharp curves so far as an accident hazard is concerned".

The road in the accident area has warning signs reading, "Slippery When Wet", also "Slow", "Downgrade", and signs indicating curves in the road. The accident occurred between two of the curves, about 100 to 150 feet west of one curve and just before the road bent into the succeeding curve. The night was dark, and the road had no lights or other illumination. The officer found no skidmarks, and did not smell alcohol on any of the parties. Oxford had frequently used the Kellogg Hill highway.

The jury found a verdict of $55,336.25 in favor of the Harlow heirs, and $33,866.47 for the Piscitelli heirs. Defendant's motion for a new trial was denied, followed by the present appeal from the judgment against the Oxford estate.

It is appellant's contention that, at most, Oxford's conduct did not amount to wilful misconduct but was no more than negligence, under the guest law. Appellant also urges that the questions whether the guests, Harlow and Piscitelli, were guilty of contributory negligence, or assumed the risk attendant upon the ride, should have been submitted to the jury, and that it was reversible error for the trial court to refuse to give instructions on such issues.

Under the provisions of Section 403 of the Vehicle Code, there can be no recovery for the injury or death of a guest riding in a vehicle "unless the plaintiff in any such action establishes that such injury or death proximately resulted from the intoxication or wilful misconduct of said driver".

[1,2] As pointed out in respondents' brief, the term "wilful misconduct" has been given a broad interpretation. In some cases it has been defined as the intentional doing of an act either with a knowledge that serious injury is a probable result or "the intentional doing of an act with a wanton and reckless disregard of its possible result". Jones v. Harris, 104 Cal. App.2d 347, 231 P.2d 561, 564. Reckless driving and wilful misconduct are held to be synonymous terms, and as said in Hastings v. Serleto, 61 Cal.App.2d 672, 143 P.2d 956, 961, such reckless driving or wilful misconduct "is essentially one of fact for determination by the fact finder".

[3] Although, as stated by appellant, excessive speed alone is not necessarily wilful misconduct, nevertheless, as pointed out in respondents' brief, "speed is an important element to be considered since it, coupled with other circumstances, may constitute wilful misconduct". In several reported cases, a speed of 60 miles per hour has been held to constitute wilful misconduct when conjoined with such facts as a damp highway, a misty night requiring windshield wipers, etc. Hallman v. Richards, 123 Cal. App.2d 274, 266 P.2d 812 is an example of such holdings, involving a factual situation not dissimilar from that here presented.

[4] It is unnecessary to cite authorities in support of the well established rule that when a verdict is attacked as being unsupported, the power of the appellate court begins and ends with a determination as to whether there is any substantial evidence, contradicted or uncontradicted, which will support the conclusion reached by the jury.

[5] In the instant case, the record discloses substantial evidence of wilful misconduct as defined by the authorities. As summarized in respondents' brief, "Oxford was a driver familiar with the road and its hazards—the fact that it was curving and winding, that he was approaching another curve and the crest of a hill and that the road was slippery when wet. Yet, on a dark, wet, slippery night, he proceeded to pass a car at a speed between 65 to 70 miles an hour, heedless of warning signs and the approach of an oncoming car".

[6] From such evidence the jury could well believe that the case was one coming within the purview of Francesconi v. Belluomini, 28 Cal.App.2d 701, 705, 83 P.2d 298, 300, where it is said: "To us it seems clear that one who, while driving an automobile, knowingly flirts with danger and, without necessity or emergency compelling him, 'takes a chance' on killing or injuring himself and others, who may be so unfortunate as to be riding with him, is guilty of willful misconduct". The question whether Oxford's conduct, under existing circumstances, was such as to constitute wilful negligence, was essentially one of fact which a jury has resolved in favor of the respondents.

[7,8] The appellant's contention that the trial court erred in not instructing the jury on the subjects of contributory negligence and assumption of risk on the part of Oxford's guests, is without merit. As pointed out in the respondents' brief, there was no evidence to support the affirmative defenses of contributory negligence or assumption of risk, matters as to which the appellant had the burden of proof. "Concerning the conduct of Harlow and Piscitelli, nothing is shown except that in the fleeting glimpse of them caught by witness Murphy, a few seconds before the accident, they were seated in the front seat of Oxford's car. Nothing more. Under the circumstances the only evidence of their conduct was the rebuttable presumption of due care provided for in Section 1963(4) of the Code of Civil Procedure". It is not error to refuse to give a proposed instruction where there is no evidence to support the theory upon which it is drawn. Davenport v. Stratton, 24 Cal.2d 232, 149 P.2d 4.

As before indicated, there is substantial evidence in support of the verdict and judgment, and the record reflects no reversible error.

The judgment is affirmed.

WHITE, P. J., and NOURSE, J. pro tem., concur.

137 Cal.App.2d 672

Sol COOPER and Fidel Sanchez, doing business as the Wonder Bar, Appellants,

v.

The STATE BOARD OF EQUALIZATION of the State of California, Respondent.
Civ. 16706.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 1, California.

Dec. 9, 1955.

Proceeding for a writ of mandate to review the State Board's decision in revoking the liquor license of petitioners on the ground that they permitted the solicitation of patrons to buy alcoholic beverages. The Superior Court for the City and County of San Francisco, Harry J. Neubarth, J., entered judgment denying application for the writ and the petitioners appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Peters, P. J., held that revocation was proper on the ground that the licensees permitted girls to solicit drinks on the premises, that the statutes prohibiting such solicitation were not invalid, and that the penalty of revocation was not excessive.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Intoxicating Liquors $\S$ 108(5)

In proceeding to set aside revocation of a liquor license on ground that girls in a bar solicited drinks from patrons, once it was proved that the bartender, hired by licensee, knew that soliciting was going on, not only by girls but by two employees of licensees, and that such solicitation was open, obvious and frequent, and that a tally was kept of the drinks solicited, the Board was justified in inferring that the owners and operators of the bar had the specific intent to hire the employees for solicitation purposes, and to encourage the other girls to solicit drinks. West's Ann. Bus. & Prof. Code, §§ 24200, 25657; Pen. Code, § 303.

2. Intoxicating Liquors 108(5)

In proceeding to set aside revocation of a liquor license, evidence was sufficient to support a finding that the licensees personally hired or permitted girls at the bar to solicit drinks on the premises. West's Ann. Bus. & Prof.Code, §§ 24200, 25657; Pen. Code, § 303.

3. Intoxicating Liquors ⇨116

The statutes prohibiting the employment on licensed premises of persons for purpose of soliciting patrons to purchase alcoholic beverages do not require that the accused licensees personally hire or permit the solicitation in order to invoke the penalties of the statutes. West's Ann. Bus. & Prof.Code, § 25657; Pen.Code, § 303.

4. Statutes ⇨220

That the statute providing that every licensee or agent of a licensee keeping in conjunction with licensed premises, any disorderly house, expressly provides for the vicarious liability of principal for the acts of his agent, did not establish that the omission of similar language in the statute making it unlawful in any licensed on sale premises to employ persons to solicit patrons to purchase alcoholic beverages meant that the accused licensees could not be held responsible, unless they personally hired or permitted the solicitation. West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, §§ 25657, 25607, 25632.

5. Intoxicating Liquors ⇨106(1)

A licensed employer on a licensed on sale premises may be disciplined to the extent of revocation of his license for the acts of his employees.

6. Principal and Agent ⇨189(4)

A pleading alleging that defendant committed a certain act is an allegation that in legal effect the defendant was responsible for the act, that is, that defendant through his agent committed the act, or defendant personally committed it, and either can be proved, under an allegation that "defendant" committed the act.

7. Intoxicating Liquors ⇨108(4)

That accusation seeking revocation of an on sale license charged licensees with violations of the pertinent statutes, but did not refer to vicarious liability of the licensees for acts of employees in soliciting patrons to buy drinks, did not require Board to prove personal violations by the licensees. West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, § 25657; Pen.Code, § 303.

8. Intoxicating Liquors ⇨99

A liquor license has certain attributes of property, but it is a type of property which the state, under the police power, has the power to control and regulate.

9. Constitutional Law ⇨287

As long as the State Board of Equalization acts within its jurisdiction in revoking an on sale liquor license, and as long as its proceedings comply with the Administrative Procedure Act, and there is no abuse of discretion and its findings are supported by substantial evidence, a revocation of the license cannot be assailed as deprivation of property without due process. West's Ann. Bus. & Prof.Code, §§ 24200, 25657; West's Ann.Gov.Code, § 11370 et seq.; Pen.Code, § 303.

10. Constitutional Law ⇨296(1)

Intoxicating Liquors ⇨15

The statutes prohibiting the employment on licensed premises of persons for the purpose of solicitation of patrons to buy drinks are not unconstitutional as depriving the licensees of a valuable property right without due process. West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, § 25657; Pen.Code, § 303.

11. Constitutional Law ⇨318

The type of hearing involved in revocation of an on sale liquor license for acts of the licensees in permitting the solicitation of patrons to buy drinks complies with constitutional requirements.

12. Criminal Law ⇨13

Penal statutes may not be uncertain or vague, and must fairly apprise the public of the conduct prohibited.

13. Criminal Law ⇨13

The statutes prohibiting the employment upon licensed premises of persons for solicitation of patrons to buy drinks are not void for want of certainty required by law on the ground that the language of the statute is so broad as to apply to legitimate entertainers. West's Ann.Bus. & Prof. Code, § 25657; Pen.Code, § 303.

14. Intoxicating Liquors ⇨116

The statutes prohibiting the employment upon licensed on sale premises and places where alcoholic beverages are sold to be consumed on the premises of persons soliciting patrons to purchase beverages only prohibits direct solicitation of drinks, and does not prohibit the purchase of drinks by patrons of their own initiative while watching entertainment or when asked by a waitress if they desire service. West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, § 25657; Pen.Code, § 303.

15. Constitutional Law ☞70(3)

Where the Legislature has seen fit to prohibit the soliciting or begging of drinks or the hiring or permitting of persons in a bar to do so on the ground that such acts were morally reprehensible, matter was within the legislative orbit and was not a judicial question, but one of legislative policy. West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, §§ 24200, 25657; Pen.Code, § 303.

16. Intoxicating Liquors ☞106(4)

Revocation of an on sale liquor license on the ground that licensees knowingly permitted girls to solicit patrons to buy alcoholic beverages was not improper on the ground that penalty of revocation was excessive. West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, §§ 24200, 25657; Pen.Code, § 303.

James C. Purcell, San Francisco, for appellants.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Carl W. Wyncoop, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

PETERS, Presiding Justice.

Cooper and Sanchez, as the licensees, owners and operators of a bar in San Francisco, were duly charged by the State Board of Equalization, the body then having constitutional authority to enforce the terms of the Alcoholic Beverage Act, with having violated sections 24200 and 25657 of the Business and Professions Code, and Penal Code, section 303. The hearing officer found that the charged offenses had been committed and recommended revocation of the license. The Board approved this recommendation, and ordered the license revoked. The petitioners, thereupon, sought a writ of mandate in the Superior Court to review the Board's decision. The Superior Court, on appropriate findings and conclusions, entered its judgment denying the application for the writ. Petitioners appeal from that judgment.

There is no need to review the evidence in detail. Suffice it to say that four enforcement officers testified that they visited the licensed premises on several occasions; that to the knowledge of the bartender, waitresses employed by the petitioners, or girls loitering at the bar, solicited the officers to buy drinks for them; that many such drinks were purchased for the girls by the officers at the solicitation of the girls; that each time the waitresses or girls solicited a drink, when the drink was served, the bartender, in a separate glass, furnished them with a small wooden or plastic stirring rod which they immediately placed in their hand bags; that this procedure was followed whether the waitresses or girls ordered straight whiskey, a mixed drink or wine. The officers observed this procedure as to drinks purchased for the waitresses or girls by other patrons of the bar. The officers also observed that when, on occasion, the girls bought drinks for themselves, no separate glass with a stirring rod was furnished. One of the officers observed one of the girls, at about closing time, present the stirring rods to the bartender, who counted them, and then handed the girl some money. Several of the officers testified to seeing one or the other of the appellants on the premises on several occasions while they were present and while the procedures in reference to the stirring rods were being carried on by the bartender and the waitresses and the girls. When the officers finally arrested the participants they found that all of the girls in question, including two waitresses employed by the bar, had many of these stirring rods in their possession.

The two petitioners, the owners of the liquor license involved, admitted that the bartender was employed by them, as were two of the girls, who were employed as waitresses. They denied that they ever allowed the waitresses or any girls to beg or solicit drinks in their establishment. They testified that the waitresses were paid a straight salary by check, and received no other compensation; that they had no knowledge that any girl ever solicited drinks on the premises; that it was the custom in their bar, when the patrons purchased a whiskey mixed drink, to serve the whiskey separate from the mix, together with a stirring rod, so that the patron could mix his own drink. The stirring rods are not reused. Sanchez, one of the petitioners, admitted that he was familiar with the law involved in these proceedings because in 1951 he had been charged, in connection with another bar he then operated, with the employment of persons to procure the sale of alcoholic beverages in violation of section 303 of the Penal Code, and his license was then suspended for 30 days.

On this evidence the hearing officer found, and the Board adopted the findings, that on three specified dates the petitioners employed two named persons for the purpose of procuring or encouraging the purchase and sale of alcoholic beverages, and on certain specified dates knowingly permitted certain named girls to loiter on the premises for the purpose of begging or soliciting patrons of the bar to purchase them alcoholic beverages. The first charge is a violation of section 303 of the Penal Code and section 25657(a) of the Business and Professions Code, while the second charge is a violation of section 25657(b) of that code. The basic conclusion was that continuance of the license "would be contrary to public welfare and morals."

There can be no doubt that the evidence overwhelmingly supports the findings that employees of the bar, and the girls in the bar, solicited drinks from patrons, and that the bartender knew of and participated in this activity. Appellants make no contention to the contrary. Their basic argument is that neither of the appellants personally hired or permitted these women to solicit drinks. Without such personal participation, it is claimed, the revocation was improper.

[1] There are several answers to this contention. The first is that the officers testified that Cooper was present on the premises on at least one occasion, for several hours, during which time the officers were solicited to buy drinks, and during which time several of the girls solicited service men patrons to buy drinks. During this period one of the officers observed the bartender pay off one of the girls when she delivered to him her stirring rods. The officers also placed Sanchez on the premises on two occasions when similar solicitation occurred. Once it was proved that the bartender, hired by appellants, knew that soliciting was going on, not only by girls in the bar but by two employees of appellants, and that such solicitation was open, obvious and frequent, and that a tally was kept of the drinks solicited, the Board was justified in inferring that appellants, as the owners and operators of the bar, had the specific intent (if one is required) to hire the employees for solicitation purposes, and to permit and encourage the other girls to solicit drinks. This was the precise holding of this court in Cornell v. Reilly, 127 Cal. App.2d 178, at page 186, 273 P.2d 572, at page 578, where it was stated: "The fact that the girls were employed by appellant is conceded. The fact that they, on numerous occasions, solicited drinks from patrons of the bar was established by substantial evidence, and is not denied. The fact that the bartender-manager Andrews knew of such solicitation was established by the record kept by the bar of all drinks consumed by the entertainers, even though paid for by a patron. Under such a state of facts the inference that such solicitation was an integral part of the employment of the entertainers is not only reasonable, but almost inevitable. Thus, even if it was necessary to establish that appellant had a specific intent to hire the employees for solicitation purposes, such fact was established by clear evidence and the reasonable inferences therefrom."

[2] Thus, the evidence is sufficient to support a finding that appellants personally hired or permitted these girls to solicit drinks on the premises. But even if the evidence were insufficient in this respect, this would not help appellants. No such finding is required under the law. The appellants as the owners and operators of the bar, and as licensees, are responsible for the acts of the bartender, and of their other employees.

[3] Appellants contend that the statutes involved require that the accused licensees cannot be held responsible unless they personally hired or permitted the solicitation. This contention is not supported by either the language of the pertinent statutes or by the cases interpreting those sections.

Penal Code section 303 reads: "It shall be unlawful for any person engaged in the sale of alcoholic beverages, other than in the original package, to employ upon the premises where the alcoholic beverages are sold any person for the purpose of procuring or encouraging the purchase or sale of such beverages * * *."

Business and Professions Code section 25657 states: "It is unlawful:

"(a) For any person to employ, upon any licensed on-sale premises, any hostess or entertainer for the purpose of procuring or encouraging the purchase or sale of alcoholic beverages * * *.

"(b) In any place of business where alcoholic beverages are sold to be consumed upon the premises, to employ or knowingly permit anyone to loiter in or about said premises for the purpose of begging or soliciting any patron or customer of, or visitor in, such premises to purchase any alcoholic beverages for the one begging or soliciting. * * *"

[4] Appellants call attention to the fact that the sections do not expressly provide for the vicarious liability of the principal for the acts of his agent, and urge that other sections of the same act do so provide. For example, section 25601 of the Business and Professions Code provides: "Every licensee, or agent or employee of a licensee, who keeps * * * in conjunction with a licensed premises, any disorderly house * * *." See also §§ 25632, 25607, and 25661 of the Bus. & Prof. Code. The omission of similar language in section 25657 is found significant by appellants.

Appellants' interpretation of the language referring to employees in these other statutes is clearly unsound. The quoted language was not used to impose a vicarious liability upon the employer for the acts of his employee, but was inserted to add the personal liability of the employee to that of the employer. No such language was necessary in section 25657.

[5] The cases are uniform in holding that a licensed employer may be disciplined to the extent of revocation of his license for the acts of his employees. In Mantzoros v. State Bd. of Equalization, 87 Cal. App.2d 140, 144, 196 P.2d 657, 660, Justice Dooling had the following to say, about another section of the statute, in reference to the very contention here made: "It is to be noticed that the question in their case is not whether they are criminally liable for their employee's act, a question which we need not decide, but whether they can be subjected to discipline by the Board of Equalization because their employee made a sale of liquor at an hour forbidden by that section. The licensee, if he elects to operate his business through employees must be responsible to the licensing authority for their conduct in the exercise of his license, else we would have the absurd result that liquor could be sold by employees at forbidden hours in licensed premises and the licensees would be immune to disciplinary action by the board. Such a result cannot have been contemplated by the Legislature. Even in the case of criminal statutes vicarious liability for the acts of employees is not unknown."

In Cornell v. Reilly, 127 Cal.App.2d 178, 187, 273 P.2d 572, 578, this court, in regard to the question of vicarious liability for the very conduct involved in the instant case, after quoting with approval from the Mantzoros case, stated: "By virtue of the ownership of a liquor license such owner has a responsibility to see to it that the license is not used in violation of law. Obviously, the economic benefits of the solicitation of drinks by the entertainers with Andrews' knowledge and participation redounded to the benefit of appellant. The responsibility for Andrews' acts in the operation of the license can and should be imputed to appellant." See also Swegle v. State Board of Equalization, 125 Cal.App.2d 432, 270 P.2d 518.

Appellants suggest that these cases erroneously interpret the statutes involved and should be overruled. We were not impressed by this argument when we wrote the Cornell case, supra, and are not impressed with the argument now. We think that the statutes were correctly interpreted in the two cases last quoted from, and are content to rely upon them, without further elaboration.

[6,7] Appellants make a somewhat related argument, and that is that since the accusation charged the licensees with violations of the pertinent statutes, and did not refer to vicarious liability, it was incumbent on the Board to prove personal violation by the licensees, and since the Board did not (so it is contended) prove this, there was a fatal variance. This is, of course, a question of pleading. It is well settled that a pleading alleging that defendant committed a certain act is simply an allegation that in legal effect the defendant is responsible for the act—i. e., that defendant through his agent committed the act or that defendant personally committed it. Either can be proved under an allegation that “defendant” committed the act. Golceff v. Sugarman, 36 Cal.2d 152, 154, 222 P.2d 665.

[8] Appellants next contend that the statutes involved are unconstitutional in that they permit the deprivation of a valuable property right without due process. Of course a liquor license has certain attributes of property. It certainly has value and is sold commercially. But it is a type of property which the state, under the police power, has the power to control and regulate. The proper rule was stated in Tokaji v. State Board of Equalization, 20 Cal.App.2d 612, 614, 67 P.2d 1082, 1083, as follows: “It is well settled that the right to possess, make or deal in intoxicating liquor is not a privilege, nor such a property right that state legislation prohibiting, restricting, or regulating its manufacture, use, possession, distribution, or sale violates the Fourteenth Amendment of the Federal Constitution. [Citations.] Regarding this subject it was recently declared: ‘Unlike the rule with respect to the right to deal in ordinary commodities * * * there is no inherent right in a citizen to sell intoxicants * * * and a license to do so is not a proprietary right within the meaning of the due process clause of the Constitution; * * * it is but a permit to do what would otherwise be unlawful, and consequently a statute authorizing its revocation does not violate the due process clause * * *.’” Citing State Board of Equalization v. Superior Court, 5 Cal.App.2d 374, 377, 42 P.2d 1076. See also People v. Jemnez, 49 Cal. App.2d Supp. 739, 121 P.2d 543.

[9–11] As long as the Board acted within its jurisdiction, and as long as its proceedings complied with the Administrative Procedure Act, Gov. Code, § 11370 et seq., and as long as there was no abuse of discretion, and as long as its findings are supported by substantial evidence, a revocation of a license cannot be successfully assailed as a deprivation of property without due process. All procedural requirements were met in this case. Appellants admit that this is so. App.Op.Br. 11. Certainly the type of hearing here involved complies with constitutional requirements. Covert v. State Board of Equalization, 29 Cal.2d 125, 173 P.2d 545.

[12–14] Appellants next assail the two statutes on the ground that they are void for the want of the certainty required by law. It is, of course, the law that penal statutes may not be uncertain or vague, and must fairly apprise the public of the conduct prohibited. Do these statutes fail to meet that test? We think not. Appellants argue that the language of the statutes “to employ * * * any person for the purpose of procuring or encouraging the purchase or sale of such beverages” is so broad as to apply to legitimate entertainers, who by providing entertainment necessarily encourage the sale of drinks or to a waitress who asks a patron if he desires a drink. The contention requires but scant consideration. The Legislature obviously intended to prohibit the direct “procuring or encouraging the purchase” of alcoholic beverages, and not the incidental increase of consumption of liquor by persons watching entertainment furnished by the management. We have no difficulty in holding that the statute clearly and without ambiguity only prohibits direct solicitation of drinks, and does not prohibit the purchase of drinks by patrons of their own initiative and volition while watching entertainment or when asked by a waitress if they desire service. The courts have had no difficulty in ascertaining what these statutes prohibit. See Chosick v. Reilly, 125 Cal.App.2d 334, 270 P.2d 547; Cornell v. Reilly, 127 Cal.App.2d 178, 273 P.2d 572; Hobson v. Reilly, 132 Cal.App.2d 275, 281 P.2d 877.

[15] Appellants make frequent reference in their briefs to the fact that there was no evidence that the girls involved solicited any of the patrons for purposes of prostitution, and seem to contend that without such solicitation the mere solicitation of drinks is not immoral. There is no merit to this contention. The Legislature has seen fit to prohibit the soliciting or begging of drinks, or the hiring or permitting of persons in the bar to do so. The Legislature did so because it felt that such acts were morally reprehensible. This was within the legislative orbit. It is not a judicial question at all, but one of legislative policy.

[16] The last mentioned argument leads to the next contention of appellants, and that is that the penalty of revocation was excessive. In at least three prior cases, being the three cases last cited, the revocation of licenses was affirmed for conduct similar to that involved here. Obviously, the Board did not abuse its discretionary powers in revoking the license for the conduct here involved.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

BRAY and FRED B. WOOD, JJ., concur.

GUARANTEE INSURANCE COMPANY,
Petitioner,
v.
INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION
OF the State of CALIFORNIA, and
J. A. McCleskey, Respondents.
Civ. 8886.

District Court of Appeal, Third District,
California.
Dec 9, 1955.

Hearing Denied Feb. 1, 1956.

Proceeding by compensation carrier against Industrial Accident Commission and claimant to review a workmen's compensation award on ground that claimant, who was injured while operating alfalfa chopper, was employee of lessees, with whom claimant and his father, as lessors, engaged in a dairy business, and who paid claimant to chop alfalfa rather than hire full time employee at higher rate. The District Court of Appeal, Schottky, J., held that evidence was sufficient to sustain finding that claimant was an employee, not an independent contractor or joint venturer.

Award affirmed.

1. Workmen's Compensation $\Rightarrow$ 1939

Where Industrial Accident Commission's findings are supported by substantial evidence or by inferences which may fairly be drawn from the evidence, even though evidence may be susceptible of opposing inferences, such findings will not be disturbed by an appellate tribunal.

2. Workmen's Compensation $\Rightarrow$ 1939

Question whether worker is an employee within meaning of Workmen's Compensation Act is question of mixed law and fact to be proved like any other question and is question on which Industrial Accident Commission's judgment is conclusive if the facts are in dispute.

3. Workmen's Compensation $\Rightarrow$ 1705

Question whether worker is an employee within meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Act becomes one of law only when but one inference can reasonably be drawn from the facts.

4. Workmen's Compensation ⇨1939

Where, two opposing inferences may be drawn from the evidence in workmen's compensation proceeding, and inference accepted by Industrial Accident Commission is reasonable and is supported by evidence in the record, such inference must be sustained.

5. Workmen's Compensation ⇨1344, 1349

In workmen's compensation proceeding, alleged employer has burden of establishing that injured person, who claims to be an employee, is an independent contractor or otherwise excluded from protection of the Workmen's Compensation Act if there is proof that the injured person was, at time of his injury, actually performing services for the alleged employer.

6. Workmen's Compensation ⇨1443, 1452

In proceeding by compensation carrier against Industrial Accident Commission and claimant to review and annul workmen's compensation award on ground that claimant, who was injured while operating alfalfa chopper, was employee of lessees, with whom claimant and his father, as lessors, engaged in a dairy business, and who paid claimant to chop alfalfa rather than hire full time employee at higher rate, evidence was sufficient to sustain finding that claimant was an employee, not an independent contractor or joint venturer. West's Ann.Labor Code, §§ 3351, 3353, 3357, 5705(a).

7. Workmen's Compensation ⇨1615

In workmen's compensation proceeding, evidence, which revealed that the $150 a month paid claimant was arrived at by taking one-half of wages that employers would have had to pay to farm hand for full time work and that claimant would have to work approximately half time to do the job involved, was sufficient to sustain Industrial Accident Commission's finding that claimant's earnings were at rate of $150 per month.

Everett A. Corten, Daniel C. Murphy, San Francisco, for respondent Industrial Accident Comm.

Frank B. Collier, Modesto, for respondent J. A. McCleskey.

SCHOTTKY, Justice.

This is a proceeding to review and annul an award of workmen's compensation benefits to J. A. McCleskey which is based on a finding that McCleskey was injured while acting as an employee of petitioner's assured, and not as an independent contractor or joint venturer.

The facts, which are not in substantial dispute, may be summarized as follows: Respondent McCleskey and his father had a life interest in 690 acres of agricultural land. On May 12, 1953, they entered into a three year agreement with Verne B. LaCross and Manuel Matizo whereby the lessees would supply at least 150 cows and certain equipment for the purpose of carrying on a dairy business upon the lessors' land. Among other things, the lease provided that the lessors would furnish suitable pasturage and/or necessary and proper feed for the milk cows at such time and in such quantity as should be determined by the parties. The lessors would not incur any other expenses. As rental of the premises and compensation for pasture and feed, the lessors would receive one-half of the proceeds of milk products produced. The lessees were to have 150 cows actually producing and averaging one pound of butterfat per cow per day, otherwise the lessors would be entitled to receive one-half pound of butterfat per cow per day. Petitioner became the workmen's compensation insurance carrier for the lessees, which, under the terms of the lease, was for the protection of all workers and employees of the lessees in and about the operation of the dairy.

Respondent McCleskey during the year 1953 received around $2,000 a month as his share of the milk checks. His obligation was fulfilled merely by growing, cutting and stacking hay, which the lessees took to the cows, or by letting the cows out to the pasture to eat green food. Later on it was noticed that insects in the pasture bothered the cows, and in April, 1954, the parties discussed feeding them green alfalfa in the corral. The new operation would require the alfalfa to be chopped up and loaded into a wagon. The parties figured that the operation would only require 4 hours or a half day's work, and rather than hire a full-time employee at about $300 per month they decided that the respondent McCleskey would do the job for $150 per month.

Mullen & Filippi, San Francisco, for petitioner.

McCleskey already had the chopper and tractor, and although he purchased the wagon after the agreement he testified that he needed it for other work on his own ranch. The alfalfa was sometimes hauled and chopped by Mr. McCleskey and sometimes by his hired hands. The lessees directed how much green alfalfa was fed to the stock. If milk production tended to diminish, they would order more green alfalfa to be chopped and brought to the cows. Other than this, no suggestions or directions were made about the manner in which the work was to be done. The green feeding operation was something new and none of the parties knew very much about it. There was no particular time for payment of the $150 a month and no deductions were made for state or federal tax purposes. In chopping the alfalfa on September 3, 1954, the knives became clogged. McCleskey put his right hand in to free them and was severely injured.

It was found that the injury caused temporary total disability beginning October 16, 1954, to January 31, 1955, at the rate of $21.38 a week, based upon earnings of $150 a month, and indefinitely thereafter until the further order of the Commission. The cost of medical treatment procured, together with future medical treatment, was awarded and jurisdiction was reserved for future determination of permanent disability.

Petitioner's first contention is that the evidence does not support the finding that respondent McCleskey was an employee of LaCross and Matizo. It quotes from section 3351 of the Labor Code as follows:

"'Employee' means every person in the service of an employer under any appointment or contract of hire or apprenticeship, express or implied, oral or written, whether lawfully or unlawfully employed."

Both petitioner and respondent quote section 3357 of the Labor Code which provides: "Any person rendering service for another, other than as an independent contractor, or unless expressly excluded herein, is presumed to be an employee." However, petitioner contends that McCleskey was not rendering service under a contract of hire. Petitioner argues that the proper construction of the original lease instrument is that it demises a portion of the premises, i. e., the barn and corrals, for the operation of a dairy, and it is also a contract for sale of feed necessary and proper for the 150 cow herd from the land retained by McCleskey and to be grown by him. It argues that the relationship of the parties, therefore, was that of vendor and vendee with respect to the feed to be provided for the dairy, the compensation to be a gross share of the profit; that the relationships of vendor-vendee and employer-employee are mutually exclusive; that one selling a product is not in service to the vendee, but is an equal and deals at arm's length and is not subject to the control of the other. Petitioner argues that when the parties agreed to green-feed the cattle there was no change in the terms of the original lease because it was McCleskey's obligation under the lease to furnish feed necessary and proper for the cows. Petitioner argues further that because of the outlay for equipment by McCleskey and, presumably, because he was to bear the cost of operating the equipment and maintaining it, it was agreed that Matizo and LaCross would pay the $150 a month, and that this merely represented additional compensation for the feed.

Respondents in reply argue that the parties considered that McCleskey was fulfilling the original obligation by maintaining his pasture lands and permitting lessees to use them, and by furnishing stacked hay to the lessees. Respondents ask, "Could the lessees have compelled McCleskey to furnish them with chopped alfalfa? Could they have broken the lease or refused to pay him his percentage on the ground that he did not? We do not think so, and apparently they did not think so either. When they decided to feed chopped alfalfa to the cows they contemplated hiring someone to chop it. If they had hired anyone else he would certainly have been their employee. There was nothing to prevent them from entering into a new and additional agreement with McCleskey, which they did. Under this new and additional agreement, McCleskey was performing for them the service of chopping the alfalfa."

Petitioner contends further that even if McCleskey was in the broad sense rendering service, it was as an independent contractor, quoting Labor Code, section 3353, which provides:

"'Independent contractor' means any person who renders service for a specified recompense for a specified result, under the control of his principal as to the result of his work only and not as to the means by which such result is accomplished."

Respondents quote the following from section 5705 of the Labor Code:

"* * * The following are affirmative defenses, and the burden of proof rests upon the employer to establish them:

"(a) That an injured person claiming to be an employee was an independent contractor or otherwise excluded from the protection of this division where there is proof that the injured person was at the time of his injury actually performing service for the alleged employer."

They argue that because of the presumption of employment raised by Labor Code, section 3357, and the placing of the burden of proof on the petitioner to prove the relationship of independent contractor by Labor Code, section 5705, the burden of proof was upon the petitioner, and the petitioner did not sustain the burden or overcome the presumption. Respondents argue that as stated before any other person hired to do this work would obviously have been legally an employee. Therefore, say respondents, the presumption is squarely applicable and McCleskey should be considered an employee, citing Hillen v. Industrial Accident Commission, 199 Cal. 577, 250 P. 570; Skillman v. Industrial Accident Commission, 131 Cal.App. 493, 21 P.2d 658; Schaller v. Industrial Accident Commission, 11 Cal.2d 46, 77 P.2d 836; California Compensation Insurance Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 86 Cal. App.2d 861, 195 P.2d 880.

In Hillen v. Industrial Accident Commission, supra, the court said in 199 Cal. at page 580, 250 P. at page 571:

"By the terms of the Workmen's Compensation Law (Stats.1917, p. 831)

'every person in the service of an employer * * * under any appointment or contract of hire' is an employee. Section 8(a). Any person rendering service for another, other than as an independent contractor, or as expressly excluded by the provisions of the act, is presumed to be an employee. Section 8(b). It is admitted that Downing was at the time of his injury actually performing service for Hillen. Consequently, the burden of proof rests upon Hillen to establish that Downing was an independent contractor. Section 19(d) (1). It was therefore necessary for him to show that Downing was, within the definition of the term, a person rendering 'service, other than manual labor, for a specified recompense for a specified result, under the control of his principal as to the result of his work only and not as to the means by which such result is accomplished.' Section 8(b). Whether or not the relation of employer and employee existed in this case, under the oral contract entered into, is a question of mixed law and fact, to be proved like any other question. The finding of the commission, in effect, that the relation existed between Hillen and Downing, is binding on this court. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. v. Industrial Accident Comm., 180 Cal. 497, 499, 181 P. 788. Unless there is such an entire absence of evidence in the record as to render the finding unreasonable, or in excess of the powers of the commission, the court is not empowered to set it aside. Eastman Co. v. Industrial Accident

Comm., 186 Cal. 587, 598, 200 P. 17. The award of the commission may be annulled only if there is no substantial evidence in support of its findings. Press Pub. Co. v. Industrial Accident Comm., 190 Cal. 114, 124, 210 P. 820."

[1-5] It is apparent that the principal question that we must determine upon this appeal is whether or not the evidence before the Commission compels a finding that the services performed by McCleskey under the new and additional agreement were performed under an independent contractor relationship. The finding of the Commission was that "At the time of said injury applicant was not rendering services to defendant-employers, or either or both of them, as an independent contractor or as a joint venturer." As stated in Schaller v. Industrial Accident Commission, supra, 11 Cal.2d at page 50, 77 P.2d at page 838:

"Where findings made by the commission are supported by substantial evidence, or by inferences which may fairly be drawn from the evidence, even though the evidence be susceptible of opposing inferences, those findings will not be disturbed by an appellate tribunal. Schramm v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 15 Cal.App.2d 475, 481, 59 P.2d 858; Hartford Accident & Indemnity Co. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 202 Cal. 688, 693, 262 P. 309, 58 A.L.R. 1392; Archbishop v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 194 Cal. 660, 230 P. 1; Western P. R. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 193 Cal. 413, 224 P. 754. The question of whether a worker is an employee within the meaning of the Compensation Act [Act 4749, Deering's Gen.Laws, vol. 2, p. 2272 et seq.], is referred to as a question of mixed law and fact to be proved like any other question. Hillen v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 199 Cal. 577, 250 P. 570; La Franchi v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 213 Cal. 675, 3 P.2d 305. It is a question of fact upon which the judgment of the commission is conclusive where the facts are in dispute. It becomes a question of law only when but one inference can reasonably be drawn from the facts. Where two opposing inferences may be drawn from the evidence, and the inference accepted by the commission is reasonable, and is supported by evidence in the record, that inference must be sustained. Schramm v. Industrial Acc. Comm., supra; Western P. R. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., supra; Archbishop v. Industrial Acc. Comm., supra. Moreover, in cases of this character the burden of proof rests upon an alleged employer to establish 'that an injured person claiming to be an employee is an independent contractor or otherwise excluded from the protection of (the) act, where there is proof that such injured person was at the time of his injury actually performing service for the alleged employer'. [Citing cases.]"

Applying these well settled rules to the instant case we are convinced upon the record here that it was a question of fact for the respondent Commission to determine, and while the evidence and inferences therefrom might support a finding that the applicant McCleskey was rendering service as an independent contractor, there is substantial evidence to support the finding of the Commission that such relationship did not exist. For it is fairly inferable from the evidence that the new agreement as to the change in manner of feed, necessitating the chopping of the alfalfa, was not one that McCleskey was required to enter into and that LaCross and Matizo were willing to pay him $150 per month for the additional work required to be performed by him. The following testimony of McCleskey supports such a conclusion:

"A. Well, when we started the green feeding they figured they had too much work to do for themselves and rather than—and it wasn't enough to justify them hiring a full-time man, you know. It was a split shift, in other words, so they asked me if I would be interested in working it on the split shift that way, if I would be able to do the green feeding.

"Q. To do the green feeding you had to chop it up, is that it? A. I had to chop it, and it's loaded into a wagon that automatically unloads.

"Q. Was there anything said about you being paid to do the chopping? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. What was that? A. They told me they'd pay me $150.00 a month.

"Q. Who told you that? A. Mr. LaCross and Matizo."

[6] While it is true that there are features of the employment which may indicate a relationship of independent contractor, these only serve to create a conflict in the evidence and in the inferences to be drawn therefrom, which conflict the respondent Commission resolved adversely to petitioner. We are satisfied that there is substantial evidence to support the finding that McCleskey was an employee and not an independent contractor or a joint venturer.

[7] Petitioner's final contention is that the evidence does not support the finding that the earnings of respondent McCleskey were $150 per month. This contention lacks merit as the record shows that the $150 a month was arrived at by taking one-half of the wages that the employers would have had to pay a farmhand for full time work, because McCleskey would have to work approximately half time to do the job. We are convinced that this finding of the Commission is supported by the record.

The award is affirmed.

VAN DYKE, P. J., and PEEK, J., concur.

137 Cal.App.2d 701

Sophia NAPOLIN, Plaintiff and Appellant,
v.

HOTEL ROSE, Marcel Domergue, August Domergue, Rene Domergue and Arline M. Rolkin, Defendants and Respondents.

No. 16428.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 1, California.

Dec. 12, 1955.

As Amended Dec. 14, 1955.

Action by ground floor tenants against landlord and second floor tenant who maintained hotel on premises, to recover for injuries to a ground floor tenant when plaster fell from ceiling on her, on theory that plaster was weakened by water leaking from pipes under control of defendants. The Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, H. G. Jorgenson, J., entered judgments for defendants, and plaintiffs appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Fred B. Wood, J., held that misdeeds of hotel guests in breaking water basin from wall and causing basin to overflow by stopping it up and leaving faucet open, if they caused water to seep through floors so as to weaken plaster on floor below so as to cause it to fall were not such as would authorize recovery against defendants under res ipsa loquitur doctrine.

Judgments affirmed.

1. Landlord and Tenant ⇨160(11)

In action by ground floor tenants against landlord and tenant maintaining hotel above ground floor tenant's premises, to recover for injuries sustained to a ground floor tenant when plaster fell from ceiling on her, on theory that plaster had been weakened by water leaking from pipes allegedly under control of defendants, evidence sustained trial court's action in granting landlord a nonsuit and directing verdict in favor of second story tenants.

2. Landlord and Tenant ⇨170(1)

A landlord is not liable for consequences to others of a nuisance in connection with property in possession and control of tenant unless landlord authorized or permitted act which caused it to become nuisance occasioning injury.

3. Innkeepers ⇨141/4

A hotel operator is not responsible, under all circumstances, for misdeeds of a guest.

4. Innkeepers ⇨141/4

A hotel does not have exclusive control of room, fixtures and furniture assigned to guest, but the guest has at least partial control.

5. Innkeepers ⇨141/4

Alleged misdeeds of hotel guests in breaking basin from wall and in causing basin to overflow by stopping it up and leaving faucet open, where not such as to be normally expected and were not chargeable to hotel operator in action by building tenants on floor below hotel to recover for injuries because of falling plaster allegedly due to water damage, unless operator, after he learned of such deeds or should have learned of them, failed to abate them.

6. Negligence ⇨121(2)

As a general rule, res ipsa loquitur applies where accident is of such nature that it can be said, in light of past experience, that it probably was the result of negligence by someone and that defendant is probably person responsible.

7. Negligence ⇨121(2)

The mere fact that accident happened and that injury resulted does not of itself call doctrine of res ipsa loquitur into play.

8. Negligence ⇨121(2)

Doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is not applicable where it is at least equally probable that accident was caused by some fault for which defendants were not liable and where it cannot be said that it is more likely than not that accident was caused by negligence of defendants.

9. Innkeepers ⇨14¼

Landlord and Tenant ⇨169(4)

Misdeeds of hotel guests in breaking water basin from wall and causing basin to overflow by stopping it up and leaving faucet open, if they caused water to seep through floors so as to weaken plaster on ceiling below causing it to fall upon a tenant, were not such as would authorize recovery by such injured tenant against building owner and second floor tenant who maintained hotel, under res ipsa loquitur doctrine.

Morris Lowenthal, Juliet Lowenthal, San Francisco, Karl D. Lyon, San Francisco, of counsel, for appellant.

Cooley, Crowley & Gaither, San Francisco, for respondent Arline M. Rolkin.

1. Sophia was sitting at her sewing machine when the plaster fell in 1950. The machine had been in the same place for about 8 years.

Keith, Creede & Sedgwick, San Francisco, for respondents Hotel Rose, Marcel Domergue, August Domergue and Rene Domergue.

FRED B. WOOD, Justice.

Leo and Sophia Napolin brought this action for damages for injuries sustained by Sophia on the 15th of March, 1950, when plaster fell from the ceiling of their ground floor clothing shop, allegedly caused by the negligence of defendant Arline M. Rolkin, owner of the building and lessor of the plaintiffs, and the negligence of defendants Marcel, August and Rene Domergue, lessees of the upper floors of the building, which they operate as a hotel.

[1] Rolkin was granted a nonsuit and the Domergues a directed verdict. Plaintiffs have appealed. Their theory is that the plaster was weakened by water leaking from the pipes, above, which plaintiffs say served the several tenants of the building and were under the control of the defendants. Our examination of the record convinces us that there was a failure of proof at critical points and that the judgments must be affirmed.

An expert witness testified that he examined the plaster which fell and found water marks on it and on the ceiling. In his opinion, water got in there and caused this plaster to deteriorate and it collapsed; plaster can be affected, by absorption, for a distance of two feet from where the water comes through; the plaster might last for six months or a year and then all of a sudden collapse; it takes a long time for it to collapse, which will eventually occur from the vibration of streetcars or heavy trucks.

The only other evidence of water seepage into or through the plaster was that such occurred in 1948 near the front of the store and in August of 1949 near the back of the store, in each case several feet from the spot where the plaster fell when Sophia was injured.¹ As to those occasions, there was evidence that in 1948 a washbasin was pulled off the wall in one of the hotel rooms above plaintiffs' shop, by a person who rented the room and left in the night, and the hotel clerk shut off the valve as soon as he learned the water was running; and that in 1949 the occupant of a hotel room above the shop plugged the washbasin and left the water running from the faucet, which was remedied by the hotel defendants as soon as discovered. Plaintiffs would have us disregard this testimony because given by the defendants and therefore not binding on the plaintiffs. That is not the point. Plaintiffs (represented at the trial by other counsel than those upon this appeal) gave no evidence as to the cause of the plaster falling other than the expert's opinion that the plaster had been damaged by water some time in the past and the natural inference that the water probably came from above,² although some of the defendants argue it could have come in the form of steam from clothes pressing in plaintiffs' shop. Defendants then put in evidence their explanation of the 1948 and 1949 incidents, corroborated in part by the testimony of the plumber whom they employed upon occasion. They testified, also, that they had never had a broken pipe or a leak in any of the main pipes. This certainly did not aid plaintiffs in meeting the burden of proof which rested upon them. It filled no gap in their proof of the proximate cause of plaintiffs' injury. By indicating an independent source or cause, not chargeable to the defendants, this evidence served to emphasize the speculative nature of plaintiffs' claim.

She said she never noticed that anything occurred right above the sewing machine at any time. She never noticed any water dripping immediately above the machine.

There was some testimony to the effect that there were water marks in the plaster on the ceiling of plaintiffs' shop, but that fact, whatever its significance might otherwise have been, had not been brought to the attention of the defendants. Leo testified that he never told anyone that the plaster was loose there, where the accident occurred; he "didn't notice anything." In this connection we observe that plaintiffs in their closing brief, in disavowing knowledge upon their part of a dangerous condition in the ceiling, say: "The prior incidents occurred some distance away from the sewing machine where the plaster fell at the time of the accident. Plaintiff positively testified that prior to the accident she had never noticed any plaster chipping or any water dropping from the ceiling above the sewing machine. (R.T. 35.) Her husband also confirmed that prior to the accident he had never had any trouble with the ceiling in the area above the sewing machine (R.T. 62), * * * Plaintiffs claim there is evidence through the testimony of defendant August Dommegue that the water system was old and dilapidated, for which reason wash basins pulled off from the walls and broke the pipes when they came off. This is not correct. Plaintiffs' counsel asked such a question of August, which was objected to and the objection sustained as calling for the conclusion of the witness. It happened that the witness answered affirmatively just ahead of the objection, whereupon the court asked "What is the question?" Plaintiffs' counsel asked the reporter to read the question and thereupon the court sustained the objection, and plaintiffs' counsel said "I see—yes, your Honor," and then re-framed the question. Under such circumstances the answer was ruled out as effectively as if a motion to strike had been made and granted. A little later the witness answered: "Well, I tell you, the basin did pull down, you know; it was pulled down by the people that was occupy the room, they pull the basin out from the wall, you see; then the basin fell on the floor so it broke in two under the washbasin

That was true all of the time including the day of the accident. There was no dripping of any kind there. She supposed the plaster came loose and fell down. All she knew was it hit her.

Leo said he never had any trouble with the ceiling where his wife was working at the time of the accident. No plaster had fallen in that area.

2. Sophia, in describing the water seepage or dripping at the front of the store in 1948, did say that it was water "from some pipe there" but we do not regard that as substantial evidence as to a specific source, whether leakage from a main pipe or the result of the tearing down of a water basin by a subtenant or licensee of the hotel, or other source.

* * *. The witness was not present at the time but he visited the room soon afterwards, saw that the basin was away from the wall and that the tube under the basin was broken. He said that it happened in 1948 and that water from that basin leaked into plaintiffs' store. Although some of this was hearsay it remained in. August added that the water leaked down two times: In April, 1948, and in August, 1949.

There was evidence that plaster had fallen from the ceilings of other ground floor stores in the same building and that there had been leakages of water from those ceilings. But there was no evidence as to the source of the water in such cases other than the testimony of August Domergue as to the breaking of one wash basin and the stoppage of another in 1948 and 1949, respectively, and the absence of breaks in the main pipes.

Plaintiffs place some reliance upon a conversation Leo had with the landlord's representative, Mr. Gill, in 1948. When he noticed the plaster had fallen Leo went to Gill and told him about it. Gill said "I am going to take care of it," but in fact did nothing. That remark was not definitive of an obligation or of the violation of an obligation; not an admission of the negligent misconduct charged in the complaint. Also, it pertained only to the 1948 incident. It could not very well be stretched to comprehend and include an admission of legal responsibility for the 1950 accident.

When the seepage occurred in 1949, Leo went upstairs and told August Domergue, the hotel operator, not the landlord's representative. According to Leo, August "said he had trouble with the plumbing, he always have trouble, and he is going to take it up with the owner." That does not of itself evidence a dilapidated, worn-out and leaky water system as plaintiffs would have us infer. Concerning that remark, the trial judge observed: "We have all had a lot of trouble with plumbing, and I have had a lot of trouble in my house but I don't claim it is negligence." Certainly it was not an admission of liability by August when, in the same breath, he said he would take it up with the owner. Nor is it evidence against the owner because this line of testimony was admitted only as to the defendants Domergue.

In their opening brief plaintiffs claimed the Domergues had admitted, by not denying, certain material allegations of the complaint. Subsequent argumentation of the record, pursuant to stipulation, shows that those allegations were denied.

It is apparent from this summary that there is no substantial evidence that the deterioration of the plaster which fell and injured Sophia was caused by water which escaped as the proximate result of the negligence of any of the defendants. The only evidence of a specific source and cause for the escape of water from above was the misconduct of hotel guests upon two occasions, one in 1948 and one in 1949. In each case the overflow was promptly stopped, as soon as discovered by the hotel operators or their representative.

[2] It is well established that "a landlord is not liable for the consequences to others of a nuisance in connection with property in the possession and control of a tenant unless the landlord authorized or permitted the act which caused it to become a nuisance occasioning the injury. As stated by the Supreme Court of Massachusetts: 'A landlord is not responsible to other parties for the misconduct or injurious acts of the tenants to whom his estate, when no nuisance or illegal structure existed upon it [at the time of the lease] has been leased for a lawful and proper purpose.' [Citations.]" O'Leary v. Herbert, 5 Cal.2d 416, 419, 55 P.2d 834, 836. See also Mundt v. Nowlin, 44 Cal.App.2d 414, 112 P.2d 782; Shell Oil Co. v. Richter, 52 Cal.App.2d 164, 168, 125 P.2d 930.

[3,4] Upon similar principles a hotel operator is not responsible, under all circumstances, for the misdeeds of a guest. A hotel does not have exclusive control of the room, its fixtures and its furniture, assigned to a guest. The guest has at least partial control. Larson v. St. Francis Hotel, 83 Cal.App.2d 210, 212, 188 P.2d 513.

[5] Under the circumstances in evidence here, the misdeeds of guests in breaking a basin from the wall and in causing a basin to overflow by stopping it up and leaving the faucet open, are not such as to be normally expected, hence not chargeable to the hotel operator unless after learning of it or after such period of time as he should become aware of it he fails to abate it.

In contrast, the water damage cases upon which plaintiffs rely were predicated upon evidence which showed the source of the escaping water, a source which was under the control of the defendant, and evidence that furnished a basis for an inference that such right of control had been negligently exercised. In H. C. Capwell Co. v. Blake, 9 Cal.App. 101, 98 P. 51, a landlord negligently failed to control the drainage of rainwater from the roof; in Rathbun Co. v. Simmons, 90 Cal.App. 692, 698-699, 266 P. 369, a tenant's merchandise was damaged by water from a defective roof and drain system which was under the landlord's control and there was evidence that the latter had been negligent. In Pirrone v. Nuccio, 78 Cal.App.2d 864, at page 869, 179 P.2d 18, at page 21, it conclusively appeared that an upper tenant had notice that there was a leakage of water "either from the bathroom or from the toilet room into the ceiling of the restaurant [below] during a ten day period immediately preceding the deluge" and failed to use ordinary care in the inspection of the facilities provided for the occupants of the rooms on the second floor of the building directly over the premises occupied by the plaintiff. In Columbia Laboratories, Inc., v. California Beauty, etc., Co., 24 Cal.2d 114, 148 P.2d 15, the injury was caused by water that seeped through walls and ceiling during a rain storm that occurred after the landlord had negligently failed to repair a fire-damaged roof.

Plaintiffs argue that the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur fills the gap, if any, in their proof. Defendants as vigorously deny it. We think the defendants have the better of the argument.

[6] The test for the applicability of the res ipsa loquitur doctrine has been many times stated, perhaps most clearly and adequately by Chief Justice Gibson in Zentz

v. Coca Cola Bottling Co., 39 Cal.2d 436, 446-447, 247 P.2d 344, 349-350: "* * * as a general rule, res ipsa loquitur applies where the accident is of such a nature that it can be said, in the light of past experience, that it probably was the result of negligence by someone and that the defendant is probably the person who is responsible. In determining whether such probabilities exist with regard to a particular occurrence, the courts have relied both upon common knowledge and the testimony of expert witnesses, and they have considered the circumstances relating to the accident in each particular case, such as the extent of control exercised by the defendant, the plaintiff's own conduct, the likelihood of negligence by some third person, and, in some situations, evidence that the defendant is better able than the plaintiff to explain what happened. All of these matters have been treated as aids to help the courts in determining whether the accident was of such a nature that the injury was more probably than not the result of the defendant's negligence."

In the Zentz case a bottle of Coca Cola broke. It was natural and logical to require the bother to explain, in the absence of any indication of improper handling after it left the bottler's custody. Similar situations obtained in Gordon v. Aztec Brewing Co., 33 Cal.2d 514, 203 P.2d 522, and Escola v. Coca Cola Bottling Co., 24 Cal.2d 453, 150 P.2d 436. In Juchert v. California Water Service Co., 16 Cal.2d 500, 515, 106 P.2d 886, and in Buffums' v. City of Long Beach, 111 Cal.App. 327, 329-330, 295 P. 540, the cause of the injury was directly traced to the breaking of a water main that was under the management of the defendant. In Knell v. Morris, 39 Cal. 2d 450, 247 P.2d 352, the water leaked from a heater on the floor immediately above plaintiff's store and there was evidence of negligence upon the part of a plumber whom the occupant of the premises above had engaged to repair the heater. In Rose v. Melody Lane, 39 Cal.2d 481, 247 P.2d 335, a patron of a cocktail lounge was injured when a defective stool broke. Defendant, owner of the lounge, was the sole person who could have been guilty of the negligence which was probably the proximate cause.

[7] The mere fact that an accident happened and an injury resulted does not of itself call the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur into play. After reviewing a number of cases in which the doctrine was applied, this court in Vaughn v. Montgomery Ward & Co., 95 Cal.App.2d 553, 556-557, 213 P.2d 417, 419, said: "In all of these cases, and in every other case we have found on the subject where liability has been imposed, the plaintiff has offered evidence of some dangerous condition either created by the owner or known to him."

[8] This causal connection requirement was expressed in the Zentz case in these words: "The defendant, of course, should not be liable unless it appears from all the facts and circumstances that there is a sufficient causal connection between his conduct and the plaintiff's injury, and it has been held that res ipsa loquitur will not apply if it is equally probable that the negligence was that of someone other than the defendant. LaPorte v. Houston, 33 Cal.2d 167, 169-170, 199 P.2d 665; Hernandez v. Southern California Gas Co., 213 Cal. 384, 387-388, 2 P.2d 360; Olson v. Whitthorne & Swan, 203 Cal. 206, 208-209, 263 P. 518, 58 A.L.R. 129; Tower v. Humboldt Transit Co., 176 Cal. 602, 607, 169 P. 227. As said in the LaPorte case, supra, 33 Cal.2d at page 170, 199 P.2d [665] at page 666, the doctrine is not applicable where it is 'at least equally probable that the accident was caused by some fault * * * for which defendants were not liable' and where 'it cannot be said that it is more likely than not that the accident was caused by the negligence of defendants'. (Italics added.)" At page 443 of 39 Cal.2d, at page 347 of 247 P.2d. See also Gerhart v. Southern California Gas Co., 56 Cal.App.2d 425, 132 P.2d 874 and cases therein reviewed.

[9] It is apparent that under the general rule the evidence in this case does not bring the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur into play. It is equally clear that this case does not present any of the unusual situations (such as the patient who receives injuries while unconscious during the course of medical treatment) mentioned in the Zentz case at pages 445 and 446 of 39 Cal.2d at pages 348 and 349 of 247 P.2d.

The judgments appealed from are affirmed.

PETERS, P. J., and BRAY, J., concur.

Hazel L. CROGAN, Plaintiff and Respondent,
v.

Bert METZ, Vivian Metz, et al., Defendants and Appellants.*

Civ. 16324.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 2, California.

Dec. 12, 1955.

Rehearing Denied Jan. 11, 1956.

Hearing Granted Feb. 8, 1956.

Action for damages for alleged fraud in a real estate transaction on a ground that a broker represented property could not be purchased for less than $115,000 when in fact it could be purchased for $100,000. Judgment for plaintiff in the Superior Court, City & County of San Francisco, Frank T. Deasy, J., and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Nourse, P. J., held that the evidence established a breach of fiduciary duty by the broker subjecting him to remedies provided for breach of trust, that in view of the conflict in evidence the Appellate Court could not make a finding on conspiracy to defraud and that the evidence did not support a finding that the wife of a broker participated in the alleged conspiracy.

Judgment reversed.

1. Brokers ⇨38(4)

In action for alleged fraud in real estate transactions on the ground that plaintiff paid $115,000 for property which the vendors were willing to sell for $100,000 and that plaintiff had been defrauded of such amount, evidence established that the statement that the price was $115,000 and that the owner would not sell for less was untrue, and could be considered a breach of fiduciary duty by the broker, where the statement concealed a fact that price depended upon the commission of the brokers and that plaintiff alone would have to bear the total amount of the commissions involved in the complicated transactions.

* Opinion vacated 303 P.2d 1029.

2. Brokers ⇨19

A real estate agent is charged with duty of fullest disclosure of all material facts concerning the transaction that might affect the principal's decision.

3. Brokers ⇨19, 38(1)

The law imposes upon a broker the same obligation of undivided loyalty to the principal that it imposes on a trustee in favor of his beneficiary, and violation thereof is subject to the same punitive consequences that are provided for a disloyal or recalcitrant trustee.

4. Brokers ⇨38(1, 7)

In action for damages for alleged fraud in real estate transaction on ground that broker represented that vendors were not willing to sell property for less than $115,000 when in fact they were willing to sell for $100,000, such breach of fiduciary duty by the broker subjected him to the remedies provided for breach of trust, and he could be held liable in the alternative for the loss resulting from the breach, for the profit made by him through it, or for the advantage which would have accrued, if there had been no breach. West's Ann.Civ. Code, § 3343.

5. Brokers ⇨38(2)

In action for alleged fraud in real estate transaction on ground that broker represented that property could not be purchased for less than $115,000 when in fact it could be purchased for $100,000, an action for the advantage which would have accrued if there had been no breach could not lie, where there was no evidence that a better bargain could and therefore should have been obtained for the plaintiff. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 3343.

6. Brokers ⇨38(7)

In action for alleged fraud in real estate transactions on ground that broker represented that property could not be purchased for less than $115,000 when in fact it could be purchased for $100,000, the $15,000 could be recovered on the theory that the whole transaction was vitiated by breach of fiduciary duty, without which it probably would not have been concluded. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 3343.

7. Money Received ⇨14

Principal and Agent ⇨79(1)

The agent who is in a fiduciary relation and all persons who colluded with him in a breach of his duty as such are accountable for all advantages they gained thereby, even if the principal did not suffer any damage.

8. Brokers ⇨38(2)

An action for alleged fraud of broker in real estate transaction on ground of representation that property could not be purchased for less than $115,000 when in fact it could be purchased for $100,000, was based on breach of fiduciary duty and was a quasi contractual action for restitution which could be brought in the form of an action for money had and received.

9. Brokers ⇨38(7)

In action for alleged fraud in real estate transaction on ground that broker represented that property could not be purchased for less than $115,000 when in fact it could be purchased for $100,000, although plaintiff might have recovered exemplary damages in tort action for actual damage caused by breach of fiduciary duty, she could not recover exemplary damages together with profits obtained by defendants, unrelated to any damage she actually suffered. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 3294.

10. Conspiracy ⇨9

In action for alleged fraud in real estate transaction on the ground that broker represented that property could not be purchased for less than $115,000 when in fact it could be purchased for $100,000, recovery of $15,000 against other defendants required proof of conspiracy, collusion or acting in concert in relation to the breach of trust of the broker. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 3294.

11. Appeal and Error ⇨1122(2)

In action for alleged fraud in real estate transaction on the ground that broker represented that property could not be purchased for less than $115,000 when in fact it could be purchased for $100,000, where it was not clear that other brokers knew of the alleged misrepresentations and the findings did not show that trial judge made such inference and the evidence was conflicting, the appellate court could not make such finding.

12. Conspiracy ⇨19

In action for alleged fraud in real estate transaction on ground that broker represented that property could not be purchased for less than $115,000 when in fact it could be purchased for $100,000, evidence did not support a finding that wife of broker was a defendant who took part in the conspiracy, and hence as to her, other relief should have been no more than cancellation of a trust deed executed in the transaction thereby requiring a reduction in the amount recovered against the other defendants.

13. Brokers ⇨38(1)

In action for alleged fraud in real estate transaction on the ground that broker represented that property could not be purchased for less than $115,000 when in fact it could be purchased for $100,000, plaintiff's action was not barred by her negligence in not seeking direct information from owner of the property in view of the confidential relation of broker and client.

14. Appeal and Error ⇨1201(3)

Where judgment was required to be reversed, if after remand plaintiff should be inclined to amend her complaint, the trial court would have discretionary power to permit it.

Byron Arnold, George I. Hoffman, San Francisco, for appellants Bert and Vivian Metz.

Theodore M. Monell, San Francisco, for appellant Dewey Letsinger.

Ralph Wertheimer, San Francisco, for respondent.

NOURSE, Presiding Justice.

The plaintiff, Mrs. Crogan, instituted an action for damages for fraud in a real estate transaction against defendant Bert Metz, the broker who represented her in said transaction, against the defendants, Letsinger and Mogan, brokers who represented other parties in said transaction and against defendant Vivian Metz, the wife of Bert Metz. Defendant Mogan died before the trial and no judgment was taken against him or his estate. Against all three other named defendants plaintiff recovered judgment for $15,000 plus interest and against Bert Metz and Letsinger moreover for $2,500 as punitive damages. The Metzses have appealed together, Letsinger separately.

The amended complaint is in three counts. The first count is to the effect that plaintiff entered into an exchange of her property on Fulton Street in San Francisco of an agreed value of $50,000 plus $65,000 in cash for property on Bay Street in San Francisco owned by a certain Rinas, and that she moreover gave a promissory note and deed of trust in the amount of $3,000 payable to the Metzses, of which $2,500 for agreed commission and $500 due under a prorating agreement and advanced by Bert Metz; that she was induced so to do by a representation, wilfully made by Bert Metz, her broker for that purpose, that the owner was not willing to sell for less than $115,000, which representation was false and fraudulent because the Rinases were ready and willing to sell for $100,000 and received only $100,000 worth of property out of the transaction; that defendant Bert Metz was also acting as agent for the other defendants. The second count was one for money had and received in said transaction by defendant Bert Metz, also acting as agent for the other defendants for the use of plaintiff in the amount of $15,000 as secret profits, etc. The third count was to the effect that the three brokers entered into a conspiracy to defraud plaintiff of $15,000 in the manner stated in the first count, each broker acting as agent for the other. The prayer was for $15,000 plus interest, punitive damages and cancellation of the promissory note mentioned. The court found: "The defendants and each of them conspired to obtain from plaintiff, and did assist each other in obtaining, by means of the fraudulent conduct more fully set forth in the findings of fact herein and as violation of the fiduciary duty owed by defendant Bert Metz to plaintiff, the sum of $15,000." The only other finding was that the allegations of the amended complaint were true. The judgment granted the $15,000 and punitive damages as stated before, but did not grant the cancellation of the note.

Appellants contend that the evidence does not support the findings, mainly in that plaintiff could not have purchased the Rinas' property for $100,000 and that no fraud or secret profit or conspiracy, or damage in the amount of $15,000 was proved, that no punitive damages could be assessed, and that Mrs. Metz was not involved in the matter.

The evidence showed the following. Prior to the transaction here involved Mr. Desiano, a client of defendant Letsinger, owned a property on Scott Street in San Francisco, which he wished to sell for $165,000 net cash of which $5,000 for Letsinger, who moreover would receive whatever the property would be sold for in excess of $165,000. Rinas owned the property on Bay Street mentioned before and wished to exchange it for more valuable property (to "trade up"). He did not wish to sell outright because that would entail income tax payment on capital gain. To find out the value of the property he had some months before offered it for $110,000, but could not find a taker and in a trade he evaluated it at $100,000. One of the brokers who tried to arrange a trade for him was defendant Mogan. Defendants Mogan, Letsinger, and Bert Metz kept office together (and with still other brokers) but were otherwise independent brokers. Mogan heard that the Desiano property could be sold and showed it to Rinas, who told him that he liked it but did not wish it to cost him more than $160,000 net inclusive of $4,000 commission for Mogan, his own Bay Street property evaluated at $100,000. On May 28, 1951 he offered in writing to trade adding $56,000 cash and $4,000 commission for Mogan. As Desiano wanted cash only, and not less than $160,000 plus $5,000 commission for Letsinger, no transaction could be completed unless Rinas' Bay Street property could be "cashed out" so as to provide the commissions, or a similar result could be reached in a more indirect way. ($9,000 would have been the normal commission on the Desiano-Rinas exchange transaction.) Bert Metz knew that plaintiff, Mrs. Crogan, a widow, with whom and with whose deceased husband he and his wife had for many years had friendly relations and whom he had advised as broker, wished to dispose of her Fulton Street property at a price of at least $50,000. He advised her, subject to inspection, that the Bay Street property would be a very desirable possession for her, at the price of $115,000 which he said that the owner wanted for it and from which the owner would not budge. He pointed out the advantage of the transaction in that she would not have to pay income tax on the capital gain on her Fulton Street property. She inspected the Bay Street property together with him and was shown around by Rinas. She liked it very much and on June 1, 1951 signed an offer to exchange with an additional payment of $60,000, without commission, which was not accepted. On June 2nd and June 3rd Letsinger and Mogan advertised the Bay Street property for $115,000. Both Desiano and Rinas knew of these advertisements and did not object. On June 7, 1951 plaintiff signed a new offer to exchange the properties with the addition of $65,000 cash and a note and second mortgage for $2,500 commission for defendant Metz. In the offered agreement the Bay Street property is mentioned as the property of Rinas and the agreement contains a printed clause to the effect that the agent may also represent the offeree. Defendant Metz and plaintiff read the whole agreement together and plaintiff made no objection. The three defendant brokers then tried to find a purchaser for plaintiff's property. On June 9th a buyer (Lukes) was signed up for $49,500, and thereafter the offers of Rinas and plaintiff were accepted. On June 28th, the transaction was closed by means of five grant deeds: The Scott Street property from Desiano to Rinas, the Bay Street property from Rinas to Desiano and from Desiano to plaintiff and the Fulton Street property from plaintiff to Desiano and from Desiano to Lukes. Desiano received $160,000 cash. Fifteen thousand dollars in excess of that amount was obtained in the transaction, not considering costs and prorating, and was available for the commission of the three defendants. (Rinas paid $60,000, plaintiff paid $65,000 and a note for $2,500 and her property netted $47,500, $2,000 commission being paid to outside brokers.) From this amount Metz received $1,562.50 over and above the $2,500 note promised by plaintiff. From this amount he loaned $500 to plaintiff for a balance due by her because of the prorating and the note was therefore increased to $3,000. The actual total payment by the title company to the defendant brokers for commissions was $11,984.50 cash plus the $3,000 note. To the difference of $15.50 the rule de minimis applies. When Rinas saw the result reached with his property he tried to share in the $15,000 but did not succeed. Thereafter he told plaintiff that he had traded in his property for only $100,000 and that he was sorry about the deal she got. The evidence does not show any participation of Mrs. Metz in the transaction except that the note and deed of trust for $3,000 of plaintiff for commission and loan were made out to Bert Metz and Vivian Metz.

From the above it is clear that the allegation found true, that the fraud consisted in representing to plaintiff that the owner would not sell for less than $115,000 whereas he was willing to sell for $100,000 and did not receive more than that value, is incorrect. Rinas testified repeatedly that for taxation reasons he was not willing to sell outright but was only interested in "trading up." (An incidental statement of Rinas that he was willing to "sell" for $100,000 made in the middle of contrary testimony must in connection with the above mean that he was willing to trade in at a valuation of $100,000 and does not cause a substantial conflict.) Plaintiff could not trade with him because her property was much less valuable than that of Rinas. Hence she could obtain the Rinas' property only after it had been traded with a third person which trade would necessarily entail commissions which would increase the price to be paid. Plaintiff's attorney conceded at the trial that the transaction could not go through unless the Bay Street property was sold at $115,000. (If the brokers involved were together entitled to the regular commission on the five transfers through which the transaction was closed—a point as to which evidence was excluded—the commission so calculated would have been a little higher than the total of $17,000 actually paid.) Neither was it proved that Rinas received a value of $100,000 only. He received for the Bay Street property the value of the Scott Street property minus $60,000 and the actual value of the Scott Street property was not in issue and not determined at the trial. Rinas' personal evaluation of his property at $100,000 was not decisive as he was not willing to sell.

[1-3] Nevertheless the statement of Metz that the price was $115,000 and that the owner would not budge, was untrue and could be considered a breach of fiduciary duty. Although Rinas and Desiano, who pending Rinas' offer to exchange both had an interest in the Bay Street property, knew of the asking price of $115,000 there is no basis for the statement that they would not budge if the brokers would be willing to accept a lower commission. The statement conceals the fact that the price depended on the commission of the brokers and that plaintiff alone would have to bear the total amount of commissions involved in the whole complicated transaction. In Ratray v. Scudder, 28 Cal.2d 214, 223, 169 P.2d 371, 376, 164 A.L.R. 1356 it is said that a real estate "agent is charged with the duty of fullest disclosure of all material facts concerning the transaction that might affect the principal's decision." It is also said that the law imposes on him "the same obligation of undivided service and loyalty that it imposes on a trustee in favor of his beneficiary. Violation of his trust is subject to the same punitive consequences that are provided for a disloyal or recreant trustee." 28 Cal.2d at page 222-223, 169 P.2d at page 376. Even "when an agent acts for adverse principals with the acquiescence of each, he has a bounden duty to act with fairness to each, and is bound to disclose to each all facts which he knows or should know would reasonably affect the judgment of each in permitting such dual agency." Anderson v. Thacher, 76 Cal.App.2d 50, 68, 172 P.2d 533, 543. Metz could know that the fact that plaintiff alone had to provide all commissions might affect her decision, and she testified that she would not have agreed to the deal if she had known that she paid the commissions of Mogan and Letsinger also. Metz testified that until June 1 he had been only given the price of $115,000 by Mogan and did not know the details of the transaction, but he conceded that before June 7, the date of plaintiff's final offer, he had known from discussions in the common office the prices involved. He testified that he fully informed plaintiff of the whole deal but plaintiff denied that and testified that she thought that she contracted with Rinas and did not know that Desiano and his property were also involved in the deal. Considering the close connection of the brokers the court could infer that Metz was fully informed of the character of the whole transaction and could consider his somewhat misleading statement a breach of fiduciary duty.

[4-7] Such breach of fiduciary duty subjects the broker to the remedies provided for breach of trust. Rattray v. Scudder, supra. Accordingly he may be held liable in the alternative for the loss resulting from the breach, for the profit made by him through the breach, or for the advantage which would have accrued if there had been no breach (Restatement, Trusts § 205; Scott on Trusts § 205). Under the facts proved the judgment could not be upheld on the theory of damages for the breach of fiduciary duty, fraud in the exchange of property, because section 3343 of the Civil Code limits the amount to be recovered in such action to "the difference between the actual value of that with which the defrauded person parted and the actual value of that which he received, together with any additional damage arising from the particular transaction." Bagdasarian v. Gragnon, 31 Cal.2d 744, 192 P.2d 935. The actual value of the Bay Street property was neither alleged nor proved and an offer of defendants to prove that said actual value was $115,000 was rejected as not involved in the case. However, the above section expressly leaves intact all other legal and equitable remedies of the defrauded person. Of these an action for the advantages which would have accrued if there had been no breach cannot lie, as there is no evidence that a better bargain could and therefore should have been obtained for plaintiff. However, although it cannot be said that the entire amount of $15,000 recovered, is secret profits, because it includes the $2,500 paid by plaintiff in a note expressly as commission, the $15,000 could be recovered on the theory that the whole transaction was induced and vitiated by the breach of fiduciary duty, without which it probably would not have been concluded. The agent who is in a fiduciary relation and all persons who colluded with him in a breach of his duty as such are then accountable for all advantages they gained thereby, even if the principal did not suffer any damage. Jackson v. Smith, 254 U.S. 586, 588-589, 41 S.Ct. 200, 65 L.Ed. 418; Crites Inc. v. Prudential Ins. Co. of America, 322 U.S. 408, 414, 64 S.Ct. 1075, 88 L.Ed. 1356; Restatement of Restitution § 138 and see Smith v. Blodget, 187 Cal. 235, 242, 201 P. 584; Lomita Land & Water Co. v. Robinson, 154 Cal. 36, 45-46, 97 P. 10, 14, 18 L.R.A., N.S., 1106. In the latter case is quoted "the well-established principle that, where several persons combine to carry out a fraudulent conspiracy to cheat another, each and all of such persons are liable to the defrauded party, without reference to the amount of the fruits of the fraudulent transaction he obtains or the degree of his activity in the scheme." Although the above rules are most frequently applied to secret profits they are in general applicable to all advantages obtained from a breach of trust by the fiduciary and by all persons acting in concert with him.

[8,9] Such action is a quasi contractual action for restitution which can be brought in the form of an action for money had and received. Prosser on Torts, 2d Edition, p. 486 et seq. It was held in Steiner v. Rowley, 35 Cal.2d 713, 720, 221 P.2d 9, that such an action is inconsistent with an action for tort in which exemplary damages are sought and that the plaintiff must make a timely election of remedies. Although plaintiff might have recovered exemplary damages in a tort action for the actual damage caused by the breach of fiduciary duty (fraud; § 3294 of the Civil Code) she cannot recover exemplary damages together with the profits obtained by defendants, unrelated to any damage she actually suffered.

[10, 11] It is clear that recovery of the whole amount of $15,000 and any recovery against defendant Letsinger requires proof of a conspiracy collusion or acting in concert in relation to the breach of trust of Metz. The court found the existence of a conspiracy to defraud in the manner alleged in the complaint, but between the fraud there alleged and the fraud which can be considered proved there is a variance, which is material as to the proof of the conspiracy. If it had been true that the Bay Street property could have been obtained for $100,000 the fact that defendant Metz obtained from plaintiff a contract containing a consideration of approximately $115,000 plus $2,500 commission, would in itself indicate fraud and would justify the inference that the two other brokers, who knew the facts as to the transaction intended by Rinas, were aware of said fraud and in collusion with Metz. However, under the facts proved, the contract made with plaintiff was in itself not necessarily suspicious, and the fraud would consist only in inducing by a misleading and incomplete representation the conclusion of a contract which may have been the only possible one. It is then less clear that the other brokers knew of said misrepresentation and that it was the result of a concerted action which was denied by both Metz and Letsinger as witnesses. We do not mean to hold that the trial judge could not reasonably have drawn such an inference, but that the findings do not show that he made the inference. Considering the existing conflict in the evidence and the possibility of conflicting inferences, we cannot make a finding ourselves.

[12] It must also be noted that the evidence does not support the finding that Mrs. Metz was a defendant who took part in the conspiracy. As said before the only evidence which showed any connection of hers with the transaction was the fact that the deed of trust for $3,000 was made out in the name of Bert Metz and Vivian Metz. Such can show at most that the amount to be received was considered community property of the parties and does not show any participation by Mrs. Metz in the combination to defraud, which could make her personally liable for the whole advantage received by all persons involved. As to her no more than cancellation of the trust deed could have been justified, in which case the money judgment as to the other defendants should have been $3,000 lower.

[13] The further contention of appellant Metz that plaintiff's action for fraud was barred by her negligence in not seeking direct information from Rinas is wholly without merit, considering the confidential relation of broker and client. Compare further Anderson v. Thacher, 76 Cal.App.2d 50, 70, 172 P.2d 533.

[14] On the grounds stated before the judgment must be reversed. If after remand plaintiff would be inclined to amend her complaint, the trial court would have discretionary power to permit it. Holt v. Morgan, 128 Cal.App.2d 113, 118, 274 P.2d 915.

Judgment reversed.

DOOLING and KAUFMAN, JJ., concur.

137 Cal.App.2d 567

James P. CUNNINGHAM, Plaintiff, Cross-defendant and Appellant,

M. G. Mason, sometimes known as Monte G. Mason, Cross-defendant and Appellant,

v.

Carl W. SCHMITZ and Dolly Schmitz, Defendants, Cross-complainants and Respondents.

Civ. 21270.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California.

Dec. 6, 1955.

Action to recover shares of capital stock wherein defendants filed a cross-complaint to compel the transfer of such shares on the books of the company. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, A. A. Scott, J., held that the defendants were the owners of the stock and the plaintiffs appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Doran, J., held that the evidence including showing that transfer of stock was evidenced by assignment on stock certificate sustained a finding of trial court that the transaction constituted an absolute sale rather than a loan with the stock as collateral, entitling the transferees to have the shares transferred on the books of the corporation.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Appeal and Error $\S$ 931(1), 1011(1)

A reviewing court need not evaluate conflicting evidence, but such conflict must on appeal be resolved in favor of trial court's findings which are deemed conclusive.

2. Corporations $\S$ 123(5)

Evidence including showing that transfer of stock was evidenced by assignment on stock certificate sustained trial court's finding that transaction constituted an absolute sale of the stock rather than a transfer as collateral for a loan, entitling transferees to transfer of such shares on books of the corporation. West's Ann.Corp.Code, $\S$ 2466.

Laurence J. Rittenband, Los Angeles, for appellants.

Erwin P. Werner, Los Angeles, for respondents.

DORAN, Justice.

The plaintiff, as assignee of cross-defendant, M. G. Mason, instituted this action to recover 6,000 shares of capital stock of Americol Petroleum, Inc. Respondents filed a cross-complaint against Cunningham and Mason, and others, seeking to be adjudged the owners of such stock and to compel the transfer of such shares on the books of the company. Subsequent to the transactions between the parties hereinafter set forth, the stock was split ten for one.

The trial court found that "on or about June 8, 1950, * * * M. G. Mason approached the defendants and cross-complainants and offered to sell them 6,000 shares of the capital stock * * * for the sum of twenty-five hundred dollars ($2500.00). At said time and place the cross-complainants (Schmitz) agreed to and did accept the offer made by M. G. Mason. On the same day the said Mason certified that he was the owner of certificate No. 12 of Americol Petroleum, Inc. for six thousand shares fully paid and non-assessable. At said time and place the said Mason sold, assigned and delivered said certificate * * * in words as follows: 'For value received I hereby sell, assign and transfer unto Carl W. Schmitz and Dolly Schmitz, six thousand shares of the capital stock, represented by the within certificate and do hereby irrevocably constitute and appoint ——— attorney to transfer the said stock on the books of the within named corporation, with full power of substitution in the premises'".

It was further found that Dolly Schmitz thereafter delivered the stock certificate to the secretary of the corporation for exchange after the ten to one split; that the secretary forwarded the stock to the company's transfer agent; that thereafter Mason, who was a vice-president and managing director, "caused said certificate to be made valueless by stamping on both sides thereof in large, bold letters, the word 'cancelled' accompanied by the initials M. G. M. Further, the said Mason refused to allow the transfer agent to exchange or transfer said certificate on the books of said company". The court then found that the cross-complainants Schmitz were the owners of the stock and "entitled to have said certificate exchanged for sixty thousand shares of said corporation, and so recorded on the books". Cunningham and Mason have appealed from the judgment.

It is appellants' contention that the court below erred in affording equitable relief to the defendants on the cross-complaint under the maxim "he who seeks equity must do equity"; and that the judgment "should be reversed on the ground that the credible evidence supported a judgment for the plaintiff".

Appellants' version of the transaction is that Mason, friendly with Mr. and Mrs. Schmitz, "offered to sell the (Schmitz) automobile for her and borrow $2,500.00 from the proceeds of the sale to meet the (company) payroll, such loan to be repaid within a year with a bonus of $350.00. Mrs. Schmitz agreed to this proposal". Appellants insist that, as security for the loan Mason, on June 8, 1950, transferred the stock certificate for 6,000 shares, the stock then selling for $1.00 per share. The car was sold and Mason got the $2,500.00. It is claimed that thereafter Mason repaid $2,200.00 of the loan.

Mrs. Schmitz' testimony in substance denies Mason's version of the alleged loan, and maintains that the sale was absolute, stating that Mason on numerous occasions offered to repurchase the stock, particularly on January 5, 1951, when Mason presented a receipt-agreement providing for a "repurchase" of the stock by Mason for $2,850, which Mrs. Schmitz refused to sign. Mason admitted on the witness stand that the only writing made on the occasion of the transfer was the assignment on the certificate, and the $2,500 check turned over by Mrs. Schmitz. The alleged loan was oral, Mason's testimony in reference thereto being, "And I says, 'If I don't pay the money back within a year, Dolly, that is your certificate. You own it. And if I do, I want the certificate back, naturally. That is collateral'. She used the word 'collateral' twenty times".

As will be seen from the foregoing résumé, the testimony was in direct conflict as to the nature of the transaction. Not only was the evidence in conflict but the trial judge observed that "This is one of the worst (cases) I have ever listened to as far as perjury is concerned. * * * In this case the court is satisfied that both sides have lied like troupers without any remorse of conscience".

[1] In this state of the record, a reviewing court is not called upon to attempt a reevaluation of the evidence. As stated in Hughes v. Forward, 134 Cal.App.2d 329, 285 P.2d 668, 670, "The fact that there is conflicting evidence merely brings the case within the well established rule that every such conflict must, on appeal, be resolved in favor of the trial court's findings 'which are deemed conclusive'." In the instant case it cannot be said that the trial court's findings are without substantial support in the record.

[2] As pointed out in the respondents' brief, "Section 2466 of the Corporations Code provides the manner in which a transfer of stock may be made. The transfer in question was made under subsection (a) thereof." The transfer of the stock by Mason, as evidenced by the assignment on the stock certificate, was absolute. The trial court, after hearing the evidence and observing the demeanor of the witnesses, came to the conclusion that the transaction was exactly what it purported to be, namely, an absolute sale. This was a question of fact to be decided by the trial court, and no valid reason has been presented which would justify interference with such decision.

The judgment is affirmed.

WHITE, P. J., and NOURSE, J., pro tem., concur.

137 Cal.App.2d 524

William CORRIDAN, Jr., a minor, by William Corridan, Sr., his guardian ad litem, and William Corridan, Sr., Plaintiffs and Respondents,

v.

A. G. ROSE, Jr., A. G. Rose, Sr., First Doe, Second Doe and Third Doe, Defendants and Respondents, Zurich General Accident and Liability Insurance Company, Ltd., a corporation, Intervenor and Appellant.

Civ. 16440.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 2, California.

Dec. 6, 1955.

Hearing Denied Feb. 1, 1956.

Action for injuries sustained by infant when struck by tractor driven by his uncle and allegedly owned in part by his grandfather, in which the grandfather's liability insurer was permitted to intervene and take part in trial. The Superior Court of Santa Clara County, John D. Foley, J., granted a new trial on ground of error in permitting the insurer to intervene, and the insurer appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Nourse, P. J., held that permitting the liability insurer to intervene was error.

Affirmed.

1. Appeal and Error ⇨143

Parties ⇨47

By intervening in action by injured person against insureds, liability insurer obtained all rights of a party defendant, including right to appeal. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 387.

2. Appeal and Error ⇨151(2)

Liability insurer which had intervened in injured person's action against insureds was "aggrieved" by, and hence entitled to appeal from, grant of new trial on ground that court had erred in permitting liability insurer to take part in the trial to prevent lack of defense or collusion. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 387.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Aggrieved".

Cal.Rep. 289-290 P.2d-67

3. Parties ⇨40(7)

In action for injuries suffered by infant, against infant's uncle who drove tractor which struck infant and against grandfather who was allegedly co-owner of tractor, permitting grandfather's liability insurer to intervene and take part in the trial was error, especially where insurer actively opposed decision of its liability on the policy in such action, claiming collusion and lack of defense on part of uncle and grandfather. West's Ann.Ins.Code, § 11580; West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 387.

4. Appeal and Error ⇨1072

Reviewing court would not interfere with grant of new trial, based on error in permitting liability insurer to intervene, in absence of showing that presence of intervenor could not possibly have been prejudicial, notwithstanding apparent merit in such contention, in view of position taken by defendant at trial and small size of verdict compared to defendant's expectation.

5. Appeal and Error ⇨978(1)

Whether rights of moving party were prejudiced by error of law at trial rests so completely within trial judge's discretion that appellate court will not interfere with his grant of new trial on that ground, except for manifest abuse of discretion.

Bronson, Bronson & McKinnon, San Francisco, for appellant.

Robert E. Hayes, Santa Clara, for respondent A. G. Rose, Jr.

James F. Boccardo, San Jose, Edward J. Niland, San Jose, of counsel, for respondents Corridan, Sr., and Corridan, Jr.

NOURSE, Presiding Judge.

In this negligence action instituted by the minor William Corridan, Jr. and his father William Corridan, Sr. against the minor's uncle A. G. Rose, Jr., who drove a tractor, which hit and seriously injured the minor, and the minor's grandfather A. G. Rose, Sr. allegedly co-owner of the tractor with his son A. G. Rose, Jr. who allegedly was driving it as his father's agent, Zurich General Accident and Liability Insurance Company, hereinafter called Zurich, who had issued a policy of liability insurance to Rose, Sr. (which would also cover his employee in driving a tractor) was permitted to intervene and to defend on behalf of Rose, Jr. and Rose, Sr., Zurich having alleged that such was necessary to prevent lack of defense and collusion. The verdict was for plaintiff against both Rose, Jr. and Rose, Sr. Zurich appeals from an order granting a new trial at the motion of defendant Rose, Jr. only.

At the time of the accident Rose, Sr. owned a ranch on Sutherland Avenue in Santa Clara County on which he lived himself and in separate houses his married son Rose, Jr., then age 24, and his daughter Mrs. Corridan with her son, the minor plaintiff Billy. The Roses, father and son, had always been in ranching operations together. Rose, Jr. also farmed for himself a separate piece of land. The tractor was kept in a barn on the ranch and was used mainly by Rose, Jr. in operating the ranch and also for outside work.

On the evening of May 26, 1951 Rose, Jr. was driving the tractor home from a nearby ranch on which he had worked with it for hire. When he was driving on the edge of Sutherland Avenue, Billy was riding his bicycle on the paved part of the road alongside the tractor. Billy fell from the bicycle, and a tractor tread went over his left leg, which had to be amputated below the knee. When thereafter Rose, Jr. in the presence of Rose, Sr. gave information to a representative of Zurich, Rose, Jr. stated in substance that the tractor belonged to him, not to his father, that his father had bought it for him. He used the tractor not only on his father's farm but also on other jobs. When Billy was riding his bicycle alongside the tractor, Billy got a few feet ahead and suddenly turned his wheel and fell directly in front of the tractor. It happened so fast that Rose, Jr. did not know what caused Billy to fall. He was watching him all the time and keeping a good distance.

When the present action was brought against them, both Roses claimed coverage under the Zurich liability policy and tendered Zurich their defense. Zurich denied coverage of Rose, Jr. on the ground that he was not driving the tractor as an employee of his father, but offered to defend him on condition that Rose, Jr. would sign a "reservation of rights agreement" reserving for both sides the issue of coverage. Rose, Jr. refused to sign such an agreement and Zurich refused to defend him. For Rose, Sr. Zurich prepared an answer alleging that the tractor involved in the accident belonged to Rose, Jr. and that he was not driving it as an employee or agent of Rose, Sr. Rose, Sr. refused to sign said answer on the ground that it did not state the true facts. Zurich then withdrew from his defense on the ground of collusion and lack of cooperation.

As stated before, Zurich was permitted to intervene on behalf of defendants and it was ordered that its denials and allegations as to the original complaint would stand as answer on behalf of Rose, Sr. and Rose, Jr. The complaint in intervention alleged among other things the intervenor's denial of the coverage of Rose, Jr., the withdrawal from the defense of Rose, Sr. because of collusion and lack of cooperation, and intervenor's interest in the success of defendants because a judgment against them would under section 11580 of the Insurance Code in an action on the policy against intervenor be conclusive with respect to the liability of defendants and the amount of damages, although not as to intervenor's liability on the policy. The necessity of intervention was predicated on the alleged collusion and danger of further collusion in the defense by Rose, Sr. and Rose, Jr. with plaintiffs. A demurrer of Rose, Jr. to the complaint in intervention was overruled. The answers of all other parties to the complaint in intervention deny collusion, and the Roses allege that they owned the tractor together and that at the time of the accident Rose, Jr. had used it at the request of Rose, Sr. Rose, Sr. stated that the untrue allegations as to this point in the draft complaint of Zurich were the reason for his refusal to sign. At the trial objections of Zurich to all evidence with respect to issues formed by said answers to the complaint in intervention were sustained and these issues were not submitted to the jury.

At the beginning of the trial both Rose, Sr., and Rose, Jr., notified Zurich that plaintiff offered to settle for $100,000 (the limit of the coverage in this case), that the offer was reasonable and that they demanded acceptance and payment by Zurich. Zurich refused. At the trial Rose, Jr. testified that when the accident happened he was turning the tractor from the shoulder of the road more into the paved part to avoid certain pear trees, that in watching the trees he did not look out for Billy and that he became aware of him again only when Billy was under the tractor; he did not know what happened to Billy up to that moment. Billy testified that the tractor hit the hind wheel of his bicycle. Rose, Sr. testified that the owner of the farm from which Rose, Jr. was returning when the accident happened had asked Rose, Sr. for assistance in certain farming operations with the tractor, that Rose, Sr. had promised to send his son with it and had arranged for the price. Both he and Rose, Jr. testified that they owned the tractor together. After the accident Rose, Sr. made the large final payment on it and thereafter the bill of sale was made out in their combined names.

After verdicts of $40,000 in behalf of Billy and of $6,000 in behalf of his father all parties moved for a new trial. The motions of Zurich and Rose, Sr. were withdrawn. The motion of plaintiffs was denied, but the motion of Rose, Jr. was granted. The notice of motion of Rose, Jr. stated several grounds but the only one urged was error in permitting Zurich to intervene. No other basis for the granting of the new trial is suggested on appeal. Respondents urge that Zurich was not a party to the order granting a new trial and not a party aggrieved by it and that for these reasons its appeal must be dismissed and that otherwise the order must be affirmed because the admission of Zurich as intervenor was erroneous, also because its participation in the trial injected insurance into the picture and because the litigation of the allegations of the complaint in intervention was excluded from the trial. It may be noted that not only Rose, Jr. but also plaintiffs defend the order, which has set aside the judgment they obtained.

[1, 2] The contention that appellant is not a party to the judgment or not a party aggrieved is on its face without merit. By the order granting leave to intervene it was determined implicitly that intervenor had an interest in the matter in litigation, in the success of the defendants and in the prevention of a judgment for plaintiffs caused by lack of defense or collusion. Under section 387 of the Code of Civil Procedure Zurich by said intervention became a party to the action uniting with the defendants in resisting the claims of plaintiffs and obtained all rights of a party defendant, including the right to appeal. People ex rel. Fogg v. Perris Irrigation District, 132 Cal. 289, 64 P. 399, 773; Drinkhouse v. Van Ness, 202 Cal. 359, 371, 260 P. 869; 2 Witkin California Procedure, 1095. Insofar as intervenor's interest was to take part in the trial to prevent a judgment for plaintiffs caused by lack of defense or collusion, the granting of a new trial on the ground that it was error to permit it so to take part, injuriously affected said interest and in that respect intervenor was evidently a party aggrieved. Moreover prior to the trial defendants had declared to intervenor that the claim against them in their opinion was worth at least $100,000 and under those circumstances intervenor might well have a reasonable interest to limit any possible claim on the insurance policy to the amount of the verdicts which were less than half of defendants' estimate and it might reasonably doubt whether the motion of Rose, Jr. was made for the purpose of opening the possibility of lower or of higher recoveries. Respondents' argument that appellant could not be aggrieved by an order which set aside a judgment against one of the defendants is therefore wholly fictitious. (It is symptomatic that on appeal plaintiffs defend the order granting a new trial as strongly as does Rose, Jr.) "* * * a party may appeal from a judgment apparently in his favor which is actually against him," 3 Witkin Califor- nia Procedure, 2182, citing as example Quint v. McMullen, 103 Cal. 381, 383, 37 P. 381.

We then come to the principal question on this appeal, to wit whether it was error justifying the granting of a new trial to permit Zurich to intervene and to take part in the trial in the manner stated. There is no authority directly in point in this state and little authority elsewhere. In Pennix v. Winton, 61 Cal.App.2d 761, 143 P.2d 940, 145 P.2d 561, this court decided that an attorney defending an insured in behalf of the insurer, could not take at the trial a position adverse to said insured by interjecting the issue of collusion in the personal injury action, but we expressly left undecided, in 61 Cal.App.2d at page 775, 143 P.2d at page 947, the question here involved. In Neuman v. Eddy, 15 La.App. 45, 130 So. 247, the insurer had intervened in the personal injury action on the ground of collusion and interposed its own defense in behalf of defendants, but it does not appear that there was any opposition to the intervention and the opinion was with respect to the intervention concerned with the proof of the collusion and the liability of the insurer which issues were tried in the same action. In Brune v. McDonald, 158 Or. 364, 75 P.2d 10, the sustaining of a demurrer to the complaint in intervention of the insurer in a personal injury action was upheld, but there the insurer, alleging collusion, did not intervene for the purpose of uniting in the defense but to have the prosecution of the negligence action enjoined pending decision of the rights under the policy and thereafter to have all action on the policy enjoined. One of the grounds of the decision was that there was no authority for such an injunction. 75 P.2d at page 14. However, it was also held that the insurer did not have the interest required for intervention because on the basis of the allegation of the complaint in intervention (as to the invalidation of the policy) the insurance company would not become liable even if plaintiff recovered. 75 P.2d at page 13. In Krenitsky v. Ludlow Motor Co., 276 App.Div. 511, 96 N.Y.S.2d 102 an order denying an insurer who had disclaimed liability leave to intervene in a wrongful death action against the insured after default judgments for plaintiffs was upheld on the ground that it was the position of the insurer that it had no interest to be protected and that by disclaiming liability and refusing to defend it had waived all rights to intervene if it had ever had any. In these few outside cases there seems to be a preponderance of the view that an insurer who disclaims liability on his policy has no interest justifying intervention in the action against his insured. This view is in accord with the general principles with respect to the interest required for intervention in his state.

Although section 387 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides for a wide right of intervention by " * * * any person, who has an interest in the matter in litigation, or in the success of either of the parties, or an interest against both, * * *" this right has been strictly limited in the decisions defining the "interest" mentioned in said section. So it is said in Allen v. California Water & Tel. Co., 31 Cal.2d 104, 109, 187 P.2d 393, 395:

"The 'interest' mentioned in section 387 which entitles a person to intervene in a suit between other persons must be 'in the matter in litigation and of such a direct and immediate character that the intervener will either gain or lose by the direct legal operation and effect of the judgment' (Elliott v. Superior Court, 168 Cal. 727, 145 P. 101, 105); it must be 'direct and not consequential' (Isaacs v. Jones, 121 Cal. 257, 261, 53 P. 793, 794, 1101)."

[3] In Bechtel v. Axelrod, 20 Cal.2d 390, at pages 392-393, 125 P.2d 836, at page 837, it was held on the basis of said rules that the wife of the accommodation maker of a note, could not intervene in the action on the note brought against her husband, to obtain a declaration that their community property could not be subjected to payment of the obligation, because she "did not possess an interest legally sufficient to sustain her intervention * * *. The wife would neither gain nor lose by the direct legal operation and effect of a money judgment rendered against her husband * * *. Granting that it was the plaintiff's intention, in the event of his recovery, to attempt to satisfy his judgment from the community property, it is entirely conceivable that the defendant * * * might decide to discharge the indebtedness by payment from his separate funds or that the plaintiff might not in fact initiate proceedings to enforce collection. From these observations it is manifest that the intervenor's interest in the instant action was remote and contingent and was not of the direct and immediate character required by law to support her intervention." The same applies a fortiori to this case. The plaintiff's claim against appellant would not be decided by the judgment in the negligence action alone but would be contingent on the policy coverage which appellant denies. Drinkhouse v. Van Ness, 202 Cal. 359, 260 P. 869 and Belt Casualty Co. v. Furman, 218 Cal. 359, 23 P.2d 293 on which appellant relies are distinguishable. In the Drinkhouse case the intervenor, the surety on a redelivery bond who intervened in the claim and delivery action when the insolvent defendant abandoned the defense of said action, did not deny its liability as surety but based its intervention on the existence of the liability. In the Belt Casualty case, intervenors who in a negligence action had obtained a judgment against the insured intervened in an action of the liability insurer against the insured to rescind the insurance on the ground of lack of cooperation; the rights of the intervenors against the insurance company were solely dependent on the result of the action in which they intervened, their damage claim having been litigated, and they did not, as does the appellant, advance any contention in derogation of their interest. Moreover it does not appear that in either of the two cases the sufficiency of the interest of the intervenors was attacked.

Two additional grounds militate against the intervention permitted in this case.

Appellant did not desire but actively opposed decision of its liability on the policy in the same action, so that the intervention could not serve its normal main purpose which is to obviate delay and multiplicity of actions, Belt Casualty Co. v. Furman, supra, 218 Cal. at page 362, 23 P.2d 293, and the intervention interjected insurance in the damage action, a result to be avoided if not necessitated by more weighty considerations. We conclude that the permission to intervene and to take part in the trial was error.

[4, 5] Appellant urges that even if the intervention was erroneously permitted it did not prejudice Rose, Jr. Considering the position taken by Rose, Jr. at the trial, and the verdict, low compared to Rose, Jr.'s expectation, this contention might well have some merit, but the point has been decided by the trial court against appellant in granting the new trial. "Whether or not the rights of the moving party were prejudiced by an error of law occurring at the trial is a matter which rests so completely within the discretion of the trial judge that an appellate court will not interfere with his action in granting a motion for a new trial upon that ground except for a manifest abuse of discretion." Brignoli v. Seaboard Transportation Co., 29 Cal.2d 782, 792, 178 P.2d 445, 451. We cannot say that the presence of intervenor insurer at the trial cannot possibly have been prejudicial and that therefore the order appealed from was a manifest abuse of discretion.

Order affirmed.

DOOLING and KAUFMAN, JJ., concur.
Hearing denied; SCHAUER and SPENCE, JJ., dissenting.

137 Cal.App.2d 660

The PEOPLE of the State of California,
Plaintiff and Respondent,
v.

Ray ADAMS, Defendant and Appellant.
Cr. 994.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District,
California.

Dec. 8, 1955.

Hearing Denied Jan. 5, 1956.

Defendant was convicted of grand theft by false pretenses. The Superior Court of Orange County, Kenneth E. Morrison, J., entered judgment and an order denying new trial, and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Griffin, J., held that evidence sustained conviction.

Judgment and order denying new trial affirmed.

1. Criminal Law ⚭1128(1)

Matters outside record may not be considered on appeal.

2. Criminal Law ⚭1116

Where transcript of grand jury proceedings did not appear in record on appeal by defendant from judgment of conviction for grand theft, District Court of Appeal could not consider alleged error of trial court in overruling defendant's general demurrer to the indictment and denial of motion to quash.

3. False Pretenses ⚭49(5)

The express testimony of a victim of false pretenses that he was induced to part with his money by fraudulent statements of accused is not essential to successful prosecution of an action for theft by false pretenses, and it is sufficient if inference of his reliance could have been drawn from all of the evidence.

4. Criminal Law ⚭1144(13)

A reviewing court will assume, in support of a judgment of conviction, the existence of every fact which jury could have reasonably deduced from the evidence, and will then determine whether the facts justify inference of guilt.

5. Criminal Law ⚭559

An inference is evidence, and must prevail, unless it is overcome by other evidence.

6. Criminal Law ⚭1159(2)

Any inference of fact, which the jury may reasonably draw from the evidence, is entitled to the same consideration in support of its finding as findings of fact on conflicting evidence.

7. Criminal Law ⚭1159(2)

If a finding is based on a reasonable inference, it is not within power of reviewing court to set it aside any more than it is within power of reviewing court to set aside any other finding supported by sufficient legal evidence, since a finding of fact, based on reasonable inference drawn from facts proved with legal sufficiency, is as much, and as completely as is any other, a finding based on good and sufficient evidence.

8. False Pretenses ⚭49(1)

Evidence sustained conviction for grand theft by false pretenses.

9. Indictment and Information ⚭176

Where indictment charging grand theft by false pretenses alleged that on December 8 the defendant obtained a cashier's check for $8,500 from prosecuting witness for obtaining a liquor license for her, and evidence showed that check was not endorsed until latter part of January, variance in reference to time of receiving the check and date of endorsement of the check would be immaterial, if previous false representation by defendant in obtaining the check was the motivating cause of transfer of title and possession of check.

10. False Pretenses ⚭9

Where one has knowingly and designedly by fraudulent representations defrauded another, the representations will be treated as continuing so as to cover any money, property, or services received as result thereof.

11. Criminal Law ⚭1173(2)

In prosecution for grand theft by false pretenses, wherein there was evidence that defendant represented to prosecuting witness that it would take $8,500 for defendant to obtain a liquor license for prosecuting witness because it would be necessary for defendant to pay a considerable portion of that amount to others, and that he was only going to retain a small amount of that sum, but that defendant retained the entire amount, it was not prejudicial error to fail to give defendant's proffered instruction that prosecuting witness received what she bargained for and that therefore defendant could not be found guilty.

12. False Pretenses $\Rightarrow$ 49(1)

In prosecution for grand theft by false pretenses, wherein defendant admitted having substantially made the representations as testified to by complaining witness, statutory requirement for corroboration was satisfied. Pen.Code, § 1110.

Z. B. West, Santa Ana, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Norman H. Sokolow, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

GRIFFIN, Justice.

The Grand Jury indicted defendant and appellant Ray Adams on two counts, Count I with conspiracy, and Count II with grand theft of personal property of the value of $8,500, to wit, a cashier's check in that amount belonging to Melitas Forster. Defendant admitted a charge of prior conviction of a felony and that he served a term of imprisonment therefor in a federal prison. A trial by jury resulted in a directed verdict of not guilty on the first count, and a verdict of guilty on the second count.

[1,2] Prior to trial the court overruled a general demurrer to the indictment and denied a motion to quash. Exception is taken thereto on this appeal. A transcript of the Grand Jury proceedings does not appear in the record. Matters outside the record may not be considered on an appeal. People v. Ruiz, 103 Cal.App.2d 146, 150, 229 P.2d 73. No error appears in the rulings. People v. Reed, 113 Cal.App.2d 339, 248 P.2d 510.

The main contention is that the evidence is insufficient to support the verdict on the second count. Considerable evidence was submitted to the jury in respect to the first count which was not particularly applicable to the second count.

In 1952-1953, William G. Bonelli was a member of the Board of Equalization of the district which included Orange and Los Angeles counties and the board had exclusive power to issue and control the transfer of liquor licenses subject to certain rules and regulations. Herman Pause was supervising liquor control officer for Orange County. His immediate superior was H. E. MacKenzie, District Liquor Administrator. There had been a limitation on the number of "P" (on-sale) licenses in effect since 1939, and no new licenses were issued in that district between 1945 and 1951, and because of this limitation P licenses acquired a value on transfer ranging as high as $10,000 to $15,000. A new census increased the number of licenses allowable, and applications therefor were accepted in limited numbers, mainly from people who came into Pause's office. Ordinarily, no application would be received unless consent was obtained from Mr. MacKenzie. In 1952, about 42 additional such licenses were issued containing the approval of Pause and MacKenzie, and it was indicated that no license application recommended by them was ever refused by the Board.

Prior to December 10, 1952, Melitas Forster, being the holder of an "A" (on-sale beer and wine license) attempted, on several occasions, to make an application to Pause for a P license but her application was refused. She inquired around generally and endeavored to secure such a license "any way she could", whether by purchase, by transfer, or by securing a new one. On December 6, 1952, according to her testimony, she received a telephone call from defendant Adams, who was a member of the Tavern Association to which she belonged, and he told her he heard she was interested in obtaining a P license and she said she was; that defendant said "he knew of one or something that would run $8,500 to get", and that it would be necessary to act quickly; that she told him she did not have that amount of money but would go to the bank and borrow it; that defendant agreed to come to her apartment on December 8th, after she obtained it; that she borrowed the money from the bank and secured a cashier's check for $8,500 made payable to her as advised by her attorney; that defendant came to her apartment on December 8th and conversed with her generally in the presence of a friend and then proceeded out into the hall where Miss Forster gave him the check, unendorsed, because she was leaving on a trip and would not return for some time, and she told him that if the license transaction went through she would, on her return, endorse it over to him; and that defendant then told her to apply to Pause the next day and have a license. She stated that there was no particular statement made on that occasion as to "where the money was to go"; that on December 12th she applied for the license, as instructed, and Pause refused it on several occasions and finally Pause told her he could now take her application; that she filled it out (the record does not indicate whether or not she directly paid the $325 fee required by law for such a license); that soon thereafter she left on her trip and returned about the end of January, 1953, and found the P license had been received at her place of business; that defendant contacted her and asked her to lunch with him; that a conversation was had about the license and she told him "that is a lot of money to pay for a license * * or something like that" and she thought he said: "he was only going to get a small part of it"; that she then endorsed the check and Adams took it with him because she had a feeling that defendant did something to help get the license because there was talk among the tavern owners about what was being paid for the new licenses that were issued. It would be a proper inference from the testimony that she believed from defendant's actions and statements that it was represented by defendant that a considerable portion of this money would be paid to others in order for her to obtain the new license, and that she was led to believe that defendant was not to retain all of it. She testified she never received any of it back from him and did not ask for it because she had a license and that was what she wanted. She testified she knew defendant was Executive Secretary of the Tavern Association and went to Sacramento as a lobbyist for the association and there attended meetings of the Board of Equalization.

The check involved was received in evidence. Mr. Cole, who operates a bar and a check service in Los Angeles, testified he knew defendant well; that defendant came to him to cash the $8,500 check and, without requiring an endorsement by him, he cashed it; that a couple of days later defendant came around and picked up the money; that because of his friendship for defendant he charged no fee for this service; and he was surprised to learn he had not required defendant to endorse the check. When an investigation started in reference to this license, the witness was confronted with the check and asked to relate the circumstances. He stated that after this conversation he called the defendant and told him about the investigation and that defendant said he wanted to talk to him about it and that he told defendant what he had told the investigator about the transaction as he remembered it and that defendant thereafter asked no questions but remained silent.

The investigator for the attorney general's office, R. F. McCarthy, testified that on September 17, 1954, after defendant found out he was being sought as a witness, defendant telephoned this investigator at a private telephone and then told him to go to a public pay station and call him at a certain designated number which he gave to him; that this was done and defendant answered and said he was in a difficult position; that he was mysterious about the telephone calls because of having been in Orange County the day before, had contacted several different owners and had learned that the information had gotten out that Melitas Forster had given him a check for $8,500 in payment of a license. He then stated:

"* * * that because of his position with the Tavern Owners Association he didn't want to become involved, but that he had a program afoot where he was trying to learn who it was and how it was that these licenses were being issued in the Fourth District; that he had on numerous occasions difficulties with Artie Samich, who at that time was a lobbyist in Sacramento in the liquor industry, to the effect that he was interfering with Mr. Samich's programs, and they even went so far as to try to remove him from his job, and because of that he was mysterious all the way through; that he was in a difficult position, and felt that when he would discuss it with us he would clear the entire matter up to our satisfaction only if the information would go to the Attorney General, to the Governor, the Supreme Court and other officials"; that he then stated he "thought we did a good job in getting the information from Melitas Forster, but that it did interfere with his plans considerably; that * * * this having developed he wouldn't be able to go on with his thoughts that he had in mind * * * that he took the check to Mr. Cole, a friend of his, for the purpose of having it cashed, and also so that Mr. Cole would have knowledge of this transaction * * *"; that he "Went on to state that he would get hold of his attorney * * * and ask him permission to discuss the situation with us, but informed us emphatically that he wouldn't give" his attorney "all the particulars concerning the Forster deal"; that he asked him "as to why he would tell him anything at all if he did not confide in him and not tell him everything"; and that he stated "he didn't have complete faith in" his attorney "and that he didn't want this information to get back to the members of the Tavern Owners; that if it did it would break up his entire program of trying to learn how these licenses were being issued"; that he "Stated further that if I were to relate this to anyone else before he had permission from his attorney to discuss it with us, that he would deny ever having discussed it with us at any time"; that he "asked him before hanging up if he would tell me what he did with the $8500, and he answered it by stating that when we did learn what he had done with—that we would be considerably surprised, but he wouldn't discuss it any further at that time."

Portions of this conversation were corroborated by another investigator who listened in on the conversation.

Essentially, the defense consisted of the testimony of character witnesses and of the testimony of defendant himself to the effect that he received the money in question from Miss Forster as payment for a service. He testified in part that he represented the interests of on-sale liquor licensees of the association of which he was executive secretary in public relations and legislative matters; that he was well acquainted with the members of the Board of Equalization and had known Mr. Bonelli for 20 years; that he attended nearly all of their meetings; that on November 20, 1952, he was present and had a conversation with Mr. Bonelli as to whether he was going to allow any more licenses to be issued in Orange County, and that Mr. Bonelli told him he would approve licenses there provided they were for qualified establishments; that subsequently he conversed with Miss Forster and told her that he heard she was interested in obtaining a P license; that she said she was but was not in any position to pay $12,000 to $14,000 for one; that he asked her how much a new license would be worth to her and she said $8,500; that he told her he was not sure that he could do her any good but he would try and that she said she would have the $8,500. She asked him how she would know whether she would obtain her money back if she did not receive the license and that he suggested she place it in escrow, and that if he did have influence enough she could give him the money then, and that he probably made the suggestion that she obtain a cashier's check made out to herself, unendorsed; that she did give him such a check and that he then told her to file her application the next day; that in a telephone conversation of December 9th, she told defendant that Pause had refused to accept it because it had not been approved by Mr. MacKenzie, and that he told her this was the first time he ever heard of such a requirement and that he would find out about it; that he telephoned Mr. Bonelli and he was not in but he told his secretary about it and she said she would leave a note for Mr. Bonelli about it and also contact Mr. MacKenzie; that the next morning she went to the office in Santa Ana and her application was accepted and Mr. Pause told her Mr. MacKenzie had approved it; that he did nothing further at the time with respect to her license application other than to call Mr. Bonelli's office; that he followed through and checked with the Santa Ana office according to his regular procedure and learned that the application had been accepted.

With reference to the cashing of the cashier's check by Mr. Cole, defendant testified that when he learned that the check had been cashed without his endorsement he was quite surprised; and that he never gave any of the money to Mr. Bonelli, Mr. MacKenzie or Mr. Pause or anyone else in connection with the securing of her license. He admitted the conversation with the investigator for the attorney general but claimed the strange method he used in connection with the telephone conversation was due to his knowledge of "how they frame you up with these little records when you call them at their offices"; and that he had been engaged in conducting an investigation for 15 years on his own to find out about what was going on. He stated that what he told McCarthy was the truth, as far as he knew, and when asked about where the $8,500 went, on cross-examination by the district attorney, he testified he did not know but that he had spent it for his own personal purposes; that he took $3,500 to Sacramento as advances on his expenses and paid $2,550 income tax on the $8,500 he received. He admitted that after September, 1954, an amended income tax was filed by him in reference to the $8,500 he received in 1953, after the investigation in this matter was under way. Defendant testified he told Miss Forster he would do everything possible to see to it that she got a liquor license but that he did not tell her what he was going to do or how he was going to do it.

Both Mr. MacKenzie and Mr. Pause testified at the trial that defendant did not intercede on behalf of Miss Forster to obtain the license. They did not recall that he ever talked to them about it; that they received nothing by way of compensation for the issuance of the license; and that there was no reason why her license should not have been issued in the ordinary course.

It is defendant's claim that the evidence falls short of showing any false pretense or misrepresentation relied upon by Miss Forster which caused her to part with her money, and since she received what she bargained for and at the price agreed upon, no theft by false pretenses was committed.

[3-7] A very close question is presented in this respect. The express testimony of a victim of false pretenses that he was induced to part with his money by the fraudulent statements of the accused is not essential to the successful prosecution of an action for theft by false pretenses, but it is sufficient if the inference of his reliance could have been drawn from all the evidence. An appellate court will assume in support of a judgment of conviction the existence of every fact which the jury could have reasonably deduced from the evidence, and will then determine whether the facts justify the inference of guilt. An inference is evidence, and must prevail unless it is overcome by other evidence. Any inference of fact which the jury may reasonably draw from the evidence is entitled to the same consideration in support of its finding as findings of fact upon conflicting evidence. If a finding is based upon a reasonable inference it is not within the power of the appellate court to set it aside any more than it is within its power to set aside any other finding supported by sufficient legal evidence, for a finding of fact, based upon reasonable inference drawn from facts proved with legal sufficiency, is as much, and as completely as is any other, a finding based upon good and sufficient evidence. 10 Cal.Jur. p. 740, sec. 61; Bompensiero v. Superior Court, 44 Cal.2d 178, 281 P.2d 250.

The jury was fully instructed that every person who knowingly and designedly, by any false or fraudulent representation or pretenses defrauds any other person of money, is guilty of theft, and that "the false pretense used must be a fraudulent representation of an existing or past fact by one who knows it to be not true, or who makes the representation recklessly and without information justifying a belief that it is true, and it must be such as is adapted to induce the person to whom it is made to part with something of value;" that it is not necessary that the fraudulent representation be made by words, if it may reasonably be inferred from a person's act and conduct; that proof of these four facts must be made against the defendant before he may be found guilty of the crime of theft by means of false or fraudulent representations or pretense: (1) The defendant must have intended to defraud the person named in the indictment as the one against whom the crime was perpetrated; (2) Actual fraud must have been committed by the defendant against that person; (3) Some false representation or false pretense must have been used by defendant for the purpose of perpetrating the fraud, and must have been a material element in inducing the owner to part with the property; and (4) The fraud must have been accomplished, that is, the defendant, by means of the fraud, must have induced the owner to part with the property, the owner intending to divest himself of title, and the defendant thus must have obtained the property.

This was followed by another instruction in the language of CALJIC 227, to the effect that:

"In order for a false representation to be a material element in inducing an owner to part with property, intending to divest himself of title, the owner must rely wholly or in part, as he has a right to do, on that representation, and he must act in that reliance. Hence, although an owner of money is under no duty to make an investigation, and has the right to rely on the representation made to him, if, before transferring property to another, he does make independent inquiry or investigation and relies thereon rather than on any representation made to him by the other person, or when, for any reason, the owner does not rely on any false representation or pretense made to him by that other person, the latter is not guilty of obtaining said property by false or fraudulent representation or pretense."

An instruction in the language of CALJIC No. 223 was also given respecting theft by trick and device.

[8] Under the evidence and instructions given the jury might well have inferred that defendant did represent to Miss Forster that upon the payment to him of the sum of $8,500 he would be able to secure a new license for her and at no price less than that amount; that to do so it would be necessary for him to pay a considerable portion of that amount to others to bring about the issuance of such a license; and that when she complained about the price fixed by defendant, he said he was only going to get a small part of it when, in fact, he stated he kept all of it, and apparently, from the record, it was not necessary to pay any portion of it to anyone, since it probably would have been issued in due course.

Defendant's conduct, after being presented with the surrounding facts, and the evidence pertaining to the delayed filing of the amended income tax return, rather indicates that the representations inferentially made by defendant were not entirely true and that if Miss Forster had known the truth of the transaction she would not have turned that amount of money over to defendant for his personal use. At least the jury was justified in so believing and that the defendant misappropriated in excess of $200 in keeping the entire sum.

This conclusion receives some support in the case of People v. Chamberlain, 96 Cal. App.2d 178, 214 P.2d 600, where the evidence showed that defendant obtained money from the victim on representations that he could and would "fix" a horse race, but instead appropriated the money to his own use. The court held the conviction to be sustainable on the theory of theft by trick and device as well as by false pretenses. See also People v. Edwards, 72 Cal.App. 102, 113, 236 P. 944, where it was held (quoting from the syllabus) that:

"A taking, within the definition of larceny, occurs when a person, with a preconceived design to appropriate the property to his own use, obtains possession of it by means of fraud or trickery; and in such case the fraud vitiates the transaction, and the owner is deemed still to retain a constructive possession of the property"; and that "It is essential in cases of larceny committed by means of fraud that the owner shall intend to part with the possession only, and not to pass the title as well. If he intends to pass both the possession and the title, the transaction, though it may amount to the crime of obtaining property by false pretenses, will not constitute larceny"; and that "The owner does not part with the title to the alleged thief where the thing which is the subject of the theft is delivered by the owner to the accused to be applied by the latter to a particular purpose, and the recipient of the property, having obtained the possession fraudulently with the preconceived intention to appropriate the property to his own use, does subsequently convert it to his own use instead of applying it to the purpose contemplated by the owner."

In that case the evidence and inferences therefrom showed that the complaining witness delivered a sum of money to the defendant upon the latter's representation that it would be used in some manner to corrupt officers investigating criminal charges against the husband and brother-in-law of the complaining witness, that the representation proved to be false and the possession of the money was obtained with a preconceived design not to devote the same to the purpose for which it was delivered to defendant but to convert it to his own use.

[9, 10] Defendant contends that neither title nor possession, in the strict sense, passed to defendant until the occasion when the check was endorsed, around the latter part of January, 1953, and that this constitutes a variance from the date alleged in the indictment, namely, December 8, 1952, citing such cases as People v. Cravens, 79 Cal.App.2d 658, 180 P.2d 453; and People v. Tufts, 167 Cal. 266, 139 P. 78. The variance in reference to the time of the taking, as alleged, and the date of the endorsement of the check would be immaterial under the facts of this case if the previous false representation was the motivating cause of the transfer of title and possession of the check. When one has knowingly and designedly by fraudulent representations defrauded another, the representations shall be treated as continuing so as to cover any money, property or services received as a result thereof. People v. Rice, 73 Cal. 220, 221, 14 P. 851; People v. Murray, 91 Cal.App.2d 253, 257, 204 P. 2d 624; People v. Lyon, 135 Cal.App.2d 558, 288 P.2d 57; People v. Sheffield, 9 Cal. App. 130, 98 P. 67; People v. Frankfort, 114 Cal.App.2d 680, 704, 251 P.2d 401.

Defendant next contends that the evidence shows that Miss Forster did receive what she bargained for and accordingly he could not be guilty of theft by false pretenses, and that the court's failure to give his proffered instruction to this effect was error, citing People v. Ingles, 117 Cal.App. 22, 24, 3 P.2d 341; People v. Tufts, supra; and 25 C.J. p. 609 [Sec. 38] 9; 35 C.J.S., False Pretenses, § 28.

[11] While this rule of law may be applicable under certain circumstances, it cannot be said that a person receives what she bargained for if it is falsely represented to her that to obtain a certain article or license costing $325, it would take $8,500 to obtain it because it would be necessary to pay a considerable portion of that amount to others, and that he was only going to retain a small amount of it. The jury was instructed on the subject and had a right to believe that the party defrauded would not have otherwise parted with possession of the money. The court fully instructed the jury on the elements of the offense. No prejudicial error resulted in the failure to give the proffered instruction as proffered. People v. Raines, 66 Cal.App.2d 960, 962, 153 P.2d 424.

[12] Lastly, it is contended by defendant that if there were any false pretenses established, by inference, circumstantial evidence or otherwise, there was no corroboration thereof, as required by section 1110 of the Penal Code. Under the evidence above related, the requirement for corroboration is satisfied particularly where the defendant admits having substantially made the representations as testified to by the complaining witness. People v. Reed, 113 Cal.App.2d 339, 350, 248 P.2d 510; People v. Frankfort, 114 Cal.App.2d 680, 701, 251 P.2d 401.

Judgment and order denying a new trial affirmed.

BARNARD, P. J., and MUSSELL, J., concur.

Hearing denied; GIBSON, C. J., not participating.

137 Cal.App.2d 728

Arley MUNS, Petitioner,

v.

The SUPERIOR COURT of the State of California, In and for the COUNTY OF SUTTER, Respondent.

Civ. 8810.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Dec. 12, 1955.

Hearing Denied Feb. 8, 1956.

Proceeding in prohibition to restrain Superior Court, Sutter County, from trying accused on charge of driving while under influence of intoxicating liquor with prior conviction, on ground that the action had been dismissed in that the Justice Court, after the filing of an amended complaint, had dismissed the original complaint charging same offense without prior conviction. The District Court of Appeal, Van Dyke, P. J., held that under the circumstances there was not such a dismissal as would bar the prosecution in the Superior Court.

Alternative writ discharged and peremptory writ denied.

1. Criminal Law ¶178

Where accused pleaded not guilty to drunken driving complaint in Justice Court, and before date of trial an amended complaint was filed charging same offense with a prior conviction, and original complaint was ordered dismissed at request of district attorney, and Justice, sitting as magistrate, held preliminary hearing and ordered that accused be held for trial in Superior Court, there was not such a dismissal of action as would bar prosecution in Superior Court. Vehicle Code, § 502; Pen.Code, § 1387.

2. Criminal Law ¶214

Where accused pleaded guilty to drunken driving and Justice Court received advice that amended complaint charging same offense with prior conviction was being prepared and ordered the setting aside of the proceedings following filing of original complaint, the amended complaint which was thereafter filed was filed with permission of court as required by statute. Vehicle Code, § 502; Pen.Code, § 1008.

Hewitt & McBride, Yuba City, for petitioner.

John G. Hauck, Dist. Atty., Sutter County, Yuba City, and Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Doris H. Maier, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

VAN DYKE, Presiding Justice.

This proceeding is in prohibition. The petitioner seeks to restrain the respondent Superior Court from trying him under an information charging violation of Section 502 of the Vehicle Code, with a prior conviction.

On December 14, 1954, there was filed in the Justice Court of the Yuba Judicial District in Sutter County, a complaint charging petitioner with violation of said section, with no charge of a prior conviction. Petitioner entered a plea of not guilty, demanded a jury trial, and a trial date was set. Thereafter, and before the date of trial, a document entitled "Amended Complaint" was filed charging the same violation and alleging a prior conviction. Thereby the cause became triable in the superior court. After the filing of this document, the justice court set a preliminary hearing on the same for January 13th. Prior to the preliminary hearing the original complaint filed December 14th, as aforesaid, was, at the request of the district attorney, ordered "dismissed". The judge of the justice court, sitting as a magistrate, proceeded with the preliminary hearing and at the close thereof ordered that the petitioner herein be held for trial in the superior court. Thereafter an information was filed charging the same violation, with prior conviction. Motion to discharge the defendant was denied and this proceeding followed.

[1] It is the contention of petitioner that by the order made, which purportedly dismissed the original complaint, there was accomplished a dismissal of the action and that by the provisions of Section 1387 of the Penal Code that dismissal stands as a bar to any other prosecution for the same offense.

The docket entries in the Justice Court read as follows:

"Dec. 14 Complaint filed charging a misdemeanor. Defendant appeared in Court was informed as to his rights. Defendant entered a plea of not guilty and demanded a trial by jury. Trial was set for January 12, 1955 at 10 A.M. Defendant posted bail of $211.00 and was released.

"Jan. 3 It being brought to the attention of the Court that the defendant had suffered a prior conviction for this violation, the above proceedings are hereby set aside and the Dist. Atty is preparing an amended Complaint charging him with a prior conviction.

"Jan. 7 Prel. date 1-13-55 at 3:30 P.M. :

"Jan. 5 Amended Complaint filed charging a high misdemeanor Sect. 502 CVC Code with a prior conviction.

"Jan. 10 Subpoena issued, Perkins, Bumpus, Savana

"Jan. 13 Preliminary came on at 3:30 P.M. Dist. Atty. John Hauck represented the People—Atty. Loyd E. Hewitt represented the defendant. Hollan Jones was sworn in as Reporter. Yuba City Police Officer Neil R. Perkins was sworn and testified. The prosecution rested. The defense offered no witnesses. The Defendant was ordered held to answer and to appear in the Superior Court on Friday Jan. 21, 1955, at 9:30 A.M. for arraignment. Bail transferred to Co. Clerk Ck No. 226. Prior to the preliminary the original Complaint filed Dec. 14, 1954 was at the request of the District Attorney ordered dismissed."

Section 1387 of the Penal Code provides: "An order for the dismissal of the action, made as provided in this chapter, is a bar to any other prosecution for the same offense if it is a misdemeanor * * *." Petitioner's contention that by what was done the action was dismissed cannot be sustained.

Although the docket does not record the proceedings of the court with all the nicety that would have been desirable, yet, given a fair construction, it does not warrant holding that there was a dismissal of the action. It shows that the court had been informed that the defendant had suffered a prior conviction and that the district attorney was preparing to file an amended complaint to allege the prior. The legal effect of such an amendment would be to oust the justice court of trial jurisdiction, would render nugatory the proceedings following the filing of the original complaint, that is, the plea, the demand for trial by jury and the order setting the cause for trial before that court, and would require a preliminary hearing to determine whether or not defendant should be held for superior court action. With this in mind the court formally set aside such prior proceedings. Thereafter the expected amended pleading was filed. The docket further shows that when the defendant next appeared on the date set for the preliminary, and before the preliminary was begun, the district attorney requested that "the original Complaint filed Dec. 14, 1954" be ordered dismissed. This order was made. This, however, could not effect the dismissal of the action. Such a construction of the docket would fly in the face of a number of circumstances apparent from the record. Thus, after the order was made, the judge of the justice court sitting as a magistrate held the preliminary hearing and at its conclusion ordered the petitioner held for trial in the superior court. Although acting in two different capacities, it is clear that the official did not consider that the action itself had been dismissed. Again the district attorney did not ask that the action be dismissed but that the "original complaint" be dismissed and such was the form of the order. The use of the descriptive term "original" shows that the district attorney was not addressing his motion to the action itself nor to the existing pleading, that is, the amended complaint. After the filing of the amended pleading, the original complaint was no longer a pleading in the case, and it could not be "dismissed". The amended pleading superseded it and it had no further function as a pleading. O'Brien v. O'Brien, 50 Cal.App.2d 658, 661, 123 P.2d 877; Owens v. Traverso, 125 Cal.App.2d 803, 808, 271 P.2d 164; Puchta v. Rothman, 99 Cal.App.2d 285, 291, 221 P.2d 744; 21 Cal.Jur. p. 213, sec. 146; 42 C.J.S., Indictments and Informations, § 239, p. 1248; Woodsmall v. State, 89 Ind.App. 617, 167 N.E. 631. The order of the justice court purporting to dismiss the "original complaint" was a nullity. The action of the district attorney, followed by the order of the court "dismissing", or purporting to dismiss, the "original complaint", cannot be given the force and effect of a dismissal of the action.

[2] It is argued that, since the complaint could not be amended after plea without the permission or an authorizing order of the court that it be so amended, Penal Code, § 1008; People v. Brower, 92 Cal.App.2d 562, 564, 207 P.2d 571, and since the record does not show such permission, the filing of the amended complaint was a nullity. This argument calls for an unwarrantably strained construction of the record. We think permission must be implied. The docket states: "It being brought to the attention of the Court that the Defendant had suffered a prior conviction for this violation, the above proceedings are hereby set aside and the Dist. Atty is preparing an amended Complaint charging him with a prior conviction." Within two days thereafter the amended complaint was filed. We hold it was filed with permission of the court and that the docket sufficiently shows this to be so.

For the reasons given, petitioner is not entitled to a writ of prohibition and the Superior Court had jurisdiction to proceed with the trial of the action.

The alternative writ heretofore issued is discharged. The peremptory writ is denied.

PEEK and SCHOTTKY, JJ., concur.

137 Cal.App.2d 840

Charles W. MERZ, Petitioner,

v.

SUPERIOR COURT of the State of California, in and for the COUNTY OF SUTTER, Respondent.

Civ. 8811.

District Court of Appeal, Third District,
California.

Dec. 12, 1955.

Hearing Denied Feb. 8, 1956.

Proceeding in prohibition to restrain Superior Court, Sutter County, from trying accused on charge of driving while under influence of intoxicating liquor with prior conviction, on ground that the action had been dismissed in that the Justice Court, after the filing of amended complaint, had dismissed the original complaint charging same offense without prior conviction. The District Court of Appeal, Van Dyke, P. J., held that under the circumstances there was not such a dismissal as would bar prosecution in the Superior Court.

Alternative writ discharged and peremptory writ denied.

I. Criminal Law §214

In action for driving while under influence of intoxicating liquor, where justice court docket showed notice of previous conviction filed after preliminary hearing, filing of amended complaint, and schedule for preliminary examination on amended complaint, court's permission for filing of amended complaint would be implied. Vehicle Code, § 502.

2. Criminal Law ⇨214

Where pleading was filed in Justice Court in criminal case and was designated in docket entry as amended complaint and pleading was proffered, received and filed as amended complaint, it constituted a properly filed amended complaint, notwithstanding fact that it may not have been labeled "amended complaint".

3. Criminal Law ⇨214

Where original complaint in Justice Court charging defendant with driving while under influence of intoxicating liquor was amended by filing amended complaint charging same offense with prior conviction, the amended complaint superseded the original complaint, and order thereafter made purporting to dismiss original complaint was a nullity and defendant was triable in Superior Court upon charges which were contained in amended pleading and which, after preliminary hearing, the defendant had been ordered to answer in the Superior Court. Vehicle Code, § 502.

Hewitt & McBride, Yuba City, and Manwell & Manwell, Marysville, for petitioner.

John G. Hauck, Dist. Atty., Sutter County, Yuba City, and Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Doris H. Maier, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

VAN DYKE, Presiding Justice.

The petitioner herein seeks to restrain the respondent, Superior Court, from trying him under an information charging him with violation of Section 502 of the Vehicle Code, with a prior conviction. The matter presents in general the same issues discussed in Muns v. Superior Court, Cal. App., 290 P.2d 951, in which an opinion was this day filed. The docket entries in the instant case were as follows:

"Dec. 10 Complaint filed charging a misdemeanor. Defendant was arrested—and released on $211.00 bail, for appearance on Dec. 17, 1954, at 10 A.M.

"Dec. 17 Defendant, through his Atty. Ray Manwell, entered a plea of not guilty and demanded a jury trial, Atty. Manwell stated he would waive time limitations.

* * * * *

"Jan. 10 Prior thereto, to wit, on June 15, 1953 said Defendant was convicted in Justice Court, Oroville Twp., County of Butte, of driving a motor vehicle while under the influence of intoxicating liquor.

"An amended complaint, signed by Captain Nick Frandrup, Yuba City Police Force is now on file in this Court.

"Preliminary examination is hereby set for January 13, 1955 at 4 P.M. Ray Manwell, Atty. for Defendant duly notified.

* * * * *

"Jan. 13 Preliminary came on at 4 P.M. John Hauck Dist. Atty. represented the People—Atty. Ray Manwell represented the Defendant—Hollan Jones was sworn in as Reporter. Prior to preliminary the Original Complaint filed on Dec. 10, 1954, was dismissed on motion of Dist. Atty.

"Through Atty. Manwell, Atty. for Defendant, the preliminary was waived and the Defendant was ordered held to answer.

"Bail to remain the same.

"Bail transferred to Co. Clerk Ck. No. 226."

[1-3] We think this record also, just as we held in Muns v. Superior Court, supra, when properly construed, shows that the second pleading was filed with the permission of the court. Unlike the second pleading filed in Muns v. Superior Court, the second pleading filed herein was not entitled as an "Amended Complaint" on its face. The cover sheet, however, contained the descriptive words "Amended Complaint" and there was considerable discussion as to whether it bore that designation when filed. We think the point immaterial and will assume that it did not. However, it was designated in the docket entry as an amended complaint and we think it was proffered, received and filed as such and constituted a properly filed amended complaint. It, therefore, superseded the original complaint and, as we held in Muns v. Superior Court, the order thereafter made purporting to "dismiss" the "original complaint" was a nullity. Defendant, having been properly held to answer, is triable in the respondent court upon the charges contained in the amended pleading.

The alternative writ heretofore issued is discharged. The peremptory writ is denied.

PEEK and SCHOTTKY, JJ., concur.

137 Cal.App.2d 532

Allan D. GREENWOOD, Plaintiff and Appellant,

v.

Leon MOORADIAN et al., Defendants.

R. Bruce Murchison, Defendant and
Respondent.

Allan D. GREENWOOD, Plaintiff and Appellant,

v.

Leon MOORADIAN et al., Defendants.

L. D. Ormsby et al., Defendants and Respondents.

Civ. 20859, 20972.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California.

Dec. 6, 1955.

Rehearings Denied Dec. 30, 1955.

Hearing Denied Feb. 1, 1956.

Action for damages and an accounting from defendants who were allegedly members of a joint venture which originally included plaintiff and from which he was allegedly excluded through a conspiracy of defendants. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Philbrick McCoy, J., entered judgment for nonsuit as to one of the defendants and sustained demurrers to an amended complaint without leave to amend and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Ashburn, J. pro tem., held that complaint which alleged that defendants had conspired to appropriate to their own uses, the benefits and profits of joint venture including plaintiff's interest, was sufficient to state a cause of action against defendant without allegations as to overt acts of particular defendant, and where written agreement was signed on behalf of firms or associations without any particularization as to type of entity, it would not be violation of parol evidence rule to introduce evidence as to their identity.

Judgments reversed.

1. Trial ☞109

An order granting motion for nonsuit based upon an opening statement can be upheld only where it is clear that counsel has undertaken to state all of the facts which he expects to prove and it is plainly evident that the facts thus to be proved will not constitute a cause of action or a defense as the case may be, but where these conditions are complied with, court is authorized to accept statements and admissions of counsel and to grant a nonsuit required by such statements or admissions.

2. Appeal and Error ☞925(3)

In reviewing an order granting a nonsuit on an opening statement, appellate court must apply rules analogous to those which govern it in reviewing an order granting a nonsuit after the introduction of evidence, and every favorable fact which counsel has stated as among those matters to be proved, together with all favorable inferences reasonably to be drawn therefrom, must be accepted by the court as facts which would have been proved if the case had been allowed to be tried.

3. Conspiracy ☞18

In civil action for damages and accounting based on a conspiracy, it is not necessary that acts constituting a conspiracy, as well as those inflicting a wrong pursuant thereto, must be alleged.

4. Conspiracy ☞18

In action for damages and accounting from defendants who were allegedly members of a joint adventure which originally included plaintiff and from which he was allegedly excluded through a conspiracy of the defendants, complaint which alleged that defendants had conspired to appropriate to their own uses the benefits and profits of joint adventure, including plaintiff's interest, was sufficient without specific allegations as to overt acts on part of particular defendants.

5. Conspiracy ⚡5

In order for a person to be held liable in civil action as a conspirator, it is not necessary that it be shown that he had done some overt and independently tortious act.

6. Conspiracy ⚡19

Because of the inherent difficulty in proving a conspiracy, a conspiracy may sometimes be inferred from the nature of the acts done, the relations of the parties, interests of the alleged conspirators and other circumstances.

7. Torts ⚡22

Each participant in the wrongful act is responsible as a joint tort-feasor for all damages ensuing from the wrong, regardless of whether or not he was a direct actor and the degree of his activity.

8. Attorney and Client ⚡26

Where action was brought for an accounting of profits and declarations of constructive trust against allegedly fellow joint adventurers and various individuals and corporations that had acquired the assets of the joint adventure, fact that one of the defendants was an attorney for one of the other defendants did not immunize him from liability for torts committed in person or liability for wrongs done pursuant to an alleged conspiracy joined by him.

9. Joint Ventures ⚡5(1)

Diversion to his own individual use of the entire assets of a joint venture by one member gives rise to a cause of action in favor of nonparticipating member who has been injured thereby and that injured member has a right to such legal or equitable relief as may be appropriate is a well-established doctrine.

10. Evidence ⚡459(1)

Where written agreement allegedly establishing a joint venture was signed on behalf of firms or associations without any particularization as to the type of business entities that became parties thereto, it would not be a violation of the parole evidence rule to introduce evidence as to the identity of entities on whose behalf document was signed

11. Joint Ventures ⚡5(2)

In action for an accounting for profits and declarations of a constructive trust against fellow joint adventurers, and various individuals and corporations that had allegedly acquired the assets of the joint venture, complaint alleging that defendants had conspired to appropriate to their own uses the benefits and profits of joint venture, including plaintiff's interest, was sufficient to state a cause of action.

12. Pleading ⚡225(1)

Where a complaint is good as against a general demurrer, it is erroneous for the trial court to sustain the demurrer without leave to amend because of defects in the form of pleading. West's Ann.Code Civ. Proc. § 472c.

13. Appeal and Error ⚡854(3)

Where the court sustained demurrers to complaint upon general and special grounds and plaintiff refused to amend the complaint, even though sustaining of demurrer to complaint on general ground was erroneous, if any of the special grounds of demurrer were well taken, judgment of dismissal would have to be affirmed. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 472c.

14. Joint Ventures ⚡5(1)

One member of a joint venture may individually maintain an action against other members of joint venture for an accounting and declaration of constructive trust.

15. Pleading ⚡52(1)

Cause of action for damages for breach of joint venture agreement could be joined with cause of action for an accounting and dissolution of joint venture without separate statement.

16. Joint Ventures ⚡5(1)

Plaintiff allegedly excluded from joint venture by conspiracy of defendants was entitled in equity court to any and all appropriate relief for the single wrong of excluding him from the joint venture and diverting the assets and business thereof to another entity or entities in which he was not permitted to participate.

17. Limitation of Actions ⚡24(2)

Where action was brought by individual against other members of joint adventure for an accounting and declaration of constructive trusts and individual's claim for compensation from joint adventure was but a part of the right to an accounting, four-year statute of limitations on written contracts was applicable and not two-year limitations statute on oral contracts. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 339, subd. 1.

Vaughan & Brandlin and Robert P. Schifferman, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Bicknell J. Showers, W. I. Gilbert, Jr., and Jean Wunderlich, Los Angeles, for respondent R. Bruce Murchison.

D. Brandon Bernstein, Beverly Hills, for other respondents.

ASHBURN, Justice pro tem.

Plaintiff Allan D. Greenwood prosecutes two appeals from judgments in a single action. One of them (No. 20859) is taken from a judgment of nonsuit in favor of defendant R. Bruce Murchison, entered upon plaintiff's opening statement with respect to the fourth amended complaint. The other (No. 20972) challenges two judgments made upon sustaining demurrers to sixth amended complaint without leave to amend.¹

Appeal from Judgment of Nonsuit.

The fourth amended complaint, upon which the case originally went to trial and which was before the court at the time of granting the Murchison nonsuit, alleged that plaintiff Greenwood, defendants Leon

Mooradian, L. D. Reeder, Frank Mile, Leonard D. Ormsby, L. M. Fabricating Co. and others, entered into a joint venture agreement on October 29, 1951, which was partly written and partly oral, the object being to produce for Lockheed Aircraft Corporation a certain product under purchase orders and a basic agreement made with that corporation. Defendant Murchison is not alleged to have been a member of the venture. The written agreement was made "between L. M. Fabricating Co. & Associates, First Party, and Reeder International & Associates, Second Party, as joint venturers and a joint venture to be known from date hereof as L. M. Engineering Company & Associates." It was signed on behalf of L. M. Fabricating Co. & Associates by Leon Mooradian, as "A managing Director"; and by L. D. Reeder as "A managing Director" of Reeder International & Associates. But it is alleged that there was an oral understanding between the plaintiff and the defendants who were parties to the joint venture, that the written agreement was to be executed by defendant Reeder in the name of Reeder International & Associates on behalf of plaintiff, defendants Reeder, Ormsby and Mile, and that in fact the writing was so executed; that it was further orally understood between said parties that a fifty per cent interest in the joint venture, which under the written agreement was nominally vested in Reeder International & Associates, belonged to the last named persons in the following proportions: L. D. Ormsby, 22 per cent, Allan D. Greenwood, 13 per cent, L. D. Reeder, 13 per cent and Frank Mile, 2 per cent. It was also alleged that defendant Mooradian executed the written agreement in the name of L. M. Fabricating Co. & Associates on behalf of himself, defendant L. M. Fabricating Co. and other fictitiously named defendants; that the 50 per cent interest in the joint venture nominally vested in said

1. One of those judgments runs in favor of L. M. Engineering Company & Associates, Inc., Leon Mooradian, L. M. Fabricating Company, L. M. Engineering Company, L. M. Industries, Inc., L. M. Fabricating Co. & Associates, L. M. Engineering Company & Associates, and E.

R. Waltrous. The other judgment is in favor of L. D. Ormsby, L. D. Reeder, Reeder International, L. D. Reeder Lumber Company, L. D. Reeder Company of Los Angeles, Teclite Supply, Incorporated, and Reeder International and Associates.

L. M. Fabricating Co. & Associates actually belonged to said Mooradian, L. M. Fabricating Co. and certain fictitiously named defendants in proportions unknown to plaintiff. The complaint also avers that it was likewise orally and contemporaneously agreed that the new joint venture, L. M. Engineering Company & Associates, would employ plaintiff and Mooradian for the duration of the joint venture and would pay to each of them a salary of $2,000 per month, beginning September 15, 1951, and continuing until the termination of the venture, which salaries would be in addition to the respective joint venture shares of plaintiff and Mooradian, but that the salary checks would not be cashed until a certain guarantee, executed by defendant Ormsby to the bank to secure a loan made by the joint venture, should be discharged in full. A conspiracy is alleged, and that allegation includes the defendant Murchison, a respected member of the bar, whose protestations of falsity of the charge cannot be here considered, for this court is confronted with a question of law only and must accept the allegations of the complaint as true for the purposes of this appeal.

The averment is that "the defendants herein have conspired together to appropriate to themselves and convert to their own use and benefit the assets and profits of the aforesaid joint venture, including the interest of the plaintiff therein, and have appropriated and converted the said assets and profits of the said joint venture in an amount unknown to the plaintiff, including the interest of the plaintiff therein;" that defendants caused defendant L. M. Engineering Co. & Associates, Inc. to be organized, the incorporators being Reeder, Mooradian and Murchison; "that said defendants are in complete control of said defendant corporation and have formed same for the purpose of holding the assets and profits of the joint venture and defrauding plaintiff of his interest in said joint venture and to its assets;" that the defendants, other than L. M. Engineering Company & Associates, caused the Lockheed purchase orders and basic agreement to be cancelled, obtained new purchase orders and a new basic agreement in the name of L. M. Engineering Co. & Associates, Inc., and appropriated and converted to their own use all of the assets of the joint venture, having an approximate value of $200,000; that this was done on or about March 25, 1952; that defendants are now operating under the new purchase orders and basic agreement and appropriating to themselves the profits of the venture; that they have deprived and are depriving plaintiff of his interest in its assets and profits; that the new corporation is under the control of defendants, including the defendant Murchison. Plaintiff prays for a receiver, an injunction, and an accounting of the affairs of the joint venture and the respective interests and rights of plaintiff and defendants in the assets thereof; that defendants be required to pay plaintiff his accrued salary in the sum of $13,000; that the court declare the respective rights and duties of the parties in the joint venture and in the successor enterprise which has been set up by defendants, and that plaintiff have general relief. Defendant Murchison is not a party to the first cause of action and hence the discussion herein relates to the second count.

Plaintiff's attorney made an opening statement which was supplemented until he declared it to be complete.

[1,2] The rules pertaining to a motion for nonsuit based upon an opening statement are set forth in Bias v. Reed, 169 Cal. 33, 37, 145 P. 516, 517: "It is no doubt true, as is argued by the appellants, that the practice of directing a verdict, in advance of the introduction of evidence, upon the opening statement of one or the other party, is a dangerous one, and that an order granting such motion can be upheld only where it is clear that counsel has undertaken to state all of the facts which he expects to prove, and it is plainly evident that the facts thus to be proved will not constitute a cause of action or a defense, as the case may be. * * * Where, however, these conditions are complied with, the court is authorized to accept the statements and admissions of counsel and to direct a verdict required by such statements or admissions. * * * [169 Cal. at page 38, 145 P. at page 518.] In reviewing an order directing a verdict on an opening statement, the appellate court must apply rules analogous to those which govern it in reviewing an order granting a nonsuit after the introduction of evidence. Every fact which counsel has stated as among the matters to be proved, together with all favorable inferences reasonably to be drawn therefrom, must be accepted by the court as facts which would have been proved if the case had been allowed to be tried." See also Moffitt v. Ford Motor Co., 117 Cal.App. 247, 251, 3 P.2d 605; Witkin California Procedure, Vol. 2, sec. 128, p. 1860.

The opening statement developed into a lengthy argument in which the judge participated and counsel for plaintiff was put to the burden of justifying his pleading and enumerating wrongful acts done by defendant Murchison in furtherance of the alleged conspiracy.

[3,4] The attack upon the complaint was centered upon the generality of the averment of conspiracy. It is above quoted and is sufficient to satisfy the controlling authorities. The argument is that acts constituting the conspiracy, as well as those inflicting a wrong pursuant thereto, must be alleged. The cases are to the contrary. In California Auto Court Ass'n v. Cohn, 98 Cal.App.2d 145, 219 P.2d 511, the allegation of fact of the conspiracy itself was no more detailed than the one at bar. At page 149 of 98 Cal.App.2d at page 514 of 219 P.2d, this division of this court rejected the claim of insufficiency of the allegation, saying: "As to the necessity of interference by unlawful action, respondents contend the complaint contains a bare allegation of conspiracy and is therefore insufficient. The elements of an action for civil conspiracy are the formation and operation of the conspiracy and damage resulting to plaintiff from an act or acts done in furtherance of the common design. The cause of action is the damage suffered. * * * The complaint contained allegations of acts of the respondents in detail and was not confined to a 'bare' allegation of conspiracy." The last quoted language referred to acts alleged to have been done pursuant to the conspiracy and in effectuating an actionable wrong.

In Abbot Kinney Co. v. Harrah, 84 Cal. App.2d 728, 733, 191 P.2d 761, this court also held sufficient a similar allegation of conspiracy. Like rulings were made in Moropoulos v. C. H. & O. B. Fuller Co., 186 Cal. 679, 682, 688, 200 P. 601; Mox, Inc., v. Woods, 202 Cal. 675, 677, 262 P. 302. See also Witkin, California Procedure, Vol. 2, sec. 469, pp. 1457-8.

[5-7] The view that defendant Murchison must be shown to have done some overt and independently tortious act in order to be liable as a conspirator is a mistaken one. In the California Auto Court Ass'n v. Cohn case, supra, 98 Cal.App.2d 145, at page 149, 219 P.2d 511, at page 514, the court also said: "Each participant in the wrongful act is responsible as a joint tort-feasor for all damages ensuing from the wrong, regardless of whether or not he was a direct actor and of the degree of his activity. Mox, Inc., v. Woods, 202 Cal. 675, 262 P. 302. Furthermore, because of the inherent difficulty in proving a conspiracy, it has been held that a conspiracy may sometimes be inferred from the nature of the acts done, the relations of the parties, the interests of the alleged conspirators, and other circumstances. Anderson v. Thacher, 76 Cal.App.2d 50, 72, 172 P.2d 533." Mox, Inc., v. Woods, supra, 202 Cal. at pages 677-678, 262 P. at page 303: "In such an action, the major significance of the conspiracy lies in the fact that it renders each participant in the wrongful act responsible as a joint tort-feasor for all damages ensuing from the wrong, irrespective of whether or not he was a direct actor and regardless of the degree of his activity. [Citing cases.] A plaintiff is entitled to a joint recovery of damages against such defendants as he can show have united or co-operated in inflicting a wrong upon him. [Citing cases.] The advantage gained in charging a conspiracy is that the act of one during the conspiracy is the act of all if done in furtherance thereof, and thus defendants may be held liable who in fact committed no overt act whatsoever and gained no benefit therefrom."

The opening statement revealed that "defendant Mr. Murchison was the attorney for the defendant Ormsby during a substantial period of the time and is now representing some additional parties." It also covered the fact of conspiracy both by direct charge and citation of acts alleged to have been done by defendant Murchison which would tend substantially to prove indirectly the alleged concert of action. Counsel also detailed a large number of overt acts in furtherance of the conspiracy which he claimed to have been done by Murchison. In short, his statement covered the allegations of the complaint as above summarized. And counsel's statement, viewed impersonally and objectively, disclosed facts which if proved would be sufficient to establish a conspiracy and Murchison's participation in and furtherance of the same.

The theory of the action was initially stated by counsel as follows: "The action that the plaintiff brings is for an accounting for profits and declaration of a constructive trust, and the action is against the fellow joint venturers and various individuals and corporations that have acquired assets of the joint venture. * * * And in addition to that, the plaintiff seeks 13 per cent of the profits of the venture. In other words, the $2,000.00 per month was not to be against the 13 per cent. It was $2,000.00 per month plus 13 per cent. The right to the $2,000.00 per month is based upon agreements made contemporaneously with the joint venture, and the agreement was that the plaintiff would receive this $2,000.-00 per month for the term of the joint venture operation." Assuming the truth of his allegations and oral statement, plaintiff has a good cause of action against all defendants who participated in diverting and presently possessing the assets and business of the joint venture of which he was a member. This in effect is the holding in San Francisco Iron & Metal Co. v. American Milling & Industrial Co., 115 Cal.App. 238, 248, 249, 1 P.2d 1008; Menefee v. Oxnam, 42 Cal.App. 81, 85, 86, 183 P. 379; Elsbach & Sons v. Mulligan, 58 Cal.App.2d 354, 366, 369, 136 P.2d 651; Sime v. Malouf, 95 Cal. App.2d 82, 94, 97, 98, 212 P.2d 946, 213 P.2d 788; MacIsaac v. Pozzo, 26 Cal.2d 809, 815, 161 P.2d 449; Laughlin v. Habermfelder, 72 Cal.App.2d 780, 787-790, 165 P.2d 544; and Lomita Land & Water Co. v. Robinson, 154 Cal. 36, 97 P. 10, 18 L.R.A., N.S., 1106. The record does not substantiate respondents' claim that the charge of conspiracy has been abandoned by appellant.

[8] Defendant Murchison's status as attorney for one of the other defendants does not immunize him from liability for torts committed in person or liability for wrongs done pursuant to conspiracy joined by him. Warner v. Roadshow Attractions Co., 56 Cal.App.2d 1, 7, 132 P.2d 35; Hoosac Tunnel Dock & Elevator Co. v. O'Brien, 137 Mass. 424, 427, 50 Am.Rep. 323; First Nat. Bank v. Broder, 107 Conn. 574, 141 A. 861, 864; Haggerty v. Moyerman, 321 Pa. 555, 184 A. 654, 655; Thomas Fruit Co. v. Levergood, 135 Okl. 105, 274 P. 471, 472; In re Cushman, 95 Misc. 9, 160 N.Y.S. 661, 665; 7 C.J.S., Attorney and Client, § 52b, p. 834.

The granting of the nonsuit was erroneous. When that ruling was made plaintiff's attorney under the compulsion of adverse rulings applied for leave to amend the complaint with respect to defendant Murchison. The motion was denied and that ruling is now urged as error. It is unnecessary to discuss that claim for the complaint was not fatally defective and the order granting the nonsuit was prejudicially erroneous.

Appeal from Judgment After Sustaining Demurrer to Sixth Amended Complaint.

There were two demurrers to the sixth amended complaint and two separate judgments entered thereon. One demurrer was interposed on behalf of the Mooradian group of defendants and the other was that of the Reeder group. Both having been sustained without leave, judgments were entered accordingly. See footnote 1, supra. Plaintiff appeals from each judgment.

The sixth amended complaint alleges the same basic cause of action as the fourth amended complaint. Of course, Mr. Murchison is not a party to it. The making of the written and oral joint venture agreement of October 29, 1951, is alleged; also that one of the signatories, L. M. Fabricating Co. & Associates, "is a fictitious firm name under which Mooradian conducted certain of his business;" that Reeder International & Associates, the other signatory, "is a fictitious firm name used for convenience only by plaintiff and defendants Reeder, Ormsby and Mile to execute the joint venture agreement" of October 29, 1951; also that L. M. Engineering Company & Associates "is a joint venture composed of the plaintiff and the defendants Reeder, Ormsby, Mooradian and Mile;" that "it was orally agreed at the time of the execution of said Exhibit 'A'² by plaintiff and the defendants Reeder and Mooradian that execution of exhibit 'A' in the name of L. M. Fabricating Co. & Associates and Reeder International & Associates was for convenience only; that the rights and obligations of L. M. Fabricating Co. & Associates under said Exhibit 'A' were in fact the rights and obligations of Mooradian; that the rights and obligations of Reeder International & Associates under said Exhibit 'A' were in fact the rights and obligations of the plaintiff and Reeder equally; that the 50% participating interest in the joint venture standing nominally in the name of L. M. Fabricating Co. & Associates was and would be deemed the property of the defendant Mooradian, and that the 50% participating interest in the joint venture standing nominally in the name of Reeder International & Associates was and would be deemed the property of the defendant Reeder and plaintiff, 25% each;" that a supplemental agreement of October 30, 1951 (exhibit B of the complaint), was also executed in the same manner as a matter of convenience only. Defendant Ormsby is alleged to have agreed to assist in financing the joint venture by making a guaranty of a loan from the Security-First National Bank of Los Angeles to the venture; that he was then included as a party in interest, respective shares being readjusted; that for other reasons there were further readjustments to which plaintiff and defendants Reeder, Ormsby, Mooradian and Mile agreed, which resulted in the following participations: Mooradian 50 per cent, Reeder 13 per cent, Ormsby 22 per cent, Mile 2 per cent and Greenwood 13 per cent. It was also agreed between said parties, so plaintiff avers, that defendant Mooradian would receive a salary for his services of $2,000 a month during the term of the joint venture, and that plaintiff should receive from the profits of the joint venture the sum of $2,000 a month from September 15, 1951, during the entire term of the joint venture, which sum was to be paid in consideration of services rendered by him, it being further agreed that the $2,000 monthly payments could not be terminated without plaintiff's approval and that that monthly sum "was actually in the nature of an interest in the joint venture and to be paid before the remaining profits were distributed among the joint venturers in the percentages herein set forth." It was also agreed in connection with the monthly payments to plaintiff and Mooradian that the said sums were not to be actually disbursed to them until the guaranty executed by Ormsby was fully discharged or until he consented to such disbursement. The said bank loan was paid in March, 1952, and thereupon Mooradian cashed the checks previously delivered to him representing the monthly compensation; but on March 29, 1952, defendants Reeder, Ormsby and Mooradian stopped payment on the checks previously given to plaintiff, and thereafter refused to pay or cause the joint venture to pay the said $2,000 a month to which he alleges he was entitled. On March 29, 1952, the said defendants wrongfully excluded plaintiff from the place of business and management of the joint venture, have continued to exclude him, have denied him access to the books and refused to account for the properties which he alleges to have been converted by them. In this connection plaintiff says that Ormsby, Reeder and Mooradian secretly transferred the joint venture business and its assets to L. M. Engineering Company & Associates, Inc., on March 24, 1951;³ that they had caused said company to be incorporated and all of its stock issued to themselves. About March

2. The written agreement of October 29, 1951.

3. Appears to be a misprision, intended for 1952.

24, 1952, they caused the Lockheed agreement to be cancelled and a new one issued to the said L. M. Engineering Company & Associates, Inc., which operated the business from March, 1952, until the latter part of that year when Reeder, Ormsby and Mooradian secretly caused L. M. Industries, Inc. to be incorporated, and then transferred the business and assets to it. Plaintiff alleges that he has had no compensation, profits or accounting. The first cause of action also contains allegations of the receipt of various sums by individual defendants (some of whom were brought in after the ruling upon the fourth amended complaint), which receipts are alleged to have constituted unjust enrichment.

A second count is an abbreviated charge of wrongful exclusion of plaintiff from participation in the joint venture of which he was a member, and nonpayment of moneys due him. The third to eighth counts charged different defendants separately with the receipt of specific moneys or assets of the joint venture, alleged to have constituted unjust enrichment.

The prayer is for dissolution of the joint venture created by the contract of October 29, 1951, a complete accounting of all its affairs, that defendants L. M. Engineering Company & Associates, Inc., and L. M. Industries, Inc. be required to account as constructive trustees, and for various other types of relief.

[9] That the diversion to his own individual use of the entire assets of a joint venture by one member gives rise to a cause of action in favor of the nonparticipating member who has been injured thereby, and a right to such legal or equitable relief as may be appropriate, is a well-established doctrine in this state. San Francisco Iron & Metal Co. v. American Milling & Industrial Co., supra, 115 Cal.App. 238, 248, 249, 1 P.2d 1008, and other cases cited supra.

[10] It is argued that plaintiff has no cause of action because his interest in the joint venture created by the agreement of October 29, 1951, is not deducible from the face of the writing, is provable only by oral evidence and that that violates the parol evidence rules. It is to be noted that the agreement does not declare the status of either of the named parties except through use of the phrase "as joint venturers." Mooradian is described as "A managing Director" (the word "President" having been stricken), and he signs the instrument in the name of "L. M. Fabricating Co. & Associates, by Leon Mooradian, A managing Director." Reeder is not described in the instrument but he signs "Reeder International & Associates, by L. D. Reeder, A managing Director." The agreement itself furnishes no clue to the nature of either organization, whether corporation, partnership, joint venture or mere fictitious name. It is not a violation of the parol evidence rule to prove by extrinsic evidence the identity of the parties in interest when it appears that the agreement has been made in the name of a partnership or joint venture, or an agent, especially when the nature of the entity named as a party or the names of the parties to the partnership or venture do not affirmatively appear in the writing. Milonas v. Sarantitis, 109 Cal.App. 343, 344, 292 P. 978; Caspary v. Moore, 21 Cal.App. 2d 694, 698, 70 P.2d 224; Purviance v. Shostak, 90 Cal.App.2d 295, 297, 202 P.2d 755; Southern Pacific Co. v. Von Schmidt Dredge Co., 118 Cal. 368, 371, 50 P. 650; Escondido Oil & Development Co. v. Glaser, 144 Cal. 494, 499, 77 P. 1040; 18 Cal.Jur.2d, sec. 281, p. 772. In Southern Pacific Co. v. Von Schmidt Dredge Co., supra, 118 Cal. at page 371, 50 P. at page 651, the court said: "Thus the rule is well settled that, where a reading of a simple contract, however inartificially it may be drawn, discloses that it is executed for or on behalf of a principal, or discloses an intent to bind such principal, or even leaves the matter one of doubt, parol evidence may be employed to determine whose contract it is; and this even in cases where the instrument is sufficiently clear in its terms to bind the agent. This is not contradicting by parol the terms of a written instrument, for, as has been said: 'It is no contradiction of a contract which is silent as to the fact to prove that a party is acting therein not on his own behalf, but for another. "This does not deny," said Parke, B., "that it is binding on those whom, on the face of it, it purports to bind;

but shows that it also binds another, by reason that the act of the agent, in signing the agreement in pursuance of his authority, is, in law, the act of the principal.” Bish. Cont., § 1084.”

[11] The sixth amended complaint states a cause of action and hence it was erroneous to sustain the general demurrer thereto.

[12,13] The demurrers also contain numerous special grounds, such as want of capacity to sue, joinder of separate causes of action without separately stating them, uncertainties, ambiguities and unintelligibility. Since the enactment of section 472c, Code of Civil Procedure, in 1939, and the ruling in Wennerholm v. Stanford University School of Med., 20 Cal.2d 713, 718-720, 128 P.2d 522, 141 A.L.R. 1358, the rule has been as stated in Columbia Pictures Corp. v. DeToth, 26 Cal.2d 753, 762, 161 P.2d 217, 221, 162 A.L.R. 747; “When a complaint is good as against a general demurrer, it is erroneous for the trial court to sustain the demurrer without leave to amend because of defects in the form of pleading. This is not to hold that the complaint is not subject to special demurrer. Upon the remanding of the cause the trial court may in its discretion require the clarification of uncertainties or ambiguities in the pleading.” The reason is explained in Wennerholm v. Stanford University School of Med., supra, 20 Cal.2d at page 718, 128 P.2d at page 525: “Where a complaint is sufficient against a general demurrer, however, and any uncertainties or ambiguities in the pleading can be corrected by amendment, it is apparent that denial of leave to amend results in a disposition of the cause upon technical grounds alone. The plaintiff who has stated a cause of action in such a case is denied a trial on the merits of his action if any of the grounds of special demurrer are well taken, despite the fact that the deficiencies can be corrected. It has been held, under such circumstances, that denial of leave to amend constitutes an abuse of discretion even though it be conceded that the trial court had authority to sustain the special demurrer because of defects in the form of the pleading.” The plaintiff does not come within that category, for he expressly waived any right to amend. The court, having sustained the demurrers upon general and special grounds, asked counsel for plaintiff: “Do you wish time to plead?” to which counsel said, “No, your Honor. We will stand on the complaint,” and the court then said, “The record will show that the plaintiff declines to amend, state that they do not wish to amend.” Both before the enactment of section 472c, Code of Civil Procedure, Aalwyn v. Cobe, 168 Cal. 165, 142 P. 79; California Trust Co. v. Cohn, 214 Cal. 619, 623, 7 P.2d 297; Cook v. Maier, 33 Cal.App.2d 581, 583, 92 P.2d 434; Jackson v. Lacy, 37 Cal.App.2d 551, 560, 100 P.2d 313 and since that time, Mulligan v. Wilson, 103 Cal.App.2d 664, 668, 229 P.2d 858; Metzenbaum v. Metzenbaum, 86 Cal. App.2d 750, 753, 195 P.2d 492, a refusal to amend is fatal to plaintiff’s position if any of the special grounds of demurrer are well taken.

[14] One of the special grounds in this case is that plaintiff has no capacity to sue in his individual capacity. It was held in Klopstock v. Superior Court, 17 Cal.2d 13, 18, 108 P.2d 906, 909, 135 A.L.R. 318, that “a special demurrer for want of capacity to sue raises only the question of whether any general legal disability exists, such as infancy or insanity, or want of title in the plaintiff to the character in which he sues.” At page 19 of 17 Cal.2d, at page 909 of 108 P.2d, it is said: “Cases have held that a general demurrer for failure to state a cause of action should be sustained where the complaint may state a cause of action in someone, but not in the plaintiff.” To the same effect is Parker v. Bowron, 40 Cal.2d 344, 351, 254 P.2d 6. Respondents’ real point is that plaintiff is not entitled to sue as a member of the joint venture known as L. M. Engineering Company & Associates, because the parol evidence rule precludes his showing himself to be such. This point has been ruled adversely to respondents, supra. The claim that one member of a joint venture may not maintain individually an action such as this is disposed of by the case of San Francisco Iron & Metal Co. v. American Milling & Industrial Co., supra, 115 Cal.App. 238, 1 P.2d 1008, and similar cases above cited. This same claim appears in various forms in the special demurrer, and all of those specifications are misplaced.

[15, 16] Another ground of special demurrer is joinder of two or more causes of action without separate statement, i. e., damages for breach of the joint venture agreement and action for accounting and dissolution. San Francisco Iron & Metal Co. v. American Milling & Industrial Co., supra, and similar cases show this contention to be unsound. Plaintiff in a court of equity is entitled to any and all appropriate relief for the single wrong of excluding him from the joint venture of which he is a member, and diverting the assets and business thereof to another entity or entities in which he is not permitted to participate.

[17] Defendants attempt to raise the statute of limitations, Code Civ.Proc., sec. 339, subd. 1, with respect to plaintiff's claim for compensation. The complaint avers that plaintiff was ousted in March, 1952, and payment of his checks stopped on March 29, 1952. The original complaint was filed on June 4, 1952, and the sixth amended complaint on July 15, 1954. The compensation claim is but part of the right to an accounting which accrued in March, 1952, and the four-year statute of limitations is applicable. 16 Cal.Jur. sec. 83, p. 479.

Various specifications of uncertainty, ambiguity and unintelligibility are made. Each has been examined and found to be not well taken. In reaching this conclusion we have kept in mind the rule that a demurrer must be overruled if it is directed to the entire complaint (as here) and one or more counts thereof are not vulnerable to the grounds alleged. Shook v. Pearson, 99 Cal.App.2d 348, 351, 221 P.2d 757; Brandt v. Brandt, 178 Cal. 548, 550, 174 P. 555. Also, if the complaint is good against one or more of joint demurrants the demurrer must be overruled as to all. Hirshfeld v. Weill, 121 Cal. 13, 14, 53 P. 402; Asevado v. Orr, 100 Cal. 293, 300, 34 P. 777; Associated Oil Co. v. Mullin, 110 Cal.App. 385, 390, 294 P. 421.

There was error in sustaining the special as well as the general demurrers to the sixth amended complaint.

The judgments in favor of the Mooradian group and the Reeder group of defendants (in No. 20972) are reversed. The judgment in favor of defendant Murchison (in No. 20859) is reversed.

WHITE, P. J., and DORAN, J., concur.

Hearing denied; SCHAUER, J., dissenting.

137 Cal.App.2d Supp. 881

PEOPLE of the State of California,
Plaintiff and Respondent,
v.

Jack IGNAZIO, alias Jack Dragna,
Defendant and Appellant.

C. A. 3333.

Superior Court, Appellate Department,
Los Angeles County, California.

Nov. 23, 1955.

Proceeding upon defendant's motion to set aside verdict of guilty, to enter plea of not guilty, and to obtain dismissal of accusations following expiration of probationary period without any charge having been filed that he had violated terms of his probation. The Municipal Court, Los Angeles Judicial District, Vernon W. Hunt, J., denied motion, and defendant appealed. The Superior Court, Appellate Department, Swain, J., held that, where defendant was granted probation on condition that he serve thirty days in county jail, not commit any similar offense, and be a law abiding citizen, and probationary period expired without any charge being filed that defendant had violated terms of his probation, defendant was not entitled to have verdicts of guilty set aside, to enter plea of not guilty, and to have the accusations dismissed, in view of facts that, in his notice of motion, defendant did not state that he had fulfilled the conditions of his probation and that defendant had not offered any evidence that he had fulfilled such conditions.

Order affirmed.

1. Criminal Law ⇨982

Where defendant was granted probation, and probationary period expired without any charge being filed that defendant had violated terms of his probation, defendant was not entitled to have verdicts of guilty set aside, to enter plea of not guilty, and to have the accusations dismissed, in absence of allegations and proof that he had fulfilled conditions of his probation. Pen.Code, §§ 647, subd. 5, 1102, 1203.4; West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1869, 1963, subds. 5, 6, 1981.

2. Criminal Law ⇨982

In proceeding upon defendant's motion to set aside verdicts of guilty, to enter plea of not guilty, and to have accusations dismissed following expiration of his probationary period without any charge being filed that he had violated terms of his probation, defendant was moving party and had burden of proving that he had fulfilled conditions of his probation. Pen. Code, §§ 647, subd. 5, 1102, 1203.4; West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1869, 1963, subds. 5, 6, 1981.

3. Criminal Law ⇨982

Where, in proceeding upon defendant's motion, after expiration of his statutory period without any charge being filed that he had violated terms of his probation, to have verdicts of guilty set aside, to enter plea of not guilty, and to have accusations dismissed, defendant failed to file affidavit or testify to facts showing that he had complied with all conditions of probation, but suppressed such evidence, court was entitled to presume that such evidence would have been adverse to defendant. Pen.Code, §§ 647, subd. 5, 1102, 1203.4; West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1869, 1963, subds. 5, 6, 1981.

4. Criminal Law ⇨324

All presumptions are evidence, and conclusive presumptions and many disputable presumptions are not overcome by the presumption of innocence. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1961, 1962, 1963, subds. 5, 6, 1981; Pen.Code, § 1102.

Roger Arnebergh, City Atty., Donald M. Redwine, Asst. City Atty., Philip E. Grey, Deputy City Atty., Los Angeles, Cal., for respondent.

SWAIN, Judge.

This is an appeal from an order of June 29, 1955, denying defendant's motion under Penal Code section 1203.4 to set aside the verdict of guilty and dismiss the accusations. The Notice of Appeal is from an order "dismissing" the defendant's said motion. The minute order shows the motion was "denied" not "dismissed" but we shall disregard this misstatement in the notice.

[1] The defendant was convicted of violating section 41.07 of Ordinance 77,000 (resorting) of the City of Los Angeles, and of section 647, subd. 5 of the Penal Code. He was granted probation on condition (a) that he serve thirty days in the county jail, and (b) that he commit no similar offense and be a law abiding citizen. The term of his probation was three years. This probationary period expired without any charge being filed that he had violated the terms of his probation. Thereafter he moved to set aside the verdicts of guilty, enter a plea of not guilty, and dismiss the accusations as provided in Penal Code section 1203.4. The appellant, relying on People v. Johnson, 1955, 134 Cal.App.2d 140, 285 P.2d 74, claims that he is entitled to such an order as a matter of right. We do not agree, for he has not brought himself within the requirements of that case.

The Notice of Motion did not state any grounds for the motion as required by Rule 49 of the Los Angeles Municipal Court (p. 15, Rules of the Municipal Courts, County of Los Angeles), which reads in part: "Whenever notice of a motion is given, the notice shall specify the grounds of the motion * * *" The importance of this omission is that Penal Code, section 1203.4, entitles a defendant to a dismissal only if he has "fulfilled the conditions of his probation." One of the conditions of his probation was "Defendant to commit no similar offense and be a law abiding citizen." In his Notice of Cantillon & Cantillon, Beverly Hills, for appellant.

Motion, the defendant did not state that he had "fulfilled the conditions of his probation." The rule in question was not waived; in fact, the court stated, "Let the record show the motion is denied solely upon the ground that the defendant has not stated any grounds for his motion."

Even more important is the fact that the defendant did not offer any evidence that he had fulfilled the conditions of his probation. While the record shows that no claim of violation of probation was filed against him during his probationary period, yet that is a very different thing from a showing that he had committed no violation.

[2] The defendant was the moving party, and the burden of proving that he had fulfilled the conditions of his probation was upon him. Code of Civil Procedure section 1869 provides: "Each party must prove his own affirmative allegations. Evidence need not be given in support of a negative allegation, except when such negative allegation is an essential part of the statement of the right or title on which the cause of action or defense is founded, nor even in such case when the allegation is a denial of the existence of a document, the custody of which belongs to the opposite party." Code of Civil Procedure section 1981 provides: "The party holding the affirmative of the issue must produce the evidence to prove it; therefore, the burden of proof lies on the party who would be defeated if no evidence were given on either side." Penal Code section 1102 provides: "The rules of evidence in civil actions are applicable also to criminal actions, except as otherwise provided in this code."

[3] Appellant argues that, even though he has the burden of proof, the presumption of innocence and the presumption that the law has been obeyed, are sufficient to compel the court to grant his motion to dismiss. He overlooks the presumptions which operate in respondent's favor, i.e., C.C.P., sec. 1963(5), "That evidence wilfully suppressed would be adverse if produced"; and C.C.P., sec. 1963(6), "That higher evidence would be adverse from inferior being produced." Appellant could have filed an affidavit or could have testified to facts showing that he had complied with all the conditions of probation, but he suppressed such evidence. The court was entitled to presume it would have been adverse to appellant.

[4] This court held in People v. Minter, 1946, 73 Cal.App.2d Supp. 994, 996, 167 P.2d 11, that presumptions are evidence. In People v. Agnew, 1940, 16 Cal. 2d 655, at page 662, 107 P.2d 601, at page 604, the court said, quoting with approval People v. Le Doux, 1909, 155 Cal. 535, 553, 102 P. 517: "'All presumptions are evidence. Conclusive presumptions (Code Civ. Proc., §§ 1961, 1962) are not overcome by the presumption of innocence, nor are many disputable presumptions so overcome.'" 18 Cal.Jur.2d 536: "A disputable presumption, when called into operation, has the effect of evidence establishing a prima facie case, and operates to shift the burden of introducing evidence. But such a presumption is merely evidence in the case, having no greater or different effect than the testimony of witnesses, and it in no degree changes the rule as to the burden of proof in the sense of the burden of producing a preponderance of evidence. It is still for the party having the affirmative of the issue, on the whole evidence, to prove it by a preponderance; the burden is not on the party against whom the presumption operates."

In the case at bar we, therefore, have presumptions which operate on each side and we are faced with the familiar proposition that the trial judge decided the motion on conflicting evidence.

The order is affirmed.

SHAW, P. J., concurs.

BISHOP, Judge.

I concur, without approval or disapproval of the proposition that the situation calls for an application of the presumptions of subdivisions 5 and 6 of section 1963.

One of the conditions of probation was that the defendant was to serve thirty days in the County Jail. The defendant made no showing that this condition of his probation had been fulfilled. His motion (see section 1003, C.C.P.) was properly denied.

137 Cal.App.2d 819

Henry C. GARNER and Gordon X. Richmond, partners under the firm name and style of Liquinox Company, Plaintiffs and Appellants,

v.

UDDO & TAORMINA COMPANY, a copartnership, and George Kikuchi, Defendants and Respondents.

Civ. 5221.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Dec. 16, 1955.

Action by fertilizer company against tomato canner to recover purchase price for fertilizer furnished a farmer. The Superior Court, Orange County, Robert Gardner, J., entered judgment for canner, and fertilizer company appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Mussell, J., held that where farmer authorized canner to pay fertilizer company out of money due or to become due to him for a tomato crop, and canner in accepting the order of authorization made it clear that the order was payable out of money due or to become due to farmer after first deducting all advances made to him, fertilizer company did not acquire any rights in farmer's tomato crop by such authorization and acceptance which were superior to any advances made to farmer for expenses necessary to the production of the crop, and canner did not ignore fertilizer company's rights by paying entire proceeds of crop to farmer and other persons.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Assignments ⇐137

In action by assignee against canner which had agreed to assignment of net proceeds only, evidence supported findings of trial court that advances made by canner to assignor had been used for and necessary to the production of the tomato crop, and that there were no "net proceeds".

2. Appeal and Error ⇐1010(1)

Where findings of trial court are supported by substantial evidence in the record they are binding on District Court of Appeal.

3. Assignments ⇐84, 93

Where farmer authorized canning company to pay fertilizer company out of money due or to become due to him for a tomato crop, and canner in accepting the authorization made it clear that the order was payable out of money due or to become due to farmer after first deducting all advances made to him, fertilizer company did not acquire any rights in tomato crop by farmer's authorization which were superior to any advances made to farmer for expenses necessary to the production of the crop, and canner did not wilfully ignore fertilizer company's rights by paying the entire proceeds to farmer and other persons.

Richmond & Bradley, Santa Ana, for appellants.

Rimel & Johnston, Santa Ana, for respondents.

MUSSELL, Justice.

Plaintiffs, who were manufacturers and distributors of liquid fertilizer, brought this action to recover the purchase price for fertilizer furnished one George R. Kikuchi between April 17 and August 22, 1952, and used on land in Orange county on which Kikuchi was growing tomatoes. On or about March 12, 1952, the defendant Uddo and Taormina Company, a partnership (hereinafter referred to as U. & T. Company), engaged in the tomato canning business, entered into a written contract with Kikuchi wherein Kikuchi agreed to sell and defendant U. & T. Company agreed to buy, for the 1952 season, all tomatoes grown by Kikuchi on the land involved. U. & T. Company, prior to April 1, 1952, had advanced to Kikuchi $18,000 rental for the property upon which Kikuchi was raising the tomatoes and also had advanced $8,000 for various crop operations and expenses incurred by Kikuchi. On April 1, 1952,

Kikuchi executed and delivered to plaintiffs an authorization in writing, as follows:

"Date April 1 1952

"Uddo & Taormina Co.

6576 Grand

Buena Park, California

"You are hereby authorized to pay to the Liquinox Company, 1409 W. Chapman Avenue, Orange, California, for material supplied by them, from April 1 1952 to December 31, inclusive, 1952, from the moneys due or to become due to me from you, and charge the same to my account.

"(Growers Signature) /s/ George R. Kikuchi
George R. Kikuchi

"(Address)

6952 E. Lincoln

Anaheim, California."

This authorization or order was accepted by U. & T. Company on the same date and in the same document, in the following language:

"The above order is accepted, but is payable out of moneys due or to become due to: George R. Kikuchi, 6952 E. Lincoln, Anaheim after first deducting all advances made to him, and after paying any orders given by him and received by us prior to the date of receipt of Liquinox Company invoices.

"Accepted By:

(Signature)

/s/ Joseph Uddo Jr.

Uddo & Taormina Company."

Thereafter, between April 17 and August 22, 1952, plaintiffs sold and delivered to Kikuchi various amounts of fertilizer, totaling $6,315.50. Between April 1 and August 22, 1952, additional advances were made by defendant U. & T. Company to and for the account of Kikuchi in the amount of $8,675, so that as of August 22, 1952, the amount due from Kikuchi to defendant U. & T. Company amounted to $34,675 and at that time there had been no crop proceeds or other credits to Kikuchi's account. After August 22, 1952, defendant U. & T. Company made further advances, totaling $45,993.76 to or for the account of Kikuchi and credited his account with crop proceeds in the sum of $69,222.42, and with other miscellaneous credits in the amount of $7,791.15. The total charges to the account were $80,668.76 and the total credits were $77,013.57, leaving a balance due defendant U. & T. Company and uncollected by them of $3,655.19. No payments were made to plaintiffs on their account.

Defendant U. & T. Company contends that the advances made by them to and for Kikuchi's benefit were for the purpose of paying various crop expenses; that the pickers and haulers would not work unless paid and that it was necessary that these and other expenses be paid in order to produce the tomato crop; and that plaintiffs could not be paid if there were no net proceeds received from the sale of the tomatoes.

[1-3] Plaintiffs contend that they obtained a partial assignment by reason of the order or authorization on April 1, 1952, in the sum of $6,315.50, representing the fertilizer furnished by them and that the defendants wilfully ignored their rights in the proceeds of the tomato crop and made payments of the entire proceeds therefrom to Kikuchi and other persons.

The trial court found in part as follows:

"X. That by the terms of the written acceptance form, as hereinabove set forth in paragraph II of these Findings of Fact, all advances, payments and loans made by defendant to, or for the use and benefit of Kikuchi, whether made before or after the date of said acceptance, or before or after the dates of the several invoices delivered by plaintiffs to defendant, as aforesaid, are 'advances' which may be deducted from crop proceeds and other proceeds due to Kikuchi within the meaning and terms of the acceptance to the said crop order, as aforesaid, and have priority over the plaintiffs' crop order and over all claims of plaintiff made under said crop order, whether said advances and payments were made or used for the purpose of producing the aforesaid tomato crop, or for purposes wholly disconnected therewith."

"XII. That at all times the total amount of said loans, payments and advances made by defendant to and for the benefit of Kikuchi exceeded the total amount received as credits and crop proceeds; that at no time has there been, or is there now, any crop proceeds from the tomato crop which was the subject of the above entitled action, in the hands of defendant in excess of the total of the said sums loaned, advanced and paid by defendant to or for the benefit of Kikuchi, as aforesaid."

"XIII. That substantially all of the sums of money advanced, loaned and paid by defendant to, or for the use and benefit of Kikuchi, as aforesaid, including the said sum of $77,364.25 as aforesaid, were used for the production of the said tomato crop out of which the crop proceeds contemplated by the crop order and acceptance thereto were to be derived, and that the use of said moneys for said purposes were necessary to the production of said tomato crop and the crop proceeds therefrom and that the same could not have been produced, and the crop proceeds could not have been derived therefrom except for said loans, advances and payments."

These findings are supported by substantial evidence in the record and therefore are binding upon us.

Appellants contend that by the order or authorization of April 1, 1952, they acquired rights to the tomato crop; that on the respective dates of the purchase of fertilizer from them their rights were superior to any claim for payment of third persons for their services in picking and hauling the tomato crop or for any other service. We cannot agree with these contentions.

The document signed by Kikuchi on April 1, 1952, is an authorization to pay plaintiffs from monies due or to become due to Kikuchi from U. & T. Company. There is no direction therein as to when payment is to be made and no suggestion or direction that payments made to plaintiffs were to have priority over payments for picking, packing, hauling and other expenses necessary for the production of the tomato crop. In accepting the order or authorization, U. & T. Company made it clear that the order was payable out of money due or to become due to Kikuchi after first deducting all advances made to him, and after paying any orders given by him and received by them prior to the date of the receipt of plaintiffs' invoice. It is apparent that plaintiffs, on April 1, 1952, prior to delivering any fertilizer to Kikuchi, knew that they would receive payment only from monies due Kikuchi after deducting all advances made by U. & T. Company to him. There is no serious dispute as to the sums actually advanced by U. & T. Company or as to whether or not they were necessary in the production of the tomato crop involved. Under such circumstances it appears that plaintiffs elected to supply fertilizer to Kikuchi on credit and to look for payment from monies due Kikuchi after all advances made to him by U. & T. Company had been paid.

The record shows that in 1951 appellants supplied Kikuchi with fertilizer and took an order from him similar to that which they took in the present case on April 1, 1952, and that they received their money out of the 1951 crop. However, in that year there was a surplus and in 1952 the crop and proceeds therefrom were smaller than anticipated. Hence, when all advances made by U. & T. Company were paid, there were no funds available to Kikuchi out of which plaintiffs' account could be satisfied.

The judgment is affirmed.

BARNARD, P. J., and GRIFFIN, J., concur.

NATIONAL UNIVERSITY LIBRARY

SAN DIEGO

NON-CIRCULATING

